WASHINGTON – The U.S. Customs Service, struggling to maintain an obsolete computer system that handles $20 billion of duties and fees on imports each year, plans to suspend efforts to build a modern replacement because the agency has run out of money.

"The issue is money," Customs Commissioner Raymond Kelly said. "We simply don't have the money to continue."

Customs estimates its computer modernization project would cost $1.3 billion over a four-year period. The agency had hoped to select a prime contractor by July and start the project by October. But Customs was not able to come up with the $25 million it needed to begin short-term costs, so Kelly pulled the plug last week.

Kelly also notified the trade community that he will shut down a modernization prototype operating at three border locations. The experimental electronic system has allowed the big Detroit automakers to speed parts and supplies to their plants. Customs needed another $15 million to keep the prototype going.

The decisions have disappointed automakers and angered many members of the trade community, which fears Customs will be unable to keep pace with the growing volume of imports if it does not quickly upgrade its computers.

Rubin Lanier, chair of the Coalition for Customs Automation Funding, called the agency's decision to halt its computer modernization project "a huge problem." The coalition's 200-member companies – which include manufacturers, retailers, brokers, and importers – will lobby House and Senate leaders to find additional funding for Customs, she said.

Proposal offers same-sex couples benefits, not marriage

By Elizabeth Mehren
Los Angeles Times

MONTPELIER, Vt. – With it being Valentine's Day, Lois Farnham was moved to wonder, "Have you ever seen a romantic song written about your registered partner?"

The question has special meaning for Farnham, a school nurse who for 27 years has lived with Holly Puterbaugh, a lecturer in mathematics at the University of Vermont. Puterbaugh and Farnham want to get married, a rite that they believe is their civil right. Along with two other same-sex couples, the pair filed a lawsuit that in December produced the state Supreme Court's landmark ruling ordering the legislature to enact a law granting gay and lesbian couples the same rights and privileges as heterosexual married couples.

Acting on the court's mandate, a legislative committee Wednesday unveiled a 22-page proposal that skirts the term "marriage" in favor of a far-reaching domestic partnership system for gay and lesbian couples. The carefully crafted document only added fuel to the firestorm that has vaulted Vermont into the center of a passionate debate on the subject of same-sex marriage.

As Vermont appears poised to become the first state to enact such sweeping same-sex benefits, outsiders have descended on the Green Mountain state to lobby for both sides. Gay organizations see Vermont as leading the charge for an effort that failed in Hawaii and Alaska. Presidential candidates find themselves fielding questions about what will happen if gay marriage, or some variation, is legalized here.

Christian right radio talk show host Randall Terry is so appalled that he has set up shop just a few hundred feet from the gold-domed state Capitol. "This is an assault on the institution of marriage," said Terry, founder of Operation Rescue, the radical anti-abortion group based in Binghamton, N.Y. "It's their Normandy Beach. It's the immoral victory that they ... the homosexual community have been looking for."

Many cities have extended certain benefits to couples who are not married, including gay and lesbian couples. But the scope of the effort in Vermont, said T.J. Tu of the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, a New York-based gay-rights group, is "clearly a watershed that could push the gay-rights agenda in a direction we never thought possible even ten years ago."

For better or for worse, as they say in the marriage trade, national urgency is of scant concern in a state that prides itself on tolerance and individualism.

"Most of us have a philosophy of live and let live," said Tom Little, a Republican who chairs the Judiciary Committee in the state House of Representatives.

Among Vermont's 548,000 residents, there is no evidence that the homosexual population is greater or smaller than elsewhere. Still, said Little, "the reality is that in Vermont, there are a lot of families where the model is not a so-called traditional nuclear family. There are a lot of single-parent families and a lot of families where two adults of the same gender are raising children."

In many ways, said state Rep. Bill Lippert, a Democrat who serves with little on the committee that drafted the proposal for same-sex partnership, Vermont is "essentially one community, with many small communities within it."

Lippert, a psychologist who for seven years has lived with a male partner, said the state's heritage of tolerance has helped gay and lesbian residents to "bring our stories to our neighbors, to our towns, to our communities."

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!
ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:
THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF
ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:
Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

HAPPY Valentine's Day

Ustore
Not like a mall. Better.

Did you forget that special someone?

All Stuffed Animals & Picture Frames
BUY 1 GET THE 2nd ½ OFF

Valentine's Day Bear Drawing
*Name:*_____ *Phone:*_____
*Email:*_____
*Do you live on campus?*__ *Which dorm?*_____

All fields must be completed to validate entries.
All entries must be in by Monday, February 14th at 4:00
Drawing to take place at 4:30 on Valentine's Day at Ustore

UStore Hours: M-Th 8:30-6 Fri. 8:30-5 Sat.11-4 http://estore.aux.umass.edu

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

Charles Schultz, 1923-2000

This past weekend, America lost the eminent cartoonist Charles Schultz, the man that created the beloved "Peanuts." After a three-month fight with colon cancer, Schulz died Saturday night of a heart attack. He was 77.

His final comic strip ran Sunday.

Schultz drew the strip for 50 years, giving all of us a glimpse into the world of Charlie Brown, Snoopy, Linus, Lucy, and Schroeder, among many of the other characters that regularly appeared in the world of "Peanuts." It was read, on average, by $50 million people daily in 2,100 newspapers, and appeared internationally in 75 different countries in 21 languages.

His comic won the Best Humor Strip in 1962, 12 years after it appeared. The animated specials won Emmy and Peabody awards. Montreal's International Pavilion of Humor named Schultz cartoonist of the year in 1978. A Broadway production of the cartoon won two Tony awards. Schultz has a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. The National Child Labor Committee awarded Schultz the Lifetime Television Lewis Hine Award for attempting to further an understanding of children. The Women's Sports Foundation appointed Schultz as the only male member of its board of directors.

With his characters, Schultz let the world see its own troubles acted out by children who were learning, as they went along, about the pain of the world. Charlie Brown never kicked that field goal. Lucy never got a date with Schroeder. Linus never let go of the one thing that made him feel secure.

While not impacting our lives in quite the way it did our parents, "Peanuts" was, in all respects, a ground-breaking comic strip. Characters, children especially, experienced the very real feelings of pain, loss and grief, and were routinely let down in their expectations. Comics were no longer simply tools of entertainment; they were tools of reality, a way to present the world to adults who might have lost their ability to see what was going on.

Every time Schultz drew Charlie Brown missing Lucy's football, we saw a child's trust broken.

Every time Schultz drew Schroeder turning Lucy away, we saw our own rejected attempts at love replayed.

Every time Schultz drew Snoopy daydreaming of other places, of other personas, we saw ourselves daydreaming of elsewhere and other lives.

But Schultz's influence went beyond the simple pains from his strips. Female characters in Schultz's strip completely outplayed their male counterparts at a time in which respect for national sports was sorely lacking. White characters treated black characters no differently than they did anyone else in Schultz's "Peanuts."

Charles Schultz captured in his strips the realities of the world in a way that no one else had. And he did it all himself, refusing to let anyone else draw his strips, something that can't be said for many daily cartoonists in this day and age.

The loss of Schultz is the loss of a man who could make innocent characters on the comics page delve into the deepest human emotions in three panels. It is the loss of, perhaps, America's most important, most well known, and most respected cartoonist.

President Clinton, in mourning Schultz, said, "For 50 years, his keen eye, his good and generous heart, and his active brush and pen have given life to the most memorable cast of characters ever to enliven our daily papers."

He has it absolutely correct.

Schultz did give us a "memorable cast of characters," and he was able to make those kids so wonderful that they did enliven our daily papers, and, more importantly, our daily lives. He showed us, through the lives of young children, pain and suffering, pleasure and joy, amazement and shock.

The dumbing down of UMass

Over the past five years, the annual University budget has grown in unprecedented amounts. During these years, the University has for the first time been treated as an average state agency, meaning that it has received budget increases that are the same as the amount of revenue increases for the Commonwealth.

Yet Chancellor Scott is now shockingly calling for cuts in the academic budgets for the next six years. So how is it that in a time of such financial largesse for the University, Scott can call for academic cuts? Chancellor Scott claims that cuts are required because the forthcoming Commonwealth budget for the fiscal year of 2000-2001 will be less than what we have been receiving. Even if we were to believe that cuts were necessary at all (and I do not believe they are), why is Scott calling for cuts in the core of the University's mission – student instruction – rather than cutting back on administrative waste and fat?

The real reasons for Scott's appalling demand for cuts are twofold. One reason relates to his own, and his administrators', financial mismanagement. Scott has committed money before it has been allocated, and invested in faulty programs like Peoplesoft, already dropped by many other schools because it is so bad. Were Scott a corporate CEO, the stockholders would have seen his head roll long ago. The second and darker reason for Scott's irresponsible call for academic budget cuts has do with Scott's vision, if one could call it that, for the University. Scott is recklessly committed to gutting full-time faculty. From 1989 to 1996, the number of faculty dropped by 163 positions. During the same time, the number of adjunct faculty – grossly underpaid teachers, often graduate students, with no possibility of ever getting tenure – increased by 53 positions. But recently, more vice-chancellors have been hired.

What do the Chancellor's proposed cuts mean to students? The impact of the cuts, though small when described in percentage points rather than actual amounts, would be dire indeed. Even a one percent cut in the Dean of Fine Arts and Humanities' budget would eliminate all discretionary funds, meaning no essential faculty support, which includes the cost of Xerosing, making materials either unavailable to you or available for a price. The proposed cuts of two and three percent would mean eliminating even more faculty positions. Having fewer faculty means that fewer courses get taught. And that means that classes will be even harder to get into than they already are now.

Moreover, the fact that more temporary-worker faculty are teaching the courses which do get taught means that fewer and fewer teachers will have the protection of academic freedom afforded by tenure. Adjunct or temporary teachers, however bright and talented they often are, do not have the time to keep up with research or to develop new courses. Because of the conditions in which they work, temporary teachers are likely to teach "safe," or, more accurately, "bland" topics in "safe" ways and risk getting fired if they don't. And temp teachers won't be there two and three years after you take a course to write letters of recommendation, advise students, do independent studies and honors theses, or serve on committees, which do the work of the university.

Richard Burt

Thus the nature of classroom learning experience will be transformed as well. Instead of a professor lecturing or directing a discussion in a classroom in person, you will get so-called "distance learning," a cheaper substitute amounting to a video of a professor lecturing to or interacting with a computer instead of a teacher and other students. Essentially, the Chancellor's past policies and present call for cuts mean that you are attending an increasingly dumbed-down University.

While other universities typically fight as hard as they can to retain their most distinguished faculty when those professors are made offers by other universities, UMass has been happy to let them go. Professors who retire are regularly not being replaced. The University has been experiencing a virtual hiring freeze over the past decade. The average age of professors in my department, English, is well over 55. Only four out of 50-plus professors do not presently have tenure. And Scott has no plans at present to replace the 30 professors in the English Department who will retire over the next five years. He is turning UMass into a faculty game preserve. Were a movie to be made about his time here, it would have to be called "Academics in the Mist."

While full-time faculty has dramatically decreased, the number of administrative positions has mushroomed, with administrative salaries increasing at a phenomenal and alarming rate, but with no clear benefit to students or the educational mission of the University. By contrast, faculty have regularly gone without raises for years in a row over the past three decades, and the raises that they have recently received have amounted to no more than cost-of-living adjustments. And for the first time in the history of the University, the number of professional staff including middle managers and upper levels of administrators exceeds the number of faculty.

Scott's actions are similar to the old New York Post headline about then-President Ford to the state of New York in the mid-1970s so that it now reads: "Chancellor Scott to UMass Faculty and Students: Drop Dead." Scott is trying to turn UMass into two campuses: "Mass Tech" for the hard sciences on the north end of campus, and "Mass Temp" everywhere else. Under Chancellor Scott's incompetent and perverse leadership, UMass is quickly changing from a public university where all citizens of the Commonwealth can get an excellent education in a wide variety of disciplines into a publicly-assisted university where students will be able to take classes only in those departments which can get corporate funding and hence support from the Chancellor.

Students who show an interest in any subject that is not directly related to corporate profits will be neglected and deprived of a meaningful and valuable education. Students at "Mass Tech" will have to endure a few mind-numbing humanities and social science requirements taught by overpriced, under-prepared, and underpaid temps. These classes will likely be ghastly experiences and add nothing to their collegiate experience. Indeed, given this degree of inattention, why have requirements at all? More profitable for all concerned is to let "students" work like drones in labs full time and drop the charade of a well-rounded liberal education. Maybe we can lower the number of credits needed for graduation as well. Get 'em up, move 'em out.

Meanwhile, instead of demonstrating a commitment to maintain UMass at the highest possible standards of excellence in education, the Chancellor has found religion. Literally. In recent months Scott has been telling anyone who will listen about how he wants to infuse all elements of campus life with spirituality, even quoting Hopi Indians to the Faculty Senate. Needless to say, the Chancellor should be fighting to support the University as an educational institution, not expanding administration and looking for religious miracles. Of course, if his current policies continue and his proposed cuts are enacted, miracles will certainly be required.

It is not too late to stop Chancellor Scott from destroying your University while indulging his bloated army of pampered administrative pencil-pushers. You can protest his proposed budget cuts in a number of ways, including writing or calling him yourself to ask him how he can possibly defend cuts at a time of an unprecedented series of budget increases. Whether the University budget decreases or doesn't in the next six years, where are his priorities, you may ask? In administration or academics? You can ask your parents to write him too. And you can contact President Bulger and members of the Massachusetts state legislature and ask them how, in good conscience, they can support effectively dismantling one of the great resources of the Commonwealth and one of the great public universities in the country when the funds to save it are readily available.

You certainly can and should demand loudly and clearly that Chancellor Scott honor and respect your right to a meaningful and valuable education. Students at UMass, not at tDiUtmbiMass.

Richard Burt is a Professor of English and member of the Faculty Senate at UMass.

Your Opinion

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

We are writing in response to the column entitled "No More Special Treatment" by Sam Wilkinson that ran in the Collegian on Wednesday, February 9.

Wilkinson's column is childish and offensive, especially to those of us in the honors program and the Commonwealth College. First, we don't appreciate being called "nerds," and we didn't spend all of high school "ass-kissing." In fact, contrary to popular belief, we actually did see the sun quite often.

And as outrageous as it might sound, honors students do know how to have fun. First of all, in the spring Orchard Hill hosts an event called "Bowl Day," which is pretty much the biggest party of the year. Last year, Bowl Day featured blatant drinking, lots of dancing, loud music, and half-naked honors students dancing on garbage cans. In addition, we go clubbing, we go to frats, and we participate in round robins that occur in Orchard Hill.

College admission is not all about GPAs anyway. It's a balance between being social and putting in the extra effort. Most of us were very well rounded students in high school. We got involved in clubs, helped plan activities, and even played sports!

Yeah, we do like to maintain our high GPAs, but we are paying for our education. In order to advance further (i.e. medical school, grad school, etc.), we need to be able to compete against the students from some of the more reputable private schools, and we can't do that without putting in the extra effort. We may as well make the most of our education since we are sinking money into it.

One of the advantages of UMass is that it offers an academic program (the Commonwealth College) that rivals the smaller, more prestigious, private schools. It's a small-school environment within a large university, which means that students can get a good education while still having access to resources that only a big university can offer.

In addition, honors classes are available to students who want the opportunities. Students who are willing to do the extra work deserve to have the opportunity to take these more challenging classes.

The extra money that the University puts into the honors program is worth it. By graduating more prestigious students from the University, a degree from UMass is more valuable than ever before. Therefore, there will be a better "real world" experience for everyone.

I will grant you that the honors college is not free of flaws, but it is not the evil that Mr. Wilkinson makes it out to be. And maybe if he stopped drinking Mountain Dew, he would realize that he has the same opportunities as the rest of us. The playing field is level. You just have to take the time and effort to utilize all that the University has to offer.

And we like our "real caffeinated" Mountain Dew with a little bit of Schmirnoff's.

Erin O'Brien
Christina Brissette
Annette Sakidovitch
Kim Stankiewicz
Jim Dinan
Matthew Harrison
Orchard Hill

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Shechan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolcezar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pashkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorkovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor

Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

To all the lonely folks

Okay, since it is Valentine's Day, I bet all of you out there in Collegian reader land are expecting one of us columnists to complain to no end about how we have no valentine, and how the opposite sex finds us repulsive, and how if you think that the little picture is horrible, you should see some of us in real life.

I considered writing about how I need a valentine 'cause everybody knows that you are a loser if you don't have a significant other on Valentine's Day. Heck, I bet you might even laugh at a line like: if you are lonely this Valentine's Day, please send me some email at lonelydesperatecollegiancolumnist@dailycollegian.com. I might even write a line like that (although in all honesty, don't try to email me there – it's not real) because the idea of the desperate, lonely person is pretty funny, provided that it is someone else who is lonely and desperate.

Chris Collins

What I'm getting at is that I considered writing a column about how I haven't found the love of my life (or even a reasonable facsimile) yet and how it sucks to be alone on a day that is dedicated to love, but then I actually stopped and examined that statement.

Am I truly alone today? Is "alone" defined by the lack of a person to shower with Hallmark cards and cardboard hearts filled with candy, and all the rest of the overly commercialized signs of love? I mean, as hard as it might be for some people to believe, I have friends who I love and who easily mean a lot more to me than a box of caramel-covered chocolate could ever convey. And I have a family who is willing to support me and love me despite all the flaws that I have. And I have a roof over my head, and food in my stomach, and thousands of blessings that make my life pretty darn good, thank you very much.

Besides plenty of people have been really happy being alone. Look at Emily Dickinson – she was a hermit and alone, and she had a really bad life. So forget that example. Instead, look at... hmm, Henry David Thoreau – he went into the woods and lived for a couple of years and wrote Walden, a work which proves that being alone for long periods can produce odd works of literature.

Okay, so never mind, it is an unwise choice to be alone, but the point is that no one is alone. I mean, let's be interactive for a second. Stop right now and think of all the important people in your life, and, even if you aren't dating or sleeping with any of them, how hollow your life would be if they disappeared at this instant and they were all replaced with the man or woman of your dreams. I, at least, would find life alone with that one person – no matter how good – still less interesting and exciting than the life that I have without her.

So I guess the message to all you lonely people out there is: don't worry if that cute redhead, blonde, or brunette hasn't noticed you yet. Or maybe s/he has, and it didn't work out. Or maybe s/he just did notice you and something will happen. Just don't get depressed that s/he hasn't become part of your life because there's plenty of love in the world and eventually it will find you.

I also have advice for all those couples out there. If you are in love, be happy just being in love. Don't worry about gifts and everything else that we as a culture have added to the holiday. Every physical possession in the world is transient. Eventually that stuffed bear he got you will disappear, but the memories of who you are, and who you are with, are forever, so why not make those memories some of the best? Today can be the fondest memory you and that special someone have because the two of you share a connection that truly means something to you on a level that is beyond the over-hyped, dozen-long-stem-roses-equals-love society that we live in.

Chris Collins is a Collegian Columnist.

Black Affairs

Interpreting the Movement

Resident Assistants' bulletin boards in dormitories

By Tony Ortega
Collegian Correspondent

How does one interpret the Black Movement? The Residential Assistants of the Patterson/Mackimmie Cluster created uniquely expressive and personal depictions of the struggle of black people through their bulletin boards. Each board's objective is to further educate the UMass student body about black history during its designated month, February. The Residential Assistants took unparalleled time to express the emotions, achievements, and hardships that blacks endured.

When walking through the buildings, one is overwhelmed by the extremely vivid and moving examples of the struggle. Many Residential Assistants reflected on the past in unique ways, and expressed their devotion to the education of black history in their own way.

Cecilia DeAndrade, a native of Cape Verde and a Residential Assistant on Patterson's fourth floor, took the time to make signs that pointed out specific names of those who have had a great impact on black history. This type of bulletin board was very common among a lot of the boards displayed around campus. Names such as Rosa Parks, who refused to give up her seat on a Montgomery bus, and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., who was one of the key leaders in the Civil Rights Movement were a few of the names displayed on the boards. Another name that forged an indelible mark on the black psyche was the great Muhammad Ali, who was seen by many as the champion who knocked out "Uncle Tom" – George Foreman – in the "Thrilla in Manila." Another board that showed extreme devotion resides in Patterson Hall's basement level and was done by La-Tasha Green. As an art major, her talent was used elegantly in her bulletin board mural where she depicted a face that had so much emotion that it must be seen first hand to truly appreciate the beauty of the work. The titles of her boards are "Facing the Fear" and "Remembering Nat Turner's Rebellion."

"Facing the Fear" tells of things to look forward to doing this semester, such as registration, finals, and financial aid. However, the art used in the board is so moving it is truly a site to behold. "Remembering Nat Turner's Rebellion" reflects on the actions of Nat Turner, a slave who led a slave insurrection in Southampton, Virginia. There are numerous articles on the rebellion and Turner's accomplishments. There are many bulletin boards with different perspectives on the Black Movement.

Another bulletin board of particular interest in Patterson Hall belongs to Hugh Reid, a Residential Assistant of the fourth floor, who was awarded most outstanding bulletin board by the Patterson/Mackimmie staff. Others nominated were La-Tasha Green with second place, and Cecilia DeAndrade with a third place nomination. Reid's bulletin board goes into great detail as he represents his take on black history with vivid and educational pictures and dialogues. His boards are entitled "We Wear the Masks" and "The Revolution Will Not Be Televised." The titles alone are cultivating and can stimulate the mind. Education seems to be the main theme of the bulletin boards.

In "The Revolution Will Not Be Televised," the bulletin board shows people who were hosed down, attacked by dogs, battered by police officials, harassed, arrested, lynched, and publicly humiliated as they tried to voice their opinions and beliefs against the unjustness of the time. In addition, "The Revolution" could not be complete without the inclusion of black resistance, which was exemplified by the Black Panthers, who are depicted bearing arms. These pictures, and the song "Ol' Liberation" by Nikki Giovanni, give a sense of black pride and nationalism.

"We Wear the Masks" shows people who were supposed to be showing happiness for being integrated and being given the right to vote. However, in reality, the hardships and pain can be seen in all the faces of the blacks. A poem is also included to stress the reality of the issues faced by blacks all around the world on a continual basis. All these bulletin boards must be seen first hand to feel the effects that the Resident Assistants were trying to draw out.

It is quite apparent that the Resident Assistants have taken a lot of time to participate in educating students about the influence of blacks in history. This is a necessity in order for one to further his/her true understanding of the world and its issues. There is an old adage that says, "Those who do not know their own history are condemned to repeat it." This holds true with the Black Movement and any other movement or historical event of our time. These bulletin boards are very educational and an important part to the campus' interaction this year during Black History Month.

Cecilia DeAndrade's bulletin board on fourth floor Patterson highlights influential names in black history

This bulletin board hangs in Mackimmie Residence Hall for all to admire.

Hugh Reid's bulletin board won the award for most outstanding.

February 14:
Frederick Douglass born, 1817
Morehouse College founded as Augusta Institute, 1867
Gregory Hines, actor and dancer, born, 1946

February 15:
U.S. and African nationalists protesting the slaying of Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba disrupt U.N. sessions, 1961

February 16:
Frederick Douglass, orator and activist, elected President of Freedman Bank and Trust, 1857
Joe Frazier knocks out Jimmy Ellis to become world heavyweight champion, 1970

February 17:
Huey Newton, founder of the Black Panther Party, born, 1942
Thelonious Monk, jazz pianist, dies, 1982

February 18:
Gambia Independence Day

February 19:
WEB Dubois, activist, organizes the first Pan-African Congress, 1919

February 20:
JF Pickering patents his airship invention, 1900
Sydney Poitier, actor, born, 1927

THIS DAY IN BLACK HISTORY

FEBRUARY 2000

February 21:
Lemuel Haynes, first black minister to serve for a white congregation, becomes the first black person to receive honorary degree (an M.A.) from a white college (Middlebury College), 1804
Malcolm X, activist and black nationalist, assassinated, 1965

February 22:
St. Lucia Independence Day
Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., activist and chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor, denied his congressional seat, 1967

February 23:
WEB Dubois, activist, born, 1868

February 24:
Bishop Daniel A Payne, reformer and educator of AME Church, born, 1811

February 25:
Martin Luther King Jr., activist and civil rights leader, ordained as a Baptist minister, 1948
Muhammad Ali defeats Sonny Liston for the heavyweight boxing championship, 1964
Nat King Cole, singer and pianist, dies, 1964

February 26:
Antoine "Fats" Domino, singer, born, 1928
Theodore "Georgia Deacon" Flowers becomes first black middle-weight boxing champion, 1926

February 27:
Dominican Republic Independence Day
Charlotte Ray, first black female lawyer, born, 1850
Marian Anderson, opera singer, born, 1902
Debbie Thomas, figure skater, becomes first black American to win a medal at the Winter Olympics, 1988

DESIGN BY TEREZA RODRIGUES

The Man of the Month

By Hugh E. Reid
Collegian Staff

Dr. Carter G. Woodson was the son of former New Canton, Virginian slaves. He rose out of the despair of United States history to become one of the prominent black historians who devoted their lives to education. Self-taught, he mastered the common school subjects by the age of 17. He obtained his B.A. and M.A. from the University of Chicago. He went on to receive his Ph.D. in History from Harvard, becoming the second African-American to receive this degree.

In 1915 he founded the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History. Dr. Woodson made many contributions to the study of African American history and culture. In his career as an educator, Dr. Woodson became convinced that the role of black people in history was purposely either ignored or misinterpreted. As a result of this conviction, Dr. Woodson founded the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History to conduct research into the history of the African Diaspora all around the world. He did not believe in "Negro history" as a separate and distinct discipline, but rather viewed "Negro history" as a removed portion of world history, and he devoted his life to reconstructing this section.

He is best known for The Miseducation of the Negro. Among his other books are The Negro in Our History, The Story of the Negro Retold, The Education of the Negro Prior to 1861, The Negro Professional Man and the Community, and A Century of Negro Migration. In 1921 he established the Associated Publishers, which still produces the Journal of Negro History and the Negro History Bulletin.

It was because of this that he began fighting for a Negro History Week as a device for exploring and highlighting the contributions of black Americans. He wanted to make sure that African American contributions to society were not ignored. This dream became reality on February 12, 1926. Dr. Woodson believed that Negro History Week would no longer be necessary once this part of world history was integrated into the curriculum, and taught with respect and sensitivity.

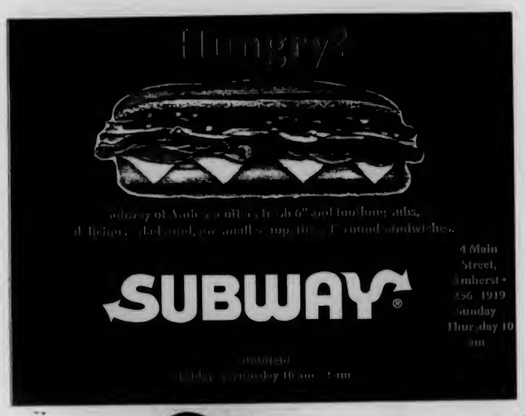
Dr. Woodson chose the second week of February because two important figures in the struggle for black freedom and the lives of black Americans were born during this month: Abraham Lincoln and Frederick Douglass. In the 1960's, the name was changed to Black History Week in order to reflect the increasing racial awareness of African-Americans. It would be much later, in 1976, as part of the nation's bicentennial celebration, that the now-renamed Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History would expand, and became established as Black History Month. It is now celebrated all over North America, where institutions and other cultural affiliates pay tribute to the African American presence in all endeavors.

Complex Shades of Blackness: Ebony Princess

Ebony Princess
Goddess to my eternal soul
Enfold me into thy bosom
Let thy great mysteries be told.

Enrapture me (capture me)
With the eternal beauty of thy heart
Delight me (invite me)
In love let us n'er be apart.

Let us celebrate
All that is the essence of your dark, passionate love
All jubilation abound within you
To thy artifactor and creator from above



Ebony Princess
Warm delicate flower of the Nile
I honor you and cherish you
Your name, your memory let no man defile

As I drink of thy beauty
I am intoxicated by the strong nature of thy will Flowing freely within me
Seeking ever to love you still.

Mother, daughter, lover of all that is precious and true
Bathe me in your heavenly glory
As the sunshine melts the rain
And the earth bursts forth with harvest anew.

Ebony Goddess
Fire that feeds my innermost desire
Soothe the yearnings that tremble within me
Bless me that your love I may acquire.

BY GERALD LANE

Love Is In BLOOM

The historic
Salem Cross Inn 1705
Route 9 West Brookfield, Ma 01585
(508) 867-2345
Reserve for Valentine's Day and Enjoy a Sleigh ride Fine Food & Drink

salemxinn@aol.com wwwsalemcrossinn.com

(((Babycakes,
You are my one and only true love. Will you be my Valentine? I love you always and forever. Love R.

Deborah A,
You're beautiful.
You're smart
I'm confident.
You're close to my heart.

TJ- I love you more then words can say. Maura

MNC- Will you be my Valentine? Meet me at my house at 7pm. with the answer-MEC

GNC- Through all the ups and downs you will always be my g-smoothie. I love you. Poisom Ivy

To the most wonderful boyfriend in the world, Double A: Thank you for being there for me and loving me with all of your heart. Happy Valentine's Day!! Love always and for eternity, Teen.

Sarah,
You are the best.
Love Matt.

Kara,
This is so your Valentine's Day is better than ones in the past.
With Love,
Seth

Kelly you make my life worth living. I love you with all my heart. Happy Valentine's Day. Love Jeff

Dear Matt,
I am so happy that we are able to spend this Valentine's Day together! I love you so much! You are perfect in every way and I just want to know, will you be my Valentine? I love you! Hope we have many more together!
Love,
Kristen

My Dearest Siobhan,
Roses have thorns,
And violets- they're out of season
But declaring my love for you
Do i need a reason?
Happy V-Day, Shweebe!

Love,
Meggie-Muffs

My Crazy Vermonter,
You're the sweetest, most loving person ever. I'm so lucky. All my love forver.
You
Honorary Vermonter

Your angel eyes, like the stars above
A love Between us as pure as a white dove.
Nothing has changed my life as much as your love.
For my Chi O Laune.
Love Steve.

For making all my dreams become iced out realities. You are my Ghetto Boo. I devote all my love to you. I hope you die.
From Your AZN
Queen

Meg,
Will you be my Valentine? I love you almost as much as Baseball!
Love,
Brian

Matty B,
Will you be my Valentine? I love you babe!
Carolyn

Lao Yae,
I know its hard but we will go through this together. I love you. I really do.
Xiao Er

Lauren Williams,
I want to be your lover and your friend!
Love Rm 209

Bonnie Tatro,
Hugs and kisses <mpwa>
you bunches.
-Maniac from M

Secret Admirer

Sean Davidson,
Will you be my been watching about it gets Love Always
JWLZ

Justin Dorrerwick,
Love and Kisses Happy
Valentine's Day! XOXO
Luv J
P.S. Us for dinner

Scott,
You'll always be my one and only true love. Happy Valentine's Day
Love Andrea

Happy Valentine's Day to my girls of 504! May Cupid strike everyone
Love Always: C

Seeking eternal love with man.. must be caring intelligent, patient, with big heart to share family, must be serious responsive. When words must disa
you more th

best friend. Must ahrr.. M
love

many times you must see a face that reminds you
Or gaze at the pictures and remember
He walked behind you and beside you
As a brother
Many times I've Or lost in a reminis
And before
A from
Will will he
All e stronger
You've made a bond never to be broken
Not even death can shake it
For it is an alliance of love 10 men here
Many will try to imitate will ever truly att

him
I realize now that I do through each of you,
I know the kinship and love he must have possessed
For it radiates from all of you and though you can't see him
He is forever kept,
in our hearts as a friend and beside you as a brother

For the brothers of Latina Lambda Fraternity, In Who love
Day,

Have a wonderful Valentine's Day! Our first of many!
Lots of love,
JAM

Happy Valentine's Day to THe Bussiness, Graphics and ments! Thanks for all and dedication!!!
Thank
Deb

Happy Valentine's friends. You are the made college so much for all the great memories!
you Swans, Rails, Court, girls Street, Daryl and of course Ma and roomies, Allisoni, Molls, and Love, Deb

Valentine's Day honey. You holiest juban I know.
Here
future.
, M

Marc
W
ou want for dinner?
ch meid.
manquas. Embrasse un er pour moi.
-Simon

2nd FLOOR GREENOU
I SEND YOU MUCH LOVE
VALENTINES DAY....YO
BEEN THE NEST VA
RA COULD ASK FO
PEACE...YOUR
H STAR

0!! Happy V-Day
Laura! I love you gys or poopy boots, etc. THOR, ll find the man of your dreams someday.
-Katie (aka Consuela)

DAN-Baby-Lover,
Just loving you.
everyday. Forever and Love,
Jeanette
To Jen
My forever always Love,
Je

nd Dad,
nk you for support-
!
love you!
py V-Day
S-E-Lady

Happy V
Crazy 23, heart! SLW
You
all have a pla n my

To Justin, Carlie, Hillary, and Jamie,
Happy Valentine's Day. I love you all.
Love Always,
Karyn
P.S. Call Me!

Baby,
Is your father a thief?
No.
Well, who stole the stars from the sky and put them in your eyes?
Love
From,
Chalupa
Pookie-Ahh!

To my sparkling Silver,
I savor each moment we have to noone that means you do; e times whe
I get frustrated, the sight of your love reminds me of that special link between us that will remain inseperable years to come. Happy V-Day!

To Dave, Matt, Ken, Adam, Dan, Kev and to all the boys I've kissed before, life wouldn't be the same without cha. Happy V-Day
-Luvs Bridget

Happy Valentine's Day to all my girls! Susanne, Mariah, Cara, Amelia, Courtney, Leslie , Joylyn and, Sarah!! See you at Barsi's! Cheers! Bridget

Mark,
I melt when I see you.
-RED

Ever since I first laid my eyes on you I have fallen in love. The way you walk down the hall I just makes me melt. I am too afarid to approach you but hope oneday I will have the courage
I Love You

Blood may be thicker than water but frosting, toothpaste and shaving cream are the truest bonds of friendship. I love you!! Happy Valentine's Day!!!Meredith,
I love you very, very much. Will you be my Valentine from now until forever? I love u!
Love,
Ed

Megan,
Nothing in the world has ever meant so much to me as the love we are discovering now. Falling for you is the best thing to ever happen to me.
Happy Valentine's Day.
Love Always,
John d,

Jeff,
Happy Valentine's Day! I love you with all my heart and soul. Kelly XOXO

To: Laura Missy Sarah,
I love you more than words can say!!
To Bridget,
Thank you.
Love Always,
SLW

KARAOKE
Sun-Thu: 11:30 -1:00
Fri-Sat: 11:30 -1:30
Rock & Roll 10:30-1:00 Fri-Sat Nights
ICHIBAN いちばん
AUTHENIC JAPANESE AND KOREAN RESTAURANT
1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, off Main St.)

LACY LINES FOR VALENTINES

Le Boudoir
Fine Lingerie

Beck rocks Beantown

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Beck
Orpheum Theater
February 12th

Beck, funk-folk-rock visionary and showman extraordinaire, came to the Orpheum for two sold-out shows Friday and Saturday, touring for his November-released Midnite Vultures, and I was fortunate enough to catch the second night. Beck took the stage at nine o'clock – and what a stage it was, with neon, organic-looking ventilation tubes strewn about the drum, keyboard, and turntable risers – accompanied by an impressive touring band, including a keyboardist, DJ, a horn section (the "brass menagerie" as he introduced them), and two backing female vocalists ("the divas"). Drummer, guitarist, and longtime bassist Justin Meldal-Johnsen completed the instrumental lineup necessary to recreate Beck's complex and eclectic music in the live setting.

They opened with "Novacane" from Beck's 1996 breakthrough album Odelay, a pounding piece of guitar-driven hip-hop, before moving into "Mixed Bizness," from Midnite Vultures. Beck tossed out dance moves worthy of Prince, sliding and flailing across the stage in an act you were never certain was sincere. Part of Beck's talent and appeal lies in drawing from and manipulating the more pedestrian portions of mainstream pop music, subverting it to his own musical designs; while soaking in Beck's antics, the entire audience becomes privy to an in-joke that outsiders don't understand, a humor that runs deeper than mere silliness.

And also, of course, the music's great, and anyone who had failed to notice this during the first two songs were sucked in when Beck and companions broke into the irresistibly danceable Odelay hit, "The New Pollution." Many songs off of Odelay found themselves reworked and hyper-energized during their live performance, benefiting greatly from the horns and backing singers. Every song was a new treat, a new chance to hear your favorite Beck tune remixed for the live setting.

Other highlights included "Deadweight" from the A Life Less Ordinary soundtrack, the hilarious slow-jam "Debra," and "Jack Ass" another Odelay tune that sounded better than ever in person. After that, the band left the stage, leaving Beck alone with his acoustic guitar and harmonica collection for a small set of often-overlooked folk songs, including "Dead Melodies" from 1998's Mutations.

As the band found its way back onto stage, Beck broke into a knee-slapping harmonica solo before finishing off the first set with four more songs, including Midnite Vulture's first single, "Sexx Laws," and the Odelay hit, "Where It's At." These two songs, performed at maximum volume and with maximum funk, left the audience roaring for more. Before the band returned for an encore, however, Beck's DJ, DJ Swamp, demonstrated his talent at the turntables with several minutes of solo spinning and mixing. The band tore its way through "Devil's Haircut" and "Minus", both from Odelay, before calling it a night.

Beth Orton, backed by a small acoustic band, provided an excellent opening set, including "Someone's Daughter" from her 1996 album, Trailer Park and "Stolen Car," off of her most recent album, Central Reservation. Between her painfully introspective lyrics and remarkable vocal talent, it was hard not to find Orton's performance mesmerizing.

Smack in the middle of his Midnight Vulture tour, Beck sold out two shows at the Orpheum in Boston this weekend.

The Sheila Divine plays Umass

By Shawn Ilinitch
Collegian Staff

Saturday night the Sheila Divine proved why they were nominated for six Boston Music Awards, in particular the nomination for best live act. The band impressed the Skybox crowd with their powerful songs full of emotion.

The show began with the Pills, from Boston, who had musical styles that seemed to change more than Cher's face. During their puppy songs they sounded songs, including Midnite Vulture's first single, "Sexx Laws," and the Odelay hit, "Where It's At." These two songs, performed at maximum volume and with maximum funk, left the audience roaring for more. Before the band returned for an encore, however, Beck's DJ, DJ Swamp, demonstrated his talent at the turntables with several minutes of solo spinning and mixing. The band tore its way through "Devil's Haircut" and "Minus", both from Odelay, before calling it a night.

Beth Orton, backed by a small acoustic band, provided an excellent opening set, including "Someone's Daughter" from her 1996 album, Trailer Park and "Stolen Car," off of her most recent album, Central Reservation. Between her painfully introspective lyrics and remarkable vocal talent, it was hard not to find Orton's performance mesmerizing.

They hit the stage all in black, and began to play to a crowd that had reached about 70. They used harmonies galore as they moved through the more pop side of their set. Lead singer Dana Hammet sounded like a cross between John Reznick of the Goo Goo Dolls and Liam Gallagher of Oasis. The highlight of their show, unfortunately, did not come until the last two songs, where they abandoned the harmony and played some heavier songs. The set ended with "Heaven's Falling," the first song on their four-song EP. When finished, they were convinced to play one more and ended with another good, strong song. Mary's First will be releasing their first album sometime in the spring and will be playing at Theodores on February 24.

About half of the crowd, which peaked at about 100, left after the Mary's First set. Unfortunately, they missed the best set of the night. The Sheila Divine began their set with "Opportune Moment" from their CD The New Parade. The crowd that did remain moved towards the stage, singing along. The band moved through two more songs from the album before treating their fans to a new song, "Pacemaker," which was slower than most of the songs on the album, but just as powerful.

Their set ended with "Automatic Buffalo," but the crowd wanted more. Frontman Aaron Perrino, who has battled a cold all week, told his bandmates, "I don't have a lot in me, come on up." The band concluded with the title track of the album, "New Parade," a song where the comparisons to Radiohead have most likely come from. Perrino, despite his cold, sang as strongly as Thom Yorke, which is not an easy endeavor.

The Sheila Divine were able to hook you with their rhythmic verses and then play powerful bridges, only to bring back to the verse again with no problems at all. Their set was filled with power and emotion that is lacking from so many shows today.

The Sheila Divine begin a short tour with Morrisey on Thursday. They will play at TT and the Bears on Feb. 25 and 26. In April, the band will head to Europe to play in some festivals. Perrino lists his influences as "heavily European," citing the Psychedelic Furs, the Cure, the Smiths, Radiohead, and the Pixies. They have played with Superdrag, the Manic Street Preachers, and Sloan. Recently, they played the Paradise for a crowd of 750 people, a show that they list as their favorite. Their recent success has left the band overwhelmed. Perrino described the feeling as "like a dream." After touring, the band plans on beginning work on a new album.

The Skybox proved to be a nice venue. They put on a great light show, and a great atmosphere permeated the crowd. The only problem came during the second-to-last song where the microphone went out periodically.

The Sheila Divine brought the local sound that earned them six Boston Music Award nominations to the Skybox Saturday night.

LOVIN' IN A CALCULATAH...4,3,2,1 MUCH LOVE-
FROM SUNDAY NIGHT GRAPHICS

AEROBICS
CARDIO KICKBOXING
Suspended Wood Floor
YOGA
Area's Largest Room
PILATES
Walk Ins Welcome
CARDIO CIRCUIT
Certified Instructors
STRETCH
Classes Daily
Amherst Athletic Club
256-0080

HEY DAVID SCOTT
NOW big are your buildings?
If Amherst & Hampshire Colleges can contribute $5,000 towards a Thermal Imaging Camera for the Amherst Fire Department, why can't UMass?
P.S. We could also use $450,000 for a Ladder Truck.
Paid for by Larry Kelley

CARDIO
PRECOR ELLIPTICALS
More Than Ultimate Fitness
TREADMILLS
More Than Kidsports
STAIRMASTERS
More Than Hampshire Fitness
RECUMBENTS
More Than Amherst College
ROWERS
Amherst Athletic Club
256-0080

HEY DAVID SCOTT
NOW big are your buildings?
If Amherst & Hampshire Colleges can contribute $5,000 towards a Thermal Imaging Camera for the Amherst Fire Department, why can't UMass?
P.S. We could also use $450,000 for a Ladder Truck.
Paid for by Larry Kelley

安城中國領店
AMHERST
CHINESE FOOD
we do not use "MSG"
253-7835 • 253-2813
82 Main Street, Amherst

AH-NA
yeah..hear we go..nothin' but lovin'..but remember to love yo self before any other..uwight??

DO YOU NEED YOUR WISDOM TEETH REMOVED?
If so, patients are being enrolled for a wisdom tooth research study. Your wisdom teeth can be extracted by a Board Certified Oral Surgeon. Financial compensation will be provided for your opinion on a research pain medication.
For more information call:
SCIREX Corporation at (860) 285-0569
Outside Windsor call toll free 1-888-285-0569
SCIREX

University Directories
Sales & Marketing Internships
The nation's largest publisher of college and university campus telephone directories is offering paid full-time summer sales and marketing internships. Tremendous practical business experience and resume booster. Position begins in May with a week-long, expense paid program in Chapel Hill, NC. Interns market official directories locally, selling advertising space to area businesses in specific college markets. Earnings average $3000.00 for the 10-week program. All majors welcome!
We will be attending the University of Massachusetts Job Fair on February 16 and interviewing on February 17. Be sure to stop by our display table. Call 1-800-743-5556 ext. 157 or visit our website at www.universitydirectories.com for more information and to apply.
University Directories
PO Box 8830 • Chapel Hill, NC 27515
(800) 743-5556 • Fax (919) 968-8513
www.universitydirectories.com

STUDY IN GERMANY!
Do you speak German? Are you interested in an exciting learning experience? Study for a semester or year at one of the nine universities in Baden-Württenberg. Virtually all academic disciplines are available.
★ ★ ★
Information session:
Monday, February 14, 2000, at 5pm.
Study Abroad Advising Center,
Hills South, Room 455
★ ★ ★
For additional information contact:
Stefanie Bergmann, International Programs Office, Hills South. POhone: (413) 545-2710, email: sbergman@ipo.umass.edu

Always in Bloom
Valentine's Day!
February 14th
Plants, Balloons, & Stuffed Animals
Dutch & Exotic Bouquets
Local Special
Hugs & Kisses
Kisses: Cuddly Soft Bear, Red Rose & Balloon $25.00
Hugs: Bud Vase Bear with Red Rose $17.50
Uncompromising Quality, Selection, Presentation & Service
220 N. Pleasant St., Amherst
253-5545
We Deliver Anywhere!

Machine Head battery, Reveille raves, And Six Feet Under conquer Metalfest

By Michael Delano and Greg Leger
Collegian Staff

NEW ENGLAND METAL & HARDCORE FESTIVAL
Worcester Palladium
February 11, 2000

The crowd at Metalfest (as it will hereby be referred to) was essentially what you would expect. The hardcore kids paraded around with backpacks over their Converge and Diecast hoodies. The metal kids are a longhaired, t-shirts only crowd with Six Feet Under and Machine Head claiming the most victims. And of course no metal show would be complete without the 40-year-old drunk guys who just wandered in since there was "metal" on the bill, wearing either a Patriots T-shirt from ten years ago or a faded Skid Row tour shirt. And naturally there was the 50-year-old black guy wearing a shirt and sweater, dress pants, and loafers standing behind me during the Six Feet Under set. I have no idea either, but never let anyone say that metal doesn't attract a diverse audience.

Friday night headliners Machine Head had a live performance that is among the best I have ever witnessed. This was my first time seeing them in concert, and I knew their material would be explosive in a live setting. The band lived up to every expectation. Opening with "Desire to Fire" from their latest album The Burning Red was the obvious but perfect choice, and the madness that ensued was prolonged since the song was shortened to provide a perfect segue into "Take Me Scars." When the crowd finally got a breather, frontman Robb Flynn dedicated the next song to all the "beer-drinking metalfesters," and renamed a great track from the new album "The Blood, The Sweat, Da Beers!"

Machine Head's set was impressive also, housing two large standees of a great dragon logo as well as a fairly high raised drum set for Dave McClain, who was dressed rather eclectically with sunglasses and multi-colored hair. Armed with another beverage, vodka and coke, Flynn told the crowd that if they wanted heavy, it didn't get much heavier than the next song, "Ten Ton Hammer." The mayhem continued with excellent versions of the old school "Nation on Fire," the slower-paced "Silver," and bludgeoning closers "Davidian" and "Nothing Left." The highlight of their set, however, was the incredible "Old," which I would consider one of the best metal songs ever made, and Flynn showed that even after almost a decade of touring, he will still jump into the crowd and belt out his lyrics for that added affect.

Local boys Reveille, responding to criticism that they may not belong on such a heavy bill, did their best to win over the crowd. The floor immediately filled up with fans as they took the stage, mostly representing a younger audience than the other acts. Nevertheless, the pit was definitely raging due to the immense energy of the band. "Judas" and "Permanent (Take A Look Around)" proved to be crowd favorites, although the true high point (literally) of their set was the ten-foot stage-dive by vocalist Drew Simollares that proved Reveille was here to make an impression by any means necessary. Definitely an impressive performance that exceeded most expectations, and makes the band one to keep an eye out for.

Death metal act Six Feet Under and Massachusetts hardcore group Shadows Fall both gave performances that pleased their fans, but most likely didn't win over any new followers. Six Feet Under, led by vocalist Chris Barnes, pleased fans with offerings from their latest album Maximum Violence as well as old favorites like "Revenge of the Zombie," "Human Target," and, of course, "the one about the wolf," "Lycanthropy." The hardcore sound of Shadows Fall shows a lot of musical talent, but is marred by substandard hardcore vocals and some distorted soloing.

The show was set up fairly well in such a small venue as the Palladium. Upstairs near a second bar was the second stage, which housed the lesser-known bands and gave some of them only twenty-minute sets. With a time slot like that, a group has to make their impression fast, and the only band I saw on the second stage due to time restraints, Primer 55, did just that. Their painfully short four-song set got off to a troubled start. Technical problems were abound during their first two songs, both which did little to set them apart from the countless other hardcore bands that graced the second stage. But the final two songs, "Set It Off" and "Loose," both incorporated more strongly their hip-hop influences and featured stronger riffs that got the crowd moving. With more songs like these, Primer 55 has the opportunity to make a bigger impression.

Robb Flynn and Machine Head turned desire to fire on Friday night at the Worcester Palladium.

hoops

continued from page 12

foul shots."
On the flipside, without anything doing inside, UMass isn't getting to the line itself, going 8 for 13 against the Muskies.

"If I'm Bruiser, looking at the stats, I would get frustrated as well," Xavier coach Skip Prosser said in response.

"But I'm not, so I don't."

Rhymer and Brand were no match inside against West, Lloyd Price, and reserve Aaron Turner. While the Rhymer grabbed a team-high six rebounds, he played just 22 minutes thanks to a vicious case of foul trouble. Brand picked up where he left off in the foul column, fouling out late in the second half along with Shannon Crooks. Meanwhile, Xavier continued its efficiency from the line, scoring its final 14 points for free.

The next big man is Anthony Oates and then Ronell Blizzard. Not even they can resolve the problem, pairing up for three boards a game. Forward Chris Kirkland grabbed just two rebounds himself. Averaging six per game, Kirkland also disappeared underneath against Temple, snaring just two caroms in the 27-point loss.

Kirkland can score, though, so he's off. So in essence, it's Brand and Rhymer to clean up the Minutemen's mess.

While Mack was all but unstoppable in the game's opening half, he showed his human side after intermission. His 32 points was a game-high, but in a fast-paced second half, Mack kept the Minutemen afloat, that is until UMass piled too much on his shoulders and the fort gave way. He played 38 minutes and hoisted 20 shots amongst a tempo that wretched spectators' necks quicker than a Sampras/Agassi Australian Open rematch. He scored half of the team's points in the opening 20 minutes that had UMass locked at 42 with the run'n'gun Musketeers.

Yet somehow, some way, the Minutemen asked for and needed more from their senior leader. A clear disadvantage inside called for another near-perfect shooting half from Mack. Unfortunately, even he had nothing left to give.

The Minutemen's weaknesses are being revealed from the inside out. It's like a domino effect. Logic says that the further a shooter roams away from the hoop, the more difficult the shot gets. Mack is quite the scorer, but the second he or another perimeter shooter miss, it's going the other way. Consequently, baskets don't come easily and the Minutemen are constantly scouring the hardwoods for points.

The problem lies right square in the 11-man lineup that Flint fields. Forget the job security business, forget it, because Bruiser can only do so much with the tools he has in his box. He's arranged his troops gallantly but he simply can't fix a hole in a bucket with a piece of tape. This is a far bigger problem, or, really, a far bigger hole.

minutemen

continued from page 12

strengths to compensate for their striking weaknesses. Twice the Minutemen staked out a five-point advantage only to have it squashed more often than not by a second-chance point off of a Xavier rebound.

After Mack netted his fourth trey at 4:59 to establish a 31-26 lead, Price answered with a three to cut the lead back down to two. Kirkland chipped in an additional two, but point guard Maurice McAfee sank a jumper on the next possession followed by a pair of free throws to knot up the score at 33-all.

The Musketeers closed out the half with two more free throws by Darnell Williams to tie it up at 42. Xavier was heavily assisted with the gift of free throws and did not waste its opportunities at the line, depositing 17-for-19 for almost half of their points in the early half.

Both teams started off sloppy in the opening minutes of the second half as balls dribbled off feet and passes spun away from their receivers. UMass righted itself first, racing off to an 8-2 run in the first six minutes to make it 50-46. After two quick fouls on Minuteman Micah Brand, the Musketeers retook the lead behind a Williams three-pointer at 13:04. Williams, who sat out last year to recover from knee surgery, chipped in 19 points and was perfect from the line, going 7-for-7.

Ahead two points after freshman David West made good on a layup, Xavier's Kevin Frey nailed four clutch points from the candy stripe to go along with a dunk that burst open an eight point lead with 7:08 left.

Jonathan DePina came off the bench in the last three minutes to drain both of his attempts from behind the arc that temporarily kept UMass in a position to make a comeback at 81-75 with 39 seconds to go. But it was the Musketeers converting 14-of-16 free throws in the last 3:43 that finalized the victory.

MINUTEMEN NOTES: Mack stepped into eighth place on Massachusetts all-time scoring charts with 1,439 points, surpassing Horace Nesmith (1953-

hockey

continued from page 12

on the power play at the 16:31 mark of the second stanza. The goal came off a blast from just inside the blue line to make the score 3-1.

The Maroon and White pulled to within one goal of the Black Bears when Darcy King scored his second goal of the weekend off the rebound of a Kris Wallis shot. Again 3-2 would be as close as the Minutemen would get as Maine responded to the UMass barrage.

A.J. Legg scored his second goal of the season off great passes from Jim Leger and Brendan Walsh to give the Black Bears a 4-2 edge. Legg added another goal with just over a minute to go in the game to up the Maine lead to 5-2, which would be the final count.

With the two wins Maine swept the season series over the Minutemen by winning all three of its contests. UMass will next be in action Feb. 25 when the Eagles of Boston College soar into the Mullins Center for another pivotal Hockey East game.

Xavier 87, UMass 77

at Cincinnati Gardens
Cincinnati, Ohio

XAVIER (16-9)	Min	FG M-A	FT M-A	REB O-D-T	A	F	PTS
Lloyd Price	36	7-15	0-0	1-5-7	1	3	16
Reggie Butler	6	1-3	0-0	0-1-2	0	1	2
David West	39	4-9	2-2	3-7-10	1	3	10
Maurice McAfee	35	3-5	10-10	0-2-2	5	2	15
Darnell Williams	34	5-8	7-7	0-2-2	3	2	19
Kevin Frey	19	1-3	4-4	0-2-2	0	1	6
Aron Brown	1	0-0	0-0	0-0-0	0	0	0
Aaron Turner	20	2-5	0-0	1-3-4	1	0	4
TEAM				0-1-1
TOTALS	200	23-49	18-19	6-27-40	13	12	87

FG%: .469. FT%: .947. 3-point goals: 5-8, .625 (Williams 2-3, Price 2-4, McAfee 1-2). Blocked shots: 3 (Butler, West). Turnovers: 13 (McAfee 6, Butler 3, Williams 3, Price 2, West 2, Turner 2, Frey). Steals: 7 (McAfee 3, Price 2, West, Williams, Technical fouls: none.

UMASS (19-11)	Min	FG M-A	FT M-A	REB O-D-T	A	F	PTS
Chris Kirkland	27	0-12	0-0	0-2-2	1	2	10
Mike Babul	10	0-0	0-0	1-0-1	2	1	0
Khawna Rhymer	22	2-3	4-5	3-3-6	0	4	8
Monty Wade	38	11-20	4-4	0-1-1	1	2	32
Shannon Crooks	34	4-13	0-2	1-2-3	0	5	9
Anthony Oates	1	0-0	0-0	0-0-0	0	0	0
Jonathan DePina	3	0-2	0-0	1-0-1	1	1	0
Brandon Smith	7	0-2	0-0	1-1-2	0	1	0
Micah Brand	20	2-5	0-0	1-1-2	0	3	4
TEAM				1-1-2
TOTALS	200	20-62	8-13	8-13-21	19	20	77

FG%: .806. FT%: .615. 3-point goals: 2-21, .429 (Wade 1-9, Kirkland 1-2, DePina 0-2, Crooks 1-6, Smith 0-1). Blocked shots: 2 (Babul, Rhymer). Turnovers: 13 (Babul 4, Wade 3, Crooks 2, Rhymer 2, Kirkland, DePina, Shaaw, Babul 1, Kirkland 2, Wade 2, Crooks). Technical fouls: none.

Attendance: 10,156

SCORE BY PERIODS	1st	2nd	TOTAL
Xavier	42	45	87
UMass	42	35	77

In an increasingly competitive and interdependent world, shouldn't you have international experience?
Mexico•Honduras•Costa Rica•Dominican Republic
Nicaragua•Paraguay•Brazil•Bolivia
Invest in your future career by working as a community health volunteer in Latin America. Develop leadership, organizational and cross-cultural communication skills while focusing on public health and environmental projects. College credit and scholarships are available. Write or call today for this life enhancing opportunity.
AMIGOS
1-800-231-7796 ext.126
Amigos de las Americas
5618 Star Lane
Houston, TX 77057

Once you've read the book...
LIVE THE ADVENTURE!
Northwestern Mutual Life's College Internship Program joined the distinguished list of the ten best internships in the nation. Out of nearly 2,000 intern programs reviewed, ours was the only insurance internship included. Not only is our internship an opportunity to gain actual business experience, it's also a chance to earn some sweet cash! For more information about a sales career or internship contact:
Northwestern Mutual Life
The Quiet Company
www.northwesternmutual.com
DIANE BARNES
The Steffen Agency
Springfield, MA
413/748-6000
Visit our booth at the UMASS Career Fair on Wednesday, February 16th

Valentine's Day Sale
University Store
Not like a mall... Better.
BUY 1 GET THE 2nd 1/2 OFF
All Stuffed Animals
&
All Picture Frames
(Higer price prevails, must be of equal of lesser value)
Valentine's Day Bear Drawing
Name:_____ Phone:_____
Email:_____
Do you live on campus?__Which dorm?_____
All fields must be completed to validate entries.
All entries must be in by Monday, February 14th at 4:00
Drawing to take place at 4:30 on Valentine's Day at Ustore

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

ATTENTION SOCCER PLAYERS. WINTER INDOOR LEAGUES FORMING NOW. Men's competitive Tuesday Night, women's competitive Thursday night, co-rec Friday night. Accepting individuals or full teams. Eight week season and playoffs. Three miles from campus, on bus route. Call Starker 397-9716 starker@javanet.com Breakaway Sports 549-3638.

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates 3 Bedroom luxury Apt. available now. For more information call (413)253-7377.

AUTO FOR SALE

'87 Honda Accord. Grey 4dr. sdn. A/C, radio cassette, fog lights, power windows/locks. Good condition. $1500.00. 545-2451, ask for Van Dalsen.

'89 Ford Escort. 2dr hatchback, one owner, 5 spd. Blue- well maintained. New Clutch, brakes and tires. 148k, a lot of life left $1800.00. 413-323-9407.

'94 Nissan Maxima. Dark green, good condition. $6000.00. Call 253-6480.

COMPUTERS

604/120 Desk top powermac clone 17" monitor 28.8 modem software incl. Internet ready $1200.00. Also available. Lazer printer $200. Both $1300.oo 546-4517 or rosenleaf@aya.yale.edu

EMPLOYMENT

PCA's needed for various duties, various hours am and pm. good pay rate. On bus route. call for more information. (413)323-9633 Martina.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Camp Wayne for girls-sister half of brother/sister camp in Pennsylvania (3 hrs from New York City). If you love children and want a caring, fun environment we are looking to hire staff from 6/20-8/18/00 for: tennis, basketball, softball, soccer, volleyball, golf, gymnastics, aerobics, cheerleading, swimming, sailing, waterskiing, self-defense, ropes, fine arts (ceramics, sculptuer, drawing, painting, silk screening, jewlery), photography, piano, guitar, drama, video, group leaders. On campus interviews March 9th. Call 800-279-3019.

Open-minded amateur photographer position available. No experience needed. Equipment provided. Call for more details. 584-4665.

Pt/Time janitorial. Hadley, MA. Mon, Tue, Thurs, Fri and Sat 7-10am. 413-748-0028.

EMPLOYMENT

Prestigious Northeastern Pennsylvania camp. Trails End Camp-Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts & crafts (woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film), waterfront (waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TOP SALARIES and BENEFITS!!! ONLINE APPLICATION!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

$Great Opportunity$. Marketing company seeks reliable and money motivated student for credit card promo's on-campus. Excellent commission. Flexible hours. 1-800-592-2121 ext. 300.

Work for exciting college focused internet company at your school. Looking for individual with strong leadership, entrepreneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay, and options! Contact info at uconnectons.com

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

EMPLOYMENT

Full time/part time line and prep. cooks. High volume brew pub is now hiring experienced line and prep cooks. Must have at least 1 year cooking experience, be reliable, hardworking and a team player. Apply at Amherst Brewing Company 36 North Pleasant St.

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr: $8. ph. 549-8843.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFE-TIME OF EXPERIENCE

I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.collegeproedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available. Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous customer service experience. Photo and minilab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Phi Sigma Pi National Honor Fraternity is looking for new members. If you have between 12 and 90 credits and a 3.0 GPA come learn more about us at an info nigth 2/15 and 2/16 at 7pm in Campus Center room 904-08. Questions? email psp@stuaf.umass.edu

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in beautiful 5 bdroom house. 10 minutes from Amherst Center. Available NOW. $300/mo. 256-2384.

Furnished room with free cable. Private entrance and kitchen facilities. 4 miles from UMass. Not on bus line. $295/mo. Utilities included. 253-3670.

1 bedroom in 2 bedroom apt looking for 1 or 2 people. Non-smoker 3/4 mi from campus. Effective immediately. Call Allissa 253-4275.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for roommates with references you can trust? Your friends and your friend's friends might know someone and sixdegrees can help you meet them. www.sixdegrees.com

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009.

TRAVEL

LAGNAF in Jamaica for spring break. Mar. 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/ Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

Actress for short film to be shot locally during February. Heavy emotion needed. No experience needed. Willing to work around class schedule. Call 222-4255 for more info.

WANTED

Volunteers Needed. Are you looking to do community service? For more info call Alpha Phi Omega 545-2068.

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Women volunteers needed for research exploring high school sex education. 18-28 yrs. old. Participate 30 min. interview. Women of diverse backgrounds encouraged. Kim 587-0273 or kcondon@javanet.com

Happy Valentine's Day

The Collegian Classifieds

Five College Community Calendar

MONDAY, FEB. 14

Auditions – Auditions will be held from 7-9 p.m. for a new UVC-TV 19 independent drama production. The auditions will take place at the studio, located next to the Hatch in the Student Union. All are welcome—no experience or preparation is necessary. Call 546-3726 for more information.

TUESDAY, FEB. 15

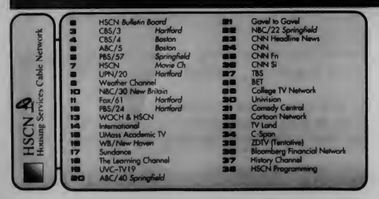
Meeting – The UMass Ballroom Dance Club will meet at 8:30 p.m. in Totman 101.

Workshop – There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 7 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services. Men and women are welcome. Call Day at 577-5188 for more details.

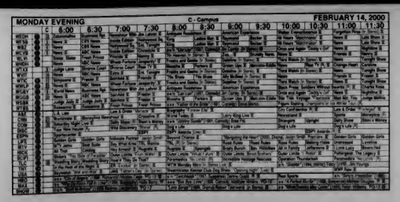
NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues, and anything that captures that essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac11@aol.com or Caleb at 587-3740 by March 5.



Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. Student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.



Support – A 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape and childhood sexual abuse and/or assault will be held on Wednesday nights from 7-9 p.m. starting March 1. All interested women need to have an initial interview before the group begins. To sign up, or for more information, call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Spoot By Mike Banchick

Mutant Mutati By Karl Levy

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You're likely to be distracted from a primary endeavor today by a secondary difficulty that seems to arise from out of nowhere.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – It's a good idea to double-check on your own progress throughout the day. Money matters may get complicated late in the day. Do the math!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may have to play the game by talking business with someone you do not always get along with – either personally or professionally.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Be ready today for a complication that has been brewing for quite some time. Very soon it will threaten to boil over.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your exploration of a developing issue is likely to prove to you just what you need to do to keep things under control. Stick to the game plan.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Progress may be slow today, but it will certainly be consistent. Take care that you don't mistake a slowdown for a lack of forward motion.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You're trying to devise a way to get more done in less time, but until you know exactly what it is you're trying to accomplish it will be impossible.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Are you ready for that big thing you've been anticipating? Excitement must not be mistaken for preparation. Do your homework!

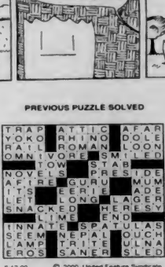
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – It's not a good idea today to let those under your charge have free reign. You're going to have to exert subtle but definite control.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Interruptions are unavoidable today, but you will develop a successful strategy for juggling your duties with essential courtesy to others.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Like your Scorpio neighbor, you'll have to learn how to do more than one thing at a time today in order to avoid real frustration.

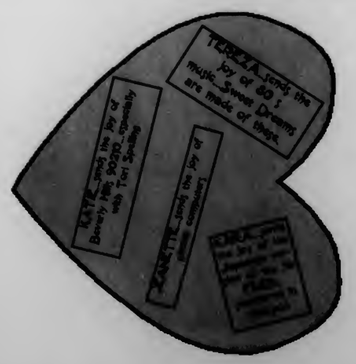
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – The more you try to muscle things into place today, the more disorganized they will get. Try a more gentle, easy-going, subtle approach.

Quote of the Day



"For me to poop on!!"

-Triumph, the Insult Comic Dog from the Conan O'Brien Show



ACROSS
1 Kimono tie
4 Defendant's excuse
9 Daddy
13 — King Cole
14 Crates
15 Actress Hunt
16 What a flirt bats
18 Separate
19 Wanderer
20 High-speed road
22 Housecoats
25 Facilitate 26 Overact
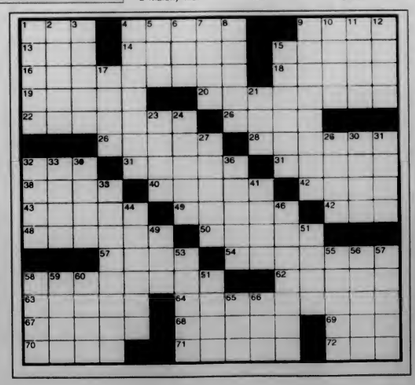
28 Trunks
32 Schoolboy
35 Interest
37 Vine fruit
38 — plaisir
40 Brand name
42 Spanish lady's title
43 Cap part
45 Grinding tooth
47 Mountain pass
48 Sci-fi writer
50 Loud cry
52 Bucket
54 Place in quarantine
58 Wild feline
62 Muslim holy book
63 Way
64 Overhanging rock
67 Possessed
68 Martinique volcano
69 Goat
70 Gabs and gabs
71 Blue —
72 Pigpen



DOWN
1 Upright
2 Marshy inlet
3 Articles
4 Part of USMA
5 — Palmas
6 Suffix meaning "sort of"
7 Red vegetable
8 Edition
9 Seasoned
10 Jai —
11 Company car, e.g.
12 Start a poker pot
15 Horse-drawn cab
17 Overdue
21 Squeal (on)
23 Muddy the waters
24 Type of iron
27 Type of grease
29 Trudge
30 A Chaplin
31 Ginger cookie
32 Molten rock
33 "We try harder" folk
34 Lucy's partner
36 City of India
39 Vies
41 Thailand's neighbor
44 Laughed heartily
46 New cops
49 Singer Damone
51 Plunk (down)
53 Reindeer herders
55 Opera highlights
56 Unspoken
57 Adversary
58 Football's Aikman
59 Des Moines locale
60 Greasy residue
61 Arduous trip
65 Inventor Whitney
66 Satisfactory grade

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-12-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Top Dog

Night Editor	Vanessa 'HUG ME' Walker
Photo Technician	Dan 'LOVE' Santella
Copy Editor	Samantha 'HEARTS' Poulten
Production Supervisor	Jeanette 'V-DAY' Santoro
Production Staff	Teresa 'RED' Rodrigues Katie '2/14/2000' Ross

Minutemen shot down

Despite offensive burst, UMass can't rake in win

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

CINCINNATI – It wasn't a case of not being able to score for the Massachusetts men's basketball team in their Saturday loss to the Xavier Musketeers, 87-87, at the Cincinnati Gardens.

The Minutemen amassed a full ten points above its normal average by knocking down 57 percent their shots in the first half, and 48 percent overall.

It wasn't even a case of hustle or heart, with four players – Monty Mack (38), Chris Kirkland (37), Shannon Crooks (34), and Mike Babul (32) – hogging over 70 percent of the minutes on the court.

More of a case could be made that UMass was out-rebounded and outnumbered.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Falling to 3-1 on the road against Atlantic 10 teams, UMass (12-11, 6-4 A-10) remains tied for second in the A-10 East with St. Bonaventure, who bottomed out to Dayton on Saturday, 68-64. Xavier, who knocked off then-No. 1 and unbeaten Cincinnati on Dec. 18, improved to 15-8 and an even 5-5 in conference play.

On Wednesday, the Minutemen will regroup for a rematch at Fordham, which they trounced 82-52 at home on Jan. 8.

Mack and Lloyd Price, who made his return after dislocating a finger, took charge of their respective teams offensively. Mack drained 19 of his 32 points in the first half (5-for-8 from three-point land), and Price was just two points shy of his career-high 21 with 19 points. Chris Kirkland rung up 18 points as he shot 9-for-12 from the floor.

Price (11), David West (10), and Aaron Turner (8) compiled a fortune of second chance shots as they contributed to the 43-21 rebound advantage. Playing against overrun Minutemen legs that resorted to reach-in fouls as the game wore on, the Musketeers did not dally at the line, shooting 36-for-42. Comparatively, UMass earned just 13 trips to the line.

"All five of their guys rebounded," said Mack. "That's what killed us."

With 11 lead changes in the first half, both squads were able to capitalize on their

Turn to MINUTEMEN, Page 9

COURTESY XAVIER MEDIA RELATIONS

Musketeers corner market on caroms in home victory

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

CINCINNATI – For a half, the Massachusetts men's basketball team made up for its shortcomings by shooting the lights out against the Xavier Musketeers. However, when Monty Mack began to cool off, the notorious Achilles' heel of the 1999-2000 edition of the Minutemen acted up and once again felled the mighty Maroon and White.

Mack provides quite the scoring punch, but it is a well UMass (12-11 overall, 6-4 Atlantic 10) has visited too often. As a result for taking the conference's second-leading scorer for granted, the Minutemen are getting burned underneath. When the senior sharpshooter is off or even average, UMass' circulaiton gets cut off and everything begins to go awry.

Bottom line, UMass has no inside presence – none, nil, zilch...

Nothing.

Combine the last three losses for the Minutemen, and the Maroon and White have been routed in the rebound column, 125-66.

125-66. That's 59 rebounds a.k.a. nearly 20 boards per game against the nation's elite.

Granted, the Minutemen bodied up against the A-10's top rebounder, freshman David West, on Saturday, and granted that Temple and Texas can bound with ansone in the nation. That excuse, however, has been used far too frequently.

"All five of their guys rebounded," said Mack. "That's what killed us."

The rebounding has been exposed enough and it doesn't look as though a solution is coming any time soon. Only Kirwana Rhymer and Micah Brand are logging solid minutes night in and night out in the paint. Xavier (14-9 overall, 5-5 A-10) added to the Minutemen's problems by making them pay for each ticket they picked up. The Musketeers made a living at the charity stripe, calmly knocking down 36 of 42 free throws to force Mack to come up with yet another answer.

"What I was looking at [at halftime] was that they were 17 of 19 from the foul line," head coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "And then they come back in the second half and they shoot 25 more. That's the game. They shot 42

Turn to HOOPS, page 9

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Despite the electrifying shooting (32 points, six 3-pointers) of UMass rifleman Monty Mack (left), the Musketeers of Xavier had the truer aim in an 87-77 win Saturday in Cincinnati. Xavier forward Lloyd Price (center) came up huge for the home team with 28 points, including 12-of-14 from the charity stripe, which had to vex Minuteman coach Bruiser Flint (right).

Women's hoops salvages road split despite dreary Atlantic 10 showings

By Aaron Saykin
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team suffered a collapse during each of its two contests this weekend.

Fortunately, only one of them cost UMass a game.

Having held as large as a 21-point advantage at

Massachusetts	53
Duquesne	51
Virginia Tech	66
Massachusetts	45

Duquesne last Friday, the Minutewomen allowed the Dukes to tie the game with only 14 tics remaining. But thanks to Nekole Smith's last-second lay-up, UMass luckily emerged with a 53-51 victory.

Riding the laurels of a fortune win, UMass still seemed prone to breakdown yesterday, falling to host Virginia Tech., 66-45, despite playing strongly for the opening 15 minutes.

UMass (10-13, 7-3 Atlantic 10) actually led, 8-7, in the game's early stages, but crumbled near the end of the first half, allowing Virginia Tech an 8-0 run and a comfortable 29-17 halftime advantage. The Minutewomen would get no closer than eight points, 43-35, in the second frame, as the Hokies (14-9, 7-5 A-10) cruised to an important Atlantic 10 Conference win.

"We turned the ball over. We had chances to run it down and we basically just threw the ball to the white shirts," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said of the lapse during the WMUA post-game show "I think [Allison] Mac[Farland] had two or three turnovers there. They were unnecessary. We didn't force them. We just made poor decisions. Our defense was okay, our transition defense was s average. They just took it to us."

Although MacFarland had an uncharacteristically high number of turnovers (six) in the contest, the senior tri-captain did manage to score ten points, and stands eight points short of 1,000 for her UMass career. And while she certainly did not shine at moments, MacFarland's play was no less disappointing than some of her other teammates who struggled to be productive against the Hokies. As a team, UMass shot an abysmal 16-50 from the field, including 1-8 from three-point range along with 21 turnovers.

Minutewoman junior point guard Kathy Coyner connected on just two of 13 shots and scored only six points while committing eight turnovers. The frontcourt trio of sophomores Smith and Caroline Nehls, and freshmen Jen Butler was plagued by foul trouble, with Smith fouling out, and Butler and Nehls playing with four fouls as the game slipped away.

"Nekole Smith spent more time on the bench than she did on the floor. And the same with Caroline," O'Brien said. "It was just our lack of aggression in the post, defensively, that got us in trouble. They wanted it a little bit more, they played with a little bit more fire and intensity. They made things happen. Basically, they just kicked our butt in the post. That was what it came down to."

Tere Williams, the Hokies leading scorer and member of the Atlantic-10 First Team, grabbed seven boards to complement her game-high 21 points.

While UMass did not have the luxury of a lead during its breakdown against VA-Tech, it did hold a sizeable cushion before collapsing two days earlier at Duquesne. The Minutewomen held a 27-10 halftime advantage before the Dukes used a quick 11-4 run to trim the deficit to nine. Before most UMass players knew what hit them, Duquesne cut the lead to 51-48 and had the ball with under 30 seconds remaining. Duke guard Tionda Jennings calmly sank a game-tying three point shot with 14 tics left.

But as Duquesne attempted to apply full-court pressure on the Minutewomen, Smith crept into the offensive paint and scored the game-winning bucket. To say the least, O'Brien was relieved.

"Initially, I think we just got a little bit complacent. We could have easily had another two to four points in that first half," she said on WMUA. "We got complacent, missed a lot of easy shots, and Nekole Smith probably could not have asked to have been in a better position."

The Dukes were able to crawl back into the game when Butler left the contest with her fourth foul. UMass led by 16 when Butler departed and only four when she returned. A consistent force under the basket, Butler managed eight points and six rebounds despite limited minutes and foul trouble. Smith scored a team-high 15 points for UMass. MacFarland added nine points and three rebounds.

The Minutewomen will return to action Thursday night at the Mullins Center, when they host George Washington. The Colonials currently hold first place in the Atlantic 10 West Division and will meet UMass for the only time this season.

COURTESY UMASS / VIRGINIA TECH MEDIA RELATIONS

Even with forward Nekole Smith playing her best brand of in-your-face D, the Minutewomen were forced to watch as Hokie Tere Williams dropped 21 big points on UMass Sunday in Blacksburg.

UMass claws, but still mauled

Maine sweeps weekend, season series

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

With six games remaining in the season, the Massachusetts hockey team is in desperate need of points.

Maine	5
Massachusetts	2
Maine	5
Massachusetts	2

but the road to achieving these points is going to be difficult.

The first two games of this stretch brought the Minutemen to Orono, Maine, for matchups with the Black Bears. The Maroon and White stumbled out of the gate this weekend dropping both games to Maine by 5-2 counts.

The losses drop the Minutemen to 10-16-4 [4-13-3 HE].

In the opening game of the weekend series the Black Bears jumped on the Minutemen midway through the first period when Corey LaRose score fired a wrist shot past UMass goalie Markus Helanen. The senior captain collected the rebound of a Peter Metcalf shot to give Maine the 1-0 lead. LaRose upped the Black Bear advantage to 2-0 four minutes later when he notched a power play goal.

Jeff Turner cut the Maine lead in half late in the first period when he scored his team leading 15th goal of the season. The junior assistant captain took a feed from Jedd Crumb and beat Black Bear netminder Matt Yeats.

Niko Dimitrakos once again gave Maine a two-goal advantage when he tallied his fifth goal of the season at the 9:48 mark of the second period. Michael Schutte found Dimitrakos parked in front of the Maroon and White net and subsequently beat Helanen.

UMass again cut the lead to one goal when Darcy King scored with just over a minute to play in the middle frame. The King goal came on a deflection of a Toni Soderholm shot that put the score at 3-2 heading into the locker room.

This would be as close as the Minutemen would get as Maine's Barrett Heisten added two insurance goals in the third period. The first of Heisten's goals came when he stuffed a rebound past Helanen for a 4-2 lead. He then added an empty net goal to seal UMass' fate.

Just as they did the night before, the Black Bears came out with a flurry, scoring the games first three goals and never giving the Minutemen a chance to get back into the game.

Maine scored the game's first goal just six minutes in when they tallied on the power play. The goal came off the stick of Ben Guite when he redirected a shot from Michael Schutte for a 1-0 lead.

The relentless Black Bears scored their second goal less than five minutes later on a Dan Kerluke goal. Dimitrakos intercepted a pass in the UMass zone and found Guite. Guite then slipped a pass to Kerluke and the end result was a 2-0 deficit for UMass.

Just over a minute into the second period, Guite netted his second power play goal of the night. The senior assistant captain fired a shot that Helanen appeared to have turned away, but it squirted off of his pads and into the back of the net.

Sophomore defenseman Randy Drohan scored the first UMass goal

Turn to HOCKEY, page 9

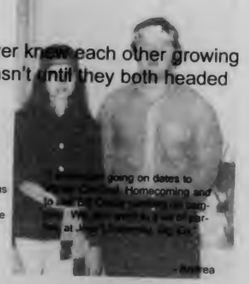
DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

His game face may be menacing, but Darcy King and the UMass hockey team had to be sick of looking at the Black Bears of Maine by the end of this weekend.

AIN'T UMASS LOVE GRAND?



Dr. Jess & Andrea Kane met at UMass in 1968 during their sophomore year.

Interesting fact:

Both Jess and Andrea are from Chelsea, MA, but never knew each other growing up because the attended different high schools. It wasn't until they both headed west to Amherst that they met for the first time.

In the beginning:

"We met a IGU. I was working there during our sophomore year as the houseboy. I knew the pay would be lousy, but I hoped that the meals benefits would make up for it."

- Jess

"I remember going on dates to [illegible] Homecoming and to the Big Chief [illegible] on campus. We also went to a lot of parties at Jess' fraternity, Sig Ep."

- Andrea

The rest is history:

1970 Graduation.
Engaged.
Married.
Son born - Jamie.
Daughter born - Lauren.
Jamie will graduate from UMass and follow in her father's footsteps to attend Tufts Dental School. Lauren is a freshman at the University of Maryland, but her parents love her anyway.

Jess continues his career in dentistry. Andrea established her career in teaching, starting with a student teaching stint at Marks Meadow on campus. She recently made a transition to a "more fun" job in a boutique and also works as a decorator. Together, they enjoy playing tennis, traveling and going out to plays and great restaurants.

The couple recently attended a collective "50th" birthday party held at Sig Ep and celebrated with 75 other alums. Both Andrea and Jess are active members of the UMass Alumni Association Board of Directors.

From the entire Alumni Relations staff, congratulations on 28 years of UMass marriage!

Check the back page for our Valentine's Day Contest

WE PUT THE "FUN" BACK INTO "FUNDING"

Each year the UMass Alumni Association gives out thousands of dollars in small grants. We love to give out grants and frankly, we're pretty good at it. The Alumni Association has already given over $45,000 to students, faculty and campus programs this fiscal year. And we still have one more funding cycle to go! .

If you are a student or faculty member on campus, chances are you've benefited from the Association's largess*. Below are are just some of the groups we've helped this year through our small grant program:

Women's Studies
"Women Resist Violence" program
Awarded $1,430

Something Every Friday
Ruben Blades program featuring music clinic, lecture and perfomance
Awarded $1,250

Faculty Senate Council on the Status of Women
Take our Daughters to Work Day
Awarded $750

MFA in English
Visiting Wnters Series featuring poet, James Haug
Awarded $515

Office of Economic Development
5 College Entrepreneurial Development program
Awarded $2,500

Herter Art Gallery
"Peter Hujar: Photographs"
Awarded $450

Film Studies
7th Annual Multicultural Film Festival
Awarded $2,750

Casa Dominicana
"Dominican Independence" program
Awarded $450

UMass Emergency Medical Services
4 trauma jumpkits for student EMTs
Awarded $600

Theater Department
"Career Days" program for students and alumni
Awarded $700

To pick up a grant application from the Alumni Association, stop by the Alumni Association Office on the 1st Floor of Memorial Hall or call the Association 5-5541.

UPCOMING APPLICATIONS DEADLINE
FEBRUARY28TH FOR EVENTS AFTER MARCH 14TH, 2000

*largess or largese \lar-'jes\ n 1: liberal giving 2: a generous gift

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION ANNOUNCES SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS FOR 2000

The "Leaders in the Making" scholarship program is designed to support the academic and career pursuits of promising students of Junior rank whose records going into their Senior year suggest that they will be active alumni of distinction upon graduation.

The winners from the Class of 2001 have diverse stories of achievement, philanthropy and purpose that reflect the success of our vast alumni population. They stand as role models to their collegiate peers and offer a glimpse of great things to come. In congratulating each as a "Leader in the Making", we hope and trust that each will fulfill their destiny as vigorous advocates of their alma mater.

Congratulations to this year's winners!

Jamie Lee '01 Lauren O'Malley '01

Michael Mecuri '01 Tiffany Proto '01

Earn Extra Cash!!!!!

The alumni Relations Office is looking for students to work Alumni Weekend, Friday, June 2 through Sunday, June .

You'll make $6.00/hour to start and enjoy meeting our Alumni from the 30s, 40s, and 50s. Jobs range from shuttle van drivers...to decoration crew... to banquet hosts.

You must be a current student (just graduated seniors are not eligible).

Housing is available free of charge for those who need it.

If you have any questions or want an application, please stop by the Alumni Relations Office in Memorial Hall.

NEED A PICK-UP LINE THAT NEVER FAILS?

Well, we can't help you there. But the alumni Association does want to remind you that men's basketball and hockey tickets can be picked up by all students.

UMASS STUDENT TICKET PICK-UP SCHEDULE

Pick-up Date	Pick-up Date	Pick-up Date	Pick-up Date
Mon., Feb. 14, 2000 TODAY	Hockey Men's Basketball	Feb. 25, 2000 Feb. 29,2000	Boston College George Washington
Mon., Feb.21, 2000	Hockey	March 4, 2000	New Hampshire

WIN A $50 GIFT CERTIFICATE AND 2 FREE MOVIE PASSES.

TELL US THE STORY OF HOW YOU MET YOUR VALENTINE AND ENTER TO WIN A NIGHT ON THE TOWN.

All you need to do to enter is to tell us how you met your boyfriend, girlfriend, partner or spouse. The most unusual and/or romantic entry will win. The winner will receive a gift certificate for $50 at the Monkey Bar in Amherst, plus two free movie passes.

All entries will be judged by staff members from of the Alumni Association. We know romance when we see it and be careful, we can spot a phony at 100 yards!

The rules?? Your entry must fit in the space provided below.

NAME: _____

DAYTIME PHONE: _____

Please indicate your status at UMass:

Student ____ Faculty ____ Staff _____ Other _____

Entry forms must be received in the Alumni Association office by Feb. 18th at 5:00 PM to be eligible to win.

Forms can be dropped off at the Alumni Relations front office on the 1st Floor of Memorial Hall from 9:00 AM to 5:00 PM Monday through Friday.

The winner will be notified by phone.

page 4

WIN A $50 GIFT CERTIFICATE AND 2 FREE MOVIE PASSES.

TELL US THE STORY OF HOW YOU MET YOUR VALENTINE AND ENTER TO WIN A NIGHT ON THE TOWN.

All you need to do to enter is to tell us how you met your boyfriend, girlfriend, partner or spouse. The most unusual and/or romantic entry will win. The winner will receive a gift certificate for $50 at the Monkey Bar in Amherst, plus two free movie passes.

All entries will be judged by staff members from of the Alumni Association. We know romance when we see it and be careful, we can spot a phony at 100 yards!

The rules?? Your entry must fit in the space provided below.

NAME: _____
DAYTIME PHONE:_____

Please indicate your status at UMass:

Student ____ Faculty ____ Staff _____ Other ____

Entry forms must be received in the Alumni Association office by Feb. 18th at 5:00 PM to be eligible to win.

Forms can be dropped off at the Alumni Relations front office on the 1st Floor of Memorial Hall from 9:00 AM to 5:00 PM Monday through Friday.

The winner will be notified by phone.

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian

New England's Largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 11 — Tuesday, February 15, 2000

"Vagina Monologues" opens eyes

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

Last night, as many enjoyed the festivities of Valentine's Day, a group of 18 UMass women marked the day as a celebration for their gender. The day, known as V-Day, has become a campaign to end sexual violence, which included a performance, "The Vagina Monologues," written by Eve Ensler.

The play, a derivation from Eve Ensler's book for which she interviewed over 200 women of various ages and backgrounds on their personal relationships with their bodies, will be performed through 18 monologues.

The UMass edition of the play was directed by Rachel Edelman, a sophomore psychology and theater major, who said she felt it was important for the University to become involved in V-Day.

"I want them [the UMass community] to sense a connection with something new, a different idea of what they know about the truth of women and women's bodies," Edelman said in a previous Collegian article.

She went on to say that she hoped the audience would leave the performance with a new perspective: an understanding of women that is often taboo. It was further expressed that Edelman and Assistant Director Chaeni Dubofsky, a senior Jewish Studies and English major, wished that a new attitude on the issues discussed during the show would be achieved.

"I hope the show breaks down barriers and makes people not afraid of the word [vagina]," Dudofsky said in a previous Collegian article.

The event began with an introduction read by Edelman in the voice of the original author Ensler, explaining that she began interviewing women because she wanted, "the bad things happening to woman's vaginas to stop." The opening continued to explain that in response to her questions, she received such comments as "the word vagina may not be pornographic, but it is dirty." Many of the monologues address this idea, in addition to the issue of how speaking about women's bodies is not always an accepted part of society.

The monologues dealt with a wide variety of women's issues, covering such topics from menstruation and a description of giving birth to the account of rape.

"It was great, I really loved it," freshman Mark Robison, a biology major said. "It's very important. I know numbers of people that really need to see this. It brings a new appreciation to vaginas."

With titles of "The Flood," "I was twelve. My mother slapped me," and "Because he liked to look at it," the audience was moved within minutes from serious silence to laughter.

Upon the completion of the event, one audience member, Rose Gongo-Bellini, a sophomore said, "It was really good. The way it was performed was amazing. It was funny, but informative. It turned out better than I expected."

Others felt that although the acting was wonderful, the subject manner was a bit extreme.

"I thought it was shocking. I knew it would be controversial, but maybe I'm just too conservative for this," Vicki Kwok, a sophomore School of Management major said. "I am glad I went."

This year, over 200 colleges performed the play yesterday, as part of The V-Day 2000 College Initiative. At UMass the event was sponsored by the Everywoman's Center, The Jewish Women's Center and The Stonewall Center.

The cast of the Vagina Monologues

Workshop to kick off

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Undergraduate students at the University of Massachusetts will have the opportunity to take part in a state conference competition in Boston, focused on areas of oral, poster and creative art presentations, in preparing for graduate school expectations.

A preparatory abstract writing workshop to prepare students for the free conference will take place today from 5:15-6:30 p.m. in the Honors Program Office.

The Conference on Undergraduate Research, Scholarly, Creative and Public Service Activities allows students from 26 schools across the state to compete and learn more from presentations in their field of interest.

The presentation may be based on community service experience, creative work, thesis research, independent study or study abroad. To bolster their presentations, students may use visual aids, acting techniques, creative and poster art. Students will receive feedback about their presentations from established scholars in their respective fields.

Outstanding projects from across the state will be highlighted in the international Commonwealth Undergraduate Review journal.

Nazar Hassan, organizer of the event, said the workshop and conference are available to all students, and not necessarily limited to Honors students only.

"This series of workshops and conferences is for all students," Hassan said. "You don't have to be an Honors student to participate."

In addition, students involved in the workshop will be exempt from classes on Friday, April 28, the day of the conference. Free transportation to and from Boston will also be offered to participants.

Hassan said students may present on any area of research. Students must fill out an application and abstract form on their research and submit it to the Honors College Office by Feb. 23 at 3 p.m.

According to Hassan, today's workshop will prepare students who desire to present their research findings during the conference. He said it is one step towards discovering and experiencing what graduate school and research work is about.

"It [the conference] gives undergraduates the feeling of what graduate school and research work is all about," Hassan said. "So they can then make a better decision whether they want to go to graduate school, or just get a job."

He said students will also have access to information about undergraduate and graduate programs being offered across the state.

Seniors graduating from the university do not always know whether graduate school or getting a job on the market is best for them, Hassan said. Hassan went on to say that this conference would provide them with a better understanding on whether or not they are interested in going to graduate school.

"A lot of students, when they're seniors, can't make that decision for themselves," Hassan said. "Participating in this kind of conference would give them a feel and direction of what's best for them."

In the past, UMass faculty participation has been high, according to Hassan. He said many faculty members have volunteered their time and efforts in assisting students with their research projects. According to Hassan, even the prepared budget cuts on campus didn't hinder the event.

"Despite the budget cuts this year, under the leadership of Linda Nolan [Director of Honors College], a lot of effort is being put into making sure this year's conference is a great success," Hassan said.

Hassan said information on how to write abstracts for the state conference will be available at today's workshop. Faculty reviewers will review abstracts, and students will be notified of acceptance into the conference in early April.

Psychology's Isabell promoted

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Staff

Linda Isbell has recently been named to the position of assistant professor of psychology, Glen Gordon, dean of appointment for the University of Massachusetts College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, made the announcement.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO
Linda Isabell

For almost 10 years, Isbell has been conducting research on the effects of mood and other factors on information processing and judgment formation. Currently she is researching the effects of mood on information that individuals use as a basis for forming impressions of others.

According to a statement, Isbell was formerly a research assistant at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and the State University of New York at Stony Brook.

Previously, while working at Urbana-Champaign, Isbell was named to the University of Illinois List of Excellent Teachers for three consecutive semesters.

She is a member of the American Psychology Association, the American Psychological Society, the International Society of Political Psychology, the Midwestern Psychology Association and the Society for Personality and Social Psychology.

Currently she is teaching the course Social Psychology and conducting research on the effects of mood on information that individuals use as a basis for forming impressions of others.

She is a member of the American Psychology Association, the American Psychological Society, the International Society of Political Psychology, the Midwestern Psychology Association and the Society for Personality and Social Psychology.

Currently she is teaching the course Social Psychology and conducting research on the effects of mood on information that individuals use as a basis for forming impressions of others.

Isbell said she uses undergraduate students in her research to "examine the effects of emotions on judgment."

The main object of her research is to discover to what extent people rely on stereotypes during periods when they are experiencing positive or negative moods, and how they use those stereotypes in forming judgments of others.

When asked of her plans for the future, she said she plans to continue teaching and researching at UMass for many years to come.

Isbell received her undergraduate degree from State University of New York at Stony Brook in political science graduating Summa Cum Laude. She has also received a masters and doctorate degree in social psychology, with an emphasis on social cognition, at the University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign.

Pink Rain.
Three figures who shall remain nameless strutted even as it rained yesterday afternoon.

CRC signature drive in the bag

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

Yesterday marked the end of the Cannabis Reform Coalition's (CRC) campaign to obtain signatures in order to receive placement of the question to legalize marijuana on the town ballot.

By end's day, the group, who worked with Citizens for a Sensible Marijuana Policy had an unofficial count of 3072 signatures. In order to get the question on the Amherst Town Ballot for the March 28, 2000 election the groups needed to collect 1864 verified signatures.

Before yesterday, the drive had collected 762 verified signatures, that out of the 1044 that they had collected. The signatures that they have received this year have been more accurate, meaning that more of them have been from students that are able to vote within the Amherst area. Members of the CRC were excited about this high percentage and said they looked at it as being very positive.

The president of the CRC, Vernon Coffey said he believed things went much better this year than last, when the group came up 99 signatures short, for several reasons.

"I think it went well. What was great about this year, as opposed to last year was the support and help we received from the other colleges in the area and based on the experience we gained from last year," Coffey said.

He explained that not only did students from Amherst and Hampshire College collect signatures from approximately 10 percent of

Turn to CRC, page 2

Army Engineering Corps project finds support

By Michael Grunwald
Washington Post

Seven years ago, the generals running the Army Corps of Engineers tapped Donald C. Sweeney II for a vital mission. The barge industry was clamoring for huge lock construction projects on the Mississippi and Illinois rivers, and Congress had put up $50 million for the most ambitious navigation study ever. Sweeney led the study's economics team, producing work the Corps' top economist hailed as "the greatest advance we have made in – quite a few years."

But Sweeney didn't reach the conclusion the generals expected. After five years of analysis, he calculated that the costs of any major project would far outweigh the benefits.

The Corps brass then took the study away from Sweeney, launching a determined campaign to justify a billion-dollar construction plan. An affidavit by Sweeney – backed up by several Corps witnesses, along with a revealing trail of internal emails and other documents – suggests that senior officials directly ordered the study team to figure out a way to make lock improvements see cost-effective. Eventually, it did.

Last week Sweeney filed a detailed request for an investigation with a federal whistleblower agency, alleging that Corps leaders illegally manipulated the study's data to manufacture a rationale for construction. The officials deny the allegations; they say they did end up with different conclusions, but insist they only reassigned Sweeney because he was working too slowly.

Still, at a time when pressure is building for the Corps to curtail its historic penchant for massive spending on environmentally insensitive projects, this dispute has cast new light on an apparent agency-wide strategy to "grow" the Corps.

From its modest origins as a Revolutionary War regiment, the Army Corps has expanded into a $12 billion Pentagon behemoth with 37,000 employees. While it still handles engineering projects for the military, it is best known for reshaping the American landscape with locks, dams and other public works that the Corps itself acknowledges have damaged thousands of miles of rivers, many of them for barges that never arrived.

These days the Corps is portraying itself as a reformed agency, "cleaner and greener," devoting more than one fifth of its civil works budget to environmental restoration. But the paper trail of the Upper Mississippi study suggests the resilience of some agency traditions. Top officials ordered the study team "to develop evidence or data to support a defensible set of ... projects," and eventually rearranged the numbers so that they supported a case for construction. One memo candidly declared that if the economics did not "capture the need for navigation improvements, then we have to find some other way to do it."

The agency is now poised to recommend doubling the size of five barge locks on the Mississippi above St. Louis, and maybe two more on the Illinois. Environmentalists believe the project could ravage one of America's most fragile ecosystems, including an Upper Mississippi wildlife refuge that attracts more visitors than Yellowstone Park. And the Corps, after conducting the analysis of the project, would get to build it as well.

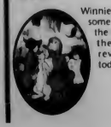
"It's very sad that this study is becoming another embarrassment," says Corps research analyst Jeffrey Marmorstein, who worked on the study before and after it was taken away from Sweeney. "Unfortunately, the management of the Corps has lost all respect for unbiased analysis."

In fact, according to a memo summarizing a December meeting in Vicksburg, the agency's generals have announced a goal of "growing the civil works program" for the Mississippi Valley Division – the section in charge of the Upper Mississippi study – by $100 million a year for five years. "If that goal is met we are all going to be very busy," the memo said.

"To grow the civil works program, (headquarters) and the Division have agreed to get creative," the memo continued. "They will be looking for ways to get (studies) to 'yes' as fast as possible. We have been encouraged to have our study managers not take 'no' for an answer. The push to grow the program is coming from the top down."

EXTENDED FORECAST

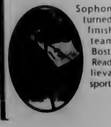
Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 39 LOW: 19	HIGH: 43 LOW: 24	HIGH: 34 LOW: 17



Speak of the devil!

You'll never guess who wrote to us! Read Editor-in-Chief Seth Koenig's column to find out who!

PAGE 4



Silly Old Bear

Winnie the Pooh finally gets some sweet, sweet honey in the new Tigger movie, in theaters now. Read a review, and more, in today's arts.

PAGE 5

Cruise Missile

Sophomore Ken Thoman turned in another fantastic finish for the UMass Ski team at this weekend's Boston College Carnival. Read that and other unbelievable tales in today's sports.

PAGE 12

Arts & Living 5
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Umass Police Log

Accidents
Feb. 10
A parked vehicle was reported hit in lot #11
Feb. 11
A past motor vehicle accident was reported on Fearing St.
A motor vehicle accident was reported in lot #40
A parked vehicle was reported hit by a vehicle that left the scene in lot #49.

Arrests
Feb. 11
Patricia J. Moriarty, 18, of Chicopee was arrested for a warrant violation.

Larceny
Feb. 11
Mail was reported stolen from the mailroom.
The illegal use of a credit card was reported from Coolidge Dorm.
Feb. 12
Cash and a phone card were reported stolen from Knowlton Dorm. Court action will be sought.
A Beard was reported stolen from Peirpont Dorm.

Misc.
Feb. 10
A drug law offense was reported at Coolidge Dorm.
A drug law offense was reported at Baker Dorm.
A noise complaint was reported for a loud party in Coolidge Dorm.
Feb. 11
A report of annoying behavior was reported of individuals throwing snowballs at windows in Brown Dorm.
Feb. 12
An intoxicated person was reported in Washington Dorm.
A drug offense was reported in Washington Dorm.
A suspicious person or activity was reported in Van Meter Dorm
A hazardous material spill was reported at Tobin Hall. Emergency Health and Safety was dispatched.
A fire was reported in South College. Alarm technicians were called in to repair the system.
Feb. 13
A breaking and entering was reported at the Furcolo School of Education. Police discovered a broken window but no proof of theft.
A drug law offense was reported in Kennedy Dorm.
A shoving match was reported between two individuals on Eastman Ln.

Vandalism
Feb. 11
Damage to a vehicle was reported in lot #32
Feb. 12
Damage to a vehicle on Thatcher Way was reported.
Lights in a hallway were reported smashed in Thoreau Dorm.
Feb. 12
Damage to a door in the Berkshire dining hall was reported.
Graffiti was reported written on some walls in Thoreau Dorm.
Feb. 13
Damage to a state vehicle was reported in Lot #71

Gun Battle widens cultural divide in Kosovo

By David Holley
Los Angeles Times

KOSOVSKA MITROVICA, Yugoslavia – In a sign of just how deep distrust has become in Kosovo, ethnic Albanians on the streets of this bitterly divided city flatly rejected official accounts on yesterday of what happened in a gun battle between snipers and international peacekeepers.

Two French soldiers were wounded by sniper fire here Sunday. Multinational forces responded to the fire, and peacekeeping officials said they shot one ethnic Albanian sniper dead and captured at least one who was injured.

Forty people were arrested in connection with the violence, including 39 ethnic Albanians and one Serb, the peacekeeping force, known as KFOR, said yesterday. Some of those arrested are suspected of being former members of the rebel Kosovo Liberation Army, KFOR said.

On Sunday, KFOR reported at least two snipers were wounded. It was not clear why the number changed yesterday.

Ethnic Albanian men such as Ramadan Kelmendi, 47, an unemployed former executive of a battery factory, are convinced the official version of Sunday's events on the northern, Serb-dominated side of the city has everything backward.

"The French, to justify their act, are saying (the dead man) was a sniper," Kelmendi said as a crowd of men around him nodded agreement.

"He was just a citizen who wanted to go to visit his family, who were over there. None of the (Albanian-language) media are saying he was a sniper," Kelmendi said.

About 5,000 people turned out Monday for the funeral of the dead man, Avni Haradinaj, 35. Mourners said he was a former Kosovo Liberation Army fighter.

Kelmendi, still winning agreement from those around him, claimed the two injured French soldiers were shot by Serbs.

The reaction of men such as Kelmendi is a sign of just how intractable the problem of this divided city has become. Ordinary people on both sides view every event through a prism of hatred and distrust.

Kosovska Mitrovica's north side is dominated by Serbs, and its southern sector is dominated by ethnic Albanians. The entire city is patrolled by international peacekeepers whose numbers and firepower have been beefed up since the latest wave of ethnic violence erupted earlier this month.

Most ethnic Albanians believe that Serbs want to partition Kosovo at the Ibar River, which splits the city. Most Serbs believe that ethnic Albanians want to drive them away from their enclave here, which abuts the main part of Serbia.

International authorities say they will continue to press the two groups to live side-by-side. U.N. mission chief Bernard Kouchner and KFOR commander Gen. Klaus Reinhardt planned to announce new measures today, beefing up security in Kosovska Mitrovica and introducing additional programs to press the two communities to coexist, U.N. spokeswoman Nadia Younes said.

■ CRC

continued from page 1

their school's enrollment, two students assisted the campaign from Mt. Holyoke.

This additional help was a key component in gaining access to a larger number of students.

"We targeted the student body, now once we get on the ballot we will have to campaign within the community and reach more people in the area," Coffey said.

Although the group spent most of their time getting the initial signatures, they are confident they will now be able to focus on getting their message out to a wider portion of the population.

If they have received enough verified signatures to have the question placed on the ballot, Coffey explained they still have over a month to continue working.

The group is also confident that the signatures they received yesterday will bring them up to the appropriate number because of the trend they have seen in the last few weeks.

"We are assuming the question will be on the ballot," Coffey said. The final results of the signature drive will be announced next week.

There will be a newsroom meeting at 4:00pm on Monday. Be at the meeting or you will be docked an hour of pay. Every associate, editor, photographer, writer, night and copy staffer needs to be at this meeting.

A Public Service Announcement.
The Amherst Fire Department hopes everyone at the University had a safe and love filled Valentine's Day. (P.S. A few of them are single!)

Valentine's Day Sale

Ustore™
Not like a mall... Better

Buy 1 get the 2nd 1/2 off

All Stuffed Animals & All Picture Frames

Higher price Prevails (must be of equal or lesser value)

Valentine's Day Bear Drawing

Name:_____Phone:_____

Email:_____

Do You Live On Campus? ___ Which Dorm? _____

Moved to a new Level.
Due to last month's closing of the Amherst Newsroom, Levels has found a new location down the street from its original home.

Serotonin studied for link to happiness

By Robert Cooke
Newsday

In a search that may lead to the genetic roots of happiness, scientists said yesterday they are focusing on serotonin, an odd molecule that seems responsible for that fine, feeling.

"It's sort of the genetics of happiness that we're exploring," said biologist Gary Ruvkun, at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. "And one idea is that how happy you are is somehow tied to how much serotonin you have."

The word "somehow" is important here. It is a long leap from Ruvkun's experiments in tiny, translucent soil worms to learning what's happening in humans.

Serotonin is one of the so-called neurotransmitter molecules that nerve cells use in communicating with one another. It seems to be involved in generating feelings of well-being and satisfaction, as when a creature is well fed – a satiety signal.

In mammals, Ruvkun added, "serotonin is implicated in all sorts of interesting things, such as appetite, metabolism and sexual function." To sort through the complexity, Ruvkun and his four co-workers looked for a simple system, and found it in the tiny worm called C. elegans.

This worm is now so useful that it has become sort of the white rat of molecular biology. Its entire genome – every last gene – was recently deciphered in exacting detail, so it has become an especially powerful tool for genetic experiments. A report on the new serotonin studies, with Ji Ying Sze as first author, was recently published in Nature.

"What we did," Ruvkun said, "was look for a way to completely knock out the synthesis of serotonin in the worm" by erasing a gene needed for its manufacture. Once that was done, "the first surprise was that they survived at all." Second, the worms' behavior changed.

Instead of acting normally and gobbling up all the bacteria within range, the "knockout" worms tended to eat less and began storing fat in their gut, as if preparing for hibernation. This suggested that without serotonin they felt less well and less satisfied and were girding themselves for hard times.

Ruvkun said this indicates that for worms, serotonin "is a food signal. When there are high amounts of food, bacteria, it results in high amounts of serotonin, and that equals happiness for the worm. It's one of the triggers that says, 'Go forward, multiply and live your life; use your resources for reproduction.'"

But with no serotonin, the engineered worms could not feel satisfied and responded by raising their defenses.

In fact, the worms that can't make serotonin seem dissatisfied from day one, and act as if they're expecting lean times. "It's part of a repertoire of responses that says, 'Don't reproduce, keep eating, wait for a better day,'" Ruvkun explained.

An important point, Ruvkun said, is that the new work in worms shows that serotonin and its activities are "conserved" across many animal species. This means the signaling system evolved early in the history of life, and serotonin is probably doing similar things in all animals.

According to molecular biologist Josh Kaplan, the experiment "is the first case in any multicellular animal in which they've knocked out serotonin."

Business, labor pressure Hill on China's trade status

By Helen Dewar and John Burgess
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – A major battle over trade with China is being waged in Congress, with business and labor peppering Capitol Hill with opposing views and rhetoric on what may be one of spring's most hotly contested votes.

At issue is whether to grant permanent access to the U.S. market to Chinese-made goods, a legal status known as "normal trading relations" that is now renewed annually. Proponents say passage of the legislation would enable the United States to reap the full benefits of the market-opening concessions China made last year to secure entry into the World Trade Organization.

Last week, an army of United Auto Workers members fanned out across Capitol Hill to argue that granting permanent access "will drive America's automobile industry right out of America and into China." The same day, chief executives from aircraft-maker Boeing Co. and other major companies called at legislators' offices to argue that a "yes" vote is crucial to U.S. prosperity and jobs.

To further the business campaign, heads of major media companies – including Walt Disney Co., Time Warner Inc. and Viacom Inc. – announced formation of a committee to lobby for passage. U.S. Trade Representative Charlene Barshefsky put that same message to a Senate hearing.

Given the potentially huge economic benefits at stake for farmers, manufacturers, insurance companies and other segments of American business, many lawmakers and lobbyists say the early odds favor the approval of permanent normal trade status for China.

But they warn that President Clinton must mount a major effort to ensure victory and say the battle could be divisive, particularly in the House. Clinton has vowed an "all-out" fight to pass the measure, mobilized his Cabinet, and even set up a boiler room to handle day-to-day operations.

"It can be done, but China is going to have to watch its conduct, and the president is going to have to weigh in aggressively with the Democratic leadership, who are being pushed very strongly by labor not to do this," Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., told the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in a speech last week.

At issue is what chamber President Thomas J. Donohue has called a "watershed" struggle over the appropriate approach to encouraging economic and political liberalization in China.

Since it began shedding its Maoist isolation in the 1970s, China has industrialized rapidly, becoming one of the United States' most important trading partners. The trade is heavily imbalanced. Last year, the United States bought about $70 billion more than it sold to China. That – combined with the communist government's policies of suppressing religion, democracy and human rights – has made the economic relationship controversial.

The White House argues that over time, WTO membership and openness to the world will increase Chinese purchases of U.S. products and tend to bring moderation and the "rule of law" to China.

"We have an enormous stake in encouraging the path of integration and reform, not confrontation and decline," Clinton's national security adviser, Sandy Berger, said recently. "Bringing China into the WTO will make a big difference."

U.S. companies, meanwhile, want the expanded rights to sell to China that WTO membership would bring; they also want normal trade relations with China so they can operate factories there without fearing Congress will disrupt access to the U.S. market.

A new addition to the farm.
One of three lambs born to sheep #325, she rests among her siblings at the Hadley Farm.

Are you a morning person?

Would you like to be able to work each morning before classes start?

Then deliver Collegian pape the job for YO

Come down to Rm in the Campus Cent fill out an applica

THE ALANA JOB FAIR

DON'T MISS THIS CHANCE TO MEET PROSPECTIVE EMPLOYERS!

Coop/Internship Opportunities
Networking
Summer/Permanent Employment

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 2000
CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM
UMASS AMHERST
6:00PM~9:00PM

ALL STUDENTS ARE INVITED!

SPONSORED BY: Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), Diversity in Management Education Services (DiMES), Minority Engineering Program (MEP), United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC) and the Campus Career Network (CCN).
For more information, please call Ruth Carey @ (413) 545-6252 • www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

On Budget Cuts

While attempting to explain recent University budget cuts last week, University of Massachusetts at Amherst Chancellor David Scott blamed the state and collective bargaining agreements for budget shortfalls.

As a result of budget cuts, two majors have been removed effective three years from now. Apparel Marketing and Family Consumer Studies will no longer be available to students, despite the fact that Apparel Marketing is, throughout the state of Massachusetts, available only at UMass and is a major with 275 students. This is one part of what seems to be a two-part solution; the second being a request that the state invest more heavily in the University of Massachusetts system.

According to Scott, the state failed to invest in the University as an average state agency. If it had, Scott said, the University would have an additional $140 million in its budget. He also mentioned that what money the University will get in the coming year was going mostly into salary increases.

Scott felt that there was a paradox in the fact that, while the state experiences an economic boom, UMass is taking a serious hit in the pocketbook.

"How can we seem so rich but feel so poor?" Scott asked rhetorically. How can we indeed.

One wonders what asking such questions is supposed to solve. Rather than complaining about the relative "fairness" of the whole budget situation, Chancellor Scott needs to attempt to find immediate solutions to long-term problems. Granted, that is no easy task, but by merely asking rhetorical questions, Scott is publicly indicating that he is at a total loss for pro-active solutions to the current budget problems.

Instead he seems only able to place responsibility for the lack of available funds.

He blames payroll increases, an interesting decision for a man making close to $160,000 a year.

He blames state misallocated funding over the last 20 years that, had it been done right, would have allotted an additional $140 million in available funds. Of the two reasons for budget problems, this seems to be the more difficult to explain. After all, if it is a well-known fact that Massachusetts wasn't properly investing its money, why does it seem that, all of a sudden, funding and budget decreases became a huge problem?

Shouldn't problematical budgeting be taken into account when creating a budget for the coming years? If budget shortfalls can be expected, why aren't they budgeted for?

The Daily Collegian feels that Chancellor Scott, rather than telling us what could and should and would have been, needs to tell us how it's going to be and how he's going to make it better. He needs to establish a system of budgeting that takes into consideration the possibility that state funding won't always be what it is expected to be.

Currently, he seems to be doing nothing more than throwing his hands up in surrender, casually agreeing with the elimination of majors from the University in an attempt to save money. That sort of behavior is both unnecessary and unacceptable, especially for a man who should be trying to do the very best for the University.

I got a letter from Satan!

Are you there, Seth? It's me, Satan.

Here at the Daily Collegian, we get a lot of mail. Some of it consists of press releases, some of it is from angry readers and some of it is from helpful, supportive read- no... I take that back, there are no supportive people on campus that actually speak their mind, so strike that last notion from your mind. Some of it, strangely enough, is even from Satan. But I'll get into that later.

Anyway, somebody here reads all of the mail sent to us. That somebody is different for each piece of mail. If you're an idiot, I'll break it down into short fragments that you can understand: Mail about Sports is read by Sports Editors, mail about Arts & Living is read by Arts & Living Editors, and so on and so forth. Hopefully, you see a trend developing there.

I apologize if that last paragraph offended any idiots out there.

So, to make a long story significantly longer, one unique letter ended up in my mailbox the other day. Now, many of these letters I pass along to the writer or editor who deals with the issue at hand, but I couldn't decide who needed to see this one.

Let me explain this letter and perhaps you can help me figure this guy out.

The gentlemen who is responsible for writing this letter goes by the name of Joe Kinney, and he lives in Indiana. He wrote me because, as he says it, "I happen to be in a conflict" and he wanted me to "consider reading this material and sharing it with as many college students in America as possible."

Fair enough. Perhaps the enclosed information should be packaged as a letter to the editor, detailing a citizen's view on an important national topic. It gets interesting, though. This citizen, who has "an MBA in finance from Indiana University" and had a "full scholarship in the doctoral studies program of finance at the University of Rochester", happens to be an evil overlord.

How flattering. The Prince of All Darkness wrote to me, Seth Koenig, with his ideas on society as we know it, and as we will soon come to know it once World War III comes crashing down upon us.

Right.

Seth Koenig

According to the mail I received, Mr. Kinney, or The Grand Demon, whichever you prefer, wrote a 13-page letter, dated July 9, 1986, in which he explained to several high level Roman Catholic officials why the economy was about to collapse, and why they should invest heavily in gold bullion. Kinney (The Devil) received two thankful letters from Church leaders, and the world gold market enjoyed a subsequent boom, of course, because the Roman Catholic Church was taking Satan's economic advice.

Seems plausible so far.

Kinney, who had seen his 1,200-dollar investment in call options in a group known as the Echo Bay Gold Mining Company explode into a 28,000-dollar return, figured he'd drop out of school to pursue a healthy letter-sending career. The first of on his mailing-list, was, of course, those Catholic officials again.

This time, instead of helpful investment tips, he told them how their religion was obsolete and how all the economic problems in the country were their fault.

Mental note: A good way to make friends is not to tell them that their religion is obsolete and that all the economic problems in the country are their fault.

Here's where the conflict occurs. Mr. Kinney describes it best: "Approximately three to four weeks later, a very strange development occurred. I abruptly began being disturbed by seemingly autonomous voices in my mind. I could no longer think clearly... I stopped bathing. I stopped shaving."

Amazingly enough, Kinney was then told that he was suffering from some problem called "psychosis" and was then tossed into a mental institution.

As the mid-1990's came around, Mr. Kinney got better and wrote a theological piece and sent it to the government. Time out. Doesn't this sound like a movie that should star Christopher Walken?

I'll now return to the letter Satan sent to President Clinton, although the return address claims the sender is that name Joe Kinney fellow, living in Indiana.

"Allow me to introduce myself," the character in the letter to Clinton, which I got a copy of, says. "My name to the people inhabiting the planet is, 'Medina'. I am a God. I am the one and only God of all Satan Spirits present on the planet. Everything evil on this planet regularly worships me."

The decision facing me at this point is whether I should be humming a Rolling Stones classic, or a Tone Loc tune.

Regardless, Kinney, or Medina, continues on to say that Jesus is a satanic magician, and that there are four precious metals on Earth. Those metals are Gold, Silver, Platinum and Palladium, and each one represents quite directly a country that currently exists. Germans are Gold, Japanese are Platinum and North Americans are Silver... he isn't quite sure where Palladium is, but fear not, he'll probably keep us updated.

At this point, all of you out there are saying to yourselves, "Seth, this is ridiculous. Are you making this up?"

And I reply honestly, "No. Come down to the Collegian. I'll show you the damn letter. I swear." Really, now. I have an active imagination, but this is a little foolish, don't you think?

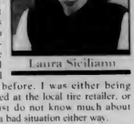
Kinney, to tie things up, plans on harnessing the four metals and bringing about a third World War, the result of which will be the deaths of millions, but we'll all be better off afterward. Those of us who are alive, anyway.

In a nutshell, the point of the story is that Satan reads the Daily Collegian, which I'm sure proves what most of you had been thinking all along, and that you tend to irritate huge powerful religious groups by telling them that they're obsolete.

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

Love the SGA? Got an opinion about the Cannabis Reform Coalition? Whatever your interests are, send us a letter to the editor. We want to hear from you.

Women having car trouble



I bought my first car before I came back to school this year. My car is not anything fancy, but it is reliable, well maintained, and only has 70,000 miles on it. Therefore, I have not had too many problems with it (knock on wood). So, on Super Bowl Sunday, I was privileged enough to receive my first flat tire on the way to a party for the big game. AAA came and put the little tiny spare tire on for me. Everything went normally, and the next day I went to a local tire shop to buy a new tire.

The tire shop will remain nameless, in order to protect its reputation, in case I just had a rare bad experience. However, I suspect that I know exactly what happened; they looked at me and thought, "Stupid girl, she doesn't know a tire from a bumper, so we can tell her whatever we want and she will buy it, because she doesn't know anything about cars."

I admit that I do not know a whole lot about cars. I know the basic elements of an engine: the different kinds of brakes, gases, fluids, belts, etc. I could probably change a tire, but I would not attempt to change my car's oil. However, I do think I have a bit of common sense, so the song and dance that the local tire retailer gave me did not sound right to me.

Before I left for school, my father looked at my tires and gave me the go ahead. I was surprised when I got the flat, but anything could have caused that. So, I was rather shocked when the tire gus told me that not only did I need to replace my flat tire, but every tire on my car, as well as the rim on my spare tire. To top it all off, I needed an alignment. He said that I only had 1,000 miles tops left on my tires, and that I really should replace them immediately. He showed me where they were allegedly worn in, but I did not really feel any wear, so I decided not to buy the tires.

My instincts turned out to be correct. After checking out my tires with another dealer, I learned that not only were my tires okay, but that I had at least another 10,000 miles in them. My car was also not in need of an alignment, and my rim just needed to be hammered out, and it was as good as new. That was quite a different tale than I had heard before. I was either being scammed at the local tire retailer, or they just do not know much about tires – a bad situation either way.

Laura Siciliano

There is a moral to this tale. Women are often taken advantage of by automobile repairmen and service centers. These servicemen assume (often correctly) that women know nothing about cars, so they can tell them that certain repairs are needed that truly are not, or they can overcharge them for parts because women may not know how much things truly cost. We have probably all heard stories of a mother, aunt or friend who has been taken advantage of at the dealer or service center.

It does not speak much for the automotive industry that these scams occur. However, women (and men who do not know much about cars) need to protect themselves so that they are not taken advantage of. With all of the complicated parts and workings of an automobile, this can be very challenging. But, if you own a car, you need to make sure you know how it works.

You can start by reading your auto's manual. This will often have specifics about repair needs and how often the oil should be changed, for example. Invest in a membership in AAA. The memberships are only about $25 a year or so, and the people who come to change your tire, or give you a jump are held accountable to AAA, so they should be honest. Women or men who do not know too much about cars should ask a friend. There is usually someone around who knows a little more than you do, and they can help you to know if a repair that the garage says you need is actually needed. Finally, if you are uncertain, you should not go to the garage alone. It is always good to have someone else's opinion, and a garage may be less likely to try to scam you if they see another person with you.

I was lucky that my instincts told me I really did not need the additional tires. I saved myself a couple hundred dollars that I did not need to spend. I learned my lesson, though. Mechanics sometimes see a girl and immediately see an easy way to make some more money. Women should try their hardest not to give the mechanics and repairmen anymore than they deserve.

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian columnist.

Make "Love" to Me

Once upon a time, there lived a young man who met a young woman at school. They talked, went on a few dates, and fell in love. After college, they married, had a family, and died at the age of 70. The End. Simple, yet boring story about no one in particular. Let's find out what really happened.

Once upon a time, a young man was introduced to a young woman through a mutual friend. The three of them chatted, went to a few movies and had a good time. The young man began to really like the young woman, but the young woman was interested in the young man's best friend. The mutual friend happened to like the young man, but the young man was solely interested in the young woman. The best friend, of course had a girlfriend, and had no interest in the young woman. The young woman, giving up on the best friend, begins to secretly date the young man. The mutual friend, finding out about the secret, disowns the two, and in depression, later drinks herself to death. The couple moves on, eventually marries, and has two children, one handicapped, and another a manic depressant. The not-so-young woman develops breast cancer, dying in her late 40's. Alone and confused, the young man works at a local hardware store until his death at the age of 70. The End.

Boo Downs

Now this story certainly is a melodrama, a story that would be fitting as a Julia Roberts / Richard Gere vehicle. I also doubt that anyone finds this story all too unfamiliar. Although I left an ambiguous ending to the story, it is not the end that matters. Rather, it is the story itself that defines us for who we are. The end is inevitable, but the process that will leave the legacy when we are gone. The motivating ideal driving this little epic is, of course, the concept of love. Given this time of year, everyone's mind is on this subject, whether we are on cloud nine for finding the "perfect" person, or bitter and jealous because we feel lonely. It is not what you have that matters, but rather how you conduct yourselves in the process. Thus I am perfectly happy and single, while many couples are angry, grumpy, and outright miserable.

The importance of love can be traced throughout history, as we needed some greater reason to explain our own existence. For example, it is written in the bible that the three most important god-given gifts given to us are faith, hope and love. Of these three, the most important gift is love. While I am not a bible thumper, or even an overly religious person, I found that this message from Corinthians 13:1-13 means a lot in our love / sex possessed society (I was trying to seduce someone who was Catholic at the time.).

If you ask most people what they desire in life, financial security and love (friendships, romances and families) are usually on the top of the list. While money is the most direct force in our lives, love and its implications or lack thereof are the ideal forces that drive our lives. To care or be cared for, to like or be liked, to love or be loved, it is this basic drive that makes people heroes, youth deliriously happy, and acts of charity normal. On the flipside, people can fall from grace, youths can become jaded and depressed, and hate against others inspire injustice. Could a sappy movie, a cheesy romantic novel, a melodramatic soap opera, or a power ballad capture the raw ideology of "love"? These mediums have certainly tried, some more successful that others. The entertainment industry tries to tell us what love is, and in this, mass-produces "love" (About the Catholic person... I really was not trying to seduce her.).

The world around us constantly strives to take this concept and transform it into a tangible commodity. I suppose that is why people will spend ridiculous amounts of money buying gifts for significant others this time of year. While I view the money spent on outrageous gifts as wasteful, I am sure that I would recant that statement in a second if I were in a relationship. But I'm not so I'll wait until next year. For those who are short of money, we actually have created a tangible "love" that does not require us to be buying diamonds whose worth is simply the meaning we give to it.

All you need to do in this society to express love is to have sex. This is not my advice, but this is the simple solution that we are raised to follow. The process of reproduction between human beings is a biological process designed for the survival of our species. Throw "love" into the fray, and it now becomes a social practice, an expression of love. So when you are "making love", it has somehow become more than mating to the participants, although the process was not invented by "love", and the only thing that it is making is babies. It is a physical practice that in the right context simply means whatever society deems it. Thus, Jack and Rose were so romantic "making love" in the backseat of a car during Titanic, but a married couple having sex in the backseat of a convertible in a porn movie is repulsing. The second is actually physically superior to the first, but it is just looked at from different perspectives.

In a relationship sense, the understanding of love and the categories of sex are paramount for a healthy relationship. For example, if you are a sexually active couple, and your sex is upgraded to making love, the nature of the relationship is going to change as well. Love becomes the marker for a long-term relationship, and if someone is in it for the fun of it, the word "love" should be a warning sign. Leave now, or face your doom.

The thoughts I've written are not original in the slightest. I am just one of the countless writers doing what everyone else is doing. If it has not been done here, then it has been done in the countless poems, plays, movies, songs and novels we have seen every day since mankind started to produce knowledge from their own brains. I feel the need to belong, to find acceptance for who and what I am, and to be able to reciprocate it to others. Oh, wait, that's our concept for "love". Well, then, I love you all.

Boo Downs is a Collegian columnist.

Write for Collegian Ed/Op...

...you never know who will be reading.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilintich Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pashkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorkovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

The Beach flounders with lame direction

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

The Beach
directed by Danny Boyle with Leonardo DiCaprio, Virginie Ledoyen, Guillaume Canet, Tilda Swinton
playing at Mt. Farms AMC Theaters

Implicit in almost every work of fiction is the idea of escapism, that drive to leave our world behind, however briefly, and find some hollow solace in another person's life. And as long as literature has been providing this escape, it has also been exploring and critiquing the act itself, trying to explain our desire to remove ourselves temporarily from reality. Relating to that exploration is the idea of a creating an Eden, an isolated microcosm of society from which all material needs are removed, allowing the inhabitants to pursue only that which they desire. Books like Lord of the Flies have tested the validity of such a paradisiacal construction, raising questions about humankind's ability to achieve any kind of true tranquility.

This brings us to The Beach, a movie drawing heavily from such earlier works, as well as more contemporary (and less related) films such as Apocalypse Now and (God help us) Six Days, Seven Nights. As you might expect, the result is somewhat disorganized. It is a stew of different ideas which never quite gel into a single, substantial narrative. Haphazard character exploration combines with patchy elements of social commentary to create a sometimes entertaining, but too often uninteresting movie, a film that tries too hard to say something about everything.

Leonardo DiCaprio stars as Richard, a young tourist out on his own, looking for more than a commercial resort, but a true adventure, a complete unplugging from society. While staying at a scummy hotel in Thailand, he meets two French tourists, Etienne (Guillaume Canet) and his girlfriend Françoise (Virginie Ledoyen). A mysterious (and insane) man gives Richard a map to an island, a paradise completely untouched by human civilization. The three tourists decide to find the island, but when they arrive, they find that the island is inhabited after all. On one half of the island Malaysian natives are operating a massive marijuana farm, and on the other half, a small community of tourists are living in a self-built paradise, a permanent resort where they do nothing but play beach volleyball and get high, all day, every day.

As you might expect, paradise proves to be a fleeting illusion and the colony of hippies begins to suffer from internal problems. Their mutual attraction to Françoise causes strife between Richard and Etienne, and the appearance of more tourists threatens the precarious stability between the hippies and the dope farmers. The outside world proves inescapable, and their time on the island a mere temporary distraction from the human condition, and not a very effective distraction at that.

The acting in The Beach is fine, and the dialogue is well written and flows naturally. The direction, however, leaves much to be desired. Some of the cinematography is pleasant (but then, it's hard to take ugly pictures of stunning south Pacific beaches), but there are also some moments of directorial lunacy, intrusive and completely unnecessary stabs at visual artistry that distract you from the movie proper. The narrative progression of The Beach is not a linear escalation, but a sporadic jumping-around from theme to theme, from a romance to a jungle survival adventure to heavy-handed emotional plays to pure, indulgent hedonism. This movie illustrates the necessity of selecting the right elements and details when adapting a novel for the silver screen, and what can happen when the wrong details are selected.

Although not entirely worthless, The Beach doesn't leave you with any sort of lasting impression: the petri-dish world it creates is far too flawed and underexplored to cast any sort of revealing light on our society, and the problematic morality displayed by several of the characters, especially Richard, makes the ending ring a little hollow. The movie feels too insincere, too fabricated, and so I can only recommend it as a shallow piece of escapist fiction. C-

COURTESY TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX

Dreamy Leonardo DiCaprio in The Beach.

New from Wu-Tang: Ghostface Killah arrives

By David Katzoff
Collegian Staff

GHOSTFACE KILLAH
Supreme Clientele
Epic

"Everybody talkin' 'bout Wu-Tang frontin' but they still tellin' lies to me," croons Ghostface during one of the album's more memorable moments. Ironically, this statement resonates truth on both accounts.

Since the release of their under-appreciated classic Wu-Tang Forever (1997), Shaolin's finest have gradually drifted from their united hip-hop dominance. At the pinnacle, their high-anointed chieftain the RZA, primarily abandoned his throne allowing Wu's new wave of fly-by-night bum misers to control the boards. When he would emerge to grace us with his touch, his production sounded like he was either busy re-inventing his style or suffering from severe narcolepsy. However, because he has undeniably earned it, let us give him the benefit of doubt and assume the former. If Wu truly flies and flounders from ledge of RZA's preeminent track laying, the Clan must once again form around him (like Voltron) and collectively re-swarm the soundwaves they once dominated.

Enter Ghostface Killah a.k.a. Tony Starks. Patented by his rasps cadence and high-pitch intonations, his vocals sting the eardrum like a venomous injection. With the belligerent zest of a killer bee, Starks relinquishes rhymes as if they had been trapped in his trachea for years. His indescribable, Wu-tonic slanguage could befuddle the most astute rhyme analyst and semantic linguist. Yet, even with his jagged razor skills, he (admirably) never attempts to veer himself from his Wu-Tang lineage.

In his infallible debut, Ironman (1996), Ghost gave Rackwon the opening verse to preempt his own forceful, bumrush entry. Symbolically, this demonstrates both the selflessness and confidence that characterizes his fiery, effervescent kinship. With a similar mentality, Supreme Clientele undertakes the dubious responsibility of restoring sanctity to the 36 Chambers. Accompanied by a slew of superfluous sound technicians, Starks begins the verbal voyage with headstrong enthusiasm. The intro, taken from the old Ironman TV show, is nostalgically riveting and creates a precise mood for the ensuing madness. While both "Nutmeg" and "Saturday Nite" are decent, "One", produced by Jaha of the Beatmasters, gives the album its viable jumpstart. Although "G-Deini" is a complex, underachievement, soiled by a horrific rhyme from Superb and an unconventionally sporadic delivery from Ghost, both "The Grain" and "Apollo Kids" retain significant energy.

The RZA, who paints the musical backdrop on four tracks, makes his first legitimate attempt at reclaiming rap's producer throne. "Buck Fifty," is an accessible posse cut which features fierce darts from Method Man, Masta Killa and Redman, and "Mighty Healthy" captures the traditional Zen instrumentation of Karate flick sampling. Still, the album's true genius is not unveiled until just before the curtain closes. After the hilarious skit entitled "Who Would You Fuck," RZA breaks off his best beat in years for "Child's Play," a poignant bundle of school-hood memories melding by vintage, melodic loops and a perfectly placed machine gun drum. (If this proves to be the new style the Abbot has been busy crate digging and crafting, it will be well worth the wait.) The bass-heavy coral "Cherchez LaGhost," effectively interspersed strong, saccharine vocals the biting messages of U-God and Starks. But the crown jewel of Clientele is "Wu Banga 101," a competitive melee where fellow clansmen Cappadonna, Masta Killa and Rae each drop certifiable dopeness overshadowed by GZA's take-the-cake intro and Mathematics' extraordinary production.

On the whole, Ghostface's sophomore will be a cornerstone in the resurgence of the Wu-Tang empire and judging from his loyal humility, his mission has been accomplished. B+

Ghostface Killah of the Wu-Tang Klan takes it up a notch with Supreme Clientele

Musical revue comes to Northampton, Smokey Joe's Café

By David Siegel
Collegian Correspondent

On Sunday Feb. 13, the musical group Smokey Joe's Cafe made a stop at the Calvin Theater in Northampton. This touring company performed two shows, one o'clock matinee, and an additional evening show with a seven o'clock start.

Going to the evening show, I really did not know what to expect. Was it going to be a full theatrical presentation with a plot, costumes and special effects or was it a full musical revue full of song and dance numbers? In this case it turned out to be the latter.

Smokey Joe's Cafe was a full musical revue showcasing the songs of Jerry Leiber and Mike Stoller. These two musical geniuses were responsible for many of the hit songs from the 40's and 50's. They wrote many prominent songs of that time period and were very influential in the shaping of both rock & rock and pop music, as we know it today.

They dabbled in many different musical genres, creating classes, hits in Rhythm & Blues, Jazz Cabaret, and even some Big Band.

The show was broken up into two separate acts. The first act comprising of 14 separate songs was performed quite briskly, lasting only about 40 minutes in length. Each song consisted of a song and dance routine by at least one performer at a time. The first set was highlighted by opener "Neighborhood" and performed by all nine members of the company.

The next number "Shoppin' for Clothes" was preformed by all of the men in the show. This song showed off their fantastic dancing skills with three of the dancers dressed in gigantic head-less suits, acting as if they were department store mannequins. Right before closing out the act, the men returned on stage to perform one of Leiber and Stoller's greatest hits, "On Broadway."

The second set was sandwiched between two renditions of "That is Rock & Roll," both performed by the entire crew. Musical highlights of this act included two hit songs by Elvis Presley, a rearing "Hound Dog" sung by Romelda Benjamin and "Jailhouse Rock" performed by the entire company and led by Tim Carroll, who played Kenickie during last year's production of Grease. The famous song, "Stand By Me," originally performed by the Temptations, was also a lasting memory from this second set.

Smokey Joe's Cafe has traveled all around the world performing their enticing brassy upbeat tunes. The show was captivating for all two hours, having kept even the buisiest crowd clapping and cheering all night. The show has one of the longest running stands currently on Broadway, and showcased the talent of Gladys Knight when in New York.

If you are looking for an entertaining evening of song and dance, stop by Smokey Joe's Cafe.

Support Your Local Hooker

Information Session
Campus Center 163
7:30 pm
Sunday February 20th

PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!

USA RUGBY

Questions? Call John @ 546-1452

www.ecs.umass.edu/rugby/umass

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.

- ✔ Student Discounts
- ✔ Professional Bartending Training
- ✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
- ✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
- ✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
- ✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job

Class Begins:
Friday Feb 25 at 6:00pm
Valentine Hall
Amherst College

Act Now, Space is Limited!

1-800-U-CAN-MIX

www.universitybartending.com

University of Massachusetts Boston

Haiti Today:
People, Culture, Politics

July 24 – August 14, 2000

This travel/study program explores Haiti's history, politics, culture, and economy through presentations by local experts, participation in cultural activities and grassroots development projects, visits to significant museums and historical sites, and meetings with civic and political leaders. Six undergraduate credits.

To learn more, contact
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Continuing Education
100 Morrissey Blvd
Boston MA 02125-3393

UMASS BOSTON

617.287.7913
www.conted.umb.edu

University Directories
Sales & Marketing Internships

The nation's largest publisher of college and university campus telephone directories is offering paid full-time summer sales and marketing internships. Tremendous practical business experience and resume booster. Position begins in May with a week-long, expense paid program in Chapel Hill, NC. Interns market official directories locally, selling advertising space to area businesses in specific college markets. Earnings average $3000.00 for the 10-week program. All majors welcome!

We will be attending the University of Massachusetts Job Fair on February 16 and interviewing on February 17. Be sure to stop by our display table. Call 1-800-743-5556 ext. 157 or visit our website at www.universitydirectories.com for more information and to apply.

University Directories
PO Box 8830 • Chapel Hill, NC 27515
(800) 743-5556 • Fax: (919) 968-8513
www.universitydirectories.com

Thinking About Being TESTED FOR HIV/AIDS

?

Anonymous HIV Testing for all UMASS students

Please call the Anonymous HIV Testing Phoneline at 577-5126. Educators can schedule an appointment, answer questions and help you decide if testing is right for you at this time.

Tigger movie a more than pleasant distraction

By Wes Wrightson
Collegian Correspondent

The Tigger Movie
Playing at Mt. Farms AMC Theaters

I know what most of you all might be thinking right about now. You're thinking why is a college guy reviewing a movie that has a six-year-old child as its target demographic. Well, for lack of a better excuse, I had no real choice in the matter, plus its a great way to kill an hour and a half, and a brutal hangover.

Getting on to the film at hand, The Tigger Movie is a film released by the folks at Disney and is quite simply their least ambitious feature this year. This film is aimed solely at small tykes and is the least interesting animated feature to come out this year by far. This is a tame throwback to the days when full-length cartoons were mostly innocuous, G-rated fare that made parents taking their children to the movie grin and bares it.

This film is just a big screen variation on Disney's A.A. Milne-derived TV series, holiday specials and direct-to-video films. Tigger should have gone straight to video where it would have profited nicely among the rest of the Pooh-world ventures.

Tigger prepares to toss Roo out the window.

Hoo hoo hoo!

In the era of Woody, Buzz Lightyear, Elik, and Tarzan, Milne's Hundred Acre Woods seems like the most boring and tame place on the face of the Earth. First time director Jun Falkenstein and writer Ed Guzelian developed the idea of shifting the focal point of Pooh, who is dim witted and slow, to the much faster paced world of the lively Tigger and his marsupial friend Roo. The story is a lame one at that. One day Tigger realizes that he is much different than all the rest of the animalia; this realization motivates him to investigate his family tree.

Except for brief pauses to teach little Roo how to bounce one's tail into use as a self-launching spring, his journey is a quite dispiriting one. Tigger loses hope of finding his family so much so that all of his friends (Eeyore, Pooh, and Rabbit) don Tigger-like disguises in hopes of making him feel better. This little ploy doesn't make our hero feel any better at all on the inside it just makes him bitter. Tigger's bitterness leads him to leave in the middle of a cold winter night until he finally realizes that his own true family is the one he has right in Hundred Acre Woods. Oh boo hoo, cry a friggin' river why don't 'ya. The movie tries way too hard to send the message of family throughout the film, and it just didn't hold my gnat-like attention span.

The one thing that this movie has going for it is the familiar pastel-dominated style we have all grown to associate with Milne's characters. On an interesting side-note, the film was mainly worked on in Japan - not in the US. Over all, and like I mentioned above, it was a great way to get rid of a hangover. C

Whales in the clouds
A scene from Fantasia / 2000. Don't even try to tell me this movie isn't about drugs.

Get Cultured ~ Read Arts!!!

Six colleges strive for a capella gold

By Erica Mattison
Collegian Staff

Six of the most competitive collegiate a cappella groups from the region performed for a sold out audience at the Silver Chord Bowl at the Academy of Music Theater on Sunday. Among these were UMass' own co-ed Vocal Suspects.

The 17th annual Silver Chord Bowl is one of 25 shows in the National Championship of Collegiate A Cappella (NCCA). The finals will be held at the Lincoln Center in New York.

The beginning of the show set a fantastic atmosphere. Emceeing the event was Ball in the House (BITH), a professional mouth band out of Boston.

Scott Harris of BITH said, "We're into bringing vocal music to the mainstream, so when we were asked to host [the Silver Chord Bowl], we said, 'Sure!'"

The group had no problem warming up the crowd on Sunday. Some of their biggest appearances include the 1999 Major League Baseball All Star Game at Fenway Park, opening for Cher at the Tweeter Center and for 98 Degrees at the Hatch Shell in Boston. With each performance the group became tighter, building up their choreography and adding new songs to their repertoire. Almost all of the songs BITH performed were original pieces. BITH started off with "Waiting," a great new song that has yet to be released. Next, they sang a soulful rendition of "Summer of '69," with Stephen McNulty doing an impressive-as-usual job.

The first collegiate group to perform was the Amherst College Zumbyes. Celebrating their 50th anniversary, the Zumbyes are characterized by their goofy, animated style. Funky ties and sneakers adorned their khakis and dress shirts. Also, one of the singers wore a banana suit. The Zumbyes definitely win the award for funny choreography. During a great cover of "Staying Alive" the guys did some aerobic dance moves that wowed the crowd.

Next up were the Smith Notables, who had a lot of supporters in the audience. This female group featured lead singers with rich voices. Aside from a couple lesser-known songs, they also sang "Goodnight My Love. They recently came out with their third CD entitled "Outtake." This group won the Silver Chord Bowl in 1996.

Following Smith College was the Vocal Suspects of UMass. This 16-person, co-ed group was certainly surprised when they heard they would be performing on Sunday. After submitting a tape to NCCA in October, the group waited to hear of some news. But after a while, things didn't look too hopeful.

"We assumed that we didn't get in," explained David Piper, who started the Vocal Suspects with a friend one year ago. That all changed two weeks ago when the group was contacted by NCCA and told that they would be performing on Feb. 13th. The Boston College Bostonians had dropped out of the competition and this meant a big break for the Vocal Suspects.

So on the night of the group's auditions, Piper announced to the group that they had an upcoming gig. "We had a bunch of extra rehearsals. It was a really fun week," said Piper.

The Vocal Suspects sang a great cover of "Sweet Surrender," as well a tune by Bare Naked Ladies called "Who Needs Sleep," which has not been played excessively on the radio. This group lent a dramatic, emotional mood to the first two songs. Their choreography was on the light side, but it was fun to see them get into the last song. By making it to this competition, the Vocal Suspects proved that you don't need to be part of a 50-year-old tradition to do well in the a cappella circle. Perhaps this success for a UMass group will be the stimulus that gets UMass more involved in the collegiate a cappella scene.

The Skidmore Accents followed with a strong performance, showcasing "Show Me Love," by Robin. The singers spiced up this number by sharing the lead so that the audience's attention was constantly shifted from one voice to another. This arrangement made for interesting listening and viewing. Out of all the songs performed at the Silver Chord Bowl, this one received the most applause.

Connecticut College Co Co Breaux, a male group, started off their set with "One Tree Hill" by U2. Although the lead singer couldn't get his voice up quite as high as Bono, his effort was good enough. Following that, one of the guys sang a solid lead for "Freshmen." Finally, Co Co Breaux sang a song that was made for them: "Here We Go" by Dispatch. This light-

Turn to CAPELLA, page 7

"The Lion in Winter" takes AC stage

By Melody Zagami
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst College's production of "The Lion in Winter" sounded a substantially amusing roar at the Experimental Theater this weekend. The adaptation of the James Goldman Comedy, directed by senior honors student Michelle Dvoskin, was entertaining enough. But, the problem was the simple truth that some people can't act and others can, and when you put them on stage together that truth comes to light immediately.

The play is set in 1183. King Henry, played wonderfully by Nicholas Dahlman, is getting on in years and is under pressure to decide which son to deserves the crown. His choice is between Richard, Geoffrey, or John. Richard (Jeremy Basescu) is heartless and brave. Geoffrey (Deen, that's all, just "Deen") is intelligent, but haughty and conniving, and John (David Azoulay) is the dim-witted son who gets picked on by everyone and could not run a country to save his soul.

Henry has his hands full with these three stooges and on top of that he has a delightfully evil queen, Eleanor of Aquitaine (S.Ann Hall), and his son's bride-to-be, Alais (Elizabeth Clark), as a mistress. Henry's palace is a three-ringed circus of selfish, scheming individuals, and it is evident that they are all of the same blood. Also I can't leave out Philip, King of France (John Downey), who apparently is using Richard to gain Henry's land, and I mean, "using" him (wink,wink nudge,nudge).

Everyone wants something. Henry wants Alais and peace of mind, the "greedy trinity" (as the Queen so aptly names them) want coronation, the Queen wants Aquitaine and her freedom, Alais wants Henry to be with her forever, and I just wanted to stretch my legs because the first act came in at about one hour and forty-five minutes. Perhaps it is the "Experimental" Theater because they want to see just how much sitting the human body can with-stand, much like every filmmaker working today.

Aside from the lengthy first act and the rather annoying characters of Geoffrey and Alais the play was entertaining and funny. The costumes were rich and regal, and the set was simple yet effective. The lighting, done by Micheal Baumgarten, was effective and subtle.

The Experimental Theater was an awkward viewing experience. The stage is placed down below the auditorium-like seating so it is more like looking upon a production rather than it being bigger than its audience. It's a bit like our own

Curtain Theater where it is more like a performance space than a stage.

Nicholas Dahlman as King Henry and S. Ann Hall as the Queen dramatically outshine the rest of the cast. Dahlman is funny when he needs to be, and he is tragic when the script calls. He truly steps up to the character. He was a pleasure to watch, and Henry doesn't appear to be an easy character to play.

Hall's Queen is just as good, if not better. She is evil and cunning yet you cannot help but love her. Both these characters are complex because they recognize themselves in their children, and know their every fault. They are dealing with memories of their youth and meeting with their own judgment.

Elizabeth Clark tries just a bit too hard as French Princess Alais. Her character is a bit forced, however it is the most moral and noble of all. Instead of being strong, she comes off as rather helpless and powerless, especially against the Queen. David Azoulay does a great job of being the dissfus of the family and you just want him to win the crown cause he has the best heart of all three. Deen over plays the middle son Geoffrey, but he is overall the least likable character in the play. However, all of the boss are excellent representations of their parents.

"The Lion In Winter" is a noble effort and executed well by the Amherst Theater Dept. It proved to the audience that the dysfunctional family started long ago, in the times of lords and ladies and by today's standards would be fighting it out with each other on Springer.

Three more kings?
George Clooney stars as a chain gang escapee in the upcoming O Brother, Where Art Thou?

Dibs!
As if there was ever any doubt, the United States calls dibs on Mars. Mission to Mars arrives in March, or you could just rent 2001: A Space Odyssey now.

Once you've read the book...
LIVE THE ADVENTURE!
Northwestern Mutual Life's College Internship Program
joined the distinguished list of the ten best internships in the nation. Out of nearly 2,000 intern programs reviewed, ours was the only insurance internship included. Not only is our internship an opportunity to gain actual business experience, it's also a chance to earn some sweet cash!
For more information about a sales career or internship contact:
DIANE BARNES
The Steffen Agency
Springfield, MA
413/748-6000
Northwestern Mutual Life
The Quiet Company
Visit our booth at the UMASS Career Fair on Wednesday, February 16th

Annual Campus-wide Career Fair
Wednesday
February 16, 2000
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am - 3 pm
Full-Time Opportunities for Undergraduate and Graduate Students
All Majors are Welcome • There's Something for Everyone!
Acosta Sales and Marketing Inc. • Albertsons - OSCO Drug/Sav-On Drugs • Alside Inc. • Alternatives Unlimited • American Express • American Power Conversion • Americorps National Service Programs • Ames Department Stores • Arkwright • Arrow Electronics Inc. • Aspen Square Management • Bankers Life & Casualty • Bell Atlantic/TGS • Bright Horizons Family Solutions • Brooktrout Technology • Canyon Ranch in the Berkshires • Career Management Site • Cellular One • CH Robinson Co. • Chubb & Son • CIGNA • The Computer Merchant • Compuware Corp. Numega Product Line • Consolidated Graphics • Dataviz • Dataware Technologies Inc. • The Devereux Foundation • Edocs • Energizer Inc. • Enterprise Rent-A-Car • ERC Wiping Products inc. • Fastenal Co. • Fidelity Investments • Filene's Basement • Filene's/The May Co. • First Investors Corp. • Foot Locker/Kids Foot Locker • Friendly Ice Cream Corp. • General Dynamics Defense Systems • Germaine Lawrence Inc. • Gillette • GTE Corp. • Hamilton Sundstrand • Hasbro Games • Hertz Corp. • Hillcrest Educational Centers • Hillel: The Foundation for Jewish Campus Life • IBM • insci-statements.com • Integrated DisAbility Resources Inc. • JC Penny • Johnson & Johnson • The Key Program Inc. • Kraft Foods Inc. • Lifeworks Inc. • M/A-Com • MassMutal • MBNA New England • The Media Edge • Medical Information Technologies Inc. • Merchants Rent-A-Car • Microsoft Corp. • MIT Lincoln Laboratory • Morgan Stanley Dean Witter • MR & Associates • National Agricultural Statistics Service • Naval Underseas Warfare Center • Network Appliance • The New England Center for Children • New York Life & NY Life Securities • Nextel Communications, Inc. • Northeast Utilities • Northwestern Mutual Life • Northwest Financial • Office Specialists • Office Max • Okemo Mountain Resort • Olde Discount Corp. • One Stop Business Centers Inc. • Onsite Companies • Parametric Technology Corp. • Pearson Education • Penske Truck Leasing • Pharm-Eco Laboratories Inc. • Phoenix Home Life • PIRG • Pratt & Whitney • Proctor & Gamble • Progressive Casualty Insurance Co. • Prudential insurance • PSS/World Medical Inc. • Putnam Investments • Raytheon • Roadway Express Inc. • Rollins Leasing Corp. • Sales Recruiters Inc. • Sanders/A Lockheed Martin Corp. • Sears Roebuck & Co. • The Sherwin Williams Co. • Sikorsky Aircraft • SmithKline Beecham • Standard Register • Staples Inc. • State Street Corp. • Stop & Shop Inc. • Sun Life of Canada • Sybase Inc. • Teach For America • Teksystems • Telaxis • Teradyne Inc. • Texas Instruments Inc. • TJX Companies • Toys " R" Us • TruGreen-Chemlawn • Tweeter Etc. • University Directories • US Army • Volpe National Transportation Systems Center • Wal-Mart • Western Industries • Wheelhouse Corp. • WorldTeach/Harvard Institute • Youth Opportunities Upheald Inc.
Presented by the Campus Career Network • University of Massachusetts Amherst
For More Information call (413) 545-2224
www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

■ capella

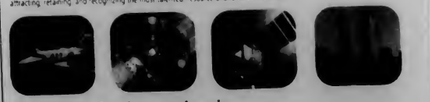
continued from page 6

hearted song suited the group perfectly. Co Co Breaux showed their versatility by singing pieces ranging from reflective to comical. Their choreography was not over the top, but added the right level of character to the performance.

The last collegiate group was Yale's Out of the Blue. Although appearing professional, their amount of confidence and attitude was almost excessive. They did a good job with "Life is a Mystery," by Madonna, but there was something about their overall performance that made them seem removed from the audience, thus not sparking as much enthusiasm as their competitors.

While the singers and crowd waited to hear the judges' decision, Ball in the House made the anticipation bearable. Harris sang lead in a fun cover of the 80's hit "Cameleon." After two more songs, BITH was done for the day and the rest of the show was all about finding out who won.



During the award presentation, the stage was filled with all of the competing singers. Connecticut College Co Co Breaux won the award for Best Vocal Percussion. The Skidmore Accents received two awards, one for Best Arrangement for "Show Me Love" and one for best solo. Finally the top three awards were given. Yale, for some reason, won third place. Understandably, the Skidmore Accents won second place. And who was the number one winner? The Connecticut College Co Co Breaux, who went gave a terrific encore, during which one person even did a backflip. The number one and two groups will head to the semi-finals.

The next chance to see a NCCA show in this area will be on March 3 at Smith College.

For ticket info, visit http://www.a-cappella.com/ncca/.

You aren't living unless you're reading Arts and Living!!!

Bring it.
Where it matters most.
As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics to aviation, to engineering and construction. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning flights onto technology.
But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits, including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.
So you can sit there with all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.
We'll be visiting your campus soon — contact your career placement office to schedule an interview. If you are unable to meet with us, please e-mail your resume to resume@rayjobs.com (ASC, text only, no attachments), or mail to: Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.
Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:
• Aeronautical Engineering
• Chemical Engineering
• Civil Engineering and Construction Management
• Computer Engineering
• Computer Science
• Electrical Engineering
• Finance/Accounting
• Human Resources
• Industrial and Labor Relations
• Management
• Marketing/Communications
• Math
• Mechanical Engineering
• Physics
Check out our website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful, and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge
Raytheon

Umass among Beantown's best

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

The thrill that accompanies the opportunity to perform at a higher level is the zenith of athletic competition. The true athlete relishes a challenge and savors the chance to test his skills against the upper echelon of his sport.

This past weekend, the Massachusetts men's indoor track team had one such opportunity at Boston University. There, 1000 athletes from numerous nationwide schools and track clubs gathered for the annual Valentine's Classic. The concept of scuffling with the nation's elite brought out the best in the Minutemen, as 15 members of the squad turned in season-high performances.

Coach Ken O'Brien was content with his squad's effort. "[The meet] seemed to serve the purpose we had in mind in terms of getting us ready as a stepping stone to the conference meet coming up," he said. "We had a lot of fine performances over the course of the afternoon, and I thought it was a real nice transition from our dual and tri meets."

Senior throwing maestro Vic Morency made a seamless transition from regional to national competition, delivering yet another brilliant performance.

Hugh Reid
COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kevin Somers
COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

He placed second in the 35-lb. weight throw with a toss of 60'9.5". His effort boosted him to second on the UMass all-time weight throw list. Morency also placed third in the shot put, with a 54'1" throw.

Junior Hugh Reid performed admirably, nabbing ninth place in the 500 meter with a time of 1:05.07, the sixth fastest time in UMass history. With his feat, Reid qualified for the New England Championships and ICAA Championships, both to be held at the conclusion of the season. Also qualifying for both season-end meets was senior Kevin Somers, who turned in a time of 8:29.09 in the 3000 meter.

Although the distance medley relay team was unable to recapture its first place victory from last year, the quartet ran well, placing sixth with a time of 10:35.69. The foursome of senior Matt Ely, junior Gary Collupy, sophomore Sal Nastasi, and freshman Matt DaPari qualified for the NEC with for their efforts.

Two rookie Minutemen placed in the top ten in pole vault. Ben Vik placed eighth with vault of 14'6", while Ken Scheider took the tenth spot with a vault of 14'. Other notable performances included sophomore Mike Bowell in the 400 meter (49.69); freshman Bill Sheridan in the 800 meter (1:56.32); senior Matt Ely in the mile (4:15.22); and Sean Murphy in the mile (4:17.17). The quartet of runners all earned entry into the NEC with their times.

As the season enters its final phase, O'Brien knows that his team has quite a road ahead of it, despite the solid performances of the past month. The Atlantic 10 conference

Turn to BEST page 9

Men's tennis learns its limits

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

Newsflash: The members of the Massachusetts men's tennis team are mortal.

Last fall, as the racket-wielding Minutemen glided to a flawless 5-0 dual match record, it was common knowledge that the squad had the Midas touch. It had the raw talent, it had the depth, and it had the desire to win. It was as though the team was destined for perfection.

Now that the spring season has commenced, the talent is still there, the depth is still there, and the desire is still there. But immortality? Fraid not. A tougher slate of opponents and a deluge of injuries have ensured this simple truth.

This past weekend, the Maroon and White hobbled its way to a 7-0 thrashing administered by Army. While the squad was well aware of its underdog status heading into the match, the lopsided defeat still left assistant coach Scott Wilkins disappointed. "We expected to do better," he stated simply. "Even though we were underdogs, we still felt we had a shot."

The rout of the trouncing is obvious: injuries. Rookie Yehzkiel Will Shaw is still out with a rotator cuff injury, while senior co-captains Bo Navarro and Parsa Samii both acquired injuries in action against Army.

Watching key players succumb to injury always can be detrimental to any team's mental fortitude, and the Minutemen are no exception. "Team morale was a little down," Wilkins observed. "When you look around and everyone's limping, everyone's confidence goes down."

In the No. 1 slot, sophomore Steve Prisco was a straight set loser to Army's Marshall Clay, 6-2, 6-1. No. 2 singles player Navarro was losing to Arnie Albornoz, 7-6, 2-1, before he retired with soreness in the shin area. Meanwhile, junior Fabien Rabanal succumbed to Wes White, 6-1, 6-1, in the No. 3 slot. Sophomore Todd Champeau, senior Marco Casesa, and junior Bill Greener rounded out singles action with straight set defeats.

Prisco paired up with Navarro at No. 1 doubles, but the duo suffered an 8-1 loss to White and Lowell Goldman. The No. 2 doubles team of Samii and senior Oliver Sanchez proved to be no match for Army's Clay and Andy Burdette. It was during this 8-1 defeat that Samii aggravated a bone bruise in his heel, incurred last weekend. Champeau and Casesa completed the troubled trifecta with an 8-6 loss at the hands of Albornoz and Matt Thinnes.

With scant time to recuperate from Army's crushing blow, the Minutemen prepared for their second opponent of the afternoon, Seton Hall. Fortunately for the squad, Seton Hall's players proved to be feeble competition compared to the utter domination displayed by the Cadets. UMass was able to capture an easy 5-1 victory over the Pirates, despite being forced to perform without the services of Samii and Navarro.

Prisco suffered the team's only loss to Seton Hall, falling to Alex Militic in No. 1 singles, 6-1, 7-5. Prisco, who lost to Militic last year, threatened to take the match to a third set, but was unable to close out the second. "[Prisco's] definitely good enough to beat this player," Wilkins said, "but he was a little off today and wasn't playing up to his capabilities."

In other singles action, Rabanal defeated Todd Greene, 6-7, 6-4, 6-4. Champeau dealt Seton Hall's Mark Vanderleet a straight set loss, 6-4, 6-1, while Casesa defeated Mickey Plodkin, 4-6, 6-2, 6-0. Greener crushed Alfredo Aguilar, allowing the Pirate to nab only one game in the entire match, 6-0, 6-1.

Due to disciplinary problems, Seton Hall's team consisted of only five players. Thus, the Minutemen were able to clinch a win without having to play doubles. Wilkins was impressed with the way his squad was able to rebound from its earlier loss. He pointed to the performances of Rabanal and Casesa as examples of the team's resilience.

Turn to LIMITS, page 9

Women's hockey bows to Lowell cousins, 2-0

By Melissa Hommel and Julie Robenhymer
Collegian Staff

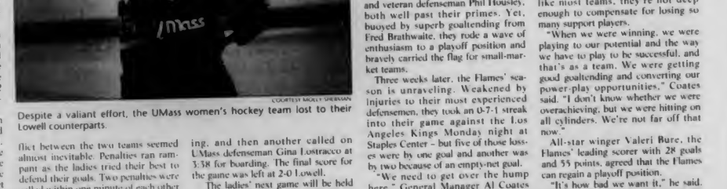
Home is where the heart is; unfortunately victory was nowhere in sight.

When ice hockey archrivals UMass Amherst and UMass Lowell faced each other on the ice for the second time this season the Lady River Hawks skated away from Saturday's match up with a 2-0 victory at the Mullins Center Auxiliars rink.

"I thought that the women played quite well," Lowell coach Robert Gamache said. "We played a smart game and tried to make the rink seem a little smaller than it was; it could have gone either way."

The game itself opened slowly, marked by limited amounts of passing from the Minutewomen and an overall lack of decent shots on either goal.

"We didn't seem to be able to get together and get a goal," forward Molly Sherman said.



While the Minutewomen were grouping together and planning strategy, Lowell was all over the ice. Amherst goalie Mindy Corr got the workout of her life as she battled tooth and nail with the Lowell defensemen every inch of the was and managed to block two amazing goal shots in under a two-minute time span. The first period closed with the score still remaining at the 0-0 mark.

The second period started out with a bang, with Lowell defenseman Diana Melnyk flinging a backhand from the outside of the crease past the Minutewomen at 8:59. Teammate Lindsay Martell followed in suite 1:32 later, sliding a slapshot past the surrounded goalie to set the score at 2-0.

UMass coach Jodie Herman explained that the goals occurred because the goalie was surrounded. "If we fall back on the goalie then the goalie cannot do her job well. So, we have to stay away and pick up the people in front of the net and just let her do her job."

In the third period the physical conflict between the two teams seemed almost inevitable. Penalties ran rampant as the ladies tried their best to defend their goals. Two penalties were called within one minute of each other on Lowell teammates Chrissy Brouillard and Melvnik for high sticking, and then another called on UMass defenseman Gina Lostracco at 5:38 for boarding. The final score for the game was left at 2-0 Lowell.

The ladies' next game will be held on Saturday against Holy Cross at home.

Despite a valiant effort, the UMass women's hockey team lost to their Lowell counterparts.
COURTESY MOLLY SHERMAN

Injuries Have Flames Flickering

By Helene Elliott
Los Angeles Times

At their peak, when they were three games over .500 and among the top eight teams in the West, the Calgary Flames seemed to be doing it with mirrors. Their best-known players were much-traveled goalie Grant Fuhr and veteran defenseman Phil Housley, both well past their primes. Yet, buoyed by superb goaltending from Fred Brathwaite, they rode a wave of enthusiasm to a playoff position and bravely carried the flag for small-market teams.

Three weeks later, the Flames' season is unraveling. Weakened by injuries to their most experienced defensemen, they took an 0-7-1 streak into their game against the Los Angeles Kings Monday night at Staples Center – but five of those losses were by one goal and another was by two because of an empty-net goal.

"We need to get over the hump here," General Manager Al Coates said. "We're right there, knocking at the door, but it's been one thing or another every game."

They miss the poise of Tommy Albelin (shoulder surgery) and Steve Smith (spinal fusion), and the toughness of Denis Gauthier (injured shoulder) and Wade Belak (dislocated shoulder). Acquiring Darryl Shannon from Atlanta helped fill the void but, like most teams, they're not deep enough to compensate for losing so many support players.

"When we were winning, we were playing to our potential and the way we have to play to be successful, and that's as a team. We were getting good goaltending and converting our power-play opportunities," Coates said. "I don't know whether we were overachieving, but we were hitting on all cylinders. We're not far off that now."

All-star winger Valeri Bure, the Flames' leading scorer with 28 goals and 55 points, agreed that the Flames can regain a playoff position.

"It's how bad we want it," he said.

Turn to FLAMES page 9

softball

continued from page 12

roughed up the Minutewomen for 12 hits, including a home run from freshman Kara Brun, who went 2-4 at the plate. ASU sophomore pitcher Kristen Voak picked up the win on the mound, striking out eight and allowing only four hits.

Holtz was the losing pitcher, yielding eight hits and five runs in four innings, while striking out only two. Hadley entered the contest in relief of Holtz, allowing only one earned run and walking no batters through three innings.

The Minutewomen will next play in the NFCA Leadoff Classic in Columbus, Ga., where they meet Stanford again on March 3 and Mississippi the following day. The team will open at home until April 1, when they host Princeton for a doubleheader beginning at noon.

Mistrial is declared in Olympic pugilist's case

By Ann W. O'Neill
Los Angeles Times

SANTA MONICA, Calif. – A mistrial was declared Monday in the murder trial of Olympic boxer Henry Tillman after a judge found that the prosecutor failed to disclose fully the criminal record of a police informant who agreed to testify against Tillman.

"I don't grant this mistrial lightly," Superior Court Judge Steven C. Suzukawa said. "But the bottom line is, everyone is here to get a fair trial."

Tillman is accused of murder and attempted murder in connection with a Jan. 10, 1996 shooting outside the Townhouse nightclub near Los Angeles International Airport.

His trial in Santa Monia Superior Court was entering the third week of testimony when it suddenly ended Monday with the mistrial. Prosecutors plan to retry Tillman, who remains in custody.

Attorneys took pains not to name the informant in open court, but he was identified in other court records as 39-year-old James Bolden, Jr. The lawyers cited a gag order and declined to discuss details.

But court records indicate that Bolden twice escaped three strikes prosecutions after he first spoke to police about the Tillman case in early 1997. And, the records showed, a perjury count against Bolden was dismissed under a plea bargain.

During the several days that his case teetered on the brink of mistrial, Tillman was offered a plea bargain, which he rejected on Monday. Under terms of the offer, Tillman would have received a maximum nine years in prison for a manslaughter conviction. Since he already has spent four years in jail, he could have become eligible for parole within a year or two, had he accepted the deal.

In court, Tillman spoke firmly, saying he understood the ramifications of his decision to reject the plea offer.

The stunning developments followed days of closed-door conferences between the judge, prosecutor and defense attorney. The case was recessed on Wednesday to allow the defense time to investigate Bolden's background and consider the plea offer.

On Monday, the defense came out swinging.

"There has been a lot of hiding the ball with respect to this witness," defense attorney Al DeBlanc said, demanding the mistrial. "To this day, I have not received all that I know is out there."

Suzukawa cited prosecutorial misconduct as grounds for the mistrial, but stopped short of accusing Deputy District Attorney Michael Duarte of deliberate deception.

"If I believed for a second that Mr. Duarte intended to deceive me, I'd be calling the State Bar," the judge said.

Duarte had hoped the witness would provide key testimony linking the 1984 heavyweight gold medalist to the nightclub shooting, which killed Kevin Anderson and gravely wounded Leon Milton, at the time a suspected drug dealer.

Duarte told jurors in his opening statement that the witness would testify that Tillman asked him to help find a new gun because he'd had his weapon melted down after he "smoked two guys at the Townhouse."

DeBlanc, the defense attorney, said in court that police logs revealed that the informant first agreed to cooperate in the Tillman matter on Jan. 15, 1997. After that, the lawyer said, he was given two "sweetheart deals," even though he was eligible in both for a third felony strike that would have automatically sent him to prison for 25 years to life.

skiier

continued from page 12

Thoman, and Gibson) have the potential to score in the top 10 at every meet, and they once again skied in awesome fashion," said MacConnell.

Junior Pete Glawischnig, sophomore Rich Granger, junior Jordan Kingdon and senior Christian Guertin finished out the scoring for the Maroon and White.

In sharp contrast to last week, in which temperatures dipped to well below zero at Loon Mountain, the weather remained almost perfect for the competitors at Ascutney.

"It was a nice day on the mountain, about 20 degrees and not windy," said MacConnell. "The snow was perfect for racing, and it was a good, hard surface."

Probably the best story of the day involved Brudey, who was so sick with the flu before the race that she was not sure whether she was going to compete or not. She decided at the last minute to give it a go, and finished ninth in the giant slalom. MacConnell urged her not to compete in the second part of the race, but she ended up pulling out a fifth place finish in the slalom despite the fact that her lunch ended up in a trash bag outside of the lodge.

MacConnell joked with his team after the race that he should inject all of his women with the flu germ.

Right now both the Minutemen and the Minutewomen are in second place in their respective conferences, and are ready for a long run into the postseason. Only the Boston College women and the Plymouth State men are ahead of the UMass team. The top four schools from each conference qualify for the USCSA Regionals at Waterville Valley, NH. Qualifications for Nationals at Loon Mountain depend entirely on the performance of the team at the Regionals.

"Our team has steadily improved as the season has gone on, and I expect good results in the postseason," said MacConnell.

Next weekend the ski team concludes its regular season at the Smith College Carnival on its home course of Berkshire East in Charlemont, MA.

world

continued from page 12

youth of the program; this is only the team's sixth year at varsity status.

"It's interesting that Sarah wasn't really recognized in Germany prior to coming here," said UMass assistant Greg Kruczyski. "But since arriving at UMass, she's really come into her own."

As one of the younger competitors fighting for a coveted spot on the 12-member German crew, Pollmann was a bit intimidated when she first returned to her home country. But after several weeks of training, the sophomore has begun to realize that her undeniable talent reduces her youth to a mere afterthought.

"We just talked to her last week, and she's finally realizing just how good she is," Kruczyski said. "At first, she was a little scared and nervous. But now she sees that she's actually one of the strongest women in the group. Combine that with the fact that the German team hasn't been all that strong in recent years, and Sarah is like a breath of fresh air."

Having survived the initial round of cuts to claim a spot among the top 14 rowers, Pollmann appears a lock to secure a place on her country's final Olympic roster. And despite that fact that the Minutewomen have temporarily lost one of their premier competitors, the coaching staff seems content that Pollmann's pilgrimage will pay off big time for both player and team in the future.

"I'm interested in giving my athletes the opportunity to do great things," Dietz said. "Sarah has an excellent opportunity to become an Olympian. If giving her this opportunity hurts my team's chances, so be it. I could have a former Olympian in my boat for the next two years."

While Pollmann has only recently exploded onto the rowing scene, Dietz has long been a fixture in the sport. Entering his sixth season as head coach at UMass, he was formerly the skipper of the Coast Guard Academy team (1985-1994). At the helm of the Maroon and White, Dietz has guided the team to four A-10 crowns and three NCAA tourney appearances.

As an athlete, Dietz captured 45 U.S. and 37 Canadian National titles. He was a member of almost every U.S. National Team from 1967-1983, including U.S. Olympic teams in 1972, 1976 and 1980. Dietz has also struck gold in Pan American Games competition, winning medals in 1967, 1975, 1979 and 1983. He was also a member of seven World Championship crews.

Dietz has been involved with the U.S. Olympic Committee since 1976, serving as the U.S. Olympic squad's coach in 1988 in Seoul, Korea and in 1992 in Barcelona, Spain.

This would again appear to be a strike against the Maroon and White, losing another valuable piece of its winning formula for the start of the fall '00 season. But according to the UMass staff, the absence of Dietz may be a blessing in disguise for the squad.

"Having him as a National Team coach will actually pay off for the team in a recruiting sense," said Kruczyski, who will take over the reins while Dietz wraps up his Olympic duties in September. "With him traveling, and seeing the best racers from around the world, he makes a ton of contacts for us."

ON THE WATER: Pollmann and Dietz aren't the only familiar faces vying for Olympic glory in Sydney. 1997 UMass graduates Wendy Wilbur and Sarah Jones, both three-time U.S. National Team members, will look to keep their spots for the 2000 games. Sara Lauritzen, a member of the 1998 UMass varsity eight and native of Denmark, is looking for a return trip with the Danish squad. And fifth-year UMass senior Tamara Surathi, a member of the 1998 and 1999 varsity eight, has also decided to take the spring semester off in pursuit of Olympic gold with her native Yugoslavian team.

best

continued from page 8

"They gritted their teeth and pulled out tough matches," Wilkins said, noting that both players lost their first sets before seizing come-from-behind victories. "These two guys really picked it up and fought through a tough day. Those are mental challenges, and they succeeded, so I think that gave us a lift at the end of it all."

The Minutemen have next week off, giving them time to recuperate from their assorted injuries. Up next for the squad is Brown, who may prove to be their fiercest opponent of the season.

limits

continued from page 8

meet and championship tournaments that loom near alter the dynamic of the season, which mostly consisted of dual and tri meets until this point. O'Brien is aware that the transition can be a difficult one.

"The season is on two levels," O'Brien offered. "We passed the test on the first one, but that doesn't necessarily mean we'll pass the test on the second one."

The team's showing at the Valentine's Classic indicates that a more competitive field is not an overwhelming obstacle for the Minutemen. In fact, the squad seems to thrive on the added motivation of competing against the cream of the crop. The tsunami of season-best performances that swept through BU last Saturday is proof of that.

However, O'Brien remains cautious, issuing a challenge to his players to maintain their high level of play. "It's almost a completely different season now," he points out. "And the championship meets are where the outstanding kids usually shine."

flames

continued from page 8

"We have a good enough team to do it. If all 20 guys put their heads together and play the way we were playing before, we can do it.

"Sometimes you get down on yourself and wonder 'Should I do anything different?' But Brian (Sutter, the Flames' coach) keeps saying we've got to stick with how we've been playing."

Making the playoffs would be especially significant to the Flames. They missed out last season, eroding fan support enough to jeopardize the aid they get from the NHL's Canadian Assistance Plan. And since the Canadian government has refused to help the six Canadian NHL teams, fans fear the Flames may be sold or moved.

"Being in the playoffs is important, not only for the team but for the franchise," Housley said. "We're aware of what's going on outside but our concern is mainly what happens on the ice. We can't control outside things and we can't worry about them."

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!

ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:
Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Student Union
Craft Center
silver • fimo • beads • plaster • leather • silkpainting copper • tie-dye • screen printing • batik • stained glass brass • sewing • buttonmaking • marbling

We offer free membership to all Umass students, faculty and staff. Members of the four college community must pay a small fee each semester.

Everybody is welcome, no matter what experience you have with crafts!

We offer small evening workshops throughout the semester, these workshops allow for individual attention as you learn new things.

Come by the Craft Center and sign up for a workshop!

We sell supplies for all areas that we offer instruction in.

Our daily hours are:
Tuesday- Thursday: 11am- 5pm
Friday: 11am- 6pm
Saturday & Sunday: 1pm- 6pm

phone: 545-2096
www.umass.edu/rso/craftctr

Co-Op and Summer Job Fair

Thursday, February 17, 2000
10:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.
Campus Center Auditorium

Summer and Semester Employment Opportunities for all majors Undergraduate and Graduate Students

Over 65 Employers are coming to see YOU!
Including:

Boston Globe
CIGNA
Compaq Computers
Fidelity Investments
Filene's/The May Company
General Electric
Johnson & Johnson/Ortho.
Mass Mutual
The May Institute
Phoenix Home Life
Pratt and Whitney
Raytheon
Six Flags New England
US Fish and Wildlife Service
US Food and Drug Administration
Walt Disney World

University of Massachusetts Amherst

Presented by the Campus Career Network
For more information, call 545-2224
www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

ATTENTION SOCCER PLAYERS WINTER INDOOR LEAGUES FORMING NOW Men's competitive Tuesday Night, women's competitive Thursday night, co-rec Friday night Accepting individuals or full teams. Eight week season and playoffs. Three miles from campus, on bus route. Call Starker 397-9716 starker@javanet.com Breakaway Sports 549-3638

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

Phi Sigma Pi National Honor Fraternity is looking for new members. If you have between 12 and 90 credits and a 3.0 GPA come learn more about us at an info migth 2/15 and 2/16 at 7pm in Campus Center room 904-08. Questions? email psp@stuaf.umass.edu

AUTO FOR SALE

VW Jetta 1988 146K, 5speed manual, power window/seat, alloy wheels, great tires $1950.00. Call 549-4818.

'87 Honda Accord. Grey 4dr. sdn. A/C, radio cassette, fog lights, power windows/locks. Good condition $1500.00. 545-2451, ask for Van Dalsen

'89 Ford Escort. 2dr hatchback, one owner, 5 spd. Blue- well maintained. New Clutch, brakes and tires. 148k, a lot of life left. $1800.00. 413-323-9407.

'94 Nissan Maxima Dark green, good condition. $6000.00. Call 253-6480.

COMPUTERS

Cannon BJC 4300 color bubble ink jet printer. Creative Cannon software included. laydefayre@aol.com $100.00.

IBM ThinkPad Pent II 366 DXD Ether net. $1600. (413)546-0233 Dan.

604/120 Desk top power-mac clone 17" monitor 28.8 modem software incl. Internet ready $1200.00. Also available. Lazer printer $200. Both $1300.oo 546-4517 or rosenleaf@aya.yale.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

PCA's needed for various duties, various hours am and pm. good pay rate. On bus route call for more information. (413)323-9633 Martina.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com

Open-minded amateur photographer position available. No experience needed. Equipment provided. Call for more details. 584-4665.

Pt/Time janitorial. Hadley, MA. Mon, Tue, Thurs, Fri and Sat 7-10am. 413-748-0028.

EMPLOYMENT

$Great Opportunity$. Marketing company seeks reliable and money motivated student for credit card promo's on-campus. Excellent commission. Flexible hours. 1-800-592-2121 ext. 300.

Work for exciting college focused internet company at your school. Looking for individual with strong leadership, entrepreneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay, and options! Contact info at uconnections.com

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132

Full time/part time line and prep cooks. High volume brew pub is now hiring experienced line and prep cooks. Must have at least 1 year cooking experience, be reliable, hardworking and a team player. Apply at Amherst Brewing Company 36 North Pleasant St.

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr $8. ph. 549-8843.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

EMPLOYMENT

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available. Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous customer service experience. Photo and mini-lab technician job. Consists of taking photos on the river and developing process. Photo experience necessary. No lab experience needed. Will train. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFE-TIME OF EXPERIENCE
I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot: www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962

EMPLOYMENT

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

INSTRUCTION

Private boxing lessons with retired pro G. Djata Bumpus in Amherst. Call (413)256-0364.

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

LOST & FOUND

Found: Watch. Lot 40, Feb. 7th. Call 5-9586.

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in beautiful 5 bdroom house; 10 minutes from Amherst Center. Available NOW. $300/mo. 256-2384.

Furnished room with free cable. Private entrance and kitchen facilities. 4 miles from UMass. Not on bus line. $295/mo. Utilities included. 253-3670.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for roommates with references you can trust? Your friends and your friend's friends might know someone and sixdegrees can help you meet them. www.sixdegrees.com

SERVICES

Rental problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Qestions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

LAGNAF in Jamaica for spring break. Mar. 12-19 $559. Negril/Jamaica. Airfare roundtrip inc. 7 nights hotel lodging. Sign-up today. Call 545-3437.

Party with UMass Ski 'n' Board Club for spring break. Jackson Hole/Wyoming Mar. 13-20. $699 7 nights/5 day lifts. Airfare roundtrip incl. Sign-up now. Call 545-3437.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

LAST MINUTE SPECIALS ON SPRING BREAK!
CANCUN JAMAICA NASSAU
SPACE IS LIMITED!!
32 Years 1 #1 Spring Break Co.
Call us at 1-800-293-1443 or go to
STUDENTCITY.COM

WANTED

Women volunteers needed for research exploring high school sex education. 18-28 yrs. old. Participate 30 min. interview. Women of diverse backgrounds encouraged. Kim 587-0273 or kcondon@javanet.com

Actress for short film to be shot locally during February. Heavy emotion needed. No experience needed. Willing to work around class schedule. Call 222-4255 for more info.

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Advertise here in The Collegian today!!

Call us at 545-3500

Hope everyone has a Happy Valentine's Day!!

Five College Community Calendar

TUESDAY, FEB. 15

Lecture – A lecture on environmental choices, given by Warren Leon, will be held at 7 p.m. at the Jones Library in Amherst. The event is sponsored by the Population Committee Pioneer Valley Sierra Club.

Meeting – The UMass Ballroom Dance Club will meet at 8:30 p.m. in Totman 101.

Workshop – There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 7 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services. Men and women are welcome. Call Day at 577-5188 for more details.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 16

Auditions – The UMass Ballroom Dance Team is holding auditions in Totman 101 at 7 p.m. All are welcome.

Auditions – Auditions are being held from 7-9 p.m. for a new UVC-TV 19 independent drama production. All are welcome, and no preparation is necessary. Audition at the studio located behind the Hatch in the Student Union. Call 546-3726 for more information.

Meeting – The Hellenic Student Association will hold its first meeting in room 805/809 of the Campus Center. All Greeks (this does not include frats!) are welcome! Call Aristotle at 546-4300 for more information.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a music profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac116@aol.com or Caleb at 587-3740 by March 5.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. Student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Support – A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone pre-screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5316 if interested.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

Community – Alternatives to Violence Project will be holding a workshop March 3-5 at Quabbin Regional High School in Barre. Participants will learn how to deal with conflict in a nonviolent way. Call 256-8165 for more information.

Meeting – The Women's Resource Center will be holding a meeting for women who are interested in starting a women's group. Call 545-0800 for more information.

Meeting – The Women's Resource Center will be holding a meeting for women who are interested in starting a women's group. Call 545-0800 before Feb. 15.

FYI's are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Join our team!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is always looking for writers who are willing to cover news stories.

If you are interested please contact Mary at 545-1762

HSCN 4 Hosting Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	81	Gavel to Gavel
3	CBS/3 Springfield	82	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	83	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	84	CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield	85	CNN Fn
7	HSCN Movie Ch.	86	CNN SI
8	UPN/20 Hartford	87	TBS
9	Weather Channel	88	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain	89	College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford	90	Univision
12	PBS/24 Hartford	91	Comedy Central
13	WOCH & HSCN	92	Cartoon Network
14	International	93	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV	94	C-Span
16	WB/New Haven	95	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance	96	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel	97	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19	98	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 15, 2000

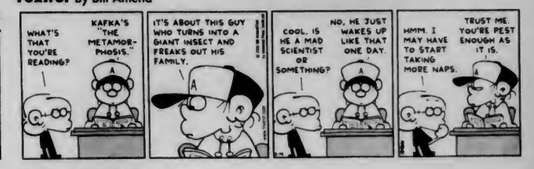
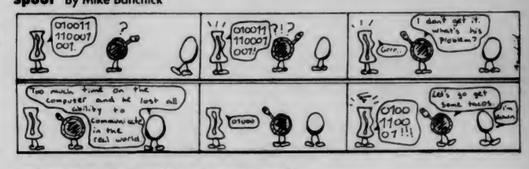
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Business Rpt.	Women's College Basketball: Connecticut at St. John's (Live)					Secrets of Lost Empires II		Nova (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "Boomerang"		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "Culture Clash"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Boomerang"		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "Culture Clash"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Sports Night	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)		News	Nightline
WLVI		Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Just Shoot Me (In Stereo)		Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV	I Dare You! Ultimate Challeng		Shasta	Dilbert	News	Real TV (R)	Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Just Shoot Me (In Stereo)		Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire? (In Stereo)				News		Friends	Fresier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Just Shoot Me (In Stereo)		Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Secrets of Lost Empires II		Nova (In Stereo)		Frontline (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Sports Night	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)		News	Nightline
WSBK		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	I Dare You! Ultimate Challeng		Shasta	Dilbert	Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Med Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "Bottleneck" (1998, Comedy) Michael Keaton, Geena Davis				★★ "First Daughter" (1999, Suspense) Mariel Hemingway.
AAE	69	L.A. Law		Law & Order		Biography: Nat King Cole		Investigative Reports (R)		Love Chronicles (R)		Law & Order "Conspiracy"
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	39	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	★½ "Mother's Navy" (1997, Comedy) Tom Arnold, Tim Curry.				Premium	Pulp Comics	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	53	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery	Serpent	On the Inside "Hurricanes" (R)		New Detectives		FBI Files "Killer Abroad"		On the Inside "Hurricanes" (R)
ESPN	61	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Ohio State at Michigan State. (Live)				College Basketball: Florida at Arkansas. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Ten Gen"		Chicago Hope "Broken Hearts"		"A Mother's Instinct" (1996, Drama) Lindsay Wagner.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	70	MTV Jams	Lyricist	Say What Kirke	Say What Kirke	TRL Weirdo	TRL (R) (In Stereo)		Tom Green (R)	Tom Green	Lyricist	Undressed	Loveline
NICK	68	All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Skeeter	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All In Family	Jeffersons	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI	66	Sliders "Genesis" (In Stereo)		Xena: Warrior Princess		Xena: Warrior Princess		Xena: Warrior Princess		Xena: Warrior Princess		Poltergeist: The Legacy
TLC	76	Hope Again	Home Again	How'd They Do That?		Trauma: Life in the ER (R)		Bizarre Phenomena (R)		Mysterious Skies (R)		Trauma: Life in the ER (R)
TNT	63	In the Heat of the Night		ER "My Brother's Keeper"		NBA Basketball: Los Angeles Lakers at Chicago Bulls. (In Stereo Live)					NBA Basketball: Suns at Kings
USA	62	Baywatch "Surf's Up"		JAG "Yesterday's Heroes"		Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show "Closing Night" (Live)						Walker, Texas Ranger
HBO	78	Totally Femilentitun		Little Curious	30 by 30: Kid	★★★ "Amy" (1998) Voices of Woody Allen, Pat		★★½ "Cruel Intentions" (1999, Drama)				Sopranos "Big Girls Don't Cry"
MAX	79	★★½ "Class Action" (1991, Drama) Gene Hackman.						★★★½ "Braveheart" (1995, Drama) Mel Gibson, Sophie Marceau. (In Stereo)				★★½ "Shanky's Machine" (1951)
SHOW	80	(6:45) "Bebe's Kids" (1992)		★★★ "Parenthood" (1989, Comedy-Drama)		Steve Martin. PG-13		★★½ "Star Trek: Insurrection" (1998) Patrick Stewart. PG				Filmmaker	Filmmaker

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer



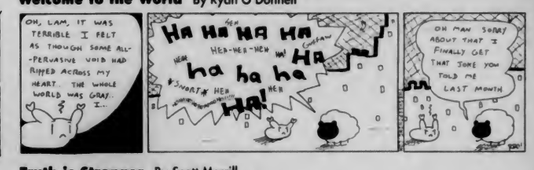
Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Over the Hedge By Fry and Lewis



Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Spoot By Mike Banchick

Nona By Anna Faktorovich

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Truth is Stronger By Scott Merrill

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You are likely to encounter a "repeat" of sorts as you travel from place to place. What seems the same is likely to be the same. Or different.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may reveal more than you intend to today, and you must be careful. More people are watching you than you may have expected. So wear underwear!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You must be able to combine business with pleasure to some degree today if you are to gain as much as possible from your work.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Early lurk is on your side, Taurus. So get your butt to Vegas and roll the bones, baby! And while you're at it, go ahead and get married at one of those shark little "church-es".)

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You'll want to expose yourself to something new and challenging today. It's time, at last, for review, reflection, and long-term planning.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Beauty is only skin deep. You've been overly concerned with your physical appearance, when the fact is your true worth is inestimable. That, and you really aren't much to look at.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Pay special attention to those things which seem to be pure coincidence today. Certain numbers and letters, like 5 and J, may take on increased significance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – This is a good day to focus on your own physical and mental well-being. Make no mistake about it – every little bit helps at this time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Those things you're trying to keep secret today may be revealed inadvertently. You can minimize any negative effects by being open and forthright.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may feel as though someone has "taken your place" recently, but today you'll have a chance to reclaim what is rightfully yours.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Despite your assertions to the contrary, financial trouble and personal turbulence are closely linked today. Get to the heart of the issue!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – There is no reason for you to hide any aspects of yourself today – from the physical to the mental and emotional. Others will be kind.

Quote of the Day

"The only people who say that experience doesn't matter are the ones who don't have any."
–Cris Carter

ACROSS
1 Gluck of opera
5 Fool part
8 Sound of relief
12 Act like a ghost
14 The other people
15 Locale
16 Protein-building acid
17 Fabled race loser
18 Liquors
19 Unshod
21 Cause
23 Winter complaint
24 Golf standard
25 Derby
26 Expired
30 Antique
32 Marry secretly
33 Makeup remover
37 Walk in water
38 Pumps and loafers
39 Latch — obtain
40 Injure a joint
42 Bronco-riding event
43 Honks
44 Thicker
45 Luau fare
48 Votes against
49 Sticky fruit
50 Drifting about
52 Stubbornly
57 Blend
58 First garden
60 "Goodbye, Pierre"
61 Wild duck
62 Break
63 Computer key
64 Area Reno
65 Double agent
66 Helper, for short

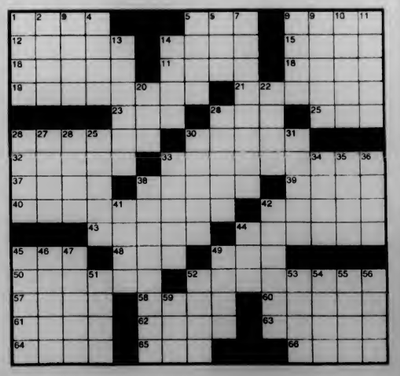
DOWN
1 Melville captain
2 Buddhist monk
3 Naturalist John —
4 Diarist Frank
5 Not this
6 Above, to poets
7 Green jewels
8 Long story
9 Kind of setter
10 Italian port
11 Doesn't own
13 Chewy candy
14 Commandment starter
20 Outdated
22 Running back Dickerson
24 1902 erupter
26 Vulgar
27 Jai —
28 Seed containers
29 Hardy wheat
30 Origins
31 Sing like Bing
33 Gabs
34 They could be split
35 Fit to —
36 Where heather grows
38 Tots' vehicles
41 Chaplin's wife
42 Jamaican music
44 Burrow
45 Zit or rigatoni
46 Frequently
47 Achilles' story
49 Desktop publisher's choice
51 Paris airport
52 Resist
53 Poet Millay
54 Morse Code signals
55 Sediment
56 Mongol dwelling
59 Party staple

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

O	B	I	A	L	I	B	I		P	A	P	A
N	A	T		C	A	S	E	S		H	E	L	E	N
E	Y	E	L	A	S	H	E	S		A	P	A	R	T
N	O	M	A	D		T	U	R	N	P	I	K	E
D	U	S	T	E	R	S		E	A	S	E
			M	O	T	E		T	O	S	O	S
L	A	D		V	I	E	L	D		M	E	L	O	N
A	V	E	C		L	A	R	E		O	D	O	N	A
V	I	S	O	R		M	O	L	A	R		G	A	P
A	S	I		M	O	V	E		W	H	O	O	P
		P	A	I			I	S	O	L	A	T	E
T	I	G	E	R	C	A	T		K	O	R	A	N
R	O	U	T	E		P	R	E	C	I	P	I	C	E
O	W	N	E	D		P	E	L	E		A	I	M
Y	A	K	S			S	K	I	E	S		S	T	Y

3-14-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Sorry, No DC Menu today



"Bring us student comics! We are bored senseless!!"

Satisfied readers of student comics.

BRING US YOUR STUDENT COMICS

Today's Staff

Night Editor	"Fat Free" Adam White
Photo Technician	Becky "Sugah" Reddick
Copy Editor	Melissa "Hot Packet" Hammel
Production Supervisor	"Gooey" Alan Basque
Production Staff	"Savory" James Gilbert "Tangy" Janine Tangney

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

Tuesday, February 15, 2000

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

What gravity? Carter reaches new hoop high

Wow. There's really nothing else to say.

I don't know how many of you actually forfeited your Saturday night to watch the annual trio of the NBA's All-Star competitions, but if you did, then you should be commended on your decision.

To tell you the truth, I had been ranting and raving about the return of the NBA Com Slam Dunk Competition ever since the league released the names of the competitors. I don't know, I guess it was just instinct (well actually, it was like adding two plus two, but for egotistical reasons we'll stick with my whole instinct phenomenon).

Just take a look at the field: Vince Carter, Tracy McGrady, Steve Francis, Jerry Stackhouse, Larry Hughes and Ricky Davis. On Saturday night in Oakland, California, this group of kids showed the world that they could fly. The Law of gravitation? Blah. Sir Isaac Newton could never dunk, and for that matter, he never knew Carter or the rest would ever walk the earth.

Carter's first two dunks in the first round were undoubtedly amazing, yet it was his third dunk that left millions of people transfixed. For this dunk, he had his Raptors teammate McGrady stand about three feet from the basket and bounce the ball about five or six feet into the air. As Carter ran in, he leaped through the air, caught the ball with his left hand and immediately put the ball between his legs in an exchange with his right hand before finishing with a powerful tomahawk jam from over his head. As the crowd erupted, Carter pointed repeatedly to the sky with both arms and made his way over to the TNT cameraman boasting the phrase, "It's over, it's over."

On Carter's first dunk of the night, the crowd went berserk and Shaquille O'Neal's eyes bugged out of his head as his mouth dropped open. On Vince's second dunk of the evening, everyone stood up, but this time, instead of screaming, they either just shook their head or looked to the person next to them in amazement.

I was at a sports bar in Amherst on Saturday night with a few friends and before we were seated we made sure that hostess gave us a table with a view of a television channeled on TNT. The reactions at the bar were the same as everywhere else in the country: excitement on the first and amazement on the second. However, after Vince's third dunk, besides a few girlish screams from some overexcited fans drinking their favorite beverages, the place remained shell-shocked. I didn't even know how to react. No one did. It was ridiculous.

Carter received two perfect 50's and one 49 in the first round. After his third dunk he said, "That's the first time I've ever done that in my life."

It isn't even fair to try to put Carter's aerial dynamic show into words. Judge Isiah Thomas fittingly remarked, "He's off the charts." Rick Barry, also on the board of slam dunk judges, told TNT with a smirk, "I wanted to give Vince a twelve..." and continued to rationalize that it was for the reason that he was an old, jealous, white guy who couldn't jump anymore.

When I sat down to write this column, I promised myself that, as hard as it was, I wouldn't make it seem like I was in love with Vince the way Thomas is. "It made me say 'Ohh,' it made me say 'Ahh,' and then I just jumped," Thomas told ESPN. That statement deserves another 'Wow.' I guess he just really, really misses the game.

In the AT&T Long Distance Competition, Jeff Hornacek grabbed another trophy and defended his title by defeating Ray Allen and Dirk Nowitzki in the finals. In all fairness, this was a pathetic contest. Not one player threw up a score over 18 in any round and Hornacek won the competition with a final score of 13. Allen Iverson netted a 10 while Bob Sura couldn't even break single digits.

Like the dunk contest, the 3-point shoot out left everyone speechless. Unlike the dunk contest, it was out of pure disgust. It was almost as bad as TNT's television coverage. First of all, they showed movie star Michael Keaton more than the scores of the dunk judges and they focused more on the hat of television star Jaime Foxx than on one of the dunks of Hughes (which they totally missed and did not even show a replay of).

Although the actual game is usually just a mere "let's not get hurt" playing atmosphere, this year it proved to be almost exciting. Shaquille O'Neal and Tim Duncan wound with the Co-MVP award as the West took the victory, 137-126.

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian Columnist

Eric Soderstrom on the NBA

UMass women's gymnastics soars, but falls to ranked PSU

No. 9 Lions ruin season-high score

By James Piehl
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics squad put its best effort of the season forward, but was unable to oust the ninth ranked Lady Lions of Penn State this weekend at home.

UMass tallied a season-high team score of 193.100, but it just wasn't enough to top Penn State's mark of 194.825. With the loss, UMass drops to 4-5 on the season while State improves to a 4-1 mark.

The Minutewomen felt the disappointment of the loss, but that was all they had to hang their heads about. Freshman Katie Teft continued to make her presence felt as a dominator for the UM squad, placing second in the all-around with a career-high 39.175. Junior squad mate Mary Moore captured third in the event, tallying a career-high of her own with 38.750. Lady Lion Gemma Cuff edged Teft out for the win with a 39.325.

The Minutewomen continued to excel, tying the all-time school mark for floor exercise of 48.975. Senior Mandy Mosby and freshman Megan Donoghue tied for fifth pace in the event with 9.800 a piece. It was all for not as Penn State's Heather Duggan and Ashley Wilson seized the event with scores of 9.900.

The balance beam proved another capable event for UMass, as Teft again showed her prodigal prowess. Teft once more tied for second, this time with a 9.850 while Mosby tied for fourth with a 9.825. Donoghue and senior Rene Franklin recorded career nights in the event, with 9.550 and 9.750, respectively. Again it was Penn State capturing the event, on the shoulders of Maria Taylor's mark of 9.875.

Teft again snagged second place, once more with a 9.850, this time in the uneven bars behind the Lady Lions Nikki Smith who had a 9.900 in the event. Franklin and freshman Ien Gendron tied for fifth in the vault with State's Jennifer Drilling at 9.600.

As unfortunate as the loss is, Teft's star abilities didn't go unrewarded. This marks the third week in succession that she was named Atlantic 10 Rookie-of-the-week. Her all-around score of 39.175 ranks fourth all-time in school history and is second this season in the conference. Her score of 9.825 on the floor is tied for fourth in the conference this season.

"The addition of Katie to our program has been a pleasant surprise," head coach Dave Kuzara said in a press release. "And not just for her gymnastics ability, but because of the kind of person she is, the team player she is. I'm glad she has been able to achieve so much early on."

The Minutewomen will be looking for more of the same out of Teft and the rest of the squad when they face Rhode Island, Rutgers and Brown on February 19th in Kingston, RI.

UMass proved its ability to play hard, but Penn State's squad was too tough. If the Minutewomen can stay focused and compete just as hard for the rest of the season, there is no reason why they shouldn't win out the remainder of their schedule.

KARA STORES | COLLEGIAN

Katie Teft

Rene Franklin

Mandy Mosby

Despite a season-high team score of 193.100, the UMass women's gymnastics team fell to No. 9 Penn state this weekend.

HEAD SHOTS COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Softball brings home tans, but no wins, from 'Zona

By Aaron Saykin
Collegian Staff

The Fiesta Bowl Tournament turned into a tough pill to swallow for the Massachusetts softball team this weekend.

Without the coattails of Olympic pitcher Danielle Henderson, No. 16 UMass faced its first hurdles of the season, losing all five of its contest in Phoenix, but producing some promising close scores to open the post-Henderson era. In fact, the squad lost its first three games by a combined margin of only four runs.

Characteristic of deceivingly slow starts against a tough early-season schedule, the Minutewomen hope that they ingested the last of their medicine.

UMass met No. 21 Stanford in the opening round on Friday, and despite strong offensive performances from the underclassmen, the Minutewomen could not overcome a six-run, first-inning deficit, falling 9-7 to The Cardinal. UMass freshman first baseman Brandi Cross opened her career with a homerun and three RBI. Sophomore power hitter and converted third baseman Cherra "Scooter" Wheeler picked up right where she left off last year, driving in three runs. Junior Kiley Scofield scored two runs and was two-for-two at the plate.

Junior Carrie Jeffries, who was slated to be the top UMass starting pitcher, allowed 10 hits and all nine runs in just over three innings pitched.

In their second contest on Friday, the Minutewomen dropped another heartbreaker to Georgia, 4-2, despite strong pitching from sophomore Jen Hadley, who saw limited innings last spring. Although she picked up the loss, Hadley went the distance for seven innings, allowing eight hits but striking out four batters.

Freshman Brandi Cross was the offensive star of the game for UMass, connecting for three hits in four plate appearances. Senior catcher Nikki Faessler went 2-3 with one RBI.

The Minutemen set again endured a narrow defeat against UNLV on Saturday, rallying for three runs in the final two innings, but falling just short, 4-3. Each team collected nine hits, but the Rebels did most of their damage in the fifth inning, scoring three runs off UMass freshmen pitcher Kalia Holtz, who was charged with the loss.

In their second contest of the day, the Minutewomen suffered their most lopsided loss of the tournament, 8-1, to Cal State-Fullerton, which improved to 9-0 on the season with the win.

Jeffries was the UMass pitcher of record, taking the loss, which seemed to have been inevitable as Cal State led 6-1 at the end of the third inning.

The Minutewomen wrapped up the trying weekend as losers of a 6-0 contest to Arizona State, which improved to 5-0 with the win. Faessler went 2-3 with one double as the only UMass player with multiple hits.

Centerfielder Terry Rooney added a double and right fielder Anna Perry chipped in with a single in the sixth inning.

The Sun Devils, on the other hand,

Turn to SOFTBALL, page 9

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass junior Carrie Jeffries was roughed up by Stanford and Cal State-Fullerton in the softball team's season-opening tournament.

Women's track blazes to glory

By Jon Tafarella
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's indoor track team came away from the Valentine's Classic in Boston this weekend with several individual victories, as four team members ran their way into the New England Championship postseason.

The athlete of the day was Sally Hirsh, who tried her hand at the 5,000-meter run for the first time this season. Hirsh finished the event in fifth place, with a time of 17:33.9. This performance not only qualified her for the New England Championships, but the ECAC Championships as well. Hirsch's time in the event is also fourth in UMass history. This is the culmination of an outstanding season for Hirsh, who has the fastest time in the Atlantic 10 in the 3,000 and second in the 5,000 meter run.

Chrystal Murphy ran that day on Saturday, running her career best in the 500 meter. Murphy's time of 1:19.87 was enough to send her to the New England Championships as well and scote fifth place at the meet. She will be joined in the post season by sophomore Jen Freeman, who also ran a career record in the same event. Freemas' time of 1:21.60 was good for seventh place in the meet.

Sprinters Melissa Ward and Jamie Hedgcock will both see postseason action as well. Both runners finished with their best personal times of the season in the 200 meter dash. Hedgcock in 26.38 and Ward in 26.46.

Coach Julie LaFreniere is no stranger to the championship runners. The 1996 A-10 Indoor Coach of the Year led last season's team to both the Atlantic 10 Indoor Championships and New England Championships. LaFrenlere has led UMass to two of its last four Atlantic 10 titles and has accumulated an overall record of 135-41.

LaFreniere will return to the Atlantic 10 Championships next week in Kingston, Road Island. With the records this season's runners have put together thus far, she should have little to worry about in the Ocean State on Saturday.

Skiiers torch Ascutney field

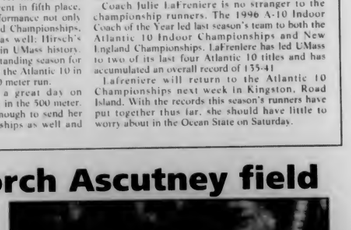
By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Correspondent

Not only is Pete Sanford from New Zealand, but he is also a very good skier.

The men's Massachusetts ski team continued its streak of impressive finishes by coming in third place in both the slalom and the giant slalom at the Boston College Carnival in Ascutney, VT this weekend behind the amazing performance of its New Zealand superstar. Sanford led the team by finishing second overall in the slalom with a time of 1:31.63 and fourth overall in the giant slalom at 1:32.52.

Not to be outdone was the women's team, which placed second in the giant slalom and third in the slalom behind its top three skiers, Tina King, Carolyn Lewenberg and Lauren Brodey. King, a sophomore from Easthampton, placed seventh in the giant slalom (1:38.70) and 16th in the slalom (1:40.61), while Lewenberg, a freshman from Auburndale, finished eighth in the giant slalom (1:39.30) and fifth in the slalom (1:33.71).

Brodey, a sophomore from Fayetteville, NY, came in a mere five hundredths of a second behind Lewenberg in the giant slalom (1:39.35) and placed sixth in the slalom with a time of 1:35.21.



Ericka Olsen and Katie Keane also had strong performances for the Minutewomen, despite the fact that their scores didn't end up counting toward the final team total.

"We had a most excellent weekend," said veteran head coach Bill MacConnell, "the team skied damned good at Ascutney."

For the men, sophomore Ken Thoman from Lebanon, Ohio, continued skiing well for the team by placing third in the giant slalom (1:32.35) and fourth in the slalom at 1:29.25. Freshman Beau Gibson also put in a solid effort by placing sixth in the giant slalom (1:33.40) and 14th in the slalom (1:32.42).

"Our first three people (Sanford,

Turn to SKIERS, page 9

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophmore Ken Thoman turned in another fantastic finish for the UMass Ski team at this weekend's Boston College Carnival.

UMass rowers eye world stage

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

In the wake of the Utah scandal, the International Olympic Committee has a long way to go in salvaging its image. Fortunately, two individuals from the University of Massachusetts women's crew program are throwing their hats into the five-ring circus just in time to save the IOC.

Sophomore Sarah Pollmann and head coach Jim Dietz are both setting their sights on the 2000 games in Sydney. Pollmann as a rower for the German National Team and Dietz as an assistant to the U.S. women's squad.

Deutschland original Pollmann was invited to train on her home soil after coaches watched her tear up the German National Ergometer Championships on December 18 of last year. The 21-year old's performance on the indoor simulation machine were on par with the top rowers from around the globe, leading the Hamm native to forego her spring semester in an effort to train back home.

"During fall ergometer testing, Sarah was pulling scores that were competitive with anyone in the world," said Dietz. "The improvements she has made have been phenomenal."

Despite the fact that Pollmann's rowing prowess went relatively unnoticed by her native country while she was growing up, the 6-foot-1 natural athlete came to UMass and blew much of her American competitors out of the water. As a member of the varsity eight boat, Pollmann helped UMass capture its fourth consecutive Atlantic 10 title last year, as well as qualify for the NCAA Rowing Championships for a third time. These accomplishments are even more significant when considering the relative

Turn to WORLD, page9

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 10

Wednesday, February 16, 2000

African stories shared with audience

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Correspondent

The W.E.B. Du Bois Library kicked off its two week commemoration of Black History Month with its first event, "Telling Our Story: Oral History in the African-American Community," on the main floor of the library last night.

The event, co-sponsored by the Black Student Union and the W.E.B. Du Bois Afro-American Studies Department, featured Carolyn Powell, a doctoral candidate in the Afro-American studies department, and Onawumi Jean Moss, storyteller and Associate Dean of Students at Amherst College.

In Africa, Powell explained, oral tradition and drumming were key to communication among tribes. This remained true when Africans arrived in America, but the white community found drumming suspicious. Oral histories continued to thrive in the African-American community.

A question of validity arises, as historians have negated the African-American history because the bulk of it has not been written down. Powell responded that historians are now going back to "revise" history, beginning 174 years ago with the relationship of third President Thomas Jefferson and slave Sally Hemmings.

During a 38-year relationship, Hemmings and Jefferson bore six children, four of which survived. Powell stated that many writers who have written Jefferson's biography claimed he was "too busy to sleep with Sally," because sleeping with Hemmings would go "too far." It is now apparent that many American prominent political figures have historically established affairs with African slave women, Powell said.

Powell said she believes this is an issue because modern day findings, like the DNA linking of Jefferson and Hemmings' son, are confirming the African-American history regarding the crossing of the color line that has existed for decades.

Powell stated that the controversy surrounding the DNA testing is "clearly about the issue of race because race still matters. It is the issue of racism that has devalued or completely ignored African-American history. It is the glue that binds our lives together as people, it is our legacy that we pass on to the next generation of black men and women."

Moss did not give a lecture, but performed several tales. She is the founder and producer of the Keepers of the Word Storytelling Festival, holds membership in the National Association of Black Storytellers, the League for the Advancement of New England Storytelling and has performed her stories at the National Storytelling Association's Swappin' Ground. Despite all of this, Moss did not realize her passion for storytelling until 1991. She considers storytelling "a very precious thing."

Moss began yesterday with her outlook on the African-American oral tradition.

"The good thing about oral history is that the book came with us. If it had been in the library we wouldn't have remembered these things. We wouldn't know what we know," said Moss.

"When we were free, after we had finished our work, after we had melted the iron and woven the clothes and pounded the yam and made okra and brown nut stew and everyone was filled, we would sit around the fire, under the stars, under the moon and the stories would be told," Moss continued. "They would be told in the evening hours because we were a

Turn to STORIES, page 3

Carolyn Powell, doctoral candidate in the Afro-American studies department, spoke yesterday in Du Bois Library as part of the Black History Month.

The seventh-annual Multicultural Film Festival kicks off tonight with the film West Beirut, which will be screened at 8 p.m. in Herter 227. The Terrorist, shown above, will be next Wednesday's offering.

Film festival to begin focus on human rights

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Correspondent

The Seventh Annual Multicultural Film Festival will take place on campus Feb. 16 through Mar. 10. It will be presented by the Inter-departmental Program in Film Studies. The title of this year's festival is "Filmmaking Out of Place: Human Rights and the Millennium."

The focus of the festival this year is on issues of human rights, cultural conflict and national identity in film. Highlights include premieres of New England films selected for the prestigious Human Rights Watch International Film Festival. One coming will also be devoted to international student-produced films from the acclaimed NextFrame tour. The University Film and Video Association will judge this festival.

The premiere is exclusive to the University, and includes many independent films that are fairly recent, having been released within the last year or so. The producers, screenwriters and directors of some of the films will be there to discuss the productions with audience members. Yet the central core of these discussions will focus on the issues of human rights.

Included in this year's festival will be films and videos from many countries such as Lebanon, India, Japan, Cuba, France, Russia, Germany, the Balkans, the United Kingdom and the United States.

There will be five different screens at the Human Rights Watch International Film Festival, titled, The Terrorist, The House of the World, Sisi, Super Chief, and American Gypsy. The Terrorist is currently being shown in New York and distributed within the United States. John Malkovich is one of the executive producers of this film leading critics some to believe it is in a prime position to be successful.

According to the festival organizer and UMass comparative literature professor Catherine Portuges, "many of these documentary, experimental and feature films are critically-acclaimed, recent releases that demonstrate innovative uses of film in building a sense of community and self-expression across ethnic, national, racial and aesthetic boundaries."

She also pointed out that they experiment with new aesthetic structures and styles, combining such forms as documentary, narrative fiction and archival photography to "expand the possibilities of the moving image."

"This multicultural film festival is designed to not only educate but to entertain as well," Portuges said. "These films take important steps toward broadening cultural experience by familiarizing us with lesser-known and in many cases, otherwise unavailable – forms of cinematic production. They also fit perfectly into the thematic focus of the series, allowing participants to discuss issues of place, human rights and filmmaking."

All of these events surrounding the film festival are free and open to the public. UMass undergraduates attending eight of the 15 events may also participate in a one-credit colloquium.

For further information on the colloquium, students may contact UMass communication professor Anne Ciecko at 545-6548 or at ciecko@comm.umass.edu. Also, a full schedule of events surrounding the festival can be found at http://www.umass.edu/film.

Career Fair offers a wide spectrum of opportunities

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Campus Career Network (CCN) will host the annual campus-wide Career Fair today from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium, followed later by the Asian, Latino, African, Native American (ALANA) Job Fair from 6-9 p.m. On Thursday, a Co-op and Internship Career Fair will be held from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

At today's fair, approximately 125 nationwide organizations will be on-hand to accept resumes, collections, resumes and arrange for job interviews. According to Tina Acker, associate director of CCN, the fair offers an excellent opportunity for students, especially seniors, to talk with employers from organizations they might be interested in working at after college.

"It's an excellent way to get your foot in the door," Acker said. "Even if you don't want the job they have right now, you can pass it onto the person who's there and they'll refer it within the organization."

Acker stated that if the employer doesn't have any openings in their department, they will pass the student's application onto an employer in another department that may have an available job opening.

Unlike previous fairs, this year's event has twice as many employers and almost 20 percent of the organizations represented have never been to campus to recruit.

According to Acker, the organizations will be taking applications from all students, regardless of their major. She said most of the employers are from non-profit organizations and are looking for qualified students to work as human resource agents, writers, sales and marketing, retail, management and graphic arts.

As an example, she indicated that there will be a ski resort from Canyon Ranch seeking to recruit students to work at the resort. Other organizations that will be present includes American Express, Ames, Americorps, Bell Atlantic, Danaware Technologies, Footlocker, Gillette, Filenes, IBM and many more.

Acker commented that there is always a great benefit in being able to apply for many different jobs at the same time.

In addition, CCN will be offering on-line registration as an opportunity for students to submit their resumes online. Acker said CCN will then submit the resumes to all companies and organizations students are interested in applying.

She said many of these organizations will have representatives that are alumni from UMass and will be able to answer students questions about job positions.

Acker said that before attending the fair, she recommends that students inquire about what fair will present their interested area because not every organization will be available at each fair.

"They can talk to the employer about any opportunity within the

Turn to FAIR, page 3

Zimbabwe voters reject rewrite of their Constitution

By Jon Jeter
Washington Post

HARARE, Zimbabwe – Voters here yesterday rejected President Robert Mugabe's proposal to rewrite the constitution, giving him his first defeat after 20 years of virtually unchallenged rule over this former British colony.

The new constitution would have consolidated Mugabe's authority but voters made it clear that the amendments to the law were at best a peripheral consideration. "This was a no-confidence vote in the current government," said Nokwazi Moyo, a union organizer.

"Most everything that comes from the government has been bad and most voters here figure that if this (constitutional revisions) comes from the government, it must be bad. We want some new ideas, some new leadership."

The referendum's central issue was

Turn to VOTERS, page 2

UM campus rather quiet

Minor incidents top weekend

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Staff

A weekend has passed without any reported sexual assaults on campus although an assorted number of other crimes were reported.

On top of minor vehicle accidents, drug law offenses, medical emergencies, vandalisms, liquor law violations, hazardous material spills and larceny reports, someone from Brown Residential Hall called the police to report individuals throwing snowballs at windows around 10 p.m. Friday.

In addition, night police and dorm staff in the Emerson dormitory broke up a party on Friday night. It was reported that an excess of 25 people, far exceeding university allowances, were crowded into one room, drinking and playing loud music. A resident advisor became aware of the party and called police when they discovered underage possession of alcohol.

According to James C. Flynn, Associate Director of Public Safety for UMass, a 18-year-old male student from Gloucester will be facing charges of minor in possession of alcohol and disorderly conduct.

The next night at Chadbourne Residential Hall, some UMass students tried to sneak a dozen or so cases of beer through the front door. Residential Hall assistants observed a female student at the door open next to the pickup. A female, age 19 from Hanover, a male, age 19 from Revere, a male, age 19 from Point, NY and a female, age 18 from Longmeadow were identified and court action will be pursued against them on liquor law violations.

A resident of the John Adams dormitory reported that a social security card that had been sent to him through the mail had been stolen

Turn to INCIDENTS

Police Roundup

TERESA CANNING-RIVERA | COLLEGIAN

Bad hair day?

UMass student Andrew Lopilato decided to spend some of the afternoon cutting his hair.

EXTENDED FORECAST

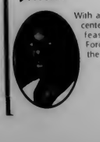
Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 15	HIGH: 25 LOW: 5	HIGH: 30 LOW: 10

SOURCE CNN.COM

Who else wants some?

Sam Wilkinson sure can pick a fight. See what he has to say about the Commonwealth College in today's Ed/Op Page.

PAGE 4



Eye on Oscar

Today's Arts takes an in-depth look at this year's Oscar nominations announced yesterday, and runs down the winners, losers and Oscar snubs.

ARTS PAGE 6

Oat Meals

With a little p.t., men's hoop center Anthony Oates could feast on an undersized Fordham team tonight in the Bronx.

SPORTS PAGE 12

Arts & Cloting 6
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editortal 4
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

■ incidents

continued from page 1

"[His] mother had mailed his social security card and birth certificate [to him]," said Lyons. "Envelopes in a box [in the mailroom] appeared to have been sliced open and placed [back] in the box."

There are no suspects although police are investigating the incident.

Also over the weekend, a woman working in Tobin Hall called police after she spilled 20 milliliters of Acrolein which, according to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agencies Unified Air Toxics website, is a cancer-causing substance found in tobacco, car exhaust and coal power plants with an oral lethal dose of 5 to 50 mg/kg. The Amherst Fire Department hazardous waste unit was not called in to aid in the cleanup.

A Knowlton Hall resident reported the theft of $70 and a phone card from her room. She allegedly left the room for a brief period and did not lock the door. There is a suspect in the theft, but the police do not have enough information to press charges.

Two computers were discovered missing from a storage room in the Lederle Research Low Rise on Monday morning. The computers are valued at approximately $2000. There was no sign of forced entry into the room and there are no suspects.

Lyons said there is still no new information to report concerning either the sexual assaults from the 1999 fall semester or from the rapes and sexual assault reported in Southwest during the weekend of Feb. 4.

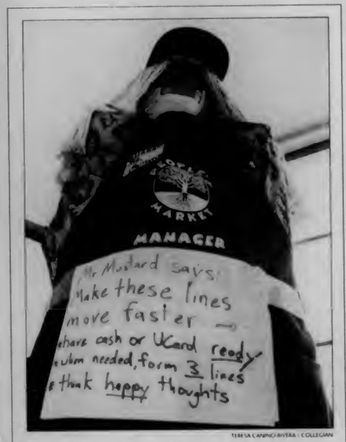
■ voters

continued from page 1

the autocratic leadership of Mugabe, the revolutionary hero who led the former British colony of Rhodesia to independence in 1980, but is now saddled with the country's worst economic crisis.

A nationwide fuel shortage, inflation hovering near 70 percent, cuts in education and health and Mugabe's unpopular decision last year to send 11,000 troops to fight in neighboring Congo's civil war has produced Zimbabwe's first legitimate opposition party.

By opposing the constitutional revisions proposed, the Movement for Democratic Change, a coalition of labor unions and civic organizations, turned the vote into a trial run for parliamentary elections in April. Voters rejected the amendments 55 percent to 45 percent.



Mugabe accepted defeat in a television broadcast late yesterday.

"The government accepts the results and respects the will of the people," he said.

Mugabe had relied heavily on appeals to black nationalism to convince voters to endorse the rewritten constitution. The current document is a compromise agreement reached by guerrillas and the former Rhodesian government in 1979.

He said that the revised constitution provided voters an opportunity to finally cast aside their colonial past and install a new legal structure, which would have granted the government authority to seize farms owned by the descendants of British colonials. Whites account for only about 1 percent of Zimbabwe's population of 12.5 million, yet 4,000 white farmers continue to own nearly a third of the nation's most fertile farmland.

One not-so-subtle newspaper ad by the government-sponsored Constitutional Commission urged constituents to approve the constitutional changes with photographs of a white couple wearing T-shirts that read: "Vote No."

TERESA CAVANCI RIVERA / COLLEGIAN

Say "hi" to Mr. Mustard!

Mr. Mustard, a mascot created by Chris Sullivan, helps direct People's Market patrons through line

Look us up on the web!
www.dailycollegian.com

WINTER ISN'T OVER UNTIL APRIL!

NOW ONLY $59.99 Was $99.99
NOW ONLY $39.99 Was $79.99
NOW ONLY $49.99 Was $89.99

SAVINGS UP TO 50% OFF
UMASS IMPRINTED WINTER COATS
Sale valid only on coats inside Ustore. Items are priced as marked.

Collegiate Casuals
Offess Clothing for Everyone
M-Th 8:30-6 Fri 8:30-5
Sat. 11 to 4
(413) 545 - 2619

The University Store
Not like a mall... Better.

TODAY!
Career Fair!

Wednesday
February 16, 2000
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am - 3 pm

Full-Time Opportunities for Undergraduate and Graduate Students
All Majors are Welcome • There's Something for Everyone!

Acosta Sales and Marketing Inc. • Albertsons - OSCO Drug/Sav-On Drugs • Alside Inc. • Alternatives Unlimited • American Express • American Power Conversion • Americorps National Service Programs • Ames Department Stores • Arkwright • Arrow Electronics Inc. • Aspen Square Management • Bankers Life & Casualty • Bell Atlantic/TGS • Bright Horizons Family Solutions • Brooktrout Technology • Canyon Ranch in the Berkshires • Career Management Site • Cellular One • CH Robinson Co. • Chubb & Son • CIGNA • The Computer Merchant • Compuware Corp. Numega Product Line • Consolidated Graphics • Dataviz • Dataware Technologies Inc. • The Devereux Foundation • Edocs • Energizer Inc. • Enterprise Rent-A-Car • ERC Wiping Products Inc. • Fastenal Co. • Fidelity Investments • Filene's Basement • Filene's/The May Co. • First Investors Corp. • Foot Locker/Kids Foot Locker • Friendly Ice Cream Corp. • General Dynamics Defense Systems • Germaine Lawrence Inc. • Gillette • GTE Corp. • Hamilton Sundstrand • Hasbro Games • Hertz Corp. • Hillcrest Educational Centers • Hillel: The Foundation for Jewish Campus Life • IBM • insci-statements.com • Integrated DisAbility Resources Inc. • JC Penny • Johnson & Johnson • The Key Program Inc. • Kraft Foods Inc. • Lifeworks Inc. • M/A-Com • MassMutal • MBNA New England • The Media Edge • Medical Information Technologies Inc. • Merchants Rent-A-Car • Microsoft Corp. • MIT Lincoln Laboratory • Morgan Stanley Dean Witter • MR & Associates • National Agricultural Statistics Service • Naval Underseas Warfare Center • Network Appliance • The New England Center for Children • New York Life & NY Life Securities • Nextel Communications, Inc. • Northeast Utilities • Northwestern Mutual Life • Northwest Financial • Office Specialists • Office Max • Okemo Mountain Resort • Olde Discount Corp. • One Stop Business Centers Inc. • Onsite Companies • Parametric Technology Corp. • Pearson Education • Penske Truck Leasing • Pharm-Eco Laboratories Inc. • Phoenix Home Life • PIRG • Pratt & Whitney • Proctor & Gamble • Progressive Casualty Insurance Co. • Prudential Insurance • PSS/World Medical Inc. • Putnam Investments • Raytheon • Roadway Express Inc. • Rollins Leasing Corp. • Sales Recruiters Inc. • Sanders/A Lockheed Martin Corp. • Sears Roebuck & Co. • The Sherwin Williams Co. • Sikorsky Aircraft • SmithKline Beecham • Standard Register • Staples Inc. • State Street Corp. • Stop & Shop Inc. • Sun Life of Canada • Sybase Inc. • Teach For America • Teksystems • Telaxis • Teradyne Inc. • Texas Instruments Inc. • TJX Companies • Toys " R" Us • TruGreen-Chemlawn • Tweeter Etc. • University Directories • US Army • Volpe National Transportation Systems Center • Wal-Mart • Western Industries • Wheelhouse Corp. • WorldTeach/Harvard Institute • Youth Opportunities Upheald Inc.

Presented by the Campus Career Network • University of Massachusetts Amherst
For More information call (413) 545-2224
www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

■ fair

continued from page 1

organization," Acker said. "But the focus of each event is different."

The ALANA Job Fair is advertised for ALANA clubs, Acker said, but other students are encouraged to attend. The Co-op and Internship Fair is focused on those students interested in looking for a co-op position or an internship with an organization over the summer. Acker said there are some organizations that will be at all three job fairs.

While many students in previous years have come away from the fair with job openings, Acker said the Career Fair is nonetheless fun and the employers are out to meet motivated and excited students.

"I think everyone should come and explore [the fair] because you never know when a simple conversation with somebody will lead to a job."

■ stories

continued from page 1

people that had order in life: you got your work done, then you got entertained and taught."

Her first story, "Leopard Woman," came from West Africa and told a story of a woman who teaches her husband a lesson on duties by turning into a leopard. This was followed by a story of 18 Africans who willingly boarded a slave ship because they were told there was a rich, new world where wealth awaited them. They walked on to the ship in Africa free men and women and when the ship docked in Georgia, they walked off in chains.

During this story, Moss sang a capella, "O freedom, O freedom, O freedom over me, and before I be a slave, I be buried in my grave and go home." She also sang, "Sometimes I feels like a motherless child, a long ways from home."

Her last story followed a young, energetic girl named Melinda who sold her soul to the devil, to be collected when she was 29-years-old. However, Melinda outsmarted the "little devil."

Although the stories Moss performed were all stories from African oral traditions, she also performs original pieces. The topics of these stories range from parent-teacher conferences in the supermarket to moving to the projects.

The first event in the Annual Commemoration of Black History Month at the UMass Amherst Library ended with an audience discussion. Many questions involved the validity of oral history. One audience member commented, "All histories start out as oral histories."

More events observing Black History Month take place next Wednesday, Feb. 23, in the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. President of Smith College, Ruth Simmons, will be speaking on "Du Bois' Prophecy: The Color Line and Education at the Start of a New Century" and two exhibits involving activism and education of black women.

TERESA CAVANCI RIVERA / COLLEGIAN

It's lunchtime...

Freshman anthropology major Ilana Reynolds works hard in Earth Foods yesterday afternoon.

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!

ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF
ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:
Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Everybody Scores!

REGISTER WITH MYBYTES.COM AND SCORE BIG!

GET A FREE SONIC ABYSS MULTIMEDIA CD AND AUTOMATICALLY BE ENTERED INTO OUR SCORE BIG, SCORE OFTEN SWEEPSTAKES.
YOU COULD WIN AN INSTANT PRIZE!
PLUS, YOU'LL HAVE A CHANCE AT $100,000 TOWARDS YOUR COLLEGE EDUCATION.

mybytes.com™

$score BIG $score OFTEN Sweepstakes

UpCLOSE travel well BLOCKBUSTER
CALGON SESSIONS
SKECHERS OldGlory.com
TripHub.com
UNIVERSAL UNIVERSAL MUSIC & VIDEO DISTRIBUTION

No Purchase Necessary. Void in Florida and where prohibited by law. Must be legal resident of the United States, (except Florida), 18 yrs or older, registered at a college or university during the promotional period. Sweepstakes ends 6:00 PM EST 03/17/00. To Play: visit www.mybytes.com and register for the website using process provided, confirm your contact information on the game page and submit. Instant winners selected at random and notified instantly by site. Grand Prize winner will be selected at random on or about 3/21/00 and notified via email and regular US mail. Odds of winning Prizes depend on the number of entries received. By entering, participants agree to be bound by the complete Official Rules available at www.mybytes.com or send SASE to "3850 Bakes" Common Places, 810 Memorial Dr., Cambridge, MA 02139. BLOCKBUSTER™ name, design and related marks are trademarks of Blockbuster Inc. Blockbuster Inc. is not a sponsor of or in any way liable or responsible for the administration of this game. [Coupon redeemable at participating BLOCKBUSTER™ store locations.]
© 2000 Touchstream

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian — Wednesday, February 16, 2000

Our Opinion

If tobacco, why not cannabis?

Earlier this week, the Cannabis Reform Coalition at the University of Massachusetts reportedly collected a sufficient amount of signatures to place a question on the legalization of marijuana on the Amherst Town Ballot, to be taken to vote on March 28, provided that those signatures are verified.

The CRC was published in the Daily Collegian yesterday with an unofficial signature count of 3072, which dwarfs the tally of 1864 that is necessary to place the question on the ballot – even considering that many of the names gathered will be found to be ineligible because of the voting status of the signees.

Last year, the CRC came roughly 100 signatures short of putting the issue to the vote of the town, but because of, as Coalition president Vernon Coffey said, "the support and help we received from the other colleges in the area," the petition was more successful this time around.

The Collegian feels that on a national level, it is foolish for the government to continuously tolerate cigar and cigarette smoke if marijuana is left illegal.

With the current United States laws in place, public use of tobacco is accepted at the discretion of given institution, but use of cannabis is not. This creates an unmistakably hypocritical juxtaposition in the country's legal stances.

If the argument against legalizing marijuana is that it is hazardous to one's health and that it is a "gateway" drug, meaning that it is not detrimentally harmful but that it leads the user to more deadly substances, such as heroin or cocaine, what is the argument for continuing to allow tobacco to be legal?

According to the World Health Organization, a smoking-related death occurs once every 10 seconds. Only China rates higher than the United States among nations in the consumption of cigarettes, a consumption that is projected by the WHO to cause a death toll of 10 million by the year 2020.

Even still, continuing to spew statistics on the dangers of the use of cigars and cigarettes seems pointless. These facts are well known, but have yet to sway the Government in their lawmaking practices. What is apparently more influential is the dollar bill: in particular, the approximately 5.2 billion of them that tobacco exports bring in here in the U.S. every year.

Because of this, the question of whether or not to legalize marijuana must be viewed on financial terms. The substance's usefulness for medicinal purposes is not acknowledged outside the state of Maine, where it was recently legalized. It can be assumed that the effect of cannabis on peoples' health, positive or negative, is unimportant to the nation. If the country's laws on tobacco are any indication of its priorities.

Working only with the almighty dollar as the tool of judgment, it must be asked how much money is spent controlling the use of cannabis by respective law enforcement agencies that are funded in some way by the government. It can also be asked how useful this spending is. Do individuals choose not to use marijuana for recreational purposes because there is an omniscient law against it? While there are no hard statistics, the Collegian guesses not.

Economically speaking, it might be in Washington's best interest to legalize marijuana. Not only would the government save money by cutting funding for law enforcement practices that are essentially in vain, but immeasurable amounts of revenue would also be enjoyed by the greedy nation with the inevitable taxation of legally marketed marijuana.

In addition, with national regulation of the marijuana bought and sold, the chances of potentially harmful tainted cannabis are reduced – diminishing the dangers that are so often used to argue against legalization.

The Collegian wishes the CRC luck in its attempt to legalize marijuana in the town of Amherst. The charge to reveal the hypocrisy of this nation's politics needs to begin somewhere. The Collegian hopes that the charge will begin in Amherst.

The great Commonwealth College

I got a lot of "fan mail" in the past seven days: "fan mail" being defined as mail from people that hate me.

In fact, I just got a lot of response to what I wrote last week, and it didn't just arrive in the letter variety. I also got a number of nasty e-mails, a few "Commonwealth College Rules" chants at a party I went to, and one slick threatening phone call from someone who was slightly perturbed that I referred to his Commonwealth College girlfriend as a "nerd."

As a result, I have learned my lesson. Being threatened and chanted at on a Saturday night can change the way a man thinks, and I've had the way that I think changed.

I'd been under the mistaken impression that students who choose to attend a public university can expect to be treated equally. This was, in fact, a complete mistake on my behalf. But don't let me tell you that. How about a helpful quote from one of the pieces of mail I got:

"It's a small school environment within a large university, which means that students can get a good education while still having access to resources that only big universities can offer."

It is this kind of explanation that, prior to my receipt of that letter, eluded me. I thought everybody should have access to that, as they put it, "good education." In fact, according to at least the letter's author, all UMass students can have "access to resources that only big universities can offer" while Commonwealth students get that and the good education.

But that line of defense wasn't done, as I also received this argument:

"With smaller class size and more challenging courses, amongst other advantages, the Commonwealth College offered me the opportunity to go to college and be competitive when I enter the work force four years from now."

I thought everyone should leave UMass "competitive." This was, again, my mistake. Only Commonwealth College students have earned that. Apparently everyone else can go straight to hell.

Or, as one slightly more blunt individual put it:

"I'm sure we'll come back to haunt you one day when you are working for us."

I hadn't realized that Commonwealth College students are management material, while regular students would only make an excellent group of laborers. But I was also under the mistaken impression that honors students were treated with slightly more reverence than other students. That is, actually, a complete fallacy. In fact, honors students have to suffer as much as the rest of us. Check this quote out:

"Since when did we get our own private college? We have to go to classes with the likes of you."

Well said. After all, honors students are being abused having to take classes with the rest of the University student body. And they have to work more than non-honors students.

"All we get is more and harder work. There is a massive list of graduation requirements we must fulfill or we do not graduate (unless we go to the office and withdraw from Commonwealth College). So far, I have seen no special treatment."

And:

"We have Gen-Eds, we have the same requirements... oh but wait, not only do we have those, but we have more Commonwealth requirements as well."

I hadn't realized that Commonwealth College students were suffering so much. No longer will I chastise that organization; instead, I will write columns in an attempt to ensure that those students no longer suffer with their unbearable class loads. Speaking of which, when it comes to "special treatment," I thought I read earlier in this column that those students get smaller, and thus more focused, classes, which apparently can't be defined as "special treatment."

Sam Wilkinson

There were those people who fiercely defended the existence of the Commonwealth College.

"If the Commonwealth College was to be eliminated from this university, UMass shuts out academically gifted students from the challenging and engaging environment they deserve."

Because only Commonwealth College students are "academically gifted students." Better yet, they deserve a certain environment that other students don't.

Then I got some of those letters that are just so nice, those letters that put me in my place and reminded me and anyone else that isn't a member of the Commonwealth College, why those students are so much better than everyone else.

"Graduating at the top of my high school class and having a resumé overflowing with sports and other extracurricular activities does not make me any less of a college freshman than you."

Also:

"Sorry if we push ourselves just a little harder and set more challenging standards."

I was wrong assuming that everyone was capable of hard work. I was wrong to think anybody working to pay his way through college was hard-working. I was wrong to think that anybody could set "challenging standards." I was wrong thinking that anyone could have a great resumé. These are things that only the Commonwealth College, the most blessed institution at UMass, can achieve.

All of these things are absolutely true. The deluge of nasty responses has reminded me that, like always, the Commonwealth College is the most precious, important, amazing, influential and wonderful thing to ever happen to the University of Massachusetts.

Even the threatening phone call changed my mind. By warning me to "watch my back" and describing me as "f---n queer" the caller ensured my fear of him. Especially when he called from his girlfriend's room on campus, the same girlfriend that, along with her roommate, wrote me nasty e-mails. These are things that change my mind and frighten me.

Well, no, technically, they don't. While I might have been wrong to blanket stereotype the Commonwealth College students who I didn't really think would take it so seriously, I still firmly believe that the existence of the Commonwealth College is wrong.

This is a public university and everybody deserves the same chances. While it's really cute and special that students graduate at the top of their high school classes with overflowing resumés, once they get to UMass, all bets should be off. Automatically assuming those students will somehow perform better than others, simply because of their equally worthless high school records, is ridiculous.

And the University should be able to handle that reality, offering all of us a top-of-the-line education, something that most of the letters indicated that UMass can't or, perhaps, shouldn't. If, indeed, UMass cannot offer each and every one of us a top-flight education, it's time to stop wasting money on silly programs that benefit a small part of the student population and instead focus on upgrading the campus as a whole.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

Good Grief, Charlie Brown!

Charlie Brown, Snoopy, Linus, Lucy... how can I ever forget them."

These words concluded the last comic strip written by Charles M. Schulz. In his contract it stated that the Peanuts comic would end with his death and no other way. This past Saturday night, Mr. Schulz passed away in his sleep at the age of 77. Cancer killed his body, but his spirit lives on. The last strip was to run the next day, as if an epithet to his life. His work had embedded a lifetime and his lifetime had embodied his work.

Ken Mc Donald

With the innocence and joy of a child, he brought Charlie Brown to this world, not to succeed, but to fail... a lot. However, it is through this trial and error, and error again, that the true virtue of the Peanuts gang was realized. From the first comic to the last, these characters never aged, their faces never wrinkled and their messages never changed. Charlie never kicked that football and his baseball team lost countless games. However, he never stopped trying. And in the end, Mr. Brown saw the last out plop into a player's glove, and the loser of losers finally won. If there is a clearer example of the strength in the human spirit, I have not found it. When everyone wanted to throw away a scrawny Christmas tree, it was you-know-who who decorated it and gave it love until the needles did not fall off. If you recall, the rest of his friends soon realized Charlie's grander vision. Can you imagine how much happier our lives would be if we had such a voice in our ear at all times?

Snoopy taught us that it is okay to dream a little, or even a lot. Without ever uttering a word, he transformed himself into fantastical characters and flew his doghouse into the hearts of millions. However, each flight landed in the same backyard every day and he could not have been happier. This beagle soared over the highest mountains and fought the Germans in World War I. However, he appreciated his surroundings with an undying devotion and kept him from never leaving his master's side.

With her dark brown locks and fiscent advice, Lucy was a far cry from the TV mom image of the 1950s. She served as a balance to Charlie and the crew, giving leadership and attitude a female face, something that was not familiar in the time of Peanuts' debut. Even today, would raise eyebrows if she walked into a boardroom demanding higher wages. It is a shame that her bold attitude did not shake down the practice of gender-based wages; however, it did give those business executives who read the Sunday funnies something to not laugh about.

Linus, with his security Blanket, made us feel a little more confident because we did not carry one. Woodstock too, with his erratic behavior and butterfly-like flight patterns, calmed our apprehensions about the trials going on in our own daily routine. Pig Pen, Schroeder, Peppermint Patty, Franklin, Marcie: each one affected us in a different way. However, the effects of a singular character never changed from day to day, week to week; Snoopy made us laugh and Charlie made us smile.

And, as it always came back to Charlie Brown, and in turn, always came back to Charles Schulz. The round-headed boy with the yellow shirt and jagged stripe saw the world in a way that gave everyone around him hope. Yet, the pen that gave Charlie Brown life had an even deeper connection to the beauty that surrounded him. Mr. Schulz had a vision of a world that escapes many of us today. In a day and age where hustle and bustle are the buzzwords, Charlie slowed it down. If only for four frames at a time. While only appearing as two-dimensional, black and white characters, his message of hope and appreciation came through in full color.

Thank you Charlie Brown, and thank you Mr. Schulz, I will miss you.

Ken McDonald is a Collegian columnist.

Just another student in love with UMass

I would like to start off this week's column by delivering some good (or bad) news to the student body here at the University of Massachusetts. Because of my complete inability to enroll in the majority of the classes I needed this semester, yours truly, Dana Oppedisano, is now on the six-year Lazy Bachelor's Degree Program. I am now on target to graduate at some unspecified point in the next 10 years, and unfortunately, this is probably bad news for most of you. Provided that I play my cards right, you will all be further subjected to my assorted ranting and raving here in the Editorial/Opinion section of your Daily Collegian. Special thanks is in order here for Kirsten and Kate, two girls who, along with my mother, remain the only three people in this world who actually look forward to my words here in the Collegian every Wednesday.

Seriously though, is anyone else out there frustrated by the complete lack of cooperation on the add/drop lady's part? I could not get into any of the classes that I wanted for this semester, and like so many others, my schedule is filled with electives and one-credit Phys-Ed courses. You see, as a sophomore, I am just about finished with the general educational requirements here at the University, but I'm also not completely immersed in my journalism major yet. For some reason, the advisors down in the Journalism Department tell me that it is not necessary to burden myself with more classes and they seem to think that I'm doing just fine with my writing. Apparently, they don't read the Collegian.

Dana Oppedisano

At present, I am taking 12 credits, about three of which I think will actually further my career as a journalist and hold my interest enough to keep me from falling over in my chair. Don't get me wrong, Maria (mi profesora), I love Spanish, but I honestly feel that unless I am trapped in a completely Spanish-speaking environment somewhere in the future, I may never use most of it again. I do understand the importance of knowing how to ask where the bathroom is, or how much something costs, but do you want to know what my last Spanish paper was about? Ricky Martin. Yes, I'm dead serious. Ricky Martin.

Since I'm already going, has anyone out there been to Health Services lately? What am I asking? Of course you have, because every time I have ever been to UHS, the entire population of Southwest is ahead of me in that cramped little waiting room. Can we get a Sports Illustrated please? Like I haven't already flipped through my complementary copy of Student Advantage Magazine for this month already.

Also, not to knock the kind doctors and nurses who are so sweet as to monitor the health issues on campus, but do you have to have meningitis to be thought kind of medication from that get some kind of medication from that place? I, as well as every person that I have ever spoken with after going to Health Services, has always been told the same thing: "Just take some Advil and take it easy for a few days." One time I made a suggestion to a nurse regarding a medication that had helped me in the past. I have since been blacklisted from Health Services altogether. I guess it's not such a big deal. If things keep going the way they're going, I won't even have enough credits to be considered a student here anymore. One step at a time I guess.

Straying from my usual University-related complaining, does anyone actually enjoy Valentine's Day? I know, by the time you read this, it's old news and you've got 363 more days to breathe easy or look for next year's sweetheart. It is just such an obligatory holiday, where you feel like if you absolutely must give every woman that you are even remotely friendly with a box of chocolates and a dozen roses. Sure, we like the cologne or the new shirt, but we'll call off the whole thing if you want – just say the word, ladies.

Plus, how bad is Valentine's Day when you have no Valentine? I'm sorry, but all you people who say, "It's okay, I'm going to go out with my best friends and we're gonna have a great time!" are just kidding yourselves. Don't you wish we could just go back to the days when you got that little pack of valentines for $2.99 at CVS, filled them all out the night before, and went to school with your little paper envelope filled to the brim? Those were the days, when all it took to impress that chick was the fact that you gave her the one with Minnie Mouse instead of Pluto on the front. Man, I was such a stud back then.

Okay, so as usual, I have made no strong political message or delivered a life lesson to help enlighten the community of Amherst this week. I've eased into the sarcastic, complaining columnist role and I actually enjoy commenting on the hard facts of life. I actually kind of restrain myself, too. I haven't even mentioned how I have developed a severe phobia of chicken sandwiches from the DC or how meeting people who are actually from Amherst kind of annoys me. Why the hell would you go to college in your hometown? Doesn't that kind of defeat the purpose? Or how about the fact that 26,000 students attend this school, the majority of which paying a substantial amount for tuition, and we can't get one premium channel on cable? I was forced to watch the NBA's Slam Dunk Contest from my warm, cozy booth at Chicago Pizza, and Sundance just doesn't do it for me anymore.

Maybe I'm out of line because the truth is, my life is not that bad at all. I slept until 1 p.m. this afternoon, rolled out of bed and into a pair of sweatpants and played Nintendo all day. There was a class in there somewhere, too, but it was just one of my "credit" courses. As in, I'm just there for the credits, baby. Just there for the credits.

Dana Oppedisano is a Collegian columnist.

www.DailyCollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 •
http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulkes Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

GLBT Issues

Wednesday, February 16, 2000

Gay sketch comedy duo dazzles in Northampton

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

Throughout the 1980s, gay bashing was a staple of American comedy. Sam Kinison, Eddie Murphy and Andrew Dice Clay, all comedic superstars of the era, were well known (and in some circles, idolized) for making AIDS jokes and referring to gay men as "fags". Throughout the 1990s, though, openly gay comedians like Suzanne Westenhoefer and Robin Taylor have altered the scene considerably, and instead of being the butt of jokes, gays are now often the perpetrators of them. The presence of sitcoms like "Ellen" and "Will and Grace," which features openly gay characters, has ushered in a new era of comedy not only sensitive to, but aimed towards, gay audiences.

Two performers braving the new territory of gay comedy are Karen "Mal" Malme, and Brian Jewell, the creators of "The Brian and Mal Show." Malme and Jewell have performed their show, a mixture of sketch comedy and improvisation, at venues throughout New England, and last Friday brought their considerable talents to The Inn at Northampton.

The show was part of a fundraiser for the GLBT Community Center Project of Western Massachusetts, with most of the attendees Project participants. While some members of the audience seemed a bit wary of a show billed as "Queer Improv," they were immediately won over by the group's first sketch, set at a poetry reading at Northampton's Fire and Water restaurant. The sketch features a poet named Iris and her cousin Bob (a last minute stand-in for her lover Simone) reciting verses like, "Love my woman body/Love my woman hills, my woman valleys/Raise your flag on my twin purple mountains' majesty."

While the duo's material is surprisingly diverse, ranging from a production of Trojan Women performed over cellular phones to a raucous version of Hamlet recited in the dialogue of Dr. Seuss, much of their humor does focus on the subject of homosexuality.

"We're gay and that's not something we're going to stifle so we can perform in straight clubs," says Jewell. "A lot of our material has come from our own personal experience, and we don't want to change the pronouns.

"It's not as if we don't do straight clubs," says Malme. "In fact, we're doing one tomorrow. The more queer people that are seen out in the world, especially in high schools and middle schools, the better."

Despite their willingness to tackle controversial gay subject matter in front of mainstream audiences, both performers maintain that crowds are rarely hostile:

"We've been getting a really great response," says Malme.

Said Jewell, "Everybody's nervous in the beginning, but we come in bouncing off the walls."

At the conclusion of their performance, many audience members rushed to the stage to tell the actors of the personal effects of their work. While the show consistently provokes laughs, the duo touches on sensitive subjects familiar to virtually every gay person.

In one scene, we meet a woman in "The Hetero Zone." Her boss is unfazed to see a co-worker come to dinner with a blow-up doll, but is shocked when he learns that her date is a woman. In another scene, Jewell, a UMass alum, discusses his crush on "a boy from Chadbourne" who turns out to be the boyfriend from hell.

Brian Jewell and Karen "Mel" Melme, stars of "The Brian and Mel Show."

Malme and Jewell remark that they don't perform in a lot of comedy clubs, partially due to the fact that their show is not entirely comical. Yet even when discussing the need for a GLBT community center, the duo is unfailingly humorous.

"It's amazing that there wasn't one already," states Jewell. "I thought there was one, but it was just the Haymarket."

Panel discusses sexual issues

By Emily Vacanti
Collegian Correspondent

"Voices – Racism," an event sponsored by the Stonewall Center, consisted of a panel that discussed racism in the GLBT community. It spoke about the experience of being a person of color as well as gay, lesbian, bisexual or transgendered.

When the panel began, the main speaker, Oscar Jones, explained many things about the gay community. He stated that many people think that you cannot be gay and black. In many minds, you have to choose between these two identities. In his mind, a person should be able to be both gay and black. You should not have to choose. Being black or gay by itself is hard enough. Being criticized for your choice to be both gets to be too much. Why can't people be both?

Another interesting point Jones made is that homosexuality is not discussed in the African-American community. It is seen as more of a taboo than in the white community. Many believe that you cannot be both a colored person and gay. Many African-Americans find it very difficult to come out due to the pre-conceived notion that you cannot be both.

One member of the panel said that he dated women to cover up the fact that he is gay. He did not know how his family and workplace would react to his homosexuality. He feared that he would suffer discrimination if the truth came out.

In retrospect, he was very much on target. The example that he gave referred to a position that he held in the Midwest. At first, he was very well accepted there. Then, when the different people that he worked with began suspecting that he was gay, the controversy started. Many of these people began lodging complaints that, because he was suspected of being both gay and a person of color, that he was unfit for the job. He fought this, but the damage was already done.

When he said to the panel, "This is who I am," he had enough power and conviction to show that he was not going to change. He was saying that he is not at all embarrassed to be what he is.

Another speaker made the comment that during panels and meetings, he enjoys more intimate gatherings. He likes getting to know the different attendees, and the openness of smaller gatherings.

Overall the speakers on the panel to be completely non-discriminatory. When I first arrived at the panel, the members were incredibly friendly. They each offered their names and hands without any preconceived notion about who I was or what I was doing there. They just accepted me, straight up.

Writer Dan Savage faces charges following prank

By Howard Kurtz
Associated Press

A Salon magazine writer who went undercover and tried to infect presidential candidate Gary Bauer with the flu has sniffled his way into a heap of trouble.

Dan Savage, who was stricken with fever, says he put a pen in his mouth, handed it to the candidate and asked for an autograph. A gay journalist who was working as a volunteer in Bauer's Iowa campaign, Savage also says he licked the doorknobs, telephones and coffee cups in the Des Moines office – all because he despises Bauer's fervent opposition to gay rights and gay marriage.

"To do what he did – wanting to infect people with the flu, and God knows what other germs he was carrying – is just inexcusable behavior," Bauer's Iowa campaign manager, Loras Schulte, said Wednesday. "It's reprehensible. Had he directed that just at me, I would have remembered my Christian admonition to turn the other cheek. But I had men, women and children working in the office in very close quarters."

Savage also says he voted in the Iowa caucuses, despite the fact that he lives in Seattle. State Republican officials in Des Moines have asked the local prosecutor to launch a criminal investigation. Polk County Attorney John Sarcone confirmed that he is looking into the matter.

"The concern is that he registered to vote fraudulently," said Ann Doughert, a spokeswoman for the Iowa GOP. "He slithered his way through and signed some paper illegally." Savage, she said, listed his Seattle residence as his old address and an Iowa hotel as his current one. The registration form says that anyone submitting false information faces a $7,500 fine and/or up to five years in prison.

David Talbot, Salon's editor, says he hasn't been inundated with so much hate mail since the online magazine disclosed a 30-year-old extramarital affair involving Illinois congressman Henry Hyde during the impeachment saga.

"The political culture has lost its sense of humor," Talbot said from San Francisco. "We believe anyone who knows Dan Savage's writing knows he is given to a kind of spirited and funny gay hyperbole.

"He was, out of his strong personal convictions, trying to freak out the Bauer people," Talbot continued.

An Internet magazine, unlike establishment publications, ought to embrace such "gonzo journalism," Talbot said.

Still, Salon is distancing itself a bit from the stunt by Savage, a freelance contributor. Shortly after the piece appeared, the Web site posted a new set of ethics guidelines for writers and commanders, will receive additional instruction, the Pentagon said.

Military officials have developed a patchwork of programs since the "don't ask" policy was adopted six years ago. Yet many troops have said that they receive little or no instruction on the policy and that it gets far less attention than, for example, guidance on such issues as equal opportunity, treatment

Military changes are worthy of our praise

The Editorial Board of the Los Angeles Times
Associated Press

Everyone at command level in the military is taught that all orders must be clearly understood and not open to misinterpretation. That imperative seems never to have been applied to the "don't ask, don't tell" policy on homosexuals in the armed services that was adopted in 1994. Surveys indicate that many troops get little or no indoctrination on the meaning and purposes of the policy and that commanders have enforced it inconsistently and sometimes indifferently. The result has often been confusion and even deliberate violations of the policy. It took the beating murder of a homosexual soldier by another recruit at Fort Campbell, Ky., six months ago to highlight these weaknesses.

New rules announced by Defense Secretary William S. Cohen should buttress the policy on gays. All military personnel, from recruits through senior officers, are to be instructed that harassing homosexuals won't be permitted. Neither will frivolous investigation of suspected gays. If someone complains of being harassed because of his or her sexual orientation, it is the harassment that will be investigated, not the possible homosexuality of the complainant.

Homosexuals in uniform are asked to keep their sexual orientation private. So long as they do, it is no one else's business. The Army has already begun training on the meaning of the policy. It properly emphasizes "zero tolerance for harassment," including derogatory remarks and annoying behavior. And commanders, who have sometimes been inexcusably lax in enforcing the policy, are being firmly reminded that harassers must be held accountable.

calender of events

Wednesday, February 16 – Everyone is invited to the first meeting of the semester of the Student Services Committee for the Chancellor's Task Force on LGBT Matters. This meeting will take place from 3 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. in the participants room 903 Goodell Building.

Thursday, February 17 – Performer Brian Freeman will hold a lecture entitled "Civil Sex: Investigating the Whole Person" as a part of the Stonewall Center's weekly LGBT lecture series. The lecture will take place at 12:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck Hall 138.

Thursday, February 17 – Brian Freeman will star in a performance of "Civil Sex," an award-winning play about the life of gay civil rights activist Bayard Rustin, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for the general public. "Civil Sex" is presented by the Stonewall Center.

Thursday, February 17 – There will be a reception for Brian Freeman, the star of the play "Civil Sex," at the Grotto club in Northampton after his 8 p.m. show at UMass. There is a $3-$15 suggested donation to benefit the Stonewall Scholarship Fund.

Thursday, February 17 – Todd Haynes, one of the leading feature filmmakers of the "New Queer Cinema," will make his first Five College appearance on Thursday, February 17, at Amherst College. From 2-4 p.m. in Stirn Auditorium; Haynes will lead an informal Q&A about his work, after screening his made-for-PBS short, "Dotty Gets Spanked." At 7 p.m., Haynes will be present at the screening of his movie "Velvet Goldmine," also in the Stirn Auditorium.

Friday, February 18 – Brian Freeman will perform "Civil Sex" for the second night at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Tuesday, February 22 – There will be a regular meeting of the Pride Alliance, the UMass group for GLBT students and their straight allies, at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center.

Thursday, February 24 – Curt Rogers and Joseph Brecla, two men who are involved with the Gay Men's Domestic Violence Project in Boston, will give a lecture entitled "The Hidden Closet: Domestic Violence and the Queer Community" at 12:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 903. The lecture is part of the Stonewall Center's LGBT lecture series.

Monday, February 28 – The Stonewall Center will sponsor a musical performance by Angie Head, a singer/songwriter from Washington, D.C., as part of its Black History Month events. The performance will take place in the Graduate Student Lounge in the Campus Center at 7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, February 29 – The Pride Alliance will meet at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center.

UMass student lectures on race, sexual identity

By David Lambert
Collegian Correspondent

Four years ago I left my closet for good. The act of honing up to my queerness, of declaring it to be a vital and indelible part of my existence, of challenging the beliefs of my family, my religion and my society, was the turning point of my life. It led to a radical redefinition of my identity, of my place in society and of my entire philosophy of life. It is a decision I can never take back, and, luckily, one I will never regret.

I was all of this in hindsight, in the voice of one who has come to terms with himself, or at least to a comfortable place in the process, for the one detail I can never stress enough is that coming out is just that – a process. I think this was the particular detail reasserted for me in Oscar Jones' lecture "I'm Gay, I'm a Person of Color... Don't Make Me Choose." The point of this lecture that hit home again and again is that every person has several identities that he or she must come to terms with, and that these identities don't always peacefully coexist.

Jones lectured from a personal basis about this clash of identities. A Latino who grew up in a predominately African-American neighborhood in Detroit, Jones knew he was gay by the age of 14. Knowing that neither the Latino nor African-American communities would embrace his sexuality, he kept it a well-guarded secret in his youth.

In college, however, he says, "I tasted freedom, and it was a four-course meal!" He still did not widely own up to his sexuality, fearing it would tarnish his image as a leader on campus. It was not until he accepted a job as an RD at a Methodist college in Nebraska that he made the leap from the closet, an act that found him in the most compromising of situations.

Jones first had to deal with the residents of his building who signed a petition favoring his removal from the resident life staff of the college. The environment was next complicated when a student member of the Aryan Nation moved into the largely black-populated dorm. Armed with the responsibility of protecting the rights of the Aryan student as well as the students of color, Jones was put in the middle of an obviously tense situation. At the end of the semester, he decided he needed to transfer to a school with a record of acceptance toward people of color and of LGBT people.

Coming to the University of Massachusetts, Jones found a comfortable home, and friends of color as well as gay friends. However, herein lay the essence of his dismay. Depending on the situation, Jones presented himself as either "a gay Latino," or a "Latino who is gay." Each group embraced part of his identity, but neither wanted to look at the entirety of his being. Jones explained that the signs of his only-partial acceptance were often subtle, but definitely existed. When with his gay friends, for example, Oscar listened to "gay" music: Pet Shop Boys, Erasure. Among his friends of color, hip-hop was the music of choice.

Sadly, an internalized racism pervades the gay community, just as homophobia is a cultural norm of the racial groups Jones has studied. This often means that people of color (POC) are forced to choose their battles, and because sexual orientation can be more easily concealed than race, GLBT identities are often dealt with on a secondary basis. Jones hopes that the common ground that POC share with GLBT people, including similar struggles for Civil Rights. He encourages members of both GLBT and POC communities to recognize their similar histories and to work together in coalitions because many of our goals are also related.

Jones' research in identity development has found a home in the Social Justice Education program at UMass. This lecture is part of the Stonewall Center's Lunchtime GLBT Studies Series that takes place Thursdays at 12:30 p.m. Upcoming lecturers include actor Brian Freeman, the Gay Men's Domestic Violence Project and transgender activist Kate Bornstein.

Pentagon alters policies

By Paul Richter
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON – The Pentagon moved yesterday to strengthen its controversial homosexual conduct policy with a new training program that calls for troops to receive instruction repeatedly and uniformly across the services.

Six months after the beating death of an alleged gay soldier thrust the subject again into the national spotlight, defense officials issued rules that call for briefings on the "don't ask, don't tell" policy as soon as troops enter boot camp and later in refresher courses. Other personnel, including military lawyers and commanders, will receive additional instruction, the Pentagon said.

Military officials have developed a patchwork of programs since the "don't ask" policy was adopted six years ago. Yet many troops have said that they receive little or no instruction on the policy and that it gets far less attention than, for example, guidance on such issues as equal opportunity, treatment of women and safety. Gay advocates have argued that this lack of understanding has led to mistreatment and harassment of homosexual service members.

The military's "don't ask" policy says that homosexuals may serve in the military, provided they do not say that they are homosexual and commit no homosexual acts. It says that the military will not investigate homosexuals without good reason and bans harassment.

Defense Secretary William S. Cohen, in a statement, said that the new rules "make it very clear... there is no room for harassment or threats in the military." What has changed, said Kenneth H. Bacon, chief Pentagon spokesman, is not the policy but "the emphasis that's being given to the policy... This is a priority of all the services."

The new training program has been under development in the aftermath of the beating death of Pfc. Barry Winchell at the Army's Fort Campbell, Ky. Winchell's death ignited new controversy over the policy.

Clergy charges dropped

By Larry B. Stammer and Julie Tamaki
Associated Press

A United Methodist Church investigative committee has dismissed a rare formal complaint against 68 ministers who staged the largest mass disobedience in church history by officiating at a lesbian couple's "holy union" last year.

The decision, which brought protests from conservatives within the United States' second-largest Protestant denomination, was announced Friday by Bishop Melvin G. Talbert of the California-Nevada Conference of the United Methodist Church. It means the 68 clergy will not stand trial before a church court that could have stripped them of their ministerial credentials.

"No further steps or actions will be pursued," said Talbert. The bishop supports same-sex unions but had reluctantly pressed forward with a complaint against the ministers that had been brought last May by evangelicals within the church.

The decision by a church committee closes the books on an episode that underscored deep divisions within the nation's churches over homosexuality.

But Methodist evangelicals who had brought the complaint were angered by what they saw as clear defiance of church law. In response, evangelical leaders said Friday they would step up efforts to create a separate western states jurisdiction within the United Methodist Church for those who believe that homosexual intimacy is contrary to biblical morality.

"Today's decision... has effectively ended the rule of discipline," said the Rev. Greg Smith, senior pastor of Hope United Methodist Church in Sacramento. "We have basically said that we now follow our own individual consciences. It's a sad day that could lead to a division and even a break up."

James V. Heidinger II, president and publisher of Good News, an evangelical publication, decried the committee's decision as "an arrogant disregard for the order and discipline of the church."

And in Bakersfield, the Rev. Robert L. Kuyper, president of the Transformation Renewal Fellowship and one of those who filed the complaint, said the decision reflects a breakdown in United Methodist unity.

"One of the issues here is (whether) the United Methodist Church in Georgia is the same as the one in California. Obviously not," Kuyper said. Kuyper founded the "Transforming Congregations," a group of about 75 Methodist congregations that believe homosexuality is a choice that can be reversed.

Talbert told reporters the decision will not resolve "tension and conflict" over homosexuality. "In fact," he said, "we may never reach agreement around this issue. The dialogue and the struggle will continue."

Opponents of gay unions note that the church law that bans ministers from performing such ceremonies was affirmed last August by the denomination's highest court, the Judicial Council. Having some regional conferences punish ministers for violating the rule while others refuse to do so is like three different federal district courts applying a Supreme Court ruling differently, they assert.

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

American Beauty, Cider House Rules lead this year's Oscar nods

M. Night Shyamalan (with Bruce Willis) earned a Best Director Oscar nomination for his hit thriller, The Sixth Sense

By David Troupes and Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

The nominations for the 72nd annual Academy Awards were announced yesterday morning, resulting in their usual share of oddsons favorites, delightful surprises and bruised feelings. Suburban satire American Beauty led this year's field unexpected, with eight total nominations. Close behind were The Cider House Rules, which from all indications appears to be this year's Oscar darling, and tough docudrama The Insider, both claiming seven nominations.

What we hope to accomplish here is to break down this year's Oscar nominations, not only to tell you our thoughts on which films will be honored come Oscar night, but also to give our general impressions, to pick out this year's Oscar snubs, and maybe give some insightful analysis along the way.

Adam: Well, just looking over all of the nominations, it seems like the big winners were The Sixth Sense and, my personal favorite, The Cider House Rules. I think that was a surprise to a lot of people, myself included. As for losers, I'd say Being John Malkovich, even though I never saw it, and Three Kings, which got blind-sided.

Dave: I agree that Being John Malkovich deserves to be on that list, and I still think it's a travesty that no one seems to care about Fight Club. Do yourself a favor: see that movie. But keep your fingers crossed that it wins Best Sound Effects Editing. Yeah!

Adam: The only other film that I think people were expecting was The Talented Mr. Ripley just because of the talent involved. I simply think Miramax pushed Cider House Rules instead.

Dave: Talent, schmalent, that movie stank twelve ways to Sunday. It was boring, overlong, thematically muddled and completely superficial. Matt Damon and Gwyneth Paltrow should be smacked for becoming involved with that movie.

Adam: Well at least we pretty much nailed the grades in our reviews. You gave The Sixth Sense and American Beauty an "A." I nailed Cider House Rules with an "A." Green Mile got an "A-" I think. That means the lowest grade for any of the Best Picture nominees was a "B" for The Insider, which was entirely too drawn out.

Dave: We have great taste, it's true.

Best Picture
American Beauty
The Cider House Rules
The Green Mile
The Insider
The Sixth Sense

Adam: I was shocked to see The Cider House Rules on this list, even though I absolutely loved the film. The Sixth Sense also came as a mild surprise. The Academy doesn't usually embrace blockbusters.

Dave: I think American Beauty should win, hands down. I don't mean to say that the other nominations aren't excellent movies, but there's a cinematic poetry to American Beauty that the other movies simply don't possess (although The Green Mile comes closest).

Adam: American Beauty is the film most people are picking to win, and I think it definitely has a lot to say about our society. However, I don't think it's the lock most people make it out to be. While The Green Mile seems to be overlooked, I think both The Insider and Cider House Rules (by virtue of its already unexpected laurels) could win. Do you think any film other than American Beauty will win?

Dave: I wouldn't at all be surprised to see Sixth Sense win. It was well-crafted and well-thought out, and the incredible box office longevity it displayed has to be worth something.

Actor in a Leading Role
Russell Crowe

Turn to OSCAR, page 8

This scene highlights the spectacular American Beauty, up for eight Oscar nominations.

Housing Services: Residence Life is now accepting applications for the

Assistant Residence Director Position
for the 2000-2001 academic year

Assistant Residence Directors (ARDs) are entry level graduate students working in the Department of Housing Services, Residence Life. ARDs are live-in staff members working in an administrative, student development, and programming capacity. All ARDs are expected to participate in comprehensive pre-service orientation programs, as well as in ongoing in-service training. The ARD position is a 30 per week assistantship for the 38-week academic year (8/13/00 - 12/23/00, 1/17/01 - 5/29/01). Compensation for the position includes a stipend (approximately $10,000), tuition waiver, and a furnished apartment (valued at $4200.00).

For More Information:
Attend the ARD Information Session
Wednesday, February 23
7:00pm
Campus Center 905-09
or Contact
Dawn Briggs
Residence Life Business Manager
413-545-6923

To Apply:
Submit a Resume, Cover Letter, and Three Letters of Reference to:
Assistant Residence Director Search Committee
207 Berkshire House
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
Priority Deadline is March 24, 2000

SOMEDAY SOON, YOU'LL BE FINISHED WITH YOUR STUDYING. You'll finally be ready to break out of your shell, and soar to the farthest reachesof your potential. And when that day comes, Cellular One will be ready for you. We're more than just an industry leader in wireless telecom: we're a force of incomparable resources (thanks toSBC Communications, our parent company) and limitless possibility — and we've got everything you need to crack the future wide open.

READY TO Spread Your Wings?

We offer excellent benefits effective from day one — including medical, dental, vision & life coverage
Tuition reimbursement (up to $10k)
Comprehensive, fully-paid training
Recognition programs
Sales incentive bonuses
Complimentary cell phones
Growth opportunities of a Fortune 100 employer

Come and see us on campus February 16th.
Drop off a resume and enter to win a FREE cellular phone!!

CELLULARONE®

Prepare to take flight by sending your resume to:
Human Resources, Cellular One, 100 Lawder Brook Drive, Westwood, MA 02090; FAX: (617) 462-5072. Diversity is only ONE way we stand apart: EOE/M/F/D/V.

opportunities by the dozen
@ www.boston.cellone.com

Morphine fades into Night

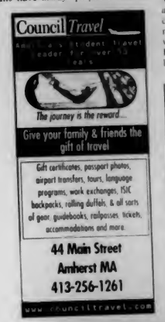
Mark Sandman's memory haunts disc

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Morphine
The Night
DreamWorks Records

Listening to this album is, understandably, not the easiest thing for any longtime fan of Morphine, but not because of bad music – far from it – the music is some of the band's finest work ever. The fact that singer, two string slide bassist and irreplaceable backbone Mark Sandman died suddenly of a heart attack mere weeks after its completion, however, does add an inescapable flavor of sadness to the record. The ghost of this musical visionary hangs over every sultry note, every dark texture: you can almost feel him in the room as you listen, smoking and whispering his lyrics into your ear.



Morphine has traditionally been a three-piece band, bass, drums and saxophone, and although guest musicians have always played a role on their albums, The Night embraces guest musicians (and additional musical roles for the three core members) as a means of drastically evolving Morphine's sound. The first track, appropriately titled "The Night," structures itself around a piano and a soft but persistent drum beat; the signature sound of Sandman's slide bass doesn't enter the song until the second chorus.

The second track, "So Many Ways," opens with a hissing, difficult to discern but distinctly Morphine-ish sound, something like an electric guitar combined with crashing ocean waves, and the song makes heavy use of organs and guest vocalists Linda Viens and Carolyn Kaylor. An acoustic guitar emerges later in the song, further demonstrating the greater interest Sandman and company took in the textural complexity on this album.

This is still, however, a Morphine album, and the band doesn't stray too far from its stylistic roots, a "low rock" sound that conjures up images of smoky, low-lit bars and late-night strolls down city streets. This is anti-pop in its most honest form, dark moods emerging from the back portions of your mind, slippery, hazy music combined with Sandman's wonderful storytelling. Other highlights include "Rope on Fire," a Middle Eastern sounding song driven by an acoustic guitar riff and intertwining saxes and horns, and "I'm yours, You're Mine," a more up-tempo (relatively speaking) song with a deliciously dire romantic theme, held together by a bassy saxophone hook and some of the oddest bass playing you're likely to hear.

The Night may well be Morphine's finest album. It is certainly its most mature, ambitious effort to date, and a wonderful entry point for people interested in experiencing one of the greatest contributions to the modern Boston music scene. A-

University Directories
Sales & Marketing Internships

The nation's largest publisher of college and university campus telephone directories is offering paid full time summer sales and marketing internships. Tremendous practical business experience and resume booster. Position begins in May with a week long, expense paid program in Chapel Hill, NC. Interns market official directories locally, selling advertising space to area businesses in specific college markets. Earnings average $3000-4000 for the 10 week program. All majors welcome!

We will be attending the University of Massachusetts Job Fair on February 16 and interviewing on February 17. Be sure to stop by our display table. Call 1-800-743-5556 ext. 147 or visit our website at www.universitydirectories.com for more information and to apply.

University Directories
PO Box 9630 • Chapel Hill, NC 27515
(800) 743-5556 • Fax (919) 968-8513
www.universitydirectories.com

The University of Massachusetts'
Something Every Friday
presents

This award-winning performer has appeared in comedy clubs on the East and West Coast. In her adult style, she tackles issues about male/female relationships that others would consider taboo.

The film "Bone Collector" will be shown following the performance. "Bone Collector" will also be shown on Monday, February 21st at 8pm, in the Student Union Ballroom.

Comedienne "Leslie"
Bluewall Cafe
Friday, February 18, 2000, 8pm, FREE
Visit us on the Web:
http://www.umass.edu/events/calender.htm
This program is made possible by a grant from the Campus Activities Cluster, Auxiliary Services Department and the vice chancellor for Student Affairs.

Are you a morning person?

Would you like to be able to work each morning before classes start?

Then delivering Collegian papers is the job for YOU!

Come down to Rm 113 in the Campus Center to fill out an application.

Contact Christine Carroll at 545-3500 or e-mail

■ Oscar

continued from page 6

COURTESY MIRAMAX.COM

Michael Clarke Duncan's soft side and earnestness earned him a Best Supporting Actor nomination for The Green Mile.

Richard Farnsworth
Sean Penn
Denzel Washington

Adam: Neither Dave or I have seen The Straight Story or Sweet and Lowdown, so our apologies to Sean Penn and Richard Farnsworth.

Dave: Now that that's off our chests, I have to give a shout out to my exact opposite, Jim Carrey, for his terrific, intricate portrayal of Andy Kaufman in Man on the Moon. I don't know why the Academy doesn't want to recognize this man's talent instead of that he didn't get nominated for his role in The Truman Show, for which he won a Golden Globe), but he deserved to be on this list. That performance was the definition of excellent acting.

Adam: A lot of people think Carrey was robbed (personally I thought his Truman Burbank was more endearing than Andy Kaufmann), but I thought it was the directing that was the best part of Man on the Moon. Tobey Maguire (Cider House Rules) was perfectly cast and did a great job as Homer Wells. Too bad, the Academy doesn't like to recognize young actors. Matt Damon was my pick here though. I thought he was absolutely mesmerizing in his role, which was admittedly a difficult one. In my opinion, he gave Ripley too many subtle layers to be ignored.

Dave: In my opinion, his character was flat, emotionless and severely lacking in motivation. For my pick, I have to go with Kevin Spacey in American Beauty. The combination of wit and emotional honesty he (and likewise all of the cast) displayed is to thank for the movie's appeal.

Adam: Mark my words, this is the one category American Beauty will not win. Russell Crowe wins this hands down for a brutal portrayal of a demoralized whistle-blower destroyed by his own testimony.

Actor in a Supporting Role
Michael Caine
Tom Cruise
Michael Clarke Duncan
Jude Law
Haley Joel Osment

Dave: For this category, I have to go with Michael Clarke Duncan in The Green Mile. I simply cannot think of any other actor who could have done what he did, nor a single flaw with his performance. He was endearing and completely convincing.

Adam: Likewise, Haley Joel Osment did the same in The Sixth Sense. I think he's the sentimental favorite also. How good was he?

Dave: Pretty damn good.

Adam: Exactly. A young actor with so much poise and subtlety, how embarrassed is George Lucas after casting Jake Lloyd?

Actress in a Leading Role
Annette Bening
Janet McTeer
Julianne Moore
Meryl Streep
Hilary Swank

Adam: A lot of independent films here, films that don't come to the Amherst area too often. Sorry, Tumbleweeds, The End of the Affair, Music of the Heart and Boys Don't Cry, but we haven't seen you. Hilary Swank seems to be the media's pick. Want to say something about Annette Bening?

Dave: She was good, although I don't know if her performance in American Beauty was Oscar-worthy.

Adam: Any thoughts on Nicole Kidman being snubbed for Eyes Wide Shut?

Dave: She was snubbed? I think Eyes Wide Shut shined in the area of direction and cinematography, but I

Turn to OSCAR, page 9

COURTESY FRANK CONNOR

Russel Crowe stunned audiences and critics alike, earning him a Best Actor nomination for The Insider, also up for Best Picture.

Great Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1. Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Service at UHS.
2. A great place to get contacts lenses.
3. Convenient hours and location.
4. FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames.
5. Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass.

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
University Health Services
For appointments or questions, Call 577-5244

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
- Student Discounts
- Professional Bartending Training
- Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
- Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
- National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
- Great Part-time or Summer Job

Class Begins: Friday Feb 25 at 6:00pm, Valentine Hall, Amherst College

Act Now, Space is Limited!

1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

BUCCI HAIRCUTS always $10. 25 n. pleasant st. amherst 256 0733 145 main st. northampton 586 6155

Can you talk the tech?

At RCN, we've become a telecommunications powerhouse through the exceptional customer service we provide. And there's no end in sight to our growth. In fact, we're opening a new 24 hour state-of-the-art call center in Springfield, MA and are currently seeking additional agents to provide superior technical support to our Internet subscribers.

TECHNICAL SUPPORT AGENTS ALL SHIFTS

Using your highly polished customer service and problem solving skills, you will work via the telephone to interpret, understand and resolve customer issues. Your background must include a technical knowledge of PC and Mac configurations to the Internet a working knowledge of DOS, Windows 3.1, Windows 95/98 and Mac Operating Systems as well as a demonstrated familiarity with Internet software. Previous support experience is a plus.

These exciting positions offer a competitive pay rate, excellent benefits, paid training, and growth opportunities all in a business casual environment. Please forward your resume to: Human Resources, JavaNet, 1 Federal St, Springfield, MA 01105. Fax: (413) 846-6505. E-mail: dpunch@javanet.com. EOE

RCN The love wire of communications drivers

www.rcn.com

Support Your Local Hooker

Information Session
Campus Center 163
7:30 pm
Sunday February 20th

PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!

USA RUGBY

Questions? Call John @ 546-1452

www.ecs.umass.edu/rugby/umass

EXECUTIVE VALET PARKING
SERVING BRADLEY INT'L AIRPORT
1353 SOUTH ST (RT 75)
SUFFIELD CT
1800 - 218 - 1297
www.executivevalet.com/springbreak.htm

SPRING BREAK SPECIAL

$5.95 per day - $29.95 per week (PLUS TAX)

- OPEN 24 HOURS
- SECURE & INSURED
- FREE SHUTTLE BUS
- SNOW & ICE REMOVED FROM CAR
- GUARANTEED PARKING SPACES WITH THIS AD.

ACCT #8916

DIRECTIONS:
I-91 EXIT 40 (BRADLEY INT'L). 2ND EXIT (Route 75) TURN RIGHT AND GO 2.5 MILES. EXECUTIVE ON LEFT JUST PAST TY'S SUBARU.

Consultant Needed
For Demanding International Clientele.

You've seen all those ads in the Help Wanted section: "Consultants Needed." You could go into the demanding field of high finance - or you could go into a classroom full of Chinese children demanding to sing the alphabet song again.

The Central European Teaching Program (CETP) and WorldTeach, Inc., are non-profit, university-based organizations which place volunteer English teachers in developing countries. It's a great way to start a career!

Central European Teaching Program: Hungary, Lithuania, Poland, Romania
WorldTeach: China, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Honduras, Namibia

Meet your international clientele in the classroom.

Central European Teaching Program, Beloit College, 700 College Street, Beloit, WI 53511 www.beloit.edu/~cetp
dunlopa@beloit.edu
608-363-2619

WorldTeach, Center for International Development, Harvard University, 79 John F. Kennedy Street, Cambridge, MA 02138
800-4-TEACH-0
www.worldteach.org

Visit
WWW.ANGIEAPARO.com
and listen for "Spaceship"... as h[illegible]rd on WF[illegible]
e-mail [illegible]pler @hotm[illegible]
for a free [illegible]
sa[illegible]pler!

"What a Great Experience!"

Learning the language. Meeting people. Coming face to face with history, art and architecture, culture, food and fun.

UNIVERSITY STUDIES ABROAD CONSORTIUM...
Small classes. Personal attention. Fully accredited — receive university credit. We provide great classes in intensive, language, history, anthropology, art, business, economics, political science...

University Studies Abroad Consortium
University of Nevada MS/323
Reno, Nevada 89557
(775) 784-6569
E-mail: usac@unr.edu
http://usac.unr.edu

AUSTRALIA • BASQUE COUNTRY • CHILE • CHINA • COSTA RICA • DENMARK • ENGLAND • FRANCE GERMANY • IRELAND • ISRAEL • ITALY • MALTA• NEW ZEALAND • SCOTLAND • SPAIN • THAILAND

■ Oscar

continued from page 8

COURTESY MIRAMAX.COM

The Cider House Rules crashed this year's Oscar nods with seven total, second only to American Beauty with eight.

wouldn't pick her performance out as all that remarkable.

Actress in a Supporting Role
Toni Collette
Angelina Jolie
Catherine Keener
Samantha Morton
Chloe Sevigny

Dave: Although part of me wants Catherine Keener to win, simply so Being John Malkovich gets a higher profile, I have to go with Angelina Jolie in Girl Interrupted. Dynamic and hot. Is there really any question?

Adam: Nope. Jolie was electrifying. She shows tremendous spunk and energy in this role and I think she runs away with the award.

Best Director
American Beauty
Being John Malkovich
Cider House Rules
The Insider
The Sixth Sense

Adam: Wow! I thought American Beauty was a tremendously directed film. Some of the scenes were absolutely breathtaking and each was well framed within the film. However, The Sixth Sense could have a chance to surprise here.

Dave: Agreed. Between The Sixth Sense, American Beauty and Being John Malkovich, it really doesn't matter who takes home the Oscar. They're all wonderful films. If I were a betting man, though, I'd go with American Beauty, this is definitely its strongest category.

Adam: Probably true. They might feel inclined to recognize Spike Jonze (Malkovich) though, since they seem disinclined to recognize the film elsewhere.

Best Adapted Screenplay
The Cider House Rules
Election
The Green Mile
The Insider
The Talented Mr. Ripley

Dave: Call me crazy, but I'm going with Election on this one. It was witty, intelligent and seamlessly blended the stories of a good many characters, and those are all signs of solid writing. The Green Mile has a strong presence, too, though.

Adam: I was excited just to see Election on the list. This is a tough category and the Academy might try to reward The Insider or The Cider House Rules because they were both such good films, and might be steam-rolled by the American Beauty train.

Best Original Screenplay
American Beauty
Being John Malkovich
Magnolia
The Sixth Sense
Topsy-Turvy

Adam: Magnolia was atrocious. Its presence on this list is disgraceful. Talk about an overblown movie.

Dave: Yeah! Magnolia and The Talented Mr. Ripley should be crumpled up and flushed down the toilet.

Adam: Okay, are we going to have to fight? Seriously though, I'd have to go with American Beauty's insightful vision of suburbia, its sardonic wit, and its tender overriding themes. It was a great story.

Dave: If Being John Malkovich doesn't win, I'm moving to Canada. It's simply the most original, refreshing movie to come along in years, and a testament to the fact that true artistry hasn't been completely erased from Hollywood. It was intelligent, engaging and hilarious, beginning to end.

COURTESY DREAMWORKS.COM

Sam Mendes (left), seen here with Kevin Spacey and Annette Bening, helmed last year's most heralded picture, American Beauty.

■ freshman

continued from page 12

record-setting season.

"He's really unbelievable," Russ said of his estimable teammate. "I think he's an ideal for the other athletes because he practices so hard and he has a very good attitude in competition."

Russ may admire the competitive spirit of his teammates, but he also serves as a role model for others. While Russ has become notorious for his lackluster performances in practice, he thrives off the thrill of face-to-face competition. The pure exhilaration Russ derives from clashing with tough opponents causes the freshman to flourish under high-pressure situations.

For a guy who has been in America for only six months, Russ has adjusted quickly. For most exchange students, simply adapting to the culture of a foreign country can be an accomplishment in itself. Luckily for UMass, the language of athletic competition is universal. No cultural barrier can suppress the competitive drive, raw talent and inherent finesse displayed by Stefan Russ when he steps onto a track.

■ NHL

continued from page 12

should the two come up against each other in the postseason. Dallas isn't really looking to add anybody as much as it is trying to keep everybody it already has.

The sinking Vancouver Canucks may dish captain Mark Messier to Toronto, who'll be looking to add some playoff grit. There isn't much point in Messier staying with the Canucks, and the Leafs have plenty of young talent to offer in return.

Meanwhile, the Colorado Avalanche are just not performing up to par. Injuries to Joe Sakic and Peter Forsberg have made for a tough season, and even with a healthy lineup the Avalanche have lost key conference games to Detroit and St. Louis. Colorado looks like it could easily be first round bait for the San Jose Sharks, who love to pull off upsets of more talented teams in the playoffs. should the Sharks make the playoffs themselves.

Congratulations to Ray Bourque on his 1,500th career point, hope coach Pat Burns is around to see 1,501.

Alexander Wood is a Collegian columnist.

■ tennis

continued from page 12

regroup from the Yale defeat before jumping into the jaws of the Tigers. Princeton looked to run its unbeaten streak on the 1999-2000 season to 5-0, and just going early behind some jaw-dropping tennis from No. 1 singles standout Kavitha Krishnamurthy.

The freshman phenom from Ontario hammered foe Christine Deo 6-0, 6-1 win over Geronimo, proving rather convincingly that she is worthy of her top 25 national singles ranking.

"Ella didn't necessarily play poorly against Princeton," Dixon said. "Their No. 1 is the best player I've seen at the collegiate level since I've been at UMass. Ella struggled, but no answer for this kid."

UMass once again got its best tennis of the afternoon from the No. 2 singles spot, where Helena came up big against Tigre Garbor Latay before bowing out 6-3, 7-5. Dixon gave her sophomore star her stamp of approval as the team's most dynamic performer over the course of the two months.

"Helena ended up being the real surprise of the weekend," Dixon said. "She had her chances against Princeton, she was ahead, just like against Yale, but she had trouble putting [Latay] away."

No. 5 singles turned into another tough loss for Hamilton, who left to Tiger Priya Bhupathi in straight sets 6-3, 6-1. Stammen's youth may have gotten the better of her at No. 4 singles, where the South Africa native raised in the Pittsburgh Kelsi Watson 6-1, 6-1. According to Dixon, Stammen may have been her own worst enemy in her losses to Watson.

"I think Kelsi was a little too hard on herself in that one," Dixon said. "When you play a team that's that much better than you are, you have to have a plan B. Kelsi didn't know how to react when things weren't going her way."

Lebowitz and Ebert fought hard at No. 3 and No. 6 singles, but couldn't overcome Tigers Irina Salzman and Cindy Hah.

No. 1 doubles unfolded in a dog fight between the Tiger tandem of Krishnamurthy and Latay and the UMass duo of Gerjuoy and Hamilton. Princeton's best had the goods in that matchup, triumphing in a score of 8-5. Ebert and Lebowitz looked for a late redemption at No. 2 doubles, but found only an 8-2 defeat courtesy of Tigers Watson and Bhupathi. Horak and Stamnen closed out the weekend's action by being shut out 8-0, by Princeton's Hall-Salzman pairing.

Despite UMass somewhat disappointing numbers on the weekend, coach Dixon viewed the experience as a measuring stick against which to measure her team's true potential.

"Of course we'd like to compete against the elite teams, like the Ivy League teams," Dixon said. "But we've really got to concentrate on being the best of the rest. At the end of the Princeton match, I think the team finally understood the difference between being a good tennis player and just a good striker of the ball. And that in itself is valuable."

Dixon's squad hits the courts again on Friday when it hosts Army at 3:30 p.m.

There will be a newsroom meeting at 4:00pm on Monday. Be at the meeting or you will be docked an hour of pay. Every associate, editor, photographer, writer, night and copy staffer needs to be at this meeting.

Log on.

©2000 CollegeClub.com

CollegeClub.com it's all U.™

No porcupines, living, dead or otherwise, were harmed in the creation of this advertisement.

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

ATTENTION SOCCER PLAYERS. WINTER INDOOR LEAGUES FORMING NOW. Men's competitive Tuesday Night, women's competitive Thursday night, co-rec Friday night. Accepting individuals or full teams. Eight week season and playoffs. Three miles from campus, on bus route. Call Starker 397-9716 starker@javanet.com Breakaway Sports 549-3638.

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

AUTO FOR SALE

VW Jetta 1988 146K, 5speed manual, power window/seat, alloy wheels, great tires. $1950.00. Call 549-4818.

'87 Honda Accord. Grey 4dr. sdn. A/C, radio cassette, fog lights, power windows/locks. Good condition. $1500.00. 545-2451, ask for Van Daisen.

'89 Ford Escort. 2dr hatchback, one owner, 5 spd. Blue-well maintained: New Clutch, brakes and tires. 148k, a lot of life left. $1800.00. 413-323-9407.

'94 Nissan Maxima. Dark green, good condition. $6000.00. Call 253-6480.

COMPUTERS

Cannon BJC 4300 color bubble ink jet printer. Creative Cannon software included. laydefayre@aol.com $100.00.

IBM ThinkPad Pent II 366 DXD Ether net. $1600. (413)546-0233 Dan.

604/120 Desk top powermac clone 17" monitor 28.8 modem software incl. Internet ready $1200.00. Also available. Lazer printer $200. Both $1300.oo 546-4517 or rosenleaf@aya.yale.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Prestigious Northeastern Pennsylvania camp Trails End Camp-Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts & crafts (woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film), waterfront (waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TOP SALARIES and BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

EMPLOYMENT

PCA's needed for various duties, various hours am and pm. good pay rate. On bus route. call for more information. (413)323-9633 Martina.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Open-minded amateur photographer position available. No experience needed. Equipment provided. Call for more details. 584-4665.

Pt/Time janitorial. Hadley, MA. Mon, Tue, Thurs, Fri and Sat 7-10am. 413-748-0028.

$Great Opportunity$. Marketing company seeks reliable and money motivated student for credit card promo's on-campus. Excellent commission. Flexible hours. 1-800-592-2121 ext. 300.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

EMPLOYMENT

Work for exciting college focused internet company at your school. Looking for individual with strong leadership, entrepreneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay, and options! Contact info at uconnections.com

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr; $8. ph. 549-8843.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity-Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER. A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE

I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

INSTRUCTION

Private boxing lessons with retired pro G. Djata Bumpus in Amherst. Call (413)256-0364.

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

LOST & FOUND

Found: Watch. Lot 40, Feb. 7th. Call 5-9586.

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do something different. Pi Lambda Phi Fraternity. Call 549-4411. www.pilambdaphi.homepage.com

Phi Sigma Pi National Honor Fraternity is looking for new members. If you have between 12 and 90 credits and a 3.0 GPA come learn more about us at an info nigth 2/15 and 2/16 at 7pm in Campus Center room 904-08. Questions? email psp@stuaf.umass.edu

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in beautiful 5 bdroom house. 10 minutes from Amherst Center. Available NOW. $300/mo. 256-2384.

ROOM FOR RENT

Furnished room with free cable. Private entrance and kitchen facilities. 4 miles from UMass. Not on bus line. $295/mo. Utilities included. 253-3670.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for roommates with references you can trust? Your friends and your friend's friends might know someone and sixdegrees can help you meet them. www.sixdegrees.com

SERVICES

Have you been ripped offby a retailer? Contact the Student Legal services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

Women volunteers needed for research exploring high school sex education. 18-28 yrs. old. Participate 30 min. interview. Women of diverse backgrounds encouraged. Kim 587-0273 or kcondon@javanet.com

Actress for short film to be shot locally during February. Heavy emotion needed. No experience needed. Willing to work around class schedule. Call 222-4255 for more info.

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Five College Community Calendar

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 16

Auditions – The UMass Ballroom Dance Team is holding auditions in Totman 101 at 7 p.m. All are welcome.

Auditions – Auditions are being held from 7-9 p.m. for a new UCTV 19 independent drama production. All are welcome, and no preparation is necessary. Audition at the studio located behind the Hatch in the Student Union. Call 546-3726 for more information.

Meeting – The Hellenic Student Association will hold its first meeting in room 805/809 of the Campus Center. All Greeks (this does not include frats!) are welcome! Call Christo at 546-4300 for more information.

THURSDAY, FEB. 17

Workshop – There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 5 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services. Men and women are welcome. Call Day at 577-5188 for more details.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange them. E mail Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac18@aol.com or Caleb at Mikemac18@aol.com.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Support – A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone pre-screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5316 if interested.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Send us your FYI Announcements

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER

Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

C - Campus — WEDNESDAY EVENING — FEBRUARY 16, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	16	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ※		Championship Ballroom Dancing (In Stereo) ※		James Cagney: City Country		Sidney Poitier-Light		City Life: N.Y.
WFSB	3	3	News ※	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	City of Angels "Unhand Me" ※		"Sally Hemings: An American Scandal" (2000, Drama) Sam Neill.		News ※		Late Show ※
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	City of Angels "Unhand Me" ※		Drew Carey ※ (Spin City ※		20/20 ※	News ※	Nightline ※
WCVB	5	5	News ※	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ※	Two Guys-Girl Norm ※		Roseanne "Independence Day" ※		News ※	Friends ※	Nenny ※
WLVI	56		Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends ※	Nanny ※	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) ※		West Wing (In Stereo) ※		Law & Order "Panic" (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ※	Twenty One (In Stereo) ※		Star Trek: Voyager "Collective		News	Real TV ※	Caroline
WTXX		4	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Real TV ※		7 Days (In Stereo) ※		Star Trek: Voyager "Collective		News	Law & Order "Panic" (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WVIT		30	News	NBC News	Extra ※	Ent. Tonight	Twenty One (In Stereo) ※		West Wing (In Stereo) ※		Law & Order "Panic" (In Stereo)	News	Friends ※	Frasier ※
WTIC	61	11	Simpsons ※	Frasier ※	Seinfeld ※	Friends ※	Beverly Hills, 90210 (In Stereo)		JonBenet Ramsey Story			News ※	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	22	News ※	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ※	Twenty One (In Stereo) ※		West Wing (In Stereo) ※		Law & Order "Panic" (In Stereo)	News ※	Late Show ※
WGBY	57	8	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ※		Championship Ballroom Dancing (In Stereo) ※		Great Performances: Ada's Brothers and Sisters			Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ※
WGGB	40	28	News ※	ABC News	Seinfeld ※	Frasier ※	Two Guys-Girl Norm ※		Drew Carey ※ (Spin City ※		20/20 ※	News ※	Nightline ※
WSBK	38		Judge Judy ※	Judge Judy ※	Seinfeld ※		NHL Hockey: Boston Bruins at Toronto Maple Leafs (Live)		WCW Thunder			Star Trek: Voyager "Collective	Judge Mathis
WTBS	49		Roseanne ※	Roseanne ※	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		Investigative Reports ※		American Justice (R) ※		Ripley's Believe It or Not! (R)
A&E	51		L.A. Law		Law & Order "Self-Defense" ※		Biography: Sidney Poitier		Larry King Live ※		Newsstand ※	Sports	Law & Order "Aftershock" ※
CNN	43	23	Worldview ※	Moneyline News	Crossfire ※		World Today ※				South Park ※	Man Show ※	Daily Show	Stein's Money
COM	53	36	Saturday Night Live ※		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	※ "Dirty Rotten Scoundrels" (1988, Comedy) Steve Martin,				Three Minutes to Impact		On the Inside: Beauty Pageant
DISC	52		Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Birds		On the Inside: Beauty Pageant		Three Minutes to Impact				Sportscenter ※
ESPN	45		Sportscenter		College Basketball: Georgia Tech at Maryland, (Live)				College Basketball: Florida State at Duke, (Live)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
LIFE	50		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Animals Portrait		Chicago Hope "Memento Mori		"Full Circle" (1998, Drama) Teri Polo, Corbin Bernsen,				Undressed	Loveline
MTV	39		MTV Jams	Beat Suits	Say What Kirks	TRL Wanna	TRL (R) (In Stereo)		Road Rules	Road Rules	True Life	Diary	Jeffersons ※	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
NICK	46		All That	Cdddog	Hey Arnold! ※	Rugrats ※	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons ※	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI	59		Sliders "Prophets and Loss" ※		Crypt Tales	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Poltergeist: The Legacy
TLC	48	26	Home Again	Home Again	How'd They Do That?		Extreme Machines (R)		World's Most Powerful		Pyrotechniques		Extreme Machines (R)
TNT	44		In the Heat of the Night ※		ER "A Bloody Mess" (In Stereo)		※ "Sleep" (1997, Fantasy) Shaquille O'Neal, Annabeth Gish,				Whatever Happened		※ "Sleep" (1997)
USA	42		Baywatch ※		JAG "Chains of Command" ※		Walker, Texas Ranger ※		※ "Mesmerized" (1997, Suspense) Patrick Stewart, ※				Walker, Texas Ranger "Rodeo"
HBO	37		※ "The Karate Kid Part III" (1989, Drama) Pasqh Macchio, PG				Reel Sports (R)		Sopranos "Big Girls Don't Cry"		Dr. Straight Life" (In Stereo) ※		※ "Titanic" (1997) PG-13
MAX	47		※ "Clueless" (1995, Comedy) Alicia Silverstone. PG-13 ※				I Still Know What You Did Last Summer" (1998)		※ "Sunset Heart" (1991, Drama) Michael Pare. (In Stereo) ※				Hot Line
SHOW	55		(5:00)		※ "Haunted Honeymoon" (1986) Gene Wilder,		※ "Palmetto" (1998, Suspense) Woody Harrelson, ※						It's Black Entertainment (R)

HSCN 4 Hoomly Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	21	Gavel to Gavel
3	CBS/3 Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield	25	CNN Fn
7	HSCN Movie Ch	26	CNN Si
8	UPN/20 Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel	28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain	29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24 Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WOOH & HSCN	32	Cartoon Network
14	International	33	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV	34	C-Span
16	WB/New Haven	35	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance	36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel	37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19	38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

Nona By Anne Faktorovich

Over the Hedge By Fry and Lewis

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Get Fuzzy By Dorby Conley

Spoot By Mike Banchick

Robotman By Jim Meddick

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may not succeed today the first time you try something new, but repeated attempts will see you coming closer to the mark. Be patient!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may feel rather distant today, but the truth is that you haven't been making the same effort to get in touch that you had in the past.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Now is the time for you to try to get ahead – at least on paper. Planning at this time can serve you unusually well in the days to come.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Someone may criticize you for trying to turn everything into a game, but that is precisely the attitude that can pay off for you today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Maintain a solid, confident approach today. There's no need to change your style simply because you're facing new obstacles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Someone is likely to contact you about a coming project, but you won't want to say "yes" or "no" without considering all your coming options.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – A personal sacrifice of sorts can, ultimately, pay off quite handsomely for you and others as long as you don't give up too much on any one thing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Take care that you don't get yourself involved in something that will drain you of all your resources. You need something in reserve right now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You can keep a crisis at bay today simply by talking openly with family members about something you've been keeping hidden for some time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – The stars are likely to ask more of you today in the way of honesty and self-awareness than you are used to, but trust is the key, as always.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You don't want to take chances today where the safety of others is involved. Be sure to take all necessary precautions and trust your instincts.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You can sample something new today without making a firm commitment, but you must make sure, first, that you're not hurting anyone else.

Quote of the Day

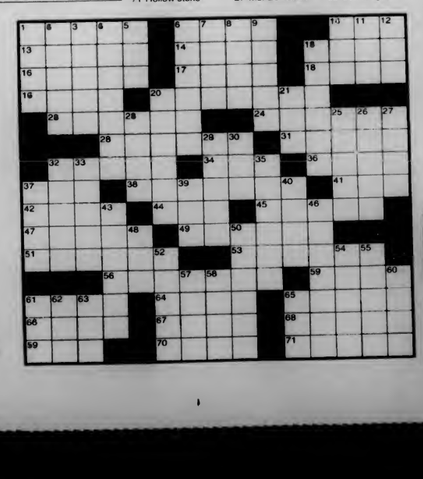
"News is to be produced even though nothing much has happened."

–Warren Breed

ACROSS

1 Ice hut
6 Flee
10 Cleaning tool
13 Plants
14 Actress Adams
15 Pit
16 Golfers' cries
17 Learning
18 Washstand item
19 Yin and —
20 Museum official
22 Brewing need
24 Kind
28 — public
31 Pavarotti, e.g.
32 Some animals jump through them
34 "Auction" end
36 Dog-paddled
37 Furry foot
38 Ice cream treats
41 "Wheel of Fortune" buy
42 Cousteau's land masses
44 Square up
45 Stage prompters
47 Hits on the head
49 Having a sickly appearance
51 Valuable things
53 Astrologer's topic
56 Storm
59 Furnace's need
61 Writer Waugh
64 Hearty laugh
65 Loose blouse
66 Clobber
67 Feed the kitty
68 Colder
69 Goddess of the dawn
70 Hardy heroine
71 Hollow stone

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



2-15-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN

1 Up in the air
2 Enjoy one's revenge
3 Actor Greene
4 Pizza herb
5 W. Hemisphere alliance
6 Type of caviar
7 Scent
8 Italian money
9 Fangs
10 Tend the lawn
11 Bullring shout
12 Each
15 Mythical messenger
20 McDonalds' freebie
21 Three strikes
23 Hits
25 Mr. Sadat
26 They're proper and common
27 Ms. Bombeck
29 Color anew
30 Team cheer
32 Angels' hats?
33 Track athlete Jesse —
35 Suppose
37 Type size
39 Velvety surface
40 Took to court
43 Drawing
46 Structure
48 Pig's abode
50 Islands off Portugal
52 Herring
54 Sound
55 Grained
57 Whet
58 Horses' fodder
60 Stringed instrument
61 Honest —
62 Asian native
63 Double curve
65 Sovet fighter

SORRY NO DC MENU TODAY

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Kathleen Rolfs
Photo Technician — Teresa Canino-Rivera
Copy Editor — Brett Mauser
Production Supervisor — Joylyn Lombard
Production Staff — Roberto Delgado, Melanie Thomas

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

Page 12 The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Wednesday, February 16, 2000

Minutemen in search of divine answer

Mack continues to shatter records as he plays catalyst for UMass

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

Let it begin with Fordham.

The Massachusetts men's basketball team is in search of a repeat performance when it butts heads with the Rams tonight at Rose Hill in the Bronx at 7 p.m.

The Minutemen are tied with St. Bonaventure for second place in the Atlantic 10 East with a 12-11 overall record while standing still at 6-4 in conference play. Fordham is on the verge of .500 with an 11-12 showing despite being mired in fifth place in the A-10 East at 4-7. All six remaining regular games are against A-10 teams for Massachusetts.

UMass holds a convincing heavy hand in the series with a 14-6 advantage, capturing the last 10 of 11 meetings. The single loss happened last season at the William D. Mullins center when the Minutemen were routed 66-60, which marked the lowest point total they had ever scored against the Rams.

Kitwana Rhymer will be on the prowl tonight in the Bronx, N.Y., when the Minutemen meet the Rams at 7 p.m.

On Jan. 8, UMass cut off the Ram's feeding supply by holding them to just 52 points for an 82-52 win. UMass led 31-21 at the half behind an 18-6 outburst. Monty Mack and Chris Kirkland combined for 43 points as freshman Micah Brand had has was on the boards with a team-high seven. Duke Freeman-McKamey came off the bench for Fordham to submit a double-double with 10 points and 10 rebounds and teammate Bevon Robin chipped in 13 points in the losing effort.

The victory was the first of its kind in conference for the Minutemen at the time, as they snapped a three-game losing streak that began at the Puerto Rico Holiday Classic. In the last of three games on the island, Boston College avenged their own 74-67 loss to Massachusetts on Dec. 4 with a crushing 83-59 statement.

The Minutemen dropped their first A-10 road game on Saturday to Xavier, 87-77. It was their third loss in four games after hosting two unruly guests in Temple (75-48) and Texas (68-57). Prior to the loss, they were a perfect 3-0 away from the Mullins Center. Chris Kirkland was a warrior on the floor, punching in 37 minutes for 18 points. Mack, who is second in the A-10 and 35th in the nation in scoring with 19.7 points per game, served up a season-high 32 points and nailed six of 12 three-point attempts to bump up to eighth place on the school's all-time scoring chart with 1,439 points.

MEN'S B-BALL
UMASS (12-11) @ FORDHAM (11-12)
TONIGHT, 7 P.M.
Overall Series: UMass, 14-6
QUICK NOTES

The senior guard's career high was 34 over the College of Charleston last season when he hit 9-of-17 from the floor. Mack has been the catalyst for UMass the last two seasons. In the past 16 games, the So. Boston native has been tops in scoring for his team and has reached 20 points 10 times during the current streak.

The Rams last played on Sunday when they let go of a close one to St. Joseph's, 93-86. It was their second loss to the Hawks this season after collapsing 82-74 on Jan. 5. Shooting just 29 percent from the floor in the first half, Fordham recovered by going 20-38 in the second half. Jason Harris infused the Rams with a team-high 28 points from off the bench. Robin was close behind with 27 points and six assists. Sunday was the Bruns squad's second loss in a row after Temple treated them to a 75-61 loss at The Forum.

Bob Hill, who has 28 years of coaching experience behind him, is in his first year at the helm of Fordham, which carried a 12-15 (5-11 A-10) record last season. Hill was the head coach of the Indiana Pacers from 1990-95 and of the San Antonio Spurs from 1994-97. Compiling a 124-58 record in his two-plus years in Texas, Hill spearheaded the Spurs to the best record in the NBA that year and in the history of the franchise during his first season to earn the Midwest Division Title. His squad was defeated in the NBA finals by the Houston Rockets.

The promising pre-season prophecies about Shannon Crooks may be slowly coming true. The UMass guard scored nine points and dished out eight assists in last Saturday's loss at Xavier.

Freshman Russ turning A-10 heads

German student a pleasant surprise for track team

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

Who would have thought that a single decision made by a high school student in Germany would reap such huge benefits for the Massachusetts men's indoor track team?

In May 1999, Coach Ken O'Brien was basking in the glory of his squad's first place finish at the New England Outdoor Championships. Yet a nagging concern lurked in the back of his mind. The team was about to be hit hard with graduation, and O'Brien would lose his top performers in 11 events. How, he fretted, would he even begin to fill the void?

Little did O'Brien know that many of his problems were being solved almost 4,000 miles away.

When Stefan Russ graduated from high school in Neuhausen, Germany, he had one goal in mind – to study abroad in America. The rest unfolded like clockwork. In September Russ was on a plane headed for New England, and only a few months after his arrival in Amherst, the exchange student wandered into walk-on track tryouts and expressed an interest in suiting up for the Maroon and White.

The rest is history.

Since his debut as a Minuteman, the lanky 6'6" freshman has stunned the Atlantic 10 with his breath-taking grace and talent, excelling in both jumping and sprinting events.

The conference has been buzzing about Russ ever since his brilliance garnered him A-10 Rookie of the Week honors for three consecutive weeks.

It was during the squad's annual clash with New Hampshire and Holy Cross that Russ established himself as one of the region's elite. During the Jan. 29 border war, Russ placed first in both the 55-meter dash and the high jump. His jump of 6-feet-7-inches was the third highest in UMass history and he was rewarded with his second Rookie of the Week award. The poise and maturity displayed by a novice to collegiate competition – and a newcomer to the country, no less – had eyebrows rising. This kid was no fluke.

"His work ethic is outstanding and his enjoyment of the sport is tremendous," O'Brien said, listing the main attributes Russ brings to the team. "He's a very fluid, graceful, technically sound athlete. He picks things up very quickly because of his natural athletic ability. He's just a naturally smooth athlete."

While his lofty frame makes Russ a natural high jumper, his road to success as a speedy sprinter was a rocky one. The height-blessed athlete recalls the frustration he endured as the result of a growth spurt at age 15.

"I got very slow and I lost every race," Russ explained. "It took me a long time to figure out how to run with long legs. Right now, I don't think it's a disadvantage to be tall. Of course, I don't have a figure like a normal sprinter, but it helps me a lot to make big strides."

How about the end result of his years of toil? Russ is a uniquely diverse athlete who is able to succeed because of his height and in spite of it. He owns this season's second-fastest time in the 55-yard dash and is the team leader in the 200-yard.

Russ, who has been participating in track since he was 11-years-old, has made a seamless transition from German to American competition. One of the few idiosyncrasies he has stumbled upon is America's measurement system.

"The strangest thing here is just that you measure everything in feet and inches," Russ laughed. "In Germany, we measure everything in meters, so that was a little bit surprising at the beginning."

Russ immediately embraced another aspect American competition that is rare in Germany. "We don't have so many team meets in Germany," Russ commented. "Actually, I like the team meets here. You're all competing as a team and scoring for the team, you're not only competing on your own."

His appreciation of the team dynamic is apparent when Russ speaks of the way he is positively influenced by his teammates, in particular Vic Morency, the senior thrower who is enjoying his own

Turn to FRESHMAN page 9

Women's tennis wrapped up in Ivy

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

For years, the Ivy League has maintained an image as a hotbed of the nation's mightiest tennis weekend, at least two of the league's eight schools may officially begin boasting about their tennis aptitude as well.

Yale and Princeton played cruel hosts to the Massachusetts women's tennis team this weekend, sending the Maroon and White racketeers home on the short end of consecutive sweeps. The Minutewomen (3-7) opened their spring dual-match slate in New Haven with a 9-0 defeat at the hands of the Bulldogs, then trekking to Princeton only to bow 8-0 to the Tigers.

"These are the two best teams that we play during the season," said UMass coach Judy Dixon. "I see this as an opportunity for us. Each time we play them, we try to inch a little closer."

The Minutewomen's troubles on the weekend began at the No. 1 singles spot, where usually steadfast Ola Gerasimova encountered stiff competition from Yale's Cynthia Obsitnik. A second-team All-Ivy League selection last year as a sophomore, Obsitnik dispatched the Maroon and White's Russian ace with frightening efficiency, winning 6-1, 6-0.

"Ola really wasn't on her game against Yale," Dixon said. "She seemed off-balance and a little out of synch."

UMass finally got into gear at the No. 2 singles spot, where sophomore Golden State native Helena Horak pushed Yale's Andrea Goldberg to the limit before succumbing to the New Mexico original, 7-5, 6-4. The story at No. 3 singles was disturbingly similar to the No. 1 spot, as Yale's Elizabeth Kaufman spotted UMass' Annie Hamilton only two games in besting her 6-1, 6-1.

Yale coach Meghan McMahon should have felt comfortable holding the Bulldogs' leash at that point, but the sixth-year skipper actually had something to worry about at No. 4 singles. That spot saw the return of senior captain Jacklyn Fu, in the final stages of battling back from a shoulder injury. But Fu quickly allayed any fears her coach may have had, sending Minutewoman Katie Stammen packing, 6-2, 6-2.

Despite the outcome of the Fu/Stammen showdown, Dixon liked what she saw from her first-year No. 4 against such a seasoned foe.

"Katie has really emerged as a solid No. 4," Dixon said. "I don't think she even thinks about things like experience."

The visitors didn't fare much better in doubles action, as Obsitnik and Fu outlasted Gerasimova and Hamilton by a tally of 8-5. The No. 2 doubles match developed into a snapshot of disparity, as Yale's Ashlee Ferlito and Kirsten Gross made short work of the Maroon and White's Robyn Lebovitz and Beth Ebert, 8-0. Horak and Stammen salvaged a pair of games at No. 3 doubles, but were overmatched by Goldberg and Kaufman by a final count of 8-2.

UMass' journey to Jersey gave the team little time to Turn to TENNIS, page 9

Trade winds with big names keep the race for Cup tight

Alex Wood on the NHL

With the conclusion of the NHL's All-Star festivities, the next major event on the Lords of the Boards agenda is the March 14 trade deadline. With all the playoff races so close right now, it's really impossible to make any real predictions on who's going to finish where. Even the top teams, such as the defending champion Dallas Stars and the perennial powerhouse Detroit Red Wings, are susceptible to first round collapses. What will really determine who's hot and who's not will be who's playing (Dallas' Joe Nieuwendyk) and where (the Buffalo Sabres' Dominik Hasek).

As we look at the parity-stricken league, the only team in the Eastern Conference that looks ready for the playoffs is the New Jersey Devils. The Devils are sitting pretty with 80 points, riding a 4-0-1 streak into last night's key match-up with the Philadelphia Flyers, who have already made their big move by acquiring Keith Primeau. Personnel problems are not a problem in New Jersey, as Calder candidate Scott Gomez continues his tear through the NHL's rank and file. The Devils are still one of the best defensive teams in the league and it seems the only thing they'll have to worry about is a first round matchup with the New York Rangers. The Devils, who are frequent first-round fodders, may be in even more trouble if they have to face their opponents from across the way. The Devils have never won a playoff series against the Rangers, and while this year's team looks solid, they've looked just as solid in the past when they've choked in first and second rounds of the playoffs.

The Florida Panthers and Pavel Bure are another team that looks like they're ready for postseason play. The Panthers also have the luxury of a goaltending surplus. As Trevor Kidd is set to return from injury, Mike Vernon and Mikhail Shtalenkov are tuning up for a game of musical chairs. Florida can deal any one of those goalies and get pretty much whatever it wants. What it needs? Some depth. Past Bure, the Panthers begin to thin out a bit too much to make a serious run against their bigger Eastern Conference brethren.

The most intriguing trade possibility in the East is Hasek, who announced that he will delay his retirement at least one more year. Rookie Martin Biron has been stellar in Hasek's absence and he is cheaper, younger and injury-free compared to Hasek, who is expensive, older and just returning from a serious groin injury. With the expansion draft this summer, the Sabres are stuck in the precarious position of possibly losing either Biron or Hasek to expansion clubs, Columbus and Minnesota. Moving Hasek now would get the Sabres the best bang for their buck. Buffalo has proved what a great goalie can do for an average team in the past, let alone good teams like the Red Wings and the Flyers.

Detroit's Chris Osgood has proven to be too injury-prone and too streaky for the Red Wings' tastes, and the Wings' backup, Ken Wregget, is even more injury-prone than Osgood. Detroit has a wealth of talent that can't break the starting lineup as long as veterans like Chris Chelios, Steve Yzerman, Sergei Fedorov and Brendan Shanahan are playing. With the offense that the Wings have, it's a scary thought as to what they'd be like with the Dominator setting up shop in Hockey Town. The Sabres could easily grab some of that bottled-up young talent and maybe even some serious scoring punch (something the Sabres perennially lack) for dishing Hasek, which when combined with Biron's solid play, could make a big difference in the race with the fading Boston Bruins and the streaking Rangers.

Meanwhile, Flyers' GM Bob Clarke will forever kick himself for not pursuing goalie Curtis Joseph instead of John Vanbiesbrouck in the big free-agent market a few years back. Cujo has set up a goaltending clinic in Toronto, while the Beezer longs for the days of his cult hero status with the Florida Panthers.

Philly has continued to suffer goaltending woes since the days of Tommy Soderstrom and Ron Hextall. While Philadelphia can score and overpower an opponent, its blue line corps is suspect, and the Flyers too often go for the big hit, leaving themselves out of position and easy prey for smaller, quicker teams, which when compared to the Flyers, every team in the NHL is. If Hasek becomes available, look for Philly to push hard to make room on the bench for him, no other team in the league is under as much pressure to win the Stanley Cup as the Flyers and their captain Eric Lindros.

Another interesting trade possibility in the East is former Bruin Adam Oates. The Washington Capitals have said that they would like to keep the 37-year-old center, who has turned pupillist Chris Simon into a goal scorer on pace for 30 goals. But with goalie Olaf Kolzig's return to form, leading the Caps back into the playoff picture, Oates makes for interesting trade bait. The Rangers are one team that has expressed interest in Oates and the Pittsburgh Penguins know that Oates looks good in black and gold and even better next to Jaromir Jagr. But one team seriously looking for an assist is the Mighty Ducks of Anaheim.

The stagnant Ducks have one of the most potent 1-2 combinations in the league in forwards Paul Kariya and Teemu Selanne, but those two haven't been able to put the biscuit in the basket enough to keep the Ducks out of the Pacific Division basement. Oates definitely could be a big help to Selanne and Kariya, and it might give the Ducks enough offense and momentum to sneak into the playoffs.

Another place Oates makes sense, but it's highly doubtful he'll end up there, would be back in the Hub of Boston. With Jason Allison out and Dave Andreychuk's production falling off because of his absence, the Bruins are in desperate need of a center who can win faceoffs and feed the talented wingers Boston has in Sergei Samsonov, Anson Carter and Andreychuk.

Meanwhile in the Western Conference, the team to beat is the St. Louis Blues. Goalie Roman Turek, after a slow start, has come on strong and he showed it to the world during the All-Star game (even if he did it in a ridiculous looking All-Star jersey that has a golf collar on it). St. Louis also played games against Detroit, Colorado and Dallas, winning all three and sending a message to the big boys in the West: We're here.

But the Stars have also sent a message: We're back. Goaltender Ed Belfour and coach Ken Hitchcock have been able to lead their team back into contention, after an absurd amount of injuries wreaked havoc on the team earlier in the season. While the Devils play some of the best defense in the NHL, the Stars play it better. This team has struggled through severe injuries and has managed to allow the second fewest number of goals in the league (121). Kirk Muller has been a good acquisition for the Stars, but the best acquisitions have been the re-acquisitions of players like Mike Modano and the rest of last year's Cup crew, from injuries. A healthy Stars team will give the Blues a run for their money

Turn to NHL page 9

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 17 Thursday, February 17, 2000

Students network towards their futures

Annual CCN fair held in Campus Center

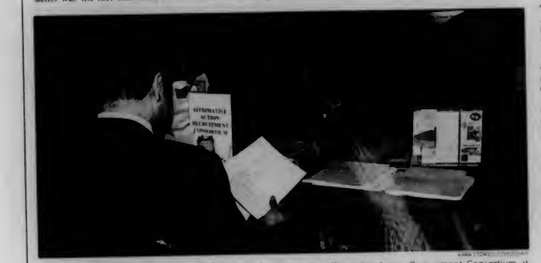
By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The Campus Career Network (CCN) held its annual Career Fair yesterday at the University of Massachusetts, in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The event, which was held from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., included representation from businesses all over the country. Unlike previous career fairs this event had twice as many representatives from nationwide businesses with nearly 20 percent of the businesses in attendance this year, never having previously recruited on the UMass campus.

Students attending the event were able to speak one-on-one with individuals from the different organizations in order to get an adequate idea of the company as a whole.

Another advantage for UMass students was the fact that many of the representatives were alumni of the University themselves, and were therefore better able to answer questions pertaining to jobs for students on campus.



According to Veseth Poy, a senior Sociology and Education Studies major, the fair was helpful in obtaining information for a possible career.

"I think that the fair is pretty good," he said. "It has a variety of companies and it is a good source for seniors, graduates, and also for undergraduates."

Some of the businesses represented at the event spanned to include American Express, Ames, Americorps, Bell Atlantic, Dataware Technologies, Footlocker, Gillette, Filenes, IBM, and many others. In addition CCN also offered students the opportunity for on-line registration. Students were able to submit their resumes on-line and then the organization would submit the resumes to all companies to which students were interested in applying. This allowed students to easily apply to many businesses and make contacts with many different corporations.

Businesses accepted applications from all students, regardless of major, and gave them adequate consideration for either jobs or internships. If the corporation did not have job openings in a particular department, they passed along the student's application onto an employer in another department that could potentially have an opening for a job.

Jem Medders, a representative from the Ames Corporation explained that the business comes to the University every year in order to recruit interested students. "We come here nearly every year, and try to attend all of the career fairs that UMass offers to students."

Sophomore Education major Janelle Butler inquires about the Affermative Action Recruitment Consortium at ALANA's career fair held in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Senior Economics major Chrissy Pitzer talks with Bob Zimman, one of the many corporate representatives at yesterday's career fair in the campus center.

ALANA hosts evening career event

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

A portion of the day-long campus-wide career fair event, sponsored by the Asian, Latino, African, Native American (ALANA) organization, was held yesterday in the Campus Center Auditorium from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m.

The event was held in conjunction with another career fair, and was set up in order to allow students the opportunity to explore the possibility of both potential careers and internships in different fields of study.

Representatives from nationally recognized businesses were on hand during the three-hour process to answer questions and to provide guidance to interested students regarding career opportunities in individual businesses. Some representatives also set up students with interviews for prospective companies from which they could obtain jobs. Students were given the opportunity to peruse the job fair and apply to many different companies in one place.

Some of the businesses that were represented at the fair included many nationally recognizable companies. In attendance at the event were companies such as Anderson Consulting, BASF, Bell Atlantic, CIGNA, May Proctor and Gamble, Raytheon, Shaws, Sherwin Williams, Sunlife of Canada, Toys R Us, and Volpe Center as well as many others.

Junior Marketing major Diane O'Toole explained that the fair helped her to make connections and potentially set up either a job or internship with a represented company.

"I went earlier looking for a marketing internship and I hit the right place," she said. "I found a really good group of companies. I hope that they call me back."

The businesses at the fair were accepting applications from students of all majors and interest backgrounds. Most businesses were looking for students that were interested in working as human resource agents, writers, sales and marketing workers, interested in working in retail, management and graphic arts.

According to Beth Hogan, a representative for Toys R Us, the business comes to the career fairs held at UMass every year. "UMass is a great school to look for potential employees," she said. "We hire nationwide for Kids R Us, Toys R Us and Babies R Us in a variety of positions."

Another event that is held in conjunction with the job fairs is a Co-Op and Internship Summer Fair, which will be held today from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. The event is open to any students that are interested in attending.

New professors join UM to focus on ancient times

By Matt Foster
Collegian Correspondent

The Classics department at UMass has welcomed two new faculty members, Professors Deborah Felton and Kenneth Kitchell, Jr. have joined the Classics staff in the teaching of ancient Greek and Roman civilizations.

Deborah Felton studied at the University of California at Los Angeles as an undergraduate before receiving her Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 1995. Felton left a tenure-track job at Southern Illinois University to teach at UMass.

She came here because she "likes New England" and UMass has a Classics program that she said is the "best in this part of the country."

Felton chose to study the Classics because it was "a combination of interests." She specializes in folklore in the literature of Greece and Rome, particularly the ghost stories of those areas. Her book, "Haunted Greece and Rome: Ghost Stories from Classical Antiquity" explores those tale-and conjures them to modern day myths.

Other than her book, Felton has written multiple essays and has been invited to study in Greece, Italy, England, and at the Center for Hellenic Studies in Washington D.C. Felton also directed a study-abroad course about the Roman presence in Britain.

Felton has instructed courses on such topics as Greek and Roman civilization, Greek and Roman art, and women in ancient times. She is currently teaching a classical mythology course, and she plans to start a course centering on magic in ancient Greece and Rome.

Felton said she would enjoy teaching a course on the Greek and Roman ghost stories in her book, but stated that next semester would be better as it is "closer to Halloween."

Kenneth Kitchell, Jr. was in his high school Latin class when he "fell in love with the language." He carried this love through his undergraduate education at the College of Holy Cross and his Ph.D. at Loyola University in Chicago.

Kitchell was the Alumni Distinguished Professor of Classics at Louisiana State University. He taught there for the past 22 years before coming to UMass.

He came to UMass for many reasons, one of them being UMass's "Master Arts in Teaching" program, a program designed to prepare future middle and high school Latin teachers, which Kitchell calls the "best in the country." Although a part of the teaching staff at LSU for 22 years, UMass is closer to his hometown of Avon, Ma.

Kitchell has won numerous teaching honors including the American Philological Association Award for Excellence in the Teaching of Classics, the Amoco Teaching Award, and the Duc Prize/Outstanding Teacher Award. However, "none (of the awards) mean as much to me as the plaque given to me by my high school Latin students," he said.

Kitchell has participated in the translation from Latin and explanation of Linnaeus' important works on reptiles.

Kitchell also spent 15 years working with Irven Resnick translating and annotating "De Animalbus" originally written by Albertus Magnus. This work was supported by NEH grants and took up two 1900 page volumes.

He is currently working on a Latin textbook, a study of the practice of whaling in medieval times, and a book of essays exploring the study of the classics in the Civil War era.

Kitchell is also the editor of "Entering the Stadium: Approaches to Ancient Athletics."

On top of his work in print, Kitchell has served as the president of the Classical Association of the Middle West and South, and as vice-president for education and the chair of the committee for the promotion of Greek for the American Philological Association.

SGA requests budget reversal, class cancelation for rally

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) passed a motion last night requesting that the University of Massachusetts administration reverse all proposed academic budget cuts and restore the consumer studies department.

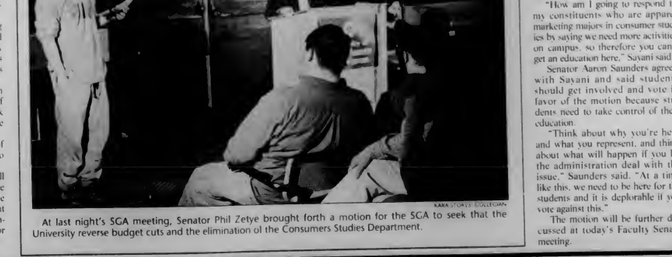
The motion, brought forth by Commuter Senator Phil Zetye, included an enactment allowing all UMass students be free of their obligations to attend classes after 11 a.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 22 for the remainder of the day so that students can be encouraged to attend a protest rally at 11 a.m. at the Whitmore Administration Building.

Zetye said that the motion is important because he feels the funding of UMass-Amherst is not a priority of the Massachusetts Legislature. According to him, the University's trend of not hiring new professors to replace retiring faculty is making it increasingly difficult for undergraduates to register for classes.

"Once you don't start re-hiring professors, that becomes another issue," Zetye said. "The academics are the reason students come to the University and there's no reason to cut them."

He said this protest would convey to the administration that students want to get involved with issues of higher education.

"The budget cuts are systematically taking the quality out of affordable public higher education," Zetye said. "This motion will get students involved in this process where otherwise they would be excluded."



However Student Trustee Seth Avakian said that there is no conceivable was the University can reverse the budget cuts. He said the Legislature, under Governor Celluci, has informed the University that they will not be receiving the funding they need beginning next year.

Zetye disagreed with Avakian by stating that the state of Massachusetts is making more than enough revenue to be able to support a higher budget.

"This is a clear statement from students saying this is a bunch of bull," Zetye said. "You can't cut the budget when the state is making an extra $e million."

However, Avakian said Zetye's figure did not account for deferred maintenance costs including maintaining building structures, allocating scholarships and upgrading Whitmore's administration system.

"Currently, UMass-Amherst has almost $400 million in deferred maintenance," Avakian said. "Chancellor [Scott] said it will cost around $1.3 billion over the next decade to bring the University to the level it should be."

At last night's SGA meeting, Senator Phil Zetye brought forth a motion for the SGA to seek that the University reverse budget cuts and the elimination of the Consumers Studies Department.

Avakian said he is also concerned that if the SGA demands a reversal of the budget cuts in education, the University will be forced to take budget cuts out of other areas of the campus such as Student Affairs. According to him, if student affairs can no longer support student organizations and activities, social life will suffer the most.

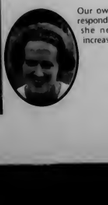
"To deny cuts, period, is not a smart move," Avakian said. "We need to be defending Student Affairs. The things people like to do at night, they will no longer be able to if Student Affairs suffers."

Avakian made the distinction by saying that there have been no budget cuts, only proposed budget cuts to prepare for hidden costs such as deferred maintenance and scholarships. As a result, he stated that students are at a more immediate risk of being affected by a cut in Student Affairs than by actual cuts being made in education.

Senator Asif Sayani agreed with Avakian by stating that Student Affairs is important; however, he said that we need to realize that education should be the foremost of our concerns.

"How am I going to respond to my constituents who are apparel marketing majors in consumer studies by saying we need more activities on campus, so therefore you can't get an education here," Sayani said.

Senator Aaron Saunders agreed with Sayani and said students should get involved and vote in favor of the motion because students need to take control of their education.

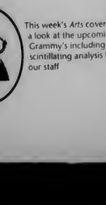


"Think about why you're here and what you represent, and think about what will happen if you let the administration deal with the issue," Saunders said. "At a time like this, we need to be here for the students and it is deplorable if you vote against this."

The motion will be further discussed at today's Faculty Senate meeting.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 29 LOW: 6	HIGH: 33 LOW: 19	HIGH: 37 LOW: 19



Stone Cold Sober

Our own Kathleen Ralls responds to the idea that she needs alcohol to increase her "stock."

ED OP PAGE 4

Grammy Come Home

This week's Arts cover takes a look at the upcoming Grammy's including some scintillating analysis from our staff

ARTS PAGE 5

King Of The Ring

UMass gymnast Jeff LaValler is the featured athlete in today's sports section. Read all about the senior Connecticut native and his fantastic accomplishments in the sport by turning to the back page.

SPORTS PAGE 14

Arts & Living 5
Comics 13
Crossword 13
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 14
Classifieds 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

JARET BARR/ COLLEGIAN

A mad race for jobs

Students flooded the lower level of the Campus Center yesterday to take part in the Career Fair.

German leader asks Israel's forgiveness

By Rebecca Trounson
Los Angeles Times

JERUSALEM - In an address as significant for the language in which it was uttered as its conciliatory tone, German President Johannes Rau on yesterday asked Israel's parliament to forgive his nation for the Holocaust and pledged to fight a resurgence of anti-Semitism and far-right extremism in Europe.

Rau's speech, the first ever delivered to Israel's Knesset in German, was greeted politely by lawmakers, many of whom praised his efforts to strengthen the sturdy ties between Israel and Germany and to express public responsibility for his nation's Nazi past.

But several legislators boycotted the session, with one, Likud Party lawmaker Danny Naveh, calling it "premature" to allow such an address to a body that still includes Holocaust survivors.

Other Israelis, including Knesset Speaker Avraham Burg, admitted to feeling some discomfort at listening to German in an official address before parliament. Burg, whose father fled Berlin in 1939, said he had deliberated long and hard before allowing the speech but did so after reflecting that German was not only the language of the Nazis but that of "philosophy and sublime poetry."

"It's the language of the murderers and the language of the murdered," Burg said. "I decided that today this double language will be heard here because it isn't the language that is the main thing, but the speaker and his words."

Rau has served as German president, a largely ceremonial role, since July. Considered a longtime friend of the Jewish state, he has visited Israel many times but chose to return to the country in his first official visit abroad.

He opened his speech with an emotional apology for the Holocaust, the genocide of six million Jews by the Nazis during World War II.

"With the people of Israel watching, I bow in humility before those murdered, before those who don't have graves where I could ask them for forgiveness," said the 69-year-old Rau. He said he sought Israel's pardon for himself and his generation in order to enable coming generations of Germans and Israelis to forge a future together.

Introducing Rau as an "old friend" of Israel, Prime Minister Ehud Barak acknowledged that it isn't easy to overcome the two nations' shared, traumatic history.

"But if in the year 2000 the German president can be accepted by the Knesset of Israel as an old friend and an ally, there are no difficulties and obstacles that can withstand worthy intentions," Barak said. In September, underscoring the increasingly close relationship between the two countries, Barak became the first foreign leader to visit Berlin after the city was restored as the capital of a united Germany.

But yesterday, Rau's speech and Israeli leaders' reactions to it also served to underline Israeli and European disapproval of the participation of a far-right party in the government in Austria, Germany's neighbor.

Rau referred only indirectly to Austrian far-right leader Joerg Haider, promising that half a century after the Holocaust, Europe would never allow racism and xenophobia to grow in its soil again. Israel recently recalled its ambassador to Austria in protest after Haider's Freedom Party became a member of the governing coalition.

In his own speech, Barak praised Germany for its leadership role in the European Union's decision to take steps to isolate what Barak called Austria's "coalition of shame." Unlike Austria, the Israeli leader said, Germany has confronted its past and tried to ensure that extremist groups cannot rise to power again.

Shuttle maps Earth in 3-D

By Usha Lee McFarling
Los Angeles Times

PASADENA, Calif. - For the next five days, the Space Shuttle Endeavor will continue to bathe the Earth in radar beams, creating a 3-D image of the planet unrivaled in its scope and detail.

"We'll get a near-global snapshot of the face of the Earth," said Diane L. Evans, director of the Earth Science Program at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, which is overseeing the Shuttle Radar Topography Mission for NASA. "For some areas of Earth, it will be the only map of its kind."

Earth, she said, is less well mapped than Venus and Mars - the objects of previous radar mapping missions.

The best image of the Earth available today is a piecemeal one, cobbled together from smaller space mapping missions, topographic data gleaned from the ground, and countless small aerial surveys made from planes. Trying to compare such different maps is onerous.

"You see all these warps and bumps. You see cliffs that aren't there," Evans said. "You can't use that for science."

The space shuttle, sweeping the Earth in more than 100 orbits, will provide maps of mapping data for the entire planet - all of it consistent.

"It's all going to line up," said Louise Veilleux, a JPL engineer who helped create the orbiting radar system."

"Everything's going to match."

The computer work required to piece the map together will take more than a year. But the few images beamed down are clear and extremely detailed. Areas already mapped include Stonehenge and Mount Vesuvius.

Maps that rely on photographs taken from planes or satellites often are plagued by clouds. But clouds, fog and smog are no match for this mission, said Michael Kobrick, the project's lead scientist. "Radar sees right through them," he said.

The 200-foot radar hardware itself is a marvel - the largest rigid structure ever put out into space.

Two radar units aboard the shuttle are separated by a 200-foot graphite-epoxy and titanium mast, which, after the shuttle launch last Friday, uncoiled smoothly from its 56-inch stowed length in the shuttle cargo bay. That's equivalent to pulling 7-foot-1 Los Angeles Lakers center Shaquille O'Neal out of a 2-inch box, engineers said.

The resulting map will have a resolution of 30 meters - enough to easily make out local landmarks. While such maps already exist for most of the United States, the radar maps will be about three times better than those for much of the rest of the planet, Kobrick said.

Dozens of scientists taking part in the mission plan to use the maps to answer a variety of questions. They will:

-Assess global warming by looking at snow cover.

-Better understand mountain building by studying the rising Himalayas.

See how much sediment is flowing into the ocean and affecting algae and plankton.

Better maps also could help airplane pilots avoid flying into mountains and could guide improved placement of cellular telephone towers.

The radar will collect so much data that it cannot all be beamed down to Earth. It will be collected on massive tapes aboard the shuttle that hold the equivalent of about 15,000 CDs. Project leaders hope to beam some of the images down as the shuttle is in space. These can be viewed on the Internet at http://www.jpl.nasa.gov/srtm/.

The mission is co-sponsored by the National Imagery and Mapping Agency, a secretive governmental agency that provides maps for the military and the CIA.

The mapping agency is interested in keeping the high-resolution, 30-meter maps classified and allowing scientists access only to 90-meter maps, particularly for areas of the globe deemed militarily sensitive. While negotiations on the matter are continuing, agency officials said scientists would be granted the 30-meter data on a case-by-case basis.

There is a newsroom meeting on Monday, February 21, at 4:00 p.m. Editors, Writers, Photographers, Night Editors, and Copy Editors must attend or be docked an hour of pay.

COLLEGE OF FOOD AND NATURAL RESOURCES

A+ ... for the teacher

OUTSTANDING TEACHER AWARD

OUTSTANDING ADVISOR AWARD

Students and faculty are invited to submit nominations for the 1999-2000 awards
Forms are available in 113 Stockbridge and departmental offices and nominations are due March 1, 2000

Faculty in the following programs are eligible for nomination:

Animal Science • Building Materials and Wood Technology • Apparel Marketing

Entomology • Environmental Design • Environmental Sciences

Family and Consumer Sciences • Food Science • Forestry

• Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration • Landscape Architecture

Microbiology • Natural Resource Studies • Plant and Soil Sciences

Resource Economics • Sport Management • Wildlife and Fisheries Conservation

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Deadline looms for schools

By Judy Pasternak
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON - Time is running out, Education Department officials say, for the states to turn around about 8,000 of the nation's worst-performing schools in poverty-stricken neighborhoods.

Federal reforms require that, during the academic year beginning this fall, states must force drastic measures on schools that are chronically failing to teach low-income students -- steps that could include firing all the administrators and staff, or sending students to other public schools that are making better progress.

The deadline marks a moment of truth for the states, the federal government and the entire academic-standards movement. Is the nation truly serious about creating a public education system that teaches all children, regardless of economic background, to master specific skills in each grade?

Only a handful of states have prodded exam scores upward in the six years since President Clinton pushed the reforms through Congress. The new federal approach gave states freedom to decide what students should be taught - but it also required proof, through testing, that the students actually are learning the state-mandated material.

"You can't leave kids in a failing school for long periods," said Marshall S. Smith, who recently left his post as acting deputy education secretary to return to Stanford University's education school as a professor. "There's a general feeling that we need to move quickly."

There are plenty of formidable obstacles to Clinton's approach: A shortage of qualified teachers. Political concerns magnified in an election year. And many people question whether the Education Department has the resolve to enforce its own reforms.

"We're real serious about this stuff," said Mike Cohen, assistant secretary of elementary and secondary education. He added: "I don't kid myself into thinking this is going to be easy."

Congress did not specify a penalty for states that do notinstitute reforms at failing schools, so the Education Department came up with one: They risk losing a total of $80 million under Title I, the nation's largest education grant program.

Title I, born of the 1960s Great Society, is meant to help close the learning gap between students from poor families and those from more affluent backgrounds. The lack of headway made by the program since the mid-'80s - despite a budget now totaling nearly $8 billion a year - was a prime reason for the education overhaul.

Technically, Cohen said, the federal government could cut off all Title I money if a state does not uphold its part of the bargain.

But several in the administration agreed that they want to minimize the direct impact on poor kids, while - in the words of one White House aide - "hitting the governors where they live," at the state level.

So, Cohen said, a state that refuses to carry out federal orders will lose Title I administrative funds. Although the amount represents a tiny slice - at most one percent - of a state's Title I money, state education officials said they are concerned that withdrawal could slow teacher hiring and lead to larger class sizes. They also said it would severely damage state guidance for struggling schools, leading to more outright failures.

Fear of bad publicity, federal officials expect, will be an even greater motivator for states to crack down and avoid federal penalties.

The required remedies, of course, could cause considerable disruption. Sending children from failing schools to other public institutions could cause overcrowding. Firing an entire staff may mean some rough transitions, especially since replacements are hard to find.

Russia reaches agreement

By Sharon LaFraniere
Washington Post

MOSCOW - Russia agreed yesterday to move toward normal relations with NATO, ending 11 months of isolation from the Western alliance triggered by the Kosovo war that had aroused fears of a new Cold War.

Acting President Vladimir Putin reached the surprise agreement with NATO Secretary General George Robertson in a 45-minute Kremlin meeting. It was one of Putin's most significant foreign policy decisions since he became acting president seven weeks ago, and was greeted as a sign here that he wants to reach out to the West.

Russia cut high-level contacts with NATO in March in protest over the NATO-led bombing of Kosovo, the breakaway region in Yugoslavia, Russia's historic ally. In welcoming Robertson to the Kremlin conference room, Putin said he was ready for closer ties with NATO even though last year's air attacks still complicate the relationship.

Robertson later told reporters, "I think we've moved from the permafrost into slightly softer ground."

Signs of a possible thaw were evident as early as July, when Russia sent its ambassador to Berlin to discuss the NATO-led peacekeeping operation in Kosovo. But the Russian government continued to boycott sessions of NATO's permanent joint council, a forum including NATO's 19 members-plus Russia set up to deal with military issues ranging from disarmament to terrorism.

While Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov did not say when exactly Russia will return to the council, he told a Russian television station last night, "We are resuming contacts."

What happened, happened. Let us leave it for history. We must move forward. We have new challenges, there are new problems, and we have to solve these problems together."

The agreement startled some political analysts who predicted Putin would not risk such a move just six weeks before the presidential election he is heavily favored to win. Still, most said it would do Putin no political harm, especially given the mood of satisfaction over the Russian military's capture last week of Grozny, capital of the breakaway republic of Chechnya.

Putin's pursuit of the Chechen war has already so cemented his support among advocates of a strong Russian state that he can safely extend a hand to the West without inviting criticism, said Dmitri Trenin, a military analyst with the Carnegie Endowment's Moscow Center.

"Russians disagree with the West, but it doesn't follow that they are happy about Russia's isolation," he said. "They don't want their leaders to be treated as lackeys, but they don't want them to be shut out or in limbo, either."

Igor Bunin, director of the Center of Political Technologies, said Putin's decision shows he is above all, pragmatic. "There is a session that Putin is anti-Western. This can be excluded. Putin stands for modernization of Russia. Modernization, and joining the civilized world."

In the months since Russia broke off ties with NATO, it has toughened its military rhetoric, and moved to increase its military budget, though the amount is still miniscule compared to U.S. expenditures. Ivanov said as one of their first tasks, NATO and Russian officials need to compare military doctrines.

The new Russian national security strategy, adopted Jan. 14, reflects Russia's growing apprehension over what it sees as European and American expansionist tendencies. The document also slightly broadens the parameters for use of nuclear weapons in war, allowing their deployment "if all other means of resolving the crisis have been exhausted."

Police beating warrants Syracuse student concern

By Evans Boston
Daily Orange

SYRACUSE, N.Y. - The Feb. 4 arraignment of Syracuse Police Department Officer James Mullen on charges of third-degree assault should alert students to the prejudices existing in the law enforcement system, said Jamal James, Student Government Association president.

Mullen, who pleaded guilty to the assault of a 12-year-old black girl, faces a four-month unpaid suspension from the police department and other minor punishments, Syracuse Police Sgt. Joseph Success said.

"This is not nearly enough punishment," James said. "The department should consider having him permanently removed."

The situation will not help the public image of police, said Sandi Pessin, external chairwoman of Point Zero, a Syracuse University group that advocates racial sensitivity.

"Examples like this will be brought back into the light in the future," Pessin said.

More than 100 police officers rallied at the city of Syracuse Public Safety Building to support Mullen on the day of his arraignment.

No minority officers participated in the rally, which received criticism from public officials and religious groups alike.

Conference discusses guns and Gore

By Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar and Tyler Marshall
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON - President Clinton said yesterday he is "quite favorably disposed" toward a new proposal to grant all death row inmates a chance to prove their innocence by using DNA testing.

At his first formal news conference of the year, Clinton, a death penalty supporter, praised as "courageous" the recent decision by Republican Gov. George Ryan to suspend executions in Illinois after several high-profile cases in which convicted murderers awaiting execution were exonerated.

Clinton said that no such moratorium is needed in the federal prison system, where 27 prisoners, including Oklahoma City bomber Timothy J. McVeigh, are on death row.

The president also said that he likes legislation introduced last Friday by Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., that would provide access to DNA testing for federal and state convicts. It also would establish stricter standards for court-appointed lawyers representing defendants in capital cases and encourage states to allow juries to be presented with the alternative of recommending a life sentence without parole.

"I'm quite favorably disposed toward it," he said. "But I just learned about it in the last couple of days and I've asked our people to review it."

Clinton said the Justice Department is also conducting a study to determine whether the death penalty is disproportionately applied to blacks and is developing guidelines for clemency petitions.

"The people who support the death penalty, it seems to me, have an especially heavy obligation to see that, in cases where it is applied, there is no question of whether the guilt was there," Clinton said.

In a wide-ranging session that lasted an hour, Clinton also talked about gun control, heating oil prices, character attacks against him on the presidential campaign trail, the crises in Kashmir and Northern Ireland and Chinese trade.

On gun control, Clinton indicated that he is willing to compromise to move legislation through Congress this year.

The Senate favors a 72-hour waiting period for purchases at largely unregulated gun shows, while the House is on record for a 24-hour waiting period. Gun control supporters say that 24 hours is not enough time for background checks.

"This is not theology," said Clinton. "There's got to be some way to deal with this that allows us to have a practical law that works."

On the subject of heating oil, Clinton announced additional federal aid for Northeast states hit hard by a spike in prices.

The president said that $125 million would be released from a program that helps low-income people pay for home heating oil. Most of the aid goes to Northeast and Mid-Atlantic states. The administration will seek an additional $600 million in emergency funding for the program.

Clinton said he is not surprised that his sexual misconduct in the Monica S. Lewinsky affair remains an issue in the 2000 campaign.

"For the Republicans, it's probably good politics..., because they spent years trying to tell people how bad I am," Clinton said.

"If I were running, I'd do that," he added jokingly.

He said he does not think voters will cast ballots against candidates such as Vice President Al Gore or first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, who is running for the Senate in New York, because of his conduct.

"The implications that anybody would be held responsible for somebody else's mistake or misconduct is just ... a real insult to the American people. ... It's not in their interest and it's not in their nature."

On Kashmir, the president asserted that the United States would be willing to broker a peace deal between India and Pakistan, if asked.

He called the danger of potential armed conflict over Kashmir between India and Pakistan, both nuclear powers, "one of the most significant security threats to the interests of the United States in this new century."

"Absolutely. I would" help broker peace, he said. "If the tensions between India and Pakistan could be resolved, it is my opinion ... that the Indian subcontinent might very well be the great success story of the next 50 years."

Your choice of major scheduled airlines (not charters) at discount fares. A full range of discount hotel accommodations. Even cruise lines at discount prices.

HOT SPOTS/HOT DEALS!
Albuquerque $333 RT
San Diego $285 RT
San Juan $366 RT

VERY INTERNATIONAL!
London $313 RT
Paris $353 RT
Rome $429 RT

BIG DEALS TO BIG CITIES!
Los Angeles $285 RT
Las Vegas $333 RT

GREAT ONE WAY FARES AVAILABLE!
Special Hotel and Car Rental Rates, too.

BEACH PARTY!
Cocoa Beach $155 RT
South Beach $165 RT
South Padre Island $282 RT

Major Scheduled Airlines.
Overnight Ticket Delivery Available.
Choose Your Own Flights.

Book Your Discount Travel at:
cheaptickets.com
or call 888-988-8408
PHONE RESERVATIONS
Mon - Fri 8am to 2am • Sat - Sun 8am to 11pm

YOU COULD BE GOING PLACES.
Check out cheaptickets.com/springbreak today.
(Hint: Aloha)

CHEAP TICKETS INC.
America's Travel Store®
Travel Stores: New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Honolulu

Airfares are not guaranteed until ticketed. Fares may be non-refundable and may have an advance purchase. Fares do not include $3.$12 airport passenger facility charges where applicable and tax segment fee of $2.50 per takeoff/landing. Fares to Alaska and Hawaii do not include departure taxes up to $17, international taxes, fees, and surcharges up to $95. Fares are subject to: change, holiday or seasonal supplements, blackout dates, availability and other restrictions.

DAILY BARD / COLLEGIAN

A mad race for jobs

Students flooded the lower level of the Campus Center yesterday to take part in the Career Fair.

Shuttle maps Earth in 3-D

By Usha Lee McFarling
Los Angeles Times

PASADENA, Calif. – For the next five days, the Space Shuttle Endeavor will continue to bathe the Earth in radar beams, creating a 3-D image of the planet unrivaled in its scope and detail.

"We'll get a near-global snapshot of the face of the Earth," said Diane L. Evans, director of the Earth Science Program at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, which is overseeing the Shuttle Radar Topography Mission for NASA. "For some areas of Earth, it will be the only map of its kind."

Earth, she said, is less well mapped than Venus and Mars - the objects of previous radar mapping missions.

The best image of the Earth available today is a piecemeal one, cobbled together from smaller space mapping missions, topographic data gleaned from the ground, and countless small aerial surveys made from planes. Trying to compare such different maps is onerous.

"You see all these warps and bumps. You see cliffs that aren't there," Evans said. "You can't use that for science."

The space shuttle, sweeping the Earth in more than 100 orbits, will provide reams of mapping data for the entire planet – all of it consistent.

"It's all going to line up," said Louise Veilleux, a JPL engineer who helped create the orbiting radar system.

"Everything's going to match."

The computer work required to piece the map together will take more than a year. But the few images beamed down are clear and extremely detailed. Areas already mapped include Stonehenge and Mount Vesuvius.

Maps that rely on photographs taken from planes or satellites often are plagued by clouds. But clouds, fog and smog are no match for this mission, said Michael Kobrick, the project's lead scientist. "Radar sees right through them," he said.

The 200-foot radar hardware itself is a marvel – the largest rigid structure ever put out into space.

Two radar units aboard the shuttle are separated by a 200-foot graphite-epoxy and titanium mast, which, after the shuttle launch last Friday, uncoiled smoothly from its 56-inch stowed length in the shuttle cargo bay. That's equivalent to pulling 7-foot-1 Los Angeles Lakers center Shaquille O'Neal out of a 2-inch box, engineers said.

The resulting map will have a resolution of 30 meters - enough to easily make out local landmarks. While such maps already exist for most of the United States, the radar maps will be about three times better than those for much of the rest of the planet, Kobrick said.

Dozens of scientists taking part in the mission plan to use the maps to answer a variety of questions. They will:

-Assess global warming by looking at snow cover.

-Better understand mountain building by studying the Himalayas.

-See how much sediment is flowing into the ocean and affecting algae and plankton.

Better maps also could help airplane pilots avoid flying into mountains and could guide improved placement of cellular telephone towers.

The radar will collect so much data that it cannot all be beamed down to Earth. It will be collected on massive tapes aboard the shuttle that hold the equivalent of about 15,000 CDs. Project leaders hope to beam some of the images down as the shuttle is in space. These can be viewed on the Internet at http://www.jpl.nasa.gov/srtm/.

The mission is co-sponsored by the National Imagery and Mapping Agency, a secretive governmental agency that provides maps for the military and the CIA.

The mapping agency is interested in keeping the high-resolution, 30-meter maps classified and allowing scientists access only to 90-meter maps, particularly for areas of the globe deemed militarily sensitive. While negotiations on the matter are continuing, agency officials said scientists would be granted the 30-meter data on a case-by-case basis.

German leader asks Israel's forgiveness

By Rebecca Trounson
Los Angeles Times

JERUSALEM – In an address as significant for the language in which it was uttered as its conciliatory tone, German President Johannes Rau on yesterday asked Israel's parliament to forgive his nation for the Holocaust and pledged to fight a resurgence of anti-Semitism and far-right extremism in Europe.

Rau's speech, the first ever delivered to Israel's Knesset in German, was greeted coldly by lawmakers, many of whom praised his efforts to strengthen the sturdy ties between Israel and Germany and to express public responsibility for his nation's Nazi past.

But several legislators boycotted the session, with one, Likud Party lawmaker Danny Naveh, calling it "premature" to allow such an address to a body that still includes Holocaust survivors.

Other Israelis, including Knesset Speaker Avraham Burg, admitted to feeling some discomfort at listening to German in an official address before parliament. Burg, whose father fled Berlin in 1939, said he had deliberated long and hard before allowing the speech but did so after reflecting that German was not only the language of the Nazis but that of "philosophy and sublime poetry."

"It's the language of the murderers and the language of the murdered," Burg said. "I decided that today this double language will be heard here because it isn't the language that is the main thing, but the speaker and his words."

Rau has served as German president, a largely ceremonial role, since July. Considered a longtime friend of the Jewish state, he has visited Israel many times but chose to return to the country in his first official visit abroad.

He opened his speech with an emotional apology for the Holocaust, the genocide of six million Jews by the Nazis during World War II.

"With the people of Israel watching, I bow in humility before those murdered, before those who don't have graves where I could ask them for forgiveness," said the 69-year-old Rau. He said he sought Israel's pardon for himself and his generation in order to enable coming generations of Germans and Israelis to forge a future together.

Introducing Rau as an "old friend" of Israel, Prime Minister Ehud Barak acknowledged that it isn't easy to overcome the two nations' shared, traumatic history.

"But if in the year 2000 the German president can be accepted by the Knesset of Israel as an old friend and an ally, there are no difficulties and obstacles that can withstand worthy intentions," Barak said. In September, underscoring the increasingly close relationship between the two countries, Barak became the first foreign leader to visit Berlin after the city was restored as the capital of a united Germany.

But yesterday, Rau's speech and Israeli leaders' reactions to it also served to underline Israeli and European disapproval of the participation of a far-right party in the government in Austria, Germany's neighbor.

Rau referred only indirectly to Austrian far-right leader Joerg Haider, promising that half a century after the Holocaust, Europe would never allow racism and xenophobia to grow in its soil again. Israel recently recalled its ambassador to Austria in protest after Haider's Freedom Party became a member of the governing coalition.

In his own speech, Barak praised Germany for its leadership role in the European Union's decision to take steps to isolate what Barak called Austria's "coalition of shame." Unlike Austria, the Israeli leader said, Germany has confronted its past and tried to ensure that extremist groups cannot rise to power again.

There is a newsroom meeting on Monday, February 21, at 4:00 p.m. Editors, Writers, Photographers, Night Editors, and Copy Editors must attend or be docked an hour of pay.

COLLEGE OF FOOD AND NATURAL RESOURCES

A+ for the teacher

OUTSTANDING TEACHER AWARD

OUTSTANDING ADVISOR AWARD

Students and faculty are invited to submit nominations for the 1999-2000 awards
Forms are available in 113 Stockbridge and departmental offices and nominations are due March 1, 2000

Faculty in the following programs are eligible for nomination:

Animal Science • Building Materials and Wood Technology • Apparel Marketing

Entomology • Environmental Design • Environmental Sciences

Family and Consumer Sciences • Food Science • Forestry

• Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration • Landscape Architecture

Microbiology • Natural Resource Studies • Plant and Soil Sciences

Resource Economics • Sport Management • Wildlife and Fisheries Conservation

Deadline looms for schools

By Judy Pasternak
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON – Time is running out, Education Department officials say, for the states to turn around about 8,000 of the nation's worst-performing schools in poverty-stricken neighborhoods.

Federal reforms require that, during the academic year beginning this fall, states must force drastic measures on schools that are chronically failing to teach low-income students – steps that could include firing all the administrators and staff, or sending students to other public schools that are making better progress.

The deadline marks a moment of truth for the states, the federal government and the entire academic-standards movement: Is the nation truly serious about creating a public education system that teaches all children, regardless of economic background, to master specific skills in each grade?

Only a handful of states have prodded exam scores upward in the six years since President Clinton pushed the reforms through Congress. The new federal approach gave states freedom to decide what students should be taught – but it also required proof, through testing, that the students actually are learning the state-mandated material.

"You can't leave kids in a failing school for long periods," said Marshall S. Smith, who recently left his post as acting deputy education secretary to return to Stanford University's education school as a professor. "There's a general feeling that we need to move quickly."

There are plenty of formidable obstacles to Clinton's approach: A shortage of qualified teachers. Political concerns magnified in an election year. And many people question whether the Education Department has the resolve to enforce its own reforms.

"We're real serious about this stuff," said Mike Cohen, assistant secretary of elementary and secondary education. He added: "I don't kid myself into thinking this is going to be easy."

Congress did not specify a penalty for states that do notinstitute reforms at failing schools, so the Education Department came up with one: They risk losing a total of $80 million under Title I, the nation's largest education grant program.

Title I, born of the 1960s Great Society, is meant to help close the learning gap between students from poor families and those from more affluent backgrounds. The lack of headway in study by the program since the mid-'80s – despite a budget now totaling nearly $8 billion a year – was a prime reason for the education overhaul.

Technically, Cohen said, the federal government could cut off all Title I money if a state does not uphold its part of the bargain.

But several in the administration agreed that they want to minimize the direct impact on poor kids, while – in the words of one White House aide – "hitting the governors where they live," at the state level.

So, Cohen said, a state that refuses to carry out federal orders will lose Title I administrative funds. Although the amount represents a tiny slice – at most one percent – of a state's Title I money, state education officials said they are concerned that withdrawal could slow teacher hiring and lead to larger class sizes. They also said it would severely damage state guidance for struggling schools, leading to more outright failures.

Fear of bad publicity, federal officials expect, will be an even greater motivator for states to crack down and avoid federal penalties.

The required remedies, of course, could cause considerable disruption. Sending children from failing schools to other public institutions could cause overcrowding. Firing an entire staff may mean some rough transitions, especially since replacements are hard to find.

Russia reaches agreement

By Sharon LaFraniere
Washington Post

MOSCOW – Russia agreed yesterday to move toward normal relations with NATO, ending 11 months of isolation from the Western alliance triggered by the Kosovo war that had aroused fears of a new Cold War.

Acting President Vladimir Putin reached the surprise agreement with NATO Secretary General George Robertson in a 45-minute Kremlin meeting. It was one of Putin's most significant foreign policy decisions since he became acting president seven weeks ago, and was greeted as a sign here that he wants to reach out to the West.

Russia cut high-level contacts with NATO in March in protest over the NATO-led bombing of Kosovo, the breakaway region in Yugoslavia, Russia's historic ally. In welcoming Robertson to the Kremlin conference room, Putin said he was ready for closer ties with NATO even though last year's air attacks still complicate the relationship.

Robertson later told reporters, "I think we've moved from the permafrost into slightly softer ground."

Signs of a possible thaw were evident as early as July, when Russia sent its ambassador to Berlin to discuss the NATO-led peacekeeping operation in Kosovo. But the Russian government continued to boycott sessions of NATO's permanent joint council, a forum including NATO's 19 members plus Russia set up to deal with military issues ranging from disarmament to terrorism.

While Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov did not say when exactly Russia will return to the council, he told a Russian television station last night, "We are resuming contacts. ... What happened, happened. Let us leave it for history.

We must move forward. We have new challenges; there are new problems, and we have to solve these problems together."

The agreement startled some political analysts who predicted Putin would not risk such a move just six weeks before the presidential election he is heavily favored to win. Still, most said it would do Putin no political harm, especially given the mood of satisfaction over the Russian military's capture last week of Grozny, capital of the breakaway republic of Chechnya.

Putin's pursuit of the Chechen war has already so cemented his support among advocates of a strong Russian state that he can safely extend a hand to the West without inviting criticism, said Dmitri Trenin, a military analyst with the Carnegie Endowment's Moscow Center.

"Russians disagree with the West, but it doesn't follow that they are happy about Russia's isolation," he said. "They don't want their leaders to be treated as lackeys, but they don't want them to be shut out or in limbo, either."

Igor Bunin, director of the Center of Political Technologies, said Putin's decision shows he is above all, pragmatic. "There is a version that Putin is anti-Western. This can be excluded. Putin stands for modernization of Russia. Modernization, and joining the civilized world."

In the months since Russia broke off ties with NATO, it has toughened its military rhetoric and moved to increase its military budget, though the amount is still miniscule compared to U.S. expenditures. Ivanov said as one of their first tasks, NATO and Russian officials need to compare military doctrines.

The new Russian national security strategy, adopted Jan. 14, reflects Russia's growing apprehension over what it sees as European and American expansionist tendencies. The document also slightly broadens the parameters for use of nuclear weapons in war, allowing their deployment "if all other means of resolving the crisis have been exhausted."

Police beating warrants Syracuse student concern

By Evans Boston
Daily Orange

SYRACUSE, N.Y. – The Feb. 4 arraignment of Syracuse Police Department Officer James Mullen on charges of third-degree assault should alert students to the prejudices existing in the law enforcement system, said Jamal James, Student Government Association president.

Mullen, who pleaded guilty to the assault of a 12-year-old black girl, faces a four-month unpaid suspension from the police department and other minor punishments, Syracuse Police Sgt. Joseph Sweeney said.

"This is not nearly enough punishment," James said. "The department should consider having him permanently removed."

The situation will not help the public image of police, said Sandi Pessin, external chairwoman of Point Zero, a Syracuse University group that advocates racial sensitivity.

"Examples like this will be brought back into the light in the future," Pessin said.

More than 100 police officers rallied at the city of Syracuse Public Safety Building to support Mullen on the day of his arraignment.

No minority officers participated in the rally, which received criticism from public officials and religious groups alike.

Conference discusses guns and Gore

By Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar and Tyler Marshall
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON – President Clinton said yesterday he is "quite favorably disposed" toward a new proposal to grant all death row inmates a chance to prove their innocence by using DNA testing.

At his first formal news conference of the year, Clinton, a death penalty supporter, praised as "courageous" the recent decision by Republican Gov. George Ryan to suspend executions in Illinois after several high-profile cases in which convicted murderers awaiting execution were exonerated.

Clinton said that no such moratorium is needed in the federal prison system, where 27 prisoners, including Oklahoma City bomber Timothy J. McVeigh, are on death row.

The president also said that he likes legislation introduced last Friday by Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., that would provide access to DNA testing for federal and state convicts. It also would establish stricter standards for court-appointed lawyers representing defendants in capital cases and encourage states to allow juries to be presented with the alternative of recommending a life sentence without parole.

"I'm quite favorably disposed toward it," he said. "But I just learned about it in the last couple of days and I've asked our people to review it."

Clinton said the Justice Department is also conducting a study to determine whether the death penalty is disproportionately applied to blacks and is developing guidelines for clemency petitions.

"The people who support the death penalty, it seems to me, have an especially heavy obligation to see that, in cases where it is applied, there is no question of whether the guilt was there," Clinton said.

In a wide-ranging session that lasted an hour, Clinton also talked about gun control, hearing oil prices, character attacks against him on the presidential campaign trail, the crises in Kashmir and Northern Ireland and China's trade status.

On gun control, Clinton indicated that he is willing to compromise to move legislation through Congress this year.

The Senate favors a 72-hour waiting period for purchases at largely unregulated gun shows, while the House is on record for a 24-hour waiting period. Gun control supporters say that 24 hours is not enough time for background checks.

"This is not theology," said Clinton. "There's got to be some way to deal with this that allows us to have a practical law that works."

On the subject of heating oil, Clinton announced additional federal aid for Northeast states hit hard by a spike in prices.

The president said that $125 million would be released from a program that helps low-income people pay for home heating oil. Most of the aid goes to Northeast and Mid-Atlantic states. The administration will seek an additional $600 million in emergency funding for the program.

Clinton said he is not surprised that his sexual misconduct in the Monica S. Lewinsky affair remains an issue in the 2000 campaign.

"For the Republicans, it's probably good politics..., because they spent years trying to tell people how bad I am," Clinton said.

"If I were running, I'd do that," he added jokingly.

He said he does not think voters will cast ballots against candidates such as Vice President Al Gore or first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, who is running for the Senate in New York, because of his conduct.

"The implications that anybody would be held responsible for somebody else's mistake or misconduct is just ... a real insult to the American people. ...It's not in their interest and it's not in their nature."

On Kashmir, the president asserted that the United States would be willing to broker a peace deal between India and Pakistan, if asked.

He called the danger of potential armed conflict over Kashmir between India and Pakistan, both nuclear powers, "one of the most significant security threats to the interests of the United States in this new century."

"Absolutely, I would" help broker peace, he said. "If the tensions between India and Pakistan could be resolved, it is my opinion ... that the Indian subcontinent might very well be the great success story of the next 50 years."

Your choice of major scheduled airlines (not charters) at discount fares. A full range of discount hotel accommodations. Even cruise lines at discount prices.

HOT SPOTS/HOT DEALS!
Albuquerque $333 RT
San Diego $285 RT
San Juan $366 RT

VERY INTERNATIONAL!
London $313 RT
Paris $353 RT
Rome $429 RT

BIG DEALS TO BIG CITIES!
Los Angeles $285 RT
Las Vegas $333 RT

GREAT ONE WAY FARES AVAILABLE!
Special Hotel and Car Rental Rates, too.

BEACH PARTY!
Cocoa Beach $155 RT
South Beach $165 RT
South Padre Island $282 RT

Major Scheduled Airlines.
Overnight Ticket Delivery Available.
Choose Your Own Flights.

Book Your Discount Travel at:
cheaptickets.com
or call 888-988-8408
PHONE RESERVATIONS
Mon - Fri 8am to 2am • Sat - Sun 8am to 11pm

YOU COULD BE GOING PLACES.
Check out cheaptickets.com/springbreak today.
(Hint: Aloha)

CHEAP TICKETS INC.
America's Travel Store®
Travel Stores: New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Honolulu

Airfares are not guaranteed until ticketed. Fares may be non-refundable and may have an advance purchase. Fares do not include $3-$12 airport passenger facility charges where applicable and tax segment fee of $2.50 per takeoff/landing. fares to Alaska and Hawaii do not include departure taxes up to $17; international taxes, fees, and surcharges up to $95. Fares are subject to: change, holiday or seasonal supplements, blackout dates, availability and other restrictions.

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Thursday, February 17, 2000

Our Opinion

Keep the boycott

Massachusetts, evidently, has more of a conscience than the nation as a whole.

It was reported in The Boston Globe yesterday that lawyers representing the Clinton administration had urged the Supreme Court to rule against the state of Massachusetts in a case to be argued next month regarding the boycott of the nation of Myanmar by the state.

Myanmar, formerly a British colony and once known as Burma, has been under a brutal military dictatorship since a coup which took place in 1962. In this coup, the fledgling democracy that had taken over the government from the British in 1948 was overturned and has never yet been restored.

This Asian country has a population of 45 million people, many of who live in poverty and none of who have anything resembling civil rights. The economy of Myanmar collapsed long ago. Nothing has been done by the isolationist government to restore the nation's economy thus maintaining the horrible living conditions.

Democratic elections were held in Myanmar in 1990, and despite tight military control the vote went overwhelmingly for democracy. The election was disregarded, and the democratic party candidates and activists were tortured and killed. There have been no elections in Myanmar since.

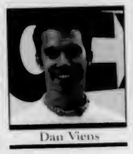
In 1996, Massachusetts took the bold step of enacting a boycott on the nation in recognition of the civil rights violations and the suppression of Myanmar democracy which still remains rampant. No dealings with the military government of Myanmar are permitted in this state.

It seems that the Presidency and Administration of this country cannot see that reasoning behind the boycott, and have challenged the boycott in court - all the way to the Supreme Court. They want the ban lifted and commerce with the corruption to be resumed as quickly as possible. The rationale for this is that it is a federal decision to pass things such as boycotts, and that the country must be unified on the economic front, basically, that states do not have the power to do what Massachusetts has bravely done.

The national government of this country seems to want conformity to the worship of trade and of the making of money, with no care at for for the oppression of those who suffer to produce that wealth yet get none.

We at the Daily Collegian disagree with this stance taken by the national leadership. Placing profits and commerce above human misery is a problem that persists to this day, and it is the responsibility of everyone who has the strength to fight it to do so with all available options.

Simply because the nation as a whole has no problem dealing with oppressive dictatorships does not mean that the conscience of the state Massachusetts should be ignored. A decision against the state would again invite the commerce which is obviously neither wanted nor needed.



This state has the right to follow its conscience as far as it would care to go. Taking away the option to resist and hinder this government at every turn, forcing cooperation and dealing with something innately distasteful, in something that should not be allowed to happen.

Uphold the boycott. Supreme Court. Don't hurt the ability, as a state, to act as conscience dictates.

Gasoline and greeting cards

Another Valentine's Day has come and gone. Let me tell you, I am sad to see it go. There is nothing I like better than celebrating the love my sweetheart and I share because Hallmark tells us we should. When you think about it Valentine's Day is a dying breed. V-Day was once the centerpiece of a gigernaut of greeting card generated holidays. There aren't that many around anymore unless you count Christmas and Independence Day. I can remember back to the good ol' days when there would be some sort of created holiday every other week. We never had to go to work or school more than nine weekdays in a row. Ahh, that was the life. However, there were a lot of people who felt that the holidays were being watered down like pro sports leagues and frat party beer. This is when The UHF took action. It was late 1987 when The Unnecessary Holiday Foundation started laying waste to defenseless useless holidays throughout the year. Many of you have forgotten these holidays that we used to enjoy in our youth. It almost seems as though these holidays never existed. Luckily I am here to drudge those old holidays up so we can relive our childhood memories.

One of my favorite holidays back in the day was Jet Fuel Day. Each and every year it would fall on either the second, third or fourth Tuesday of May or June. On this great day every one's mothers would slave over the oven baking Jet Fuelritos. This was a type of burrito with a special black tar-like ingredient that only mothers knew how to make. Then, right before sundown, the United States Air Force jets would fly overhead dumping all of their excess jet fuel all over everyone. The finale of the evening was when everyone went to the local gas station to wash the jet fuel off. I don't know if you remember how sticky jet fuel was, but the only thing that would wash it off was gasoline. I remember the Jet Fuel Day when I was eleven. I had saved up my quarters all year long so I could take the longest gas bath. I set the record for that year. Good thing I had just quit smoking. Alas, Jet Fuel Day is a mere part of our past. Farewell Jet Fuel Day, sorry I hardly knew ya.

Dan Viens

The next holiday that I truly miss to this day was abolished during the late 80s or early 90s. It was always held on August the 7th; on this great day each year we celebrated Holiday Day. This was a day to celebrate all of the other holidays we had. Jet fuel would rain from the sky in celebration of Jet Fuel Day. Fireworks would sore in celebration of Independence Day. Sometimes the fireworks would ignite the jet fuel and the sky would be filled with fire. People would have Christmas tree hunts and Cupid would drop from a giant ball at midnight. The best part about Holiday Day was that each town would put giant speakers all throughout their town. Then, just after Cupid touched down, Madonna would play a live concert in New York City's Central Park. The only song she would play was her hit 'Holiday.' This two-hour live version would be relayed around the country so people could party in the streets. Much to my dismay Holiday Day has left and gone away. So long, Holiday Day.

One day that I've almost forgotten about was School Bus Day. This was one of the greatest days of the year for anyone who road the school bus. This holiday was held on a random day throughout the school year. On this very special day all of the students would board the bus just like any other day. Once everyone was on the bus the bus driver would ring a bell and yell, "School Bus Day!" Then every bus in the country would drive to their state's capital. In every state's capital students from kindergarten to twelfth grade would be in store for a day of fun and drinking. This day was the brainchild of the upper tier of the United States government. The then-powers-that-be in the government were worried that the Russian government would try to invade our great country and disable all of our children by giving them enormous amounts of vodka. The U.S. government felt that if once or twice a year every schoolboy and girl went to their state capital and got hammered, then they would build up a bit of a tolerance to alcohol. This way when the Russians invaded their vodka attack would be ineffective. The once thrilling and inebriation-filled School Bus Day kind of went by the wayside when the Cold War ended. Adios School Bus Day, but hey - at least we beat those Russians.

As much as I miss all of those other great holidays the one that I miss the most is Dan Viens Day. This holiday was always celebrated on my birthday in my hometown of New York City. The whole city would stop for just one day. The New York Stock Exchange would close. The Mets and Yankees would cancel their games. Each of the five burrows would put together a huge gift package for me. It was so great. Dan Viens Day would end with a huge scavenger hunt through the sewer led by Dave Letterman and whoever the mayor was. My favorite was David Dinkins. He sure had a good eye for those hidden goodies. Dan Viens Day came to an abrupt halt in 1994 when I was caught urinating in public. This incident brought great shame to my family. The reason such a big deal got made out of the incident was that I peed on the ambassador from Uganda's car by accident. It was just so damn windy that day. Anyway, I lost my own holiday due to a urine controversy.

Lastly I would like to voice my opinion on two of the greatest holidays ever that have been canceled. These days are Mother's Day and Father's Day. I used to love having a special day to show my parents how much I love them, but now that has been taken from us. For the last five years I have not been able to give my mom or dad presents and tell them how much I love them. It is a travesty. Parents deserve their own day. They do so much for us throughout our lives. Whoever came up with the idea to ban these all-important days should be burned at the stake.

As you can see UHF has turned our country into a very boring society. Some months we barely have one day off now, never mind having two or three like the way it should be. We are Americans, people! We are meant to party down at all times! We aren't Jehovah's Witnesses, We're supposed to celebrate good times, c'mon.

Dan Viens is a Collegian Columnist.

What can you say?

Aaron Saykin

Two weeks ago I decided to check my email one last time before I shut my computer off.

You have one new message.

The first is from someone who told me that a job that I wanted was no longer available.

Hey, instead of Grant my friend Brent from Arkansas that I met at Oxford last summer. I hadn't heard from him since the beginning of our semester break.

"Hey, what's up -"

I scroll down a bit.

"I bet it's cold in Massachusetts."

And then further down.

"Sorry I didn't call you back the other night. Dan - father died."

What? Wait a minute. No. It can't be. Another Dan?

"Yeah, it was actually my father. His father died from a heart attack."

Shit.

Dan and I were best friends during our six weeks with the UMass-Oxford program. He and Brent had come together from the University of Central Arkansas.

I still remember the first day we met. Most of us had been traveling for the past 24 hours, trying to find a college town in Southern England. When the entire group finally packed into a renovated but rustic-looking room, we exchanged our first words.

"Hey, you're from Massachusetts, hunh? Well, how's Raahstan?" he asked, poking fun at Boston - not even my half of the state.

I fought right back.

"Do you guys in Arkansas get your NRA cards in the first or second grade?"

We were already friends.

But there I was, over six months later, unable to think of what to say to a kid who knows me better than I know myself.

The UMass telephone – that Whitmore claims is worth $400 – looks complicated for the first time.

His father dying was the last thing he needed. He has little contact with his mother, who is deaf and lives in Texas. He has no family in Arkansas, except his grandparents, whom his father had been taking care of His dad's as a kid were over.

Finally, I call, two days late.

"Hello."

"Is Dan there?" He recognizes my voice immediately.

"Aaron, what's up buddy?"

"Hey, how are ya, kid? How're you doing?"

I wasn't quiet sure what to say or how to say it.

"I'm okay, I guess."

"Listen, Dan, I can't tell you how sorry I am about your father. If there's anything I can do, let me know. I'm really sorry. I wish I could come down, but I just don't have the money right now."

"Don't worry, I'm just glad you called."

We talk for a bit. He tells me that he and Brent got high an hour ago. I start to worry.

That summer I teased him, over a pint of Guinness, for being a preacher's kid. After all, Dan is as atheist as they come.

"I'm sure you have a lot of stuff to take care of? How's everything been?" I try to get him to look ahead.

"All right." He becomes a bit more withdrawn, mumbling about some movie in the background.

"Hey, you should come visit," he suggests.

"I know. I'll try. I promise." I'm lying.

"So what are you going to do about school?"

"I have to withdraw for the semester."

"Hey, you should come visit. You and Adam. We would have a mini-Oxford reunion. Me, you, Brent and Ben – you remember Ben – he's here too."

"Well, I'll try. Maybe spring break." I'm lying again.

After 20 minutes of avoiding silence, I let him go – something about a paper to write for the next day. Again, I'm lying.

What do you say when one of your best friend's father dies?

I call every week now, but we end up talking about movies or women. I think that he'll feel depressed if I mention what fun I had last weekend, so I lie about that, too.

We usually touch on the topic of Oxford – probably the happiest time in both of our lives. About how we had no worries there. About how nice the mild summer weather was. About how bad the food and coffee was. About how most of the girls wouldn't give us the time of day. About how weak the drinks were at the Purple Turtle. About Dr. Paroissien celebrating at the foosball table. About how we miss it.

Not about his father.

Five years from now, I'll probably regret that I wasn't really there for one of my good friends who now he has no one. He helped me in England. When I needed a cigarette because someone was trying to make my life hell, he'd offer before I'd even ask. When I was sick, he bought me two boxes of Kleenex because I was using an old towel – granted, the tissues had farm animals on them, but he meant well.

I promised to send him extra pictures from Oxford. I'll probably do that this week. I'll just never know what the hell I'm supposed to say to him.

Aaron Saykin is a Collegian columnist.

Such sweet sobriety

Somebody told me this week that my "stock would rise" if I took up drinking. This person, I will call him Adam, told me that I have some key personal qualities that could only be enhanced by the consumption of alcohol.

Yes, it's true. I'm bravely staring down my 22nd birthday next week, and I have never had a sip of alcohol in my life. Not a drop in fours years at UMass. This past December I was almost exposed when I mistakenly thought my friend's cup was mine. But don't worry. I spit the Kaluha out in the sink well before it even got near my esophagus.

Kathleen Ralls

Of course, Adam's comment provided stimulating argument that boiled down to him informing me that he feels good about buying extravagant items so that he doesn't "waste" (and that's his term) his money on alcohol. And I'm supposed to start drinking for what reason?

Four years of driving, and at times, dragging, friends from here to there has not deterred my stance. It was my first week here and the girls in the hall were having a social to get to know everyone. When the beverages were being passed, one of my new friends said, "Of course you know that the first time you drink will be with us"! I don't think that opportunity will ever arise again, since she has dropped out of school and I rarely get to see the rest of them. However, I guess there is still a chance of me throwing one back; that is, if you also believe that Adam's reasoning for buying a bedroom set is well thought out and reasonable!

The same question always arises, "How can you stand being around all those drunk people?" My only answer is that it is pretty easy when it's all you have ever known. I'd rather be laughing with my friends than laughing with Raymond, whom everybody loves, or whatever else is on TV.

Want to send me on a packie run? Fine, but better make a detailed list and some backup options because I have no idea what I'm doing there. Last week I had to ask for assistance when I couldn't find some sweet and sour mix. The only thing I know about beer is that Natty Light is cheap and gross, and that's all my friends drank in high school.

My roommate has an elaborate collection of hard liquor that takes up a whole shelf in our pantry and I have no idea what's going on down there. Much like the pretty bottles and glasses that inhibit this lower shelf during the middle of the week, I am completely left in the dark. My only contribution to that collection is when I buy her diet soda water for her gin and tonics because it's on sale.

In the UMass police' eyes, I have apparently spent four years trying to fool them into thinking I am drunk – or so they think. I can't tell you how many times I've been stopped (and I have a perfect driving record) for no reason at all here at UMass. My sophomore year I was stopped in front of MacKimmie with a car full of people. The policemen blinded all of us with a flashlight in our eyes and then informed me that the light bulb that hangs over the license plate was out. And that's a reason to pull someone over at midnight on a Friday night? But wait, then he really nailed me.

"We have a reading that a car of this make has been harassing people waiting for the bus near Haigis Mall, I don't suppose that is you?"

Really. His second excuse for pulling over a car full of people was even more ridiculous. I dare a policeperson to pull me over and make me walk the line. Want me to recite the alphabet backwards, take a Breathalyzer? Every night if you want.

Requesting a Coke at a bar is a bigger ordeal than it should be. The bartender either A) Cocks her/his head to the side in a quizzical manner and mouths the word Coke or B) Thinks that she/he did not hear correctly and asks again. Luckily my friends just get a Coke for me when they buy their rounds without asking.

See me at a wedding? That's me drinking the water during the toast. Three times a bridesmaid and not one divorce – I don't worry about any jinxes. If I ever get married, I've already decided on having a Coke toast.

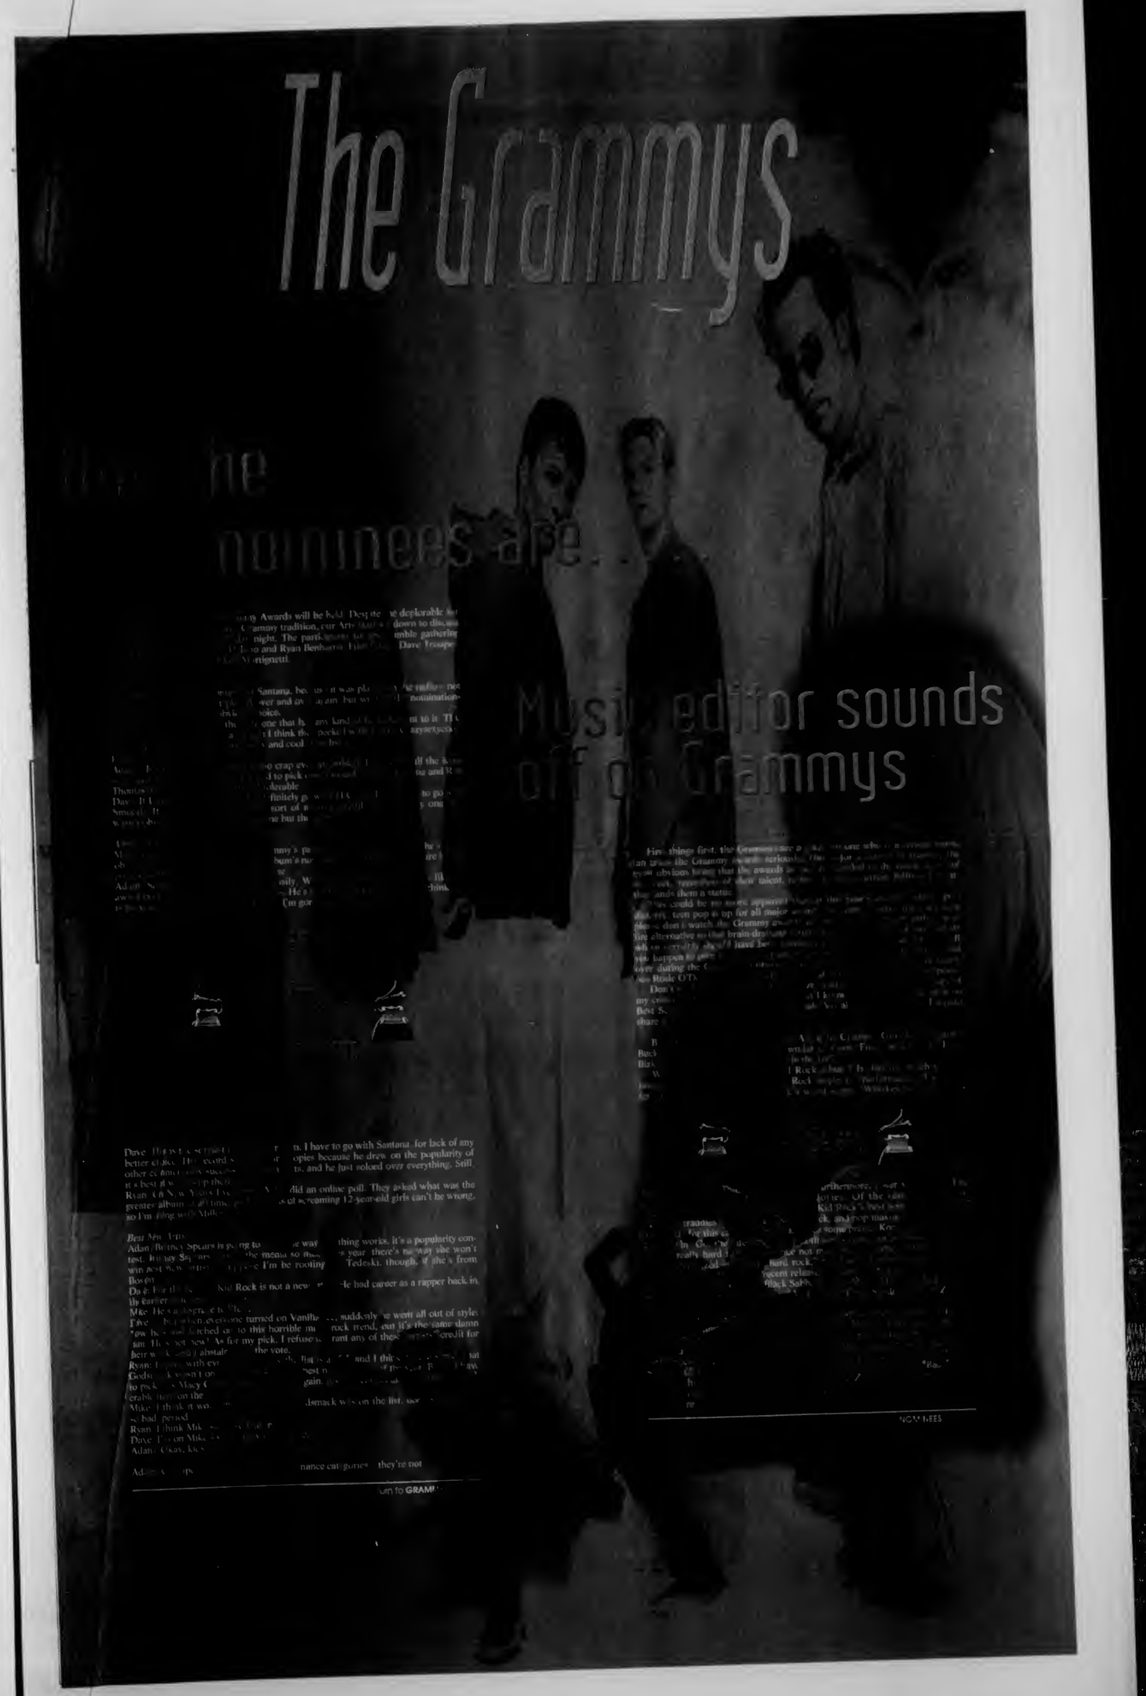
Which brings me to my passion: Coca-Cola. I don't care how tough this fiscal quarter of whatever has been bad for the Atlanta-born company. It is the original tonic, unlike Pepsi (which I refuse to drink). I collect everything from jackets and wallets to salt and pepper shakers and mirrors with an old-fashioned Coca-Cola girl on them. Recently it escalated to an online bidding war for a Coke vanity license plate (I was the top bidder at $12.99).

I guess it makes me easy to buy for, but I appreciate for people who just want to dump off trashy memorabilia. My friend Christine returned from Las Vegas with a "soda shoppe" paper doll hat that reads, "I was a Soda Jerk at..." Don't worry; I only wear that out on special occasions. I have Coke bottles and cans in pints and in different languages. Last year, I even made my pilgrimage to the Atlanta World of Coca-Cola with the most annoying girl from Minnesota who used the term "grrr" when she was happy. Hey, you take it as it comes.

I only have one other friend at UMass who doesn't drink, and he completely avoids the drinking/uptown scene (and also has a Coca-Cola vanity license plate). But I never wanted to stop hanging out with my friends, and they have a good time making fun of my drinking habits.

So in response to Adam's inquiry, I guess I will have to live without such enjoyment. To be honest, I know nobody else ever knows that I'm the only one in the bar not drinking – especially when I hear stories about how "wasted" I was the other night.

Kathleen Ralls is a Collegian columnist.



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Ben Alamed Webmaster Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Shechan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Suge Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexi Pashkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorkwski Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager

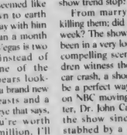
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1456. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.



Millionaire married to low grade television

"ER" shines, Maude Flanders swoons

Okay, enough, the madness needs to stop, because it's gone too far. Much like D'z The Mighty Ducks and "international translator" Furby, we've taken a trend to a point that we just don't need anymore.

"Who Wants to be a Millionaire" was creative. "Greed." "21." and "Winning Lines" were cheap imitations, and I could even tolerate it when the Millionaire computer and board games came out, but two days ago, FOX did me in. I just finished watching "Who Wants to Marry a Multimillionaire," and my head's spinning. I'm still trying to figure out what I just saw. To be perfectly honest, it's kind of like when your ugliest friend tells you that he's hooking up with a girl half his age: I don't need the details explained to me. It just needs to stop!

Apparently 50 women, all who claimed to be looking for love, but you me, and Puffy know that it's all about the Benjamins, were picked to go on television and beg to be some rich dude's wife. Apparently if you're rich, the only thing you need to do to you need to pick a wife, is to listen to her babble something about saving the environment, and see what she looks like in a swimsuit. We knew nothing about the eligible bachelor, except that he's the only man alive who's allowed to buy a woman (for the rest of us that's called prostitution, and it's illegal). For some strange reason, we were not allowed to see what Mr. Perfect looked like before he popped the question to the woman of his dreams. So within a bunch of cheap editing tactics, much like the ones used to cover up Wilson's face on "Home Improvement," we heard the life story of the king of San Diego, who own a piece of a golf course, and "has never found true love," but never saw his wrinkly, withered middle aged face. It turns out that he's a dirty old man, who has sunk to an all time low in matchmaking. I think Casanova is turning in his heart-shaped grave.

I guess the guy saved some sort of self respect, because he picked a woman that seemed like she was down to earth and might stay with him for more than a month (the line in Vegas is two months). Instead of picking one of the Britney Spears lookalikes, with a brand new pair of bravuras and a look in her eye that says, "Hey, if you're worth more than a million, I'll show you the trick I did that landed me a walk on role on 'Model's Inc.' Though that's the woman I'd have picked.

Yeah, so it you were in my room on Tuesday night, you would have been bashed over the head by jokes being made about the shallow women who will clearly do anything for a buck, and even more cracks about the pervert who's paying a woman to marry him.

But, just please, stop it! Where is it going next? My friend Ben and I imagined the new FOX game show "Who Wants to Win a House." They bring in 50 crazy people off of the streets of New York, and ask them questions like "Who is on the one dollar bill" and "What does VCR stand for," while the people talk to themselves and make proclamations about being Jesus. The winner takes home a million dollar house on 5th Avenue. I also fear, "Who Wants to Eat a Loaf of Bread," where they bring 50 starving children on the show, and humiliate them until one is left the winner of a loaf of bread. Everyone else will stand around screaming, "why does the winner get an entire loaf, just give us all one piece." But that won't fly because we don't live in a Communist society. Anyway, before my craziness goes any further, someone please just make the game show from stop!

From marrying millionaires, to killing them; did anyone catch "ER" last week? The show was better than it has been in a very long time. After having a compelling scene involving two children witness their parent's death in a car crash, a shocking ending proved to be a perfect way to keep sweeps week on NBC moving. Noah Wyle's character, Dr. John Carter, who has been on the show since its inception, was stabbed by a crazed patient. Also injured was Kellie Martin's character, Lucy Knight, a medical student who first appeared on the show in 1998. Both Carter and Knight were laying in a bloody mess at the show's end, leading to a cliffhanger that will conclude tonight. Without spoiling too much for you die hard "ER" fans, it is a fact that Kellie Martin is leaving the show. It is also a fact that Noah Wyle is not going anywhere. Do the math!

Deaths are certainly in this week on TV. The Internet rumors were confirmed last Sunday, as Ned Flanders lost his wife Maude on "The Simpsons." Maude Flanders was pelted with a barrage of free T-shirts at a NASCAR race, and fell from the top of the bleachers to her death. Although it sounds really morbid, the episode was very funny. "The Simpsons" has been getting more and more random lately and this was no exception. Even though the real reason that they had to kill the character off was because of contract disputes with the woman who does the voice, there did not seem to be a coherent place that "The Simpsons" was going with the plot. The Flanders family was in turmoil, and the Simpsen family was willing to help them out. Next week everyone will forget all about it. Sometimes I wish that there were more connections between episodes, and something that can tie things together.

In a sweeps period dominated by deaths, the most entertaining thing to watch has been the murder trial of Raven's all-pro linebacker, Ray Lewis. It's not actually a murder trial, but it's his hearing about whether or not he will be granted bail. I'm not quite sure why I'm so compelled by the twelve hours of Ray Lewis coverage that CNN/SI is presenting. However, I do know that I've missed seventeen classes and lost thirty pounds by forgetting to eat, because I've been glued to all of the excitement. I guess I just miss OJ. Hey that gives me an idea for a game show...

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian staff member

COURTESY FOX

Maude Flanders made her final "Simpsons" appearance this past Sunday, as her character died in last week's episode.

D'Angelo epitomizes soul, Violet Tide waxes high and The Moves rock on

SHEILA NICHOLLS
Brief Strop
Hollywood Records

I'll make this real brief: Sheila Nicholls Is Tori Amos, minus everything that makes Tori Amos an outstanding musician, vocalist, and songwriter.

Nicholls's piano work is nice enough, and although typical, some of her music is enjoyable. The piano is certainly the centerpiece of the album, but some tracks make use of string arrangements, acoustic guitars, soft percussion, and other inoffensive instrumentation. Her singing, however, is often pinched and thin, as if she's perpetually reaching for notes just outside of he vocal range. By the fourth song (and here are fourteen), I wanted nothing more but to turn the record off and escape her incessant whining.

And then there's the lyrics which are your typical troubled relationship explorations: every now and then, though, there'll be a real gem of a child poetry, as in "Elevator," when she sings, "my tummy rumbles, but there's

Turn to ALBUMS, page 8

Oscars cut down, audiences rejoice

By Susan King
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD - Faster, shorter and no dance numbers. That's the promise from the new producers of the 72nd annual Academy Awards, who are in the throes of designing a streamlined ceremony for viewers tuning in to watch the live telecast March 26.

"I hate to use this cliche, but we want to take the show into the 21st century," Lili Fini Zanuck says. Fini Zanuck is producing the show with her husband, Richard D. Zanuck. The duo have their own Oscar at home, one they received for producing the 1989 best film, "Driving Miss Daisy."

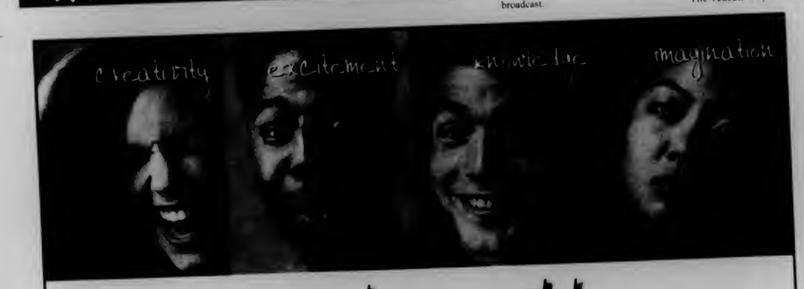
For the Zanucks, who have taken up the baton from nine-time Oscar producer Gil Cates, the Oscar telecast will be a night of firsts - their first go at producing an awards show and their first time overseeing a live broadcast.

"We want to reflect the motion pictures on which are being made today," says Fini Zanuck, 45.

Reflecting the world of films today meant dropping one Academy Awards tradition from the three-hour show at the Shrine Auditorium in Los Angeles - the dance numbers. In recent years, the huge production extravaganzas have been roundly criticized and, coupled with the equally traditional handful of overly long acceptance speeches, helped drag the ceremony past its scheduled running time.

"It's not that we have anything against choreography," she explains, "but it is not In film today. It was representative of our business when you still had dance numbers in film."

The Oscar ceremony also will sound different this year under the guidance of new music directors, Oscar winner Burt Bacharach and Grammy Award-winning Don Was.



"The reason why the music is changing is because loundtracks are changing," Fini Zatuck explains. "Everything doesn't necessarily lend itself to the standard orchestral interpretation. We want to pick up the pace and live it a new kind."

But not everything will be different. Billy Crystal is back for his seventh stint as the Oscar host. With his movie and song parodies, Crystal has proven to be one of the most popular hosts of the show.

It may be their first Oscar production, but Richard Zanuck says he probably has been present for more Oscar shows than anyone else. The 69-year-old producer began attending ceremonies as a young boy with his father, then-20th Century Fox head Darryl Zanuck.

"My father was always nominated and won three times and was given three Thalberg Awards. Then when I was in charge of the studio, we had three best picture wins - 'The Sound of Music,' 'Patton' and 'The French Connection.' I have been nominated three or four times and then Lili and I bagged one. I have seen it grow from a little humble thing to this huge mega television event."

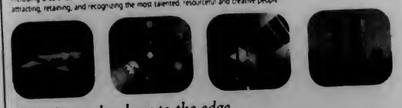
Last year's telecast averaged 45.6 million viewers.

Bring it.

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, to aviation, to engineering and construction. At a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning Night Vision™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits, including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.



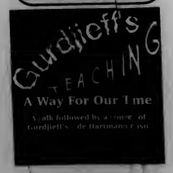
So you can show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We'll be visiting your campus soon — contact your career placement office to schedule an interview. If you are unable to meet with us, please e-mail your resume to resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only, no attachments) or mail to: Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Aeronautical Engineering
- Chemical Engineering
- Civil Engineering and Construction Management
- Computer Engineering
- Computer Science
- Electrical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Management
- Marketing/Communications
- Math
- Mechanical Engineering
- Physics

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.



Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

■ Grammys

continued from page 5

discussing.

Best Group with a vocal

Dave: What, is that translated badly? "Group with a vocal?" Anyway, I'm going with "Unpretty." What can I say; it's just a really nice song, with nicely arranged vocals and all that good stuff. Definitely better than "No Scrubs."

Ryan: Just give me Santana. Wyclef, and a pair of earplugs.

Mike: I would say that "Unpretty" is the best song, and Santana is the best group in that category, so if you made some mutant out of the two, you'd have the best choice.

Adam: To me, It looks like they invented a new category, got rid of the old pop monstrosities, and brought in new monstrosities to take their place. I'm going to with Sixpence and "Kiss Me." I like Unpretty a lot, but if Sixpence were to win anything it would be for this. And I'd like to point out that it was on the "Dawson's Creek" soundtrack.

Dave: Oh yeah, that's a strong endorsement.

Best Pop album

Ryan: Backstreet Boys, again. Too many copies were sold, and the Grammy's love generic music that they can just play over and over again. I think the other stuff is too good to win that category. I'm not big on Sarah McLachlan, but Mirrorball is a good album; I think that everything on that list is better than Millennium, but I think it's going to win.

Mike: I would say that if Backstreet Boys wins in this category, then I'm going to move to Canada with Dave, because the gates of hell are about to open. I have no pick.

Adam: I'm going with Mirrorball. I actual own it; it's the only one I own. Millennium probably will win one, but I think Mirrorball is probably the best of the ones on that list. I think that her live performance is really good, and it's well edited.

Dave: I'm going to agree; it's the best of what's up there, certainly better than Millennium.

Best Female Rock Vocal Performance

Mike: I haven't really heard many of these songs, but since Adam likes Mirrorball so much...

Adam: I'm going to go with Tori Amos. I could do without Sheryl Crow all together, and Melissa Etheridge. I think that song is awful. As much as I like Mirrorball, I think that bliss is well performed track.

Dave: I'm going to agree here, too; no one sings like Tori.

Ryan: The only person in the category I liked is Sheryl Crow, but the "Sweet Child of Mine" cover is worse than the new Guns n' Roses song. Melissa Ethridge and Tori Amos just annoy me, so by process of elimination, Sarah McLachlan wins.

Best Male Rock Vocal Performance

Dave: I can't stand Chris Cornell's singing, never could, and I don't think Everlast's throaty moaning counts as singing...

Adam: Lenny Kravitz has no vocal talent at all. That song was bad news. I haven't heard it, but if it's by Springsteen then it can't be bad, certainly better than the other four songs on the list, so I'm going with "The Promise."

Ryan: I disagreed with everything Dave said. I think Whitey Ford Sings the Blues is one of the best CDs of the year; I think Chris Cornell is awesome. His self-titled debut wasn't that good, but I'm a huge Sound Garden fan. I don't like the Springstein song, and Tom Waits I don't know much about, so I'm going with "What It's Like" by Everlast.

Mike: I would have liked to hear the Springstein and Tom Waits song, but since I haven't I have to go with Chris Cornell.

Best Rock Performance by a Duo or a Group Vocal

Adam: This is first category with any good songs in it.

Dave: I have to pick the Chili Peppers song; I think it's one of Anthony Kiedis's best moments, vocally, and the song in general is outstanding.

Ryan: Black Balloon by the Goo Goo Dolls: it's the only thing I like in there.

Mike: I definitely go for "Scar Tissue." It's one the best songs of the year.

Adam: This is tough category for me, personally I think the Hole album, Garbage album and the Chili Peppers album are three of the best albums to come out over the past two years and I own all three. I think "Special" is about as infectious a pop song as you can get; I think it's a great tune - and I think that "Malibu" is a great song, but I wouldn't pick it as the best song off the album. I love "Scar Tissue" by the Chili Peppers. It's got a kind of liquid sound to it. If I had to pick, I think I would go with "Scar Tissue." I think it's great bass, and the guitar work is, of course, awesome.

Ryan: My personal thing with Garbage is that name says it all.

Adam: I completely disagree. And note that this is coming from the person that chose the Goo Goo Dolls out of all of the above.

Best Hard Rock Performance

Ryan: "Nookie" by Limp Bizkit.

Mike: I guess I'd say "Nookie" by Limp Bizkit. There're much better bands in the category, but "Born Again" isn't a very good song. "Whiskey in a Jar" is a cover song, so I don't even know why It should be nominated.

Ryan: I agree with Mike, most if the bands in the category are better than Limp Biscuit, but that's the best song.

Adam: "Nookie" is the most wretched piece of crap to hit the radio in a long time I could do without Limp Bizkit, which means I have to pick something else and I'm reluctant to do that, I'm going to go with "Freak on a Leash by Korn - it's the only song I can tolerate.

Dave: I don't know why anyone would nominate Buckcherry, all they do is run around trying to look like the Black Crows. I have to go with "Freak on a Leash," although I really don't like it. It's best of a crappy stack.

Best Alternative Music Performance

Mike: I think this is great category. Beck is great, Fatboy Slim is great, but Moby's Play is definitely one of the best albums of the year, one of my top two.

Adam: I'm going with Mutations by Beck. It's probably not his best album, but anything by Beck is pretty damn good. I'd also like to send a shout out to Fatboy slim. They're mindless dance songs, but they're great mindless dance songs.

Dave: Beck, no hesitation on my part. It's a wonderful album, one of the only truly unique things to come out over the past year. Moby, though, should also get some credit.

Ryan: I agree with mike. Moby's Play is one of the best CDs to come out in a long time; that's my obvious choice to win that category.

Best Rock Album

Dave: Tom Petty's still doing stuff?

Adam: I think Californication is by far the most overlooked album of the year. I couldn't believe it didn't make any of people's top twenty lists. I think it's the Chili Peppers' best album. The music is great, it's got a solid concept behind it, and I choose it for best rock album of the year, far and away.

Dave: Californication for me, too. This album is leaps and bounds ahead of everything else on that list, and it's ludicrous that it hasn't gotten more attention.

Ryan: I'm going to end with the same pick I began with. Supernatural is easily the best album on that list. There are too many nominations for it not to win.

Mike: I wouldn't be surprised if Santana did win, but I think that Californication is the best album up there. And I can't believe that Limp Bizkit is on the same list as Tom Petty.

Dancers point toward Africa

By Lonnae O'Neal Parker
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - Constance Naggayi, who lost both parents to the AIDS epidemic that has devastated Uganda, dances with jubilant abandon.

You can see it in her wide grin and the movement of her narrow, determined hips. To her audience, which erupts in cheers and cries to follow her dizzying moves, the dance seems a gift. For her, it is, perhaps, an affirmation.

She is among the 18 orphaned boys and girls who danced across the hardwood stage of downtown Washington's World Bank auditorium Tuesday, enchanting a standing-room-only crowd. Dressed in raffia grass skirts or colorful kikoyi ceremonial tops, the children swiveled and dipped and ululated as headbands flew and drums pounded.

Performers in the Children of Uganda Tour of Light 2000 are among the cultural performers at the Kennedy Center Wednesday and throughout the week in celebration of the National Summit on Africa, a U.S. - organized gathering in Washington meant to help educate Americans about the continent and ultimately to impact U.S. policy. The summit's organizers hope to draw attention to a continent often seen in turmoil and despair and to show that its future can be brighter than its past or even present suggests.

It is an idea these orphans dance to. The Ugandan children are united in tragedy. More than half of them, who range from age 4 to 18 and live in one of Uganda's Daughters of Charity orphanages, have lost both parents to the AIDS epidemic that has ravaged their country. Since 1994, they've toured the United States every two years to raise money and awareness. Death brought them together, but to dwell on that would be to miss the point of their performance.

Which is, of course, life. "Do not try this unless you are in full command of your bones," said artistic director Frank Katoola, as performers executed a frenetic set of gyrations set to a hypnotic beat. According to Katoola, there is a meaning in their music. Meaning, too, in the lives of these children, who seem anything but victims.

"If you moan over it all the time, it doesn't help," he says. "You may not forget the past but learn how to better it. Every song has a word that is educating, telling a story, warning people."

Emmy Anguyo, 16, has five siblings. He lost his father to AIDS five years ago and now his mother is sick. He has been performing Ugandan song and dance since he was 5 and says, "When I'm up onstage I like it and I should make people interested (in learning). What I'm doing has a message of trying to share African culture."

There is a kind of quiet pride to this boy on the brink of manhood, an ease that makes him more than the sum of his nation's tragedy.

"I feel good," he says. Good to be here. Good to be able to support himself. Good to be alive. "The orphans of Uganda, we're from the same country, it's like I'm an ambassador for the others," he says.

Naggayi, 15, who also has two sisters at the orphanage, says she shares her feelings when she dances and sings. She shares her feelings when she dances and tries to help others do the same. "You can introduce them to music and teach them how to dance and how to sing so they can feel happy like you and not be sad. It's not only benefiting me - it's all of us in the orphanage the money can educate us. This way they have the chance."

It is a chance they sorely need. Uganda has been devastated by the AIDS epidemic. According to Alexis Hefley, executive director and founder of the Uganda Children's Charity Foundation, which sponsors the tour, the nation has the largest number of AIDS orphans of any country together, but to dwell on that would be to miss the point in the world - 1.1 million children out of a population of 20 million.

Opera understudy is finally recognized

By Philip Kennicott
The Washington Post

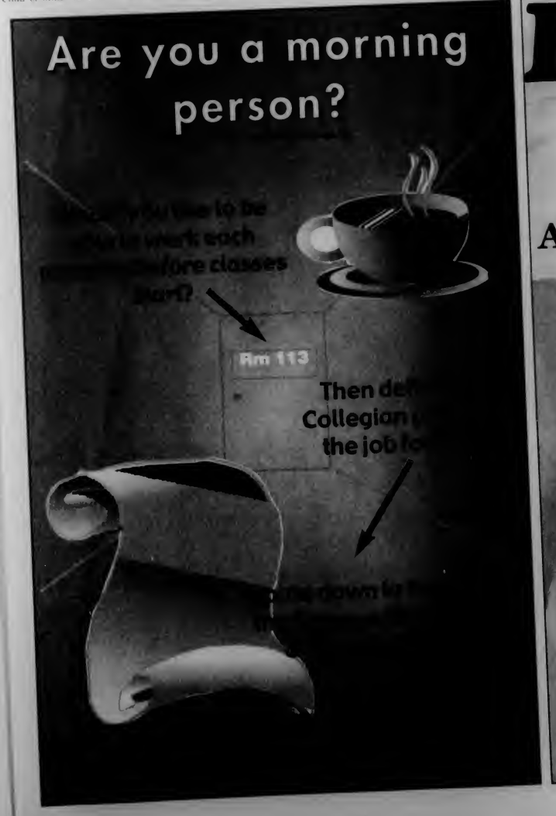
In the last two years, soprano Christine Goerke has watched her future from the sidelines. She's sat through at least 10 performances of Wagner's "Lohengrin" at New York's Metropolitan Opera, not counting rehearsals. She was listening, learning, waiting and observing, ready to take over the role if the lead soprano was unable to perform.

Goerke is still waiting for "things to settle."

"Each year it changes on me," says Goerke, referring to her ever-growing voice. "It's never changed consistently. First it's the middle, then the top, then the bottom."

She laughs. "I'm 30. I have another five years before I really know what's going on."

She may talk about her voice as if it's a house guest, or a friend of a friend, but the young American soprano has already built a substantial career in the opera house, with debuts at the Met, Paris' Bastille Opera and the Santa Fe Opera. She is poised to start singing heavier and more powerful roles, and although she didn't get the chance to go onstage as Elsa at the Met, the role is well within her capabilities.



On the horizon are even larger possibilities. She doesn't want to jinx it, but she can almost taste what it will be like to sing the very largest and most dramatic roles in the repertory, the heroines of Richard Strauss, the larger Wagnerian roles - in short, the glories of the dramatic soprano repertoire.

"I don't like to use the 'd word,' she says, meaning d for dramatic (as opposed to the smaller lyric or spinto soprano voices). "I have to be very careful at this point."

Although the voice is in flux, it's not a random process but seemingly a steady curve of growth and depth.

"On a purely personal level? It's the first sound I've heard come out of a woman's throat since, say, [Renata] Tebaldi that's really given me gooseflesh," says Craig Rutenberg, her regular accompanist. "Her palette has become richer, filled with half shades, quarter shades. Her ability to communicate is stronger."

Unlike most singers on the opera stage, Goerke began in the choral world. She paid monies to work with her idol, Robert Shaw, before the composer's death last year. she had become one of his disciples.

Check us out at www.DailyCollegian.com

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!

ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:

Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

albums

continued from page 6

no guitar/so we have sex instead and we go so far/and we do that for days till we're knee deep in cum/dehydrated exhausted insane." Right-o.

Eventually, all of the songs blend together into a pool of minor-key romantic angst and nerve-fraying vocals. Just listen to Tori. D+

(David Troupes)

THE MOVES
The Moves
Mr. Lady Records

After quite a bit of promotion of their first CD, The Moves plans to actually release it. The promo copy of the CD, from a band that is trying to make a name for them self is all that we have to judge them on, since the release date is not even till the end of March.

The Moves is an all female trio from Northampton, MA, that consists of Sara Shaw, Sara Cooper and Rachel Cohen. All three of women contribute vocal work to the album, which proves to be something quite unique. All of the vocal work is fairly good, and the sound is nice.

A lot of the music on The Moves sounds like the early and heavier stuff that Alanis Morrisette released, such as "You Oughta Know" from her debut album, Jagged Little Pill. Mr. Lady records, the record label for the moves, which is owned and operated by Kaia Wilson and Tammy Rae Carland, say that they started their record label for women because, "We felt there weren't enough women and/or dyke run record labels and there are even fewer affordable and accessible means of distributing work by independent video artists and film makers." Some of the other young bands that the label has signed are known as The Butchies, Le Tigre and The Haggard, all of which are entirely female bands. The label relates the sound of The Moves to 1980's band The Smiths.

The Moves has some strong points that are highlighted by solid female vocal work. It will be interesting to find out how much we hear from The Moves after the CD is released in March. C

(Ryan Benharris)

MAGNIFIED
Stand In Traffic

At first listening, Magnified, with their post grunge-era guitars, and moody lyrics, sound like yet another modern "alternative" band trying to make a name for themselves in the music industry. And although their debut CD, Stand In Traffic, offers a few spatial sounding noises and new-age synth effects, the foursome has little to offer to the wide world of music. To describe their not-so-unique sound, consider a cross somewhere between The Smashing Pumpkins, and Third Eye Blind. Other influences of the band can be easily pinpointed throughout the album; including Weezer, The Cure and the Beatles. In fact, track no. 7, "Stuck With Me," would be extremely similar to a 60's Beatles tune, were it not for the typical 90's lyrics. "I cannot believe a thing/And I cannot fake, nobody's fing with me..."

The track on Stand In Traffic which stands out as being the best, (by best, I mean having the catchiest hooks), is entitled "Monday." The melodic, beat-driven love ballad cries out with jaded feelings of a lovestruck teen; but is too short to really bring the listener into the story, and keep him there. Some of the heavier songs on the album include "Mi Amigo," and "in L.A." which is The band's view on the superficial city of Los Angeles. However, there lacks a much needed sincerity in lead vocalist Chris Lehmann's voice. Instead, his soft vocal melodies suggest a bit of superficiality in of itself. It is almost as if he has the aggression, but can't seem to completely express it...

The rest of the album is simply more of the same. As excepted, there aren't too many surprises. I don't want to be too cynical, the album isn't really bad, it's just nothing special. If you're looking for mid-90's alternative guitar parts, semi-catchy melodies, and shallow lyrics, then Stand In Traffic is for you. However, if you're looking for anything more than that, then I can't recommend that you go buy this CD. B

(Stefan Von Imhof)

VIOLET TIDE
Eddy
Burning Blue Planet Records

The second release from local band, Violet Tide, is a success. As the band plans to spend Friday night at Fire and Water, to officially kick off sales of the soft sounds of their new album, Eddy. Violet Tide have quite a bit of support behind them.

Violet Tide consists of twin brothers Josh and Aaron Pawlek, bassist Brian Karp and vocalist Suzanne St. Amand. Members of the band have not been unfamiliar to the Boston music scene, since Brianh Karp is a founding member of the Boston based band, Letters to Cleo. Karp's drumming skills are very easy to spot on the CD. The drums are not only impressive, but at times say as much about the music as Suzanne St. Amand's voice.

When asked about influences, the band claims that they found heritage in other bands such as Radiohead and Led Zepplin. However, the sound of Violet Tide is quite unique. It is much different from bands in the past that have seemed to depend solely on strong female vocals. Amand's vocal work is excellent, but there is much more lying underneath that really forces the sound forward.

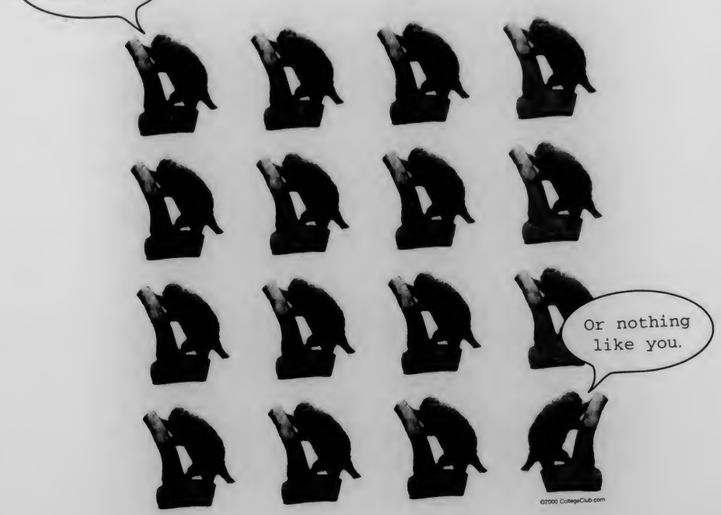
Turn to GRAMMYS page 9

nominees

continued from page 5

"Fatal Tragedy," Slipknot's "Surfacing," Machine Head's "From This Day," Pitchshifter's "Un-United Kingdom," and Snapcase for "Energy Dome."

Best Rock Album: Melissa Etheridge Breakdown, Limp Bizkit Significant Other, Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers Echo, Santana Supernatural, Red Hot Chili Peppers Californication



Including every record made that has a "rock" element to it is a daunting task, so the nominations here are actually decent when confronted with such a task. It would be hard to find more diversity, however, since I don't think Tom Petty and Limp Bizkit will be bustin' phat rhymes together anytime soon. Californication is certainly deserving, and the inclusion of some female rocking in Melissa Etherldge is a welcome change from total male domination. Tom Petty and Santana reek of bands past their prime, and Santana couldn't hope to be in this category without his current popularity. Since the Grammy's seem to have no concept of time, I would go back and nominate Oasis' The Masterplan, since it effortlessly outclasses the lesser nominees in this category.

Best Alternative Music Performance: Tori Amos "To Venus and Back," Beck "Mutations," Fatboy Slim "You've come a long way, baby," Moby "Play," Nine Inch Nails "The Fragile"

This "performance" category actually lists albums and not individual songs, so I have given up trying to understand the logic of the Grammys. This is another category in which the Grammys have made some great choices, and I wouldn't change any of them. I would, however, add Basement Jaxx's excellent album Remedy, and state that among the current choices, Moby's Play is the obvious choice for a win.

Best Rap Album: Busta Rhymes "E.L.E. (Extinction Level Event-The Final World Front)," Missy "Misdemeanor" Elliot "Da Real World," Eminem "The Slim Shady LP," Nas "I Am," The Roots "Things Fall Apart"

I'm not the resident rap expert, Dave Katzoff is, but to me this category seems pretty uneven. Nas and The Roots are both more than deserving, but Eminem is certainly not, and both Busta's and Missy's albums didn't offer much improvement from their previous efforts. Dr. Dre's Chronic 2001 may be too late of an entry, but the solid Wu projects this year like GZA's Beneath the Surface and Inspecktah Deck's Uncontrolled Substance should have had no problem earning a nod.

Share common interests. DiScOVER different views. Join cLubS. Meet fRienDs. MaKe NeW ones. you never knOw what you'll FInD at CollegeClub.com. Log on!

CollegeClub.com it's all U.™

No porcupines, living, dead or otherwise, were harmed in the creation of this advertisement.

albums

continued from page 8

On Friday night, the band will be in Fire and Water for a CD release party for Eddy starting at 10:00pm. I strongly suggest going there, and if you can't make it, go to a local store and pick up a copy. B+

(Ryan Benharris)

BRASSIC BEATS USA
A Skint Compilation
Skint Records

Dance music, techno, electronica whatever you want to call it and whether you love it or hate it, you have her majesty's royal stomping ground to thank for it. Yes, the home of Oasis, Pitchshifter, and the consistent bombed of hot new bands or musical trends, the United Kingdom has graced us with many a new pop culture phenomenon, and electronic music is among the most recent. When we give a ballsy four peeps across the water, we hold at Fatboy Slim. Basement Jaxx, Luke Vibert among many others. Now Skint Records, The record label that gave birth to such influential artists as the Fatboy himself Norman Cook and the Lo-Fidelity Allstars, has come to the United States and has brought a well-coming gift. It comes in the form of a compilation CD entitled Brassic Beats USA and is a collection of tracks from Skint artists and just a taste of what is to come from this creative hotbed.

Lo-Fidelity Allstars raise their hat in/flag at the top of this collection with a psychedelic track entitled "Puppy Phat Number One," a predictably solid offering with a groovy mid-song beat that is sandwiched nicely by the softer, mellow intro and outro. The band of the Skint Records label contributes a track under the working name Midfield General called "Devil In Sports Casual" that features some first-class sample selection over some classic big beat. Reg provides the highlight of the album with an outstanding cut, "Train Jam," which houses an irresistible string sample that opens the song, then leaves, and returns for the thrilling conclusion of the song. Meanwhile, the repeated sampling of "mind the gap" will take anyone who has ever traveled on the London Underground right back there for five and a half minutes. Super Collider mixes things up a little with some live vocals, while Space Raiders go retro on us with "(I Need The) Disko Doktor." Fatboy Slim makes his always-welcome appearance with two tracks his own "Sho Nuff," a great tune with some hilariously unintelligible vocal samples, as well as a pounding remix of the General's "Devil In Sports Casual." A solid compilation, and feel free to get to know some of these artists now, since they undoubtedly will be making some big waves in the US soon. B+

(Micael Delano)

D'ANGELO
Voodoo
Virgin

Since the untimely death of Curtis Mayfield, skeptics of the pop/Soul scene have deemed the music defunct. Perhaps that was what D'Angelo was thinking about while pumping iron and composing song. Motivational factors aside, Voodoo introduces the musical community to a new-school smoothness virtually incomparable to contemporary sound. Full of lush instrumentation, subtle yet syrupy vocals and consistently melodic rhythms, the album is dripping acoustical sensuality.

Five years after his well-crafted debut Brown Sugar, D'Angelo's hip-hop influences still pulsate through his sonic polyphony. "Devil's Pie," his infectiously groovy collaboration with DJ Premier, is a flawlessly poignant piece of pure energy that descends effortlessly into "Left & Right," featuring the verbal vibrations of Redman and Meth. From then on, he slows down the pace and takes us through a series of allegro, dream-like excursions. Progressively, each track unfolds like a harmonious trance, encompassing the musical wizardry of Soul for the new generation and beyond. A

(David Katzoff)

The MCCLAURKIN PROJECT
The McClaurkin Project
Gospo

This gospel CD is actually very different to listen to. It was very lush and quiet, which made it a nice alternative to the music that college students normally listen to.

The first track "Every Beat of My Heart" was medium paced. There was a decent background beat with lyrics that were clear enough to understand. You could not dance fast to this song, but it was fast enough to not put you to sleep.

The second track "Hold Unto Your Name" is similar to the fifth track "Oh, Lord Have Mercy" meaning they were very slow paced. There is no way that you could miss the lyrics, unless you fall asleep, which is a real possibility with this song. Don't listen to this song while studying. Save it for a night that you cannot sleep.

"Healing Grace" is a song that would be nice to fall asleep to. It's very soft, and the woman who sings it Sherry McGhee, has a very nice voice. The whole song is like a prayer. It's a nice alternative to the spoken prayer in church.

"Cry For Help" is a song that you have to turn up the volume, and more than once, to be able to hear relatively easily. The singing is almost too soft. If you can actually hear it, you would appreciate the nice, slow beat. But it takes effort to be able to hear it.

The sixth track "Alright" has a good beat. It's lively, revival music. You want to get up and dance to it.

"Is There Any Way" Is the seventh track. Again, get ready to turn this one up. Not only is it really quiet, it also moves along very slowly. After about two and a half minutes, it picks up, both the volume and the speed. It ends much better than it began.

The eighth track "If You're Looking For Love" is soft, but not nearly as soft and quiet as the previous track. Yet again, it's very slow, but not too slow.

"Said I Would" track number nine is different. There is a definite beat to it, but the lyrics don't match the beat at all. It resembles a rap beat, just much slower and with ill-fitting lyrics.

"We Need Love" moves along nice and slowly. Not too slowly to put you asleep, but not too quickly. It's just a nice song. The chorus is filled with beautiful voices.

"Hallelujah Chorus" What more needs to be said? It's beautiful and uplifting.

If you are into gospel and it takes a lot to put you to sleep, then The McClaurkin Project might be a good CD for you. The majority of it is way too slow for a college student attempting to stay awake while either working or studying. It does have a few nice beats, but it is not the CD for me. D

(Ryan Benharris)

The LOWCOUNTRY BOIL BLUEGRASS BAND
Break Me Off Some Bluegrass
Knot Known Records

Wait, give me a moment to stop giggling over the title. Break Me Off Some Bluegrass. Whew. Okay, there. I'm ready.

Now, I'm aware that most college students these days, especially those at a New England college, probably aren't all that interested in bluegrass music. I happen to be fan, although not a too-enthusiastic one, and so when I sat down to listen to this record for a review, I did so with a decent degree of experience and an understanding its context in the greater realm of music. There are certain elements that combine to make an excellent bluegrass band: instrumental precision, inviting vocals, and musical energy. And, unfortunately, the Lowcountry Boil Bluegrass Band doesn't fare too well in any of those categories.

Their sound is squishy, a bit too messy, and none of the musicianship displayed on the record struck me as exceptional. The vocals, though, are especially problematic. Various members of the band take turns singing lead while the rest sing backup, and none of them do so well; they're perpetually hanging onto the melody by the slimmest of margins. The fourth track, "One Upon A Time," is an especially unbearable example of this. I honestly can't tell if they're trying to harmonize, or if they just can't hit the melody notes correctly. There are so many better bluegrass bands out there — this isn't worth your time. D

(David Troupes)

H. CHINASKI
Smaller-Sized Jar with an Idea
DBG Records

I have an idea. Don't bother listening to the debut release from H.Chinaski. I'm not really sure what kind of music it is trying to be, but I certainly know what Smaller-Sized Jar with an Idea is not: good music. Even the name H.Chinaski is so obscure that you can't help but wonder where they came from and what they are trying to say.

The vocals sound like the screaming that you'd hear at a Cannibal Corpse concert, and the instruments sound like Dave Matthews drank too much, walked into the studio and started breaking stuff. Besides the fact that everything is flat out terrible, it is obvious that they simply do not have what it takes to mix different sounds. Someone like Moby has the ability to take the James Bond Theme Song and make it into a dance party hit. However, H.Chinaski takes the hard sounds of heavy metal and mixes them with the soft sound of The Eagles. You just can't do that.

Beyond the horrible mixing of sounds, comes the worst part of the album, which is the vocal work. You can't even understand one word the lead singer is screaming and it becomes very annoying. I tried hard to find something that I liked about Smaller Sized Jar with an Idea, but I decided that I was going to hurt myself if I thought any longer. I suppose the only bright side was that when it was over I felt like I had sat through the absolute worst music that I could ever find, and anything that I will ever hear again will prove to be worth a little bit of my time. F

(Ryan Benharris)

Bond gadgets still fascinate adoring fans of all ages

By Adrianne De Castro
Daily Bruin (U. California Los Angeles)

"If we're lucky, Q may no longer be around to outfit the James Bonds of the world, but his gear might still be available.

The thought of covert action and conspiracy theories often floods the minds of avid Bond fans, many of whom are fascinated with the movies' high-tech apparatuses.

"I became interested in spy movies because my dad really likes them and we've watched those kinds of movies ever since I was a kid," said Mayura Kona, a second year design student at UCLA.

"I like the whole suaveness of these movies. I just think they're really smooth and they have really cool gadgets," Kona added.

Despite the often unreal twist movies and other media may place on spying, there still remains an exciting and sometimes frightening realistic basis.

"Most of those things they show in the movies are pretty realistic. Some are exaggerated especially in terms of the size but they aren't that far from reality," said Alex Manoogian president of Spy Tech Surveillance.

Another security products company, Spy Stuff, also offers spy tools on the Web. Some of the equipment they sell includes a pen video camera with the camera at the head of the pen and a lens measuring a 1/3 of an inch. The company also sells a neck-tie video camera where a tiny pin-hole-size video camera is hidden amid the busy design of the tie.

Technology has played a large role in the availability and existence of this new equipment. Manoogian said cameras can be less than an inch wide and flat, meaning they can be hidden almost anywhere.

Much of this equipment, though, is not used for the glamorous business of international espionage and intrigue. Instead, most of it has become essential for security purposes.

"In this industry we have a vast amounts of people. The market could extend from anyone and everyone," said Tony Hernandez, a sales manager at Counter Spy Shop of Markair, located in Beverly Hills.

The Counter Spy Shop sells items that include hidden cameras, anti-tapping and anti-bugging equipment to serve larger security purposes. armored vehicles are also available. Clients of the shop include members of the entertainment industry.

"We rent out a lot of this equipment to TV shows, like our video camera sunglasses. Sometimes they need to show sophisticated devices," Hernandez said.

"But we also serve high profile individuals such as actors who need extra security," he continued.

Hidden cameras can be placed anywhere from sprinkler heads to smoke detectors and even plants and picture frames. Cameras can also be added to items already in the home.

"If you don't want to buy something new to place in a room, we also do custom services, just bring an item in, like an alarm clock or something, and we can customize it," Hernandez said.

The burgeoning technology has not only influenced the items that are available but also the interest and need for spying equipment.

"Now you can do almost everything on the computer. It makes people more vulnerable to others knowing about their life and losing their privacy," Hernandez said.

"Because of that paranoia, people will want to do something to protect their privacy, or they want to be able to do some type of surveillance to see who is snooping around on them," he added.

Spying is not only present in the ever-changing technology of today, though. Spying has played roles in both American and international history.

For example, British and American spies used secret codes and ciphers to disguise their messages during the American Revolution. Benedict Arnold composed his letters using a number and word order system where each word was represented by three numbers.

Arnold and John Andre, the recipient of his letters, would pretend to be merchants in order to exchange letters and disguise their real content. Because technology was not as sophisticated as today's, some American spies were said to use a corresponding number for each letter in the alphabet.

Civil War spies included Elizabeth Van Lew, who was allowed to visit Union prisoners captured by Confederates. She gathered information about the Confederates from the captured prisoners and became a spy for the North for the next four years.

With the history of spying and the new technology, many may remain both suspicious and intrigued by the craft. Though technology does allow for people to protect their privacy to a great extent, there are still limitations on what is legal.

One unexpected question changed Ford's career

By Robert W. Welkos
Los Angeles Times

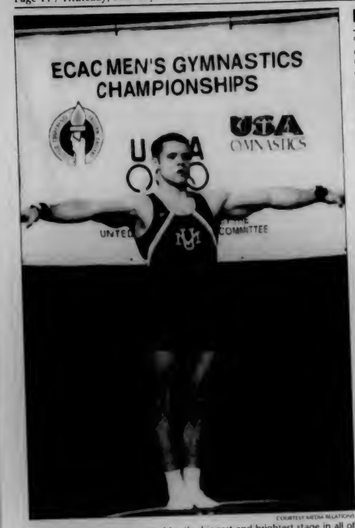
HOLLYWOOD - The funny thing about Harrison Ford's acting career is that it might never have materialized the way it did, had he not stopped in a men's room one day at Columbia Pictures.

As Ford tells it, he was doing a play in Laguna Beach, Calif., in the mid-1960s and went to the studio to interview with a casting director, who took out a 3-by-5 card and asked the Chicago native the usual questions put to would-be movie actors: "What's your height? What's your weight? Do you speak Spanish? Can you ride a horse? Thanks very much. Goodbye."

Ford walked down the hall and was about to hit the elevator button when the urge to visit the urinal came over him.

"When I came out, this guy's assistant was running down the hall saying, 'Come on back! He wants to talk to you!' He said, 'Do you want to be under contract?' I said, 'What does it pay?' He said, '$150 a week,' I said, 'Sure.'

"I have no idea why the guy sent that guy after me," Ford now reflects on that fateful moment long ago, "but I do know if I had gone down that elevator, I wouldn't have been worth chasing to the street. There was that much difference."



It would be 15 years before he actually made a decent living at acting, however.

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
Now Featuring Drink Specials
Coors Lite Bottles $2.25
Gin and Tonic $2.00
Michelob and Michelob Light 16 oz Draft - $1.75
THE MONKEY BAR'S UNIQUE MENU FEATURES MEDITERRANEAN AND CAJUN CUISINE
AFTER 10 IT'S TIME TO DANCE
WEDNESDAY - Coming Next Week - LADIES NIGHT
THURSDAY DJ FOOZ spins house music all night long
FRIDAY House Hip-hop and Top 40 music spun by SATURDAY S4B Productions' DJ's Fooz Creme and Uncut
63 N. Pleasant Street 259-1600

BRUISED BODY?
Don't let the tow truck drag your wounded vehicle to their pet place. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass.
586-7250

Michael Douglas
Undependable. Unpredictable. Unforgettable.
Wonder Boys
PARAMOUNT PICTURES ... "WONDER BOYS" ... MICHAEL DOUGLAS ... TOBEY MAGUIRE ... FRANCES McDORMAND ... KATIE HOLMES ... ROBERT DOWNEY JR. ... CHRISTOPHER TOWNE ... SCOTT RUDIN ... CURTIS HANSON
R
OPENS FEBRUARY 25 AT THEATRES EVERYWHERE

Choose the Avenue to Your Future
FASHION AV
RETAIL CAREER FAIR '00
OPEN TO ALL MAJORS!
UMass Amherst
Campus Center Auditorium
Tuesday, February 22, 2000
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
For more information please call 545-5014.
Sponsored by the Apparel Marketing Program, Department of Consumer Studies
UMASS
Companies attending include:
Abercrombie & Fitch
American Eagle Outfitters
BJ's Wholesale Club
Casual Corner
Coach Leatherware
Filene's
JCPenney
Macy's
Nordstrom's
Polo Ralph Lauren
The Children's Place
TJX Companies
Wal-Mart
Yale Genton
plus many others

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Jeff LaVallee may be destined for the biggest and brightest stage in all of gymnastics: the 2000 Olympic Games.

gym

continued from page 14

competition. This is a tough meet with Olympic-like scoring criteria and is composed of the best gymnasts in the nation including prior Olympians. But LaVallee shook that off. He left day one of the competition with an 8th place all-around finish (52.750), advancing him to the final day of competition. But an ankle injury on the high bar the first night impaired his performance the next day.

"The first day went great," LaVallee explained. "I was swinging really well on pommel horse [9.35] but I hit my shins on the high bar, and I really couldn't land very well the next day."

After walking away eighth overall the first day, LaVallee finished up the competition with a disappointing 30th place finish (49.15). But he remains optimistic about his shot at the Olympics. "I know that I can do it," he said. "It just comes down to me training hard. I want to be the best gymnast I can be and if that means going on to the Olympics, then so be it."

Winter Nationals might be over, but there is plenty of gymnastics ahead for LaVallee. The University of Michigan – the No. 1 team in the nation – is coming to town on Saturday, and he's got to lead the Minutemen into battle. He's already muscled his way to the all-time UMass record on pommel horse this season (9.95), so there's no telling what he can accomplish this weekend.

UMass has a very realistic opportunity to make its first-ever appearance at NCAA Nationals this year, which would end LaVallee's collegiate gymnastics experience on a perfect note.

"It's been really great so far," LaVallee said. "It's been a lot of fun. The overall experience has been wonderful. But making nationals as a team my senior year would be a great way to end it."

Nationals or no nationals, LaVallee can walk away from UMass with pride. He has already dominated virtually every score and honor ever to be given to any UMass gymnast, and he could very easily earn a spot on the 2000 Olympic team. So no matter how UMass' season ends this year, the name LaVallee will be in the UMass record books for many years to come.

No easy answers

College hoops continues to puzzle

The madness is approaching in college basketball and for the first time in a long while, there is no clear-cut favorite to make it to Indianapolis and the Final Four in April.

Come to think of it, this season has been like a wrecking ball, with top 10 teams falling faster than Steve Forbes' presidential campaign.

The team that is leading the way in college basketball this season is Cincinnati (a.k.a. Thug U). Center Kenyon Martin is a threat on both ends. In one season, he has gone from being just a dunking highlight reel to an all-around player who can dominate down low, hit the 15-17 foot jump shot and block shots like there is no tomorrow. Oh yeah, he is still pretty good at that dunking thing, too.

David Rose on College Basketball

Head Coach Bob Huggins has melded the presence of Martin in the paint with the sharp shooting of freshman Dermarr Johnson and sophomore Steve Logan to carry the Bearcats to the number one ranking most of the year.

Although they have been great, nobody in the nation, including the Bearcats, wants to play the Temple Owls right now.

Since point guard Pepe Sanchez came back from an ankle injury, the Owls have been on a roll, going 12-1 since his return, including a 73-63 win against Maryland this past weekend. Legendary coach John Chaney has the two things you need during the NCAA tournament: great inside play with Sanchez, Mark Karcher, Quincy Wadley and Lynn Greer. To top it all off, the Owls have that stifling match-up zone that drives teams crazy. Just ask UMass.

Until Fordham scored 81 against the Owls last week, Temple had held eight straight opponents under 61 points.

The key to beating Temple in the tournament is to catch Chaney's troops early, when you have a chance to prepare for that defense. Because if you do not catch Temple early, your chances of catching them later are about as good as my chances of beating my brother Colin in a 100 or 200 meter race.

The surprise conference of the season is the SEC, no longer just a football conference. The SEC can boast 6 teams in the top 25, including Tennessee, which is proving that it doesn't just have a good football team and a good women's basketball team come to think of it, the Vols are just good at everything.

Two overtime wins against arch rival Florida and a 29 point win against Auburn have put the Volunteers in the running for a No. 2 seed come tournament time.

The SEC's 6th entry into the top 25, LSU, is having a best season since the days of the Shaq attack. With its win against Kentucky last week, LSU proved that it is now back in the mix in college basketball.

But don't overlook Vanderbilt, which defeated the Vols this year behind a 31-point game from sharp shooter Dan Laughi.

All this talk about the SEC and I didn't even touch Auburn, Kentucky, and Florida yet. And with space constraints, I won't get into them, either. But six teams will make the NCAA tournament from the SEC with the ACC accepted for years as the best conference in America!

As the season hits the middle of February, here are three of my surprises and disappointments for the year.

Biggest surprise team- Seton Hall. Tommy Ammacker has done wonders with this team. Led by the outside stroke of Darius Lane, the Pirates are now 19-5, 10-3 in the Big East and will be playing in the Big Dance.

Biggest disappointment- UConn. I know they lost Richard Hamilton to the NBA after his heroics in the NCAA Tournament last year, but this team should be better than 9th in the Big East, although to its credit, the Big East might get 6 teams into the NCAAs as well.

Khalid El-Amin has picked up the scoring load, but has gotten little help from his teammates. Also, those who underestimated the importance of Ricky Moore to last year's team can do that anymore. Although El-Amin is a better scorer than Moore, Moore's defense made the Huskies more potent. Without him this year, the Huskies have been vulnerable to teams scoring points on them, something that did not happen last year.

Jim Calhoun has every right to be aggravated with this team's national title one year and then this the next year. I expected better from the Huskies but they have proven to be an enigma this season.

Biggest Disgrace by NCAA, its treatment of Erick Barkley (4 NCAA letters).

I guess my friend a car for an older, but roomier car. I call that a good deal, but the NCAA calls that a violation. WHAT?

That is a travesty that they suspended him, and the sad part is that they can't do anything about it now. Head Coach Mike Jarvis has every right to be as angry as he was over the whole situation.

The NCAA has done a lot of bad things over the years, but this is getting ridiculous. It should have left this one alone. But the organization seems to always have to do something, and sometimes, including this one, its decision is just plain wrong.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

lax

continued from page 14

this weekend's competition during that the Commodores and Hoyas are nationally ranked. "We're definitely looking forward to going down south and playing outdoor somewhat other than outdoor. It's a great time up for [us]."

The young faces for the Maroon and White will take the form of sophomore Christy Andriotis and freshmen Kelli Kurtz and Leslie Pollock, who will benefit from the offensive leadership of seniors Rebecca Minaker, Stephanie Pavlick and Noelle Gurski.

"Minaker is a great team player and is vital in the transition game," said Barnes, adding, "Pavlick is important at both ends of the field."

Live in New York City This Summer
NYU Summer Housing
May 21–August 12, 2000
Living in an NYU residence hall offers a safe and convenient home base while you are working, taking classes, or doing an internship.
• Minutes from New York's business and cultural centers.
• Apartment-style and traditional residences; single and double occupancy.
• Outstanding sports-recreation facility.
• Over 1,000 day and evening courses.
Apply early to secure a space.
For More Information
www.nyu.edu/summerhousing
(212) 998-4621
Mon.-Fri., 9 a.m.-5 p.m., ET
*Depending on enrollment
New York University is an affirmative action/equal opportunity institution

Apartment Rentals
1, 2, 3 bedrooms in Amherst
Location Location Location
Check them out:
www.amherstlincolnreality.com
or call
Lincoln Real Estate
253 - 7879

"I got mine at ZANNA"
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
Class Begins:
Friday Feb 25 at 6:00pm
Valentine Hall
Amherst College
Act Now, Space is Limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

DELIVERY HOTLINE
549-0077
CHINESE & JAPANESE RESTAURANT
103 N. Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
(413)256-8923
256-8924
Lunch Specials Served Daily
NOW ACCEPTING OCMP!

Support Your Local Hooker
Information Session
Campus Center 163
7:30 pm
Sunday February 20th
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
USA RUGBY
Questions? Call John @ 546-1452
www.ecs.umass.edu/rugby/umass

43rd ANNIVERSARY SALE!
FOUR DAYS ONLY
FRIDAY FEB 18TH - MONDAY FEB 21ST
SAVE UP TO 43%
ATTENTION BANDS!
DRUMMER'S CHOICE
Drum Sticks
Selected Styles
Super Sale
BUY 2 PAIRS GET 10 PAIRS FREE!
(while supplies last)
Bring your CD's on Sat. 19th for 99.3 ROCKS
DEMO COMPETITION
Big Bang Music Explosion.
At least one band will get on air
MUSIC MALL
5 SHOPS UNDER 1 ROOF
A Division of Falcetti Music
1755 BOSTON RD. • CALL FOR INFO. 413-543-1002 • SPRINGFIELD, MA.

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

ATTENTION SOCCER PLAYERS: WINTER INDOOR LEAGUES FORMING NOW. Men's competitive Tuesday Night, women's competitive Thursday night, co-rec Friday night. Accepting individuals or full teams. Eight week season and playoffs. Three miles from campus, on bus route. Call Starker 397-9716 starker@javanet.com Breakaway Sports 549-3638.

CANTONES' PIZZA - for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

3 bedroom condos. Gas heat, hardwood floors, bright heated basement with study and laundry area. 1/2 mile to campus, on bus route. April showings for June and September $1450.00 Lincoln Real Estate. No fees charged. 253-7879.

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. April showings for June and September. Lincoln Real Estate. No fees. 253-7879.

One bedroom starting June 1st uptown above Newbury Comics for 2-3 people. Call 256-1422.

Sublet my one bedroom apartment 1 mile from campus. Available 6/00- 8/00. $525.00 a month. Call Kate 253-6955.

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center 545-1995.

VW Jetta 1988 146K, 5speed manual, power window/seat, alloy wheels, great tires. $1950.00. Call 549-4818.

'94 Nissan Maxima. Dark green, good condition. $6000.00. Call 253-6480.

AUTO FOR SALE

'89 Ford Escort. 2dr hatchback, one owner, 5 spd. Blue- well maintained. New Clutch, brakes and tries. 148k, a lot of life left. $1800.00. 413-323-9407.

COMPUTERS

Cannon BJC 4300 color bubble ink jet printer. Creative Cannon software included. laydefayre@aol.com $100.00.

IBM ThinkPad Peint II 366 DXD Ether net. $1600. (413)546-0233 Dan.

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Canadensis, Pocono Mountains, PA. Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, gymnastics, hockey, tennis, mountain bikes, golf, motorcycles, outdoor adventure, ropes, archery, drama, video, photography, fishing, WSI, waterfront activities, arts and crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/21/00-8/18/00. Call (800)832-8228 or apply on-line: www.canadensis.com

Human Services-Relief support needed to work with adults with developmental disabilities, may lead to permanent hours. Hours include evenings, weekends and/or overnights. Required: HS diploma and drivers license. Starting pay is $7.47/hr(for relief), $8.35(for permanent) Locations in South Hadley and Belchertown. Call Mary @ (413)774-2281 ext. 11. AA/EOE

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Wayne for girls-sister half of brother/sister camp in Pennsylvania (3 hrs from New York City). If you love children and want a caring, fun environment we are looking to hire staff from 6/20-8/18/00 for: tennis, basketball, softball, soccer, volleyball, golf, gymnastics, aerobics, cheerleading, swimming, sailing, waterskiing, self-defense, ropes, fine arts (ceramics, sculpture, drawing, painting, silk screening, jewlery), photography, piano, guitar, drama, video, group leaders. On campus interviews March 9th. Call 800-279-3019.

Childcare for handicapped, 15+ hours. Housework, references, car $9.50/hr. 247-5800.

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

PCA's needed for various duties, various hours am and pm. good pay rate. On bus route. call for more information. (413)323-9633 Martina.

Exceptional Summer Opportunity Camp Wayne, NE PA (3hrs/NYC)- Sports oriented Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports: golf, tennis, outdoor adventure climbing/ropes, Mtn. biking, camping, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, Drama, Radio, video. Campus interviews Wed, Mar 8. Please call 1-888-549-2963 or email wayneboys@aol.com.

Open-minded amateur photographer position available. No experience needed. Equipment provided. Call for more details. 584-4665.

Pt/Time janitorial. Hadley, MA. Mon, Tue, Thurs, Fri and Sat 7-10am. 413-748-0028.

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr: $8. ph. 549-8843.

EMPLOYMENT

$Great Opportunity$. Marketing company seeks reliable and money motivated student for credit card promo's on-campus. Excellent commission. Flexible hours. 1-800-592-2121 ext. 300.

Work for exciting college focused internet company at your school. Looking for individual with strong leadership, entrepreneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay, and options! Contact info at uconnections.com

Loaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFE-TIME OF EXPERIENCE
I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. OJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR SALE

Everyone has the right to be safe. Simple And Fast Effective Techniques Company is dedicated to keeping you, and the ones that you care about as protected as possible. One OPTION that we provide is the OC Alternative. OC is a chemical that is more powerful than mace and is not an irritant like pepperspray but an inflammatory agent. The instant inflamation of the breathing tubes, caused by the spray, cuts off all breathing except what is necessary to sustain life. Because it is an inflammatory rather than an irritant, OC effective against all of those who feel no pain, such as individuals on alcohol or drugs. The spray disables your attacker for 30-45 minutes and leaves a UV dye on your assailant for easy identification by the police. We are making the OC spray available in a keychain or pen form. The pen does not write but...it may save your life. Check for our other OPTIONS in this newspaper. If you are ready to make a wise, sound and inexpensive investment into the PROTECTION of yourself and your loved ones, then send a check, cash or money order in the amount of $11.95 for the keychain and/or $9.95 for the pen to: Sensei David Seerung, Aikido School of Self-Defense, 24 George St. Cohoes, Ny 12047. (518)237-0775. Please include $3.00 for shipping and handling. There is also a 15 day money back guarantee on all of our products. Please feel free to check out these OC products or any of our other products at www.securitypluspro.com/RN11112.htm

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

INSTRUCTION

Private boxing lessons with retired pro G. Ojata Bumpus in Amherst. Call (413)256-0364.

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do something different. Pi Lambda Phi Fraternity. Call 549-4411. www.pi-lambdaphi.homepage.com

Phi Sigma Pi National Honor Fraternity is looking for new members. If you have between 12 and 90 credits and a 3.0 GPA come learn more about us at an info ngth 2/15 and 2/16 at 7pm in Campus Center room 904-08. Questions? email psp@stuaf.umass.edu

LOST & FOUND

Found: Watch. Lot 40, Feb. 7th. Call 5-9586.

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in beautiful 5 bdroom house. 10 minutes from Amherst Center. Available NOW. $300/mo. 256-2384.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for roommates with references you can trust? Your friends and your friend's friends might know someone and sixdegrees can help you meet them. www.sixdegrees.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009.

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $229 rt. Europe $169 ow. Other worldwide destinations cheap. ONLY TERRORISTS GET YOU THERE CHEAPER! Book tickets on-line www.airtech.com or 212-219-7000.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches. Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

TRAVEL

LAST MINUTE SPECIALS ON SPRING BREAK!
CANCUN JAMAICA BAHAMAS
SPACE IS LIMITED!
32+ FREE DRINKS!
call me 1-800-293-1443 or go to StudentCity.com

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Women volunteers needed for research exploring high school sex education. 18-28 yrs. old. Participate 30 min. interview. Women of diverse backgrounds encouraged. Kim 587-0273 or kcondon@javanet.com

Actress for short film to be shot locally during February. Heavy emotion needed. No experience needed. Willing to work around class schedule. Call 222-4255 for more info.

Advertise here in the classifieds!

Call us here at The Collegian at 545-3500!

Five College Community Calendar

THURSDAY, FEB. 17

Workshop - There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 5 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services. Men and women are welcome. Call Day at 577-5188 for more details.

SATURDAY, FEB. 19

Comedy - MISSION IMPROVable, the UMass improvisational troupe, will perform at 8 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center.

NOTICES

Community - Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community - Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac1@aol.com or Caleb at 587-3740 by March 5.

Help - From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. Student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Submissions - Short Cuts, UMass' short story journal, is currently accepting prose submissions for its second annual issue. The deadline is March 1. For more information call Matt at 549-1055, or email submissions and questions to shortstory@acad.umass.edu.

Support - A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone pre-screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5516 if interested.

Support - AL-ANON and AL-ATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!
*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store · UMass Campus Center · 413-545-2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER — Just another way that WE GIVE 100%
We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN 4 Hosting Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WCCH & HSCN
14	TV Land
15	International
16	UMass Academic TV
17	WB/New Haven
18	Sundance
19	The Learning Channel
20	UVC-TV19
21	NBC/40 Springfield
22	Travel to Travel
23	NBC/22 Springfield
24	CNN Headline News
25	CNN
26	CNN
27	CNN Fn
28	CNN Si
29	BET
30	College TV Network
31	Univision
32	Comedy Central
33	Cartoon Network
34	TV Land
35	C Span
36	ZDTV (Tentative)
37	Bloomberg Financial Network
38	History Channel
39	HSCN Programming

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 17, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Last Treasures-Ancient World		Mystery! "Touching Evil"		Being Served	Keeping Up	Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News		CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)			Chicago Hope "Painful Cuts"		48 Hours "Mindy's Story"	Late Show
WBZ	4	News		CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)			Chicago Hope "Painful Cuts"		48 Hours "Mindy's Story"	Late Show
WCVB	5	News		ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line? (In Stereo)	Whose Line?		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 Downtown	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sister, Sister		Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Popular "All About Adam"			Charmed "Pardon My Past"		News	Nanny
WHDH	7	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (In Stereo)			Frasier	Stark Raving...	ER "All in the Family" (In Stereo)	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Judge Lane		Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Red TV	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)					News	Tonight Show
WVIT	9	News		NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Friends (In Stereo)			Frasier	Stark Raving...	ER "All in the Family" (In Stereo)	Frasier
WTIC	10	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	★★★ "Independence Day" (1996, Science Fiction)				Frasier	Stark Raving...	ER "All in the Family" (In Stereo)	News
WWLP	11	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (In Stereo)			Frasier	Stark Raving...	ER "All in the Family" (In Stereo)	Tonight Show
WGBY	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		The Old Hse. Dre. on Call		Mystery! "Touching Evil"		"Pepper's Pow Wow" (1996)		Cheirie Rose	Frasier
WGBY	57	World News		ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 Downtown	Nightline
WGGB	40	News		ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)					Star Trek: Voyager	Judge Mathis
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	★★★ "Cobra" (1958, Drama) Sylvester Stallone, Brigitte Nielsen.						★★½ "The Quick and the Dead" (1995, Western)	Dr. Phil
WTBS	42	Rosanne	Rosanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Biography: Dorothy Dandridge				Investigative Reports (R)		Law & Order "Misconception"	Sports
A&E	43	L.A. Law "Full Metal Jacket"		Law & Order "Life Choice"		Crossfire	World Today			Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline (R)
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour									Daily Show	Stein's Money
COM	39	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	★★½ "Mechtouse" (1990, Comedy)		John Larroquette, Kirstie Alley.		Raging Planet "Tidal Wave" (R)		On the Inside	"Casino" (R)
DISC	61	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery		On the Inside "Casino" (R)				College Basketball: Cincinnati at Houston. (Live)		Sportscenter
ESPN	41	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Illinois at Minnesota. (Live)
LIFE	45	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		"Psychodrama"		Chicago Hope "Psychodrama"		★★ "Cries of Silence" (1997, Drama) Kathleen York, Karen Black.		Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	MTV Jams	Beat Suits	Say What Kirke	Say What Kirke	TRL Wanna	TRL (R) (In Stereo)			Celebrity	Celebrity	Loveline	Loveline
NICK	46	All That	Caldog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Sheester	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	Larry King Live		Sexsalesa	Undressed
SCIFI	44	Sliders "Common Ground"		★★½ "Leviathan" (1989, Science Fiction) Peter Weller.				Survivor Science "Tornado" (R)		Johnson Tapes – Uncivil		Rodney King Incident (R)	Jeffersons
TLC	28	Home Again	Home Again	How'd They Do That?				Survivor Science "Tornado" (R)				Jeffersons	I Love Lucy
TNT	48	In the Heat of the Night		ER "Gut Reaction" (In Stereo)		Goodwill Games (Live)						Sports	Bewitched
USA	47	Baywatch		JAG "The Slicker" (In Stereo)		Walker, Texas Ranger						★★½ "Leviathan" (1989)
HBO	50	3:00) "Airborne"	★★½ "Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes" (1984) PG			★★★ "Sleeping Private Ryan" (1998, Drama) Tom Hanks, Edward Burns. (In Stereo)				★★★ "School Ties" (1992, Drama) Brendan Fraser. (In Stereo)		Survivor Science "Tornado" (R)
MAX	51	★★½ "Hard" (1979, Comedy) John Belushi. (In Stereo) PG				★★★ "Whatever" (1998, Drama) Lisa Weil. (In Stereo) R				★½ "Very Bad Things" (1998) Christen Slater. R		Walker, Texas Ranger
SHOW	49	★★½ "Immediate Family" (1989, Drama) Glenn Close. PG-13										★★½ "Fearless" (1993)
												"Adventures of Ford Fairlane"
												★½ "Very Bad Things" (1998) Christen Slater. R	"Linc's (R)

Over the Hedge By Fry and Lewis

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

Get Fuzzy By Wiley

Rodent Rules By George Glass

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Spoot By Maki Banchick

Spunk By Mike LARiccia

I'd say she's pretty cute.
I'd LIKE to get to know her better.
I'd LIKE to get to know her better.
I'd LIKE to get to know her better

Seniors lead way in tough 2000 season

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Christy Ambrose is one of a handful of young Minutewomen who will benefit from the senior leadership available on the women's lacrosse team. The Maroon and White boasts nine seniors this year.

Women's lax headed south

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

Between the years of 1993-1996, the first three years after the two-year dispansion of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, the squad struggled through growing pains with a record of 10-31.

In 1997, a group of recruits came to Amherst that, with the help of the coaching of former Ivy League Player of the Year Francesca McClellan, helped the team begin to turn around. That year, the Minutewomen finished the season 6-7, the best record the unit had registered since 1988.

Two years later, those recruits are seniors. McClellan stepped down in favor of former Holy Cross skipper and UMass assistant Phil Barnes, who takes over with high credentials and expectations. Barnes, who was named Patriot League Coach of the Year in 1998, inherits a bunch that soared to a combined 18-12 mark over the previous pair of seasons. This Saturday, the Minutewomen will take that track record to Chapel Hill, North Carolina, where they will duke it out in the South of the Border Tournament.

Barnes' nine seniors includes the entire defense – a group that ranked eighth nationally in scoring "D", allowing just 7.40 goals each game. Leading the way will be Lynne Young, who has finished each year of her three-year tenure as a Northeast Regional All-American. Among the nine who call the defensive side of the ball home are Young, Melissa Miele, Colleen Wales, Sara MacNabb and Jessica Passanese. Junior goaltender Jen Nardi joins the set having led the nation in save percentage as a sophomore.

"The backbone of our team is our defense," Barnes said. "The group of (Denise) Brey, Passanese, Young, Wales and Miele really set the tone for our overall play. Each player brings something unique to the field that makes us a better team."

This squad will be trying to thwart the likes of national powerhouses like North Carolina and Syracuse this season; two teams that help make up quite possibly the toughest schedule that the program has put together in recent memory. The regular season doesn't begin until March 11, when the team welcomes Harvard to Totman Field, but the Minutewomen are prepared for a workout in this Saturday's exhibition tournament.

"We're going to be playing Vanderbilt, Towson, Georgetown, Colgate and Davidson," Barnes said of

Turn to LAX, page 11

Crooks heats up in Mack's absence as UMass rams Fordham

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

Uh oh.

Diagnosis: Monty Mack, leading

Massachusetts	81
Fordham	72

scorer, Mr. Automatic, out with a 101 degree temperature.

The Massachusetts men's basketball team was to play without its superstar, this in a dim Rose Hill Gym that was tough for visitors to shoot in. St. Bonaventure had fallen in the Bronx as had Atlantic 10 West-leading Dayton. So why, with the team as a whole ailing, should anyone give the Minutemen a shot?

In what was probably the best coaching effort this season by UMass skipper James "Bruiser" Flint, the Minutemen used balanced scoring and tightfisted defense to come away with a convincing 81-72 victory over the Rams to push its conference road record to 4-1.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Shannon Crooks

13 points in the first half, giving UMass a 35-32 at the break.

Crooks, however, did not act alone. The Rams were defenseless inside as the Minutemen (15-11 overall, 7-4 A-10), after being exploited by Xavier in Saturday's 10-point loss, pounded away underneath. Chris Kirkland scored 17 points and grabbed seven rebounds while Kitwana Rhymer scored 12 of his career-high 19 after intermission.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Chris Kirkland

"We got the ball to Kit a couple times and he delivered," Flint said. "Guys scored inside. I didn't think they had anybody inside who could guard Chris."

With the game knotted at 35, Crooks drove left and put it off the glass for two to give the lead back to the Minutemen. Then, after dropping one of two free throws, Kirkland converted a 3-point play to push the lead to six near the nine-minute mark of the second half.

Fordham (11-13 overall, 4-7 A-10) would never dip into the two-possession lead and Crooks put the icing on the cake with a lob to Rhymer with only a few ticks remaining that resulted in yet another 3-point conversion.

Rhymer would give the Minutemen the start they had hoped to get without their senior leader on the floor. He sunk three early buckets to help UMass out to a quick 10-0 not even four minutes in.

The Minutemen make a swing through Amherst for a Saturday matinee with St. Joseph's before playing three of its final four games on the road.

"It was unbelievable. We didn't know Monty wasn't going to play until we stepped on the bus," Flint said. "Everybody stepped up and played."

The Minutemen would hit from all angles and all distances, with Shannon Crooks leading the charge. After misfiring on his first six shots, Crooks settled down, tallying a career-high 29 points, including the Minutemen's final 13 points in the first half, giving

How to slay a giant

UMass out to better Atlantic 10's best

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

George Washington. Famous for surviving a particularly rough winter at Valley Forge, a mighty difficult crossing of the Potomac River, and a lifetime with some crude, ill-fitting wooden teeth.

But all that pales in comparison to a date with the Minutewomen.

The Colonials of GW will have their work cut out for them when they hit the hardwood of the William D. Mullins Center tonight for a 7:00 p.m. women's hoop melee with Massachusetts (10-13, 7-4 Atlantic 10). Despite the fact that the Colonials appear to have a huge advantage coming in (GW sits atop the conference with a 20-5 mark), UMass coach Joanie O'Brien likes her team's chances against these A-10 heavyweights.

Quite simply, what the Minutewomen don't know can't hurt them.

"The thing with GW is that we've played them a lot, and they've become big rivals of ours," said O'Brien in her weekly radio show on WMUA. "But we haven't seen them in a long time. We've got so many new kids on the team that we don't really know [GW] that well, so maybe we won't be so afraid of them."

There is indeed much to fear from the mighty Colonials. After starting the season at 2-2, coach Jack McKeown's crew has won 18 of 19 games, by an average margin of 20.6 points. The Colonials have put up sick numbers on both ends of the court during that incredible streak; the team averages 76.7 points per game on offense and forces right around 25 turnovers per contest. While the fact that only two players on McKeown's roster average double-figures in scoring speaks volume about GW's depth, a closer look at the squad's stats also tells a story of devastating offensive range: the Colonials have lofted an incredible 441 shots from beyond the three-point line and connected on a mind-boggling 39 percent of them (154).

In short, there is no easy way to sum up exactly how dangerous George Washington is.

"They're a team that runs up and down the floor and moves the ball very well," O'Brien said. "They basically play like they've got five guards out there."

The undisputed leader of that five-guard corps is 5-foot-8 senior Elisa Aguilar, an import from Madrid who currently sits at sixth place on the A-10 scoring list with an average of 14.7 ppg. The sizeable two has befuddled opposing defenses by jacking up 153 trifectas on the year, a conference-high 60 of which have found their mark. Aguilar also ranks among the A-10's best in steals and assists, making her a truly lethal weapon for the Colonials.

The job of disarming Aguilar will belong primarily to UMass sweener Alison MacFarland, herself a prolific scorer who has spent her senior season shutting down the A-10's offensive beasts. MacFarland held A-10 scoring leader Susan Moran to only 10 points in UMass' January 29 loss to St. Joseph's, and kept Temple's Nicole Chaszar scorless in two meetings this year. Moran and Chaszar have averaged 16.6 and 8.7 ppg, respectively, this season.)

MacFarland's shimmering defense may actually be forced to take a back seat tonight, however; the New Jersey native rests a mere eight points away from the coveted 1000-point plateau. With even an adequate offensive evening from their 5-foot-9 tri-captain, the Minutewomen will have something to celebrate despite the game's actual outcome. And at this point in a rather trying season, that may make the difference for the Maroon and White.

"Sometimes you reach a point where it's easier to give up than fight through," O'Brien said. "That's when you find out what you're made of, and that's about where we stand now."

Tip-off is slated for 7:00 p.m.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

UMass guards Kathy Coyner (15) and Tonia Thomas will face the somewhat daunting task of neutralizing a "five guard set" when the Colonials of George Washington hit Mullins tonight.

All-American gymnast LaVallee looks for perfect end to storybook collegiate career

By Gary Mendese
Collegian Staff

Of all the gymnasts who have passed through the University of Massachusetts over the years, none has made a greater impact on the sport than a 23-year-old senior from Stafford Springs, Conn. No one holds more school records, both academic and athletic, and there has never been another student who has come as close to making the U.S. Olympic team as Jeff LaVallee.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Jeff LaVallee

His gymnastics career has been a long one. After claiming the USA Gymnastics Junior Olympic all-around title in 1993, his eyes were on the Olympics. He was a member of the U.S. Junior National Team in 1995 and 1996, training with Olympic gold medallist Tim Daggett. And it was in 1996 that the young 20-year-old just narrowly missed the trip to Barcelona.

"Summer Nationals were part of the Olympic Trials process," LaVallee said. "You needed to be in the top 36 to make the National Team, which I did. And the top 14 at Nationals made it to the Olympic Trials. I placed 23rd."

But that didn't stop him. LaVallee came to UMass in the fall, making a long-lasting impression immediately. He earned Academic All-America Honors, EIGI, Rookie of the Year and qualified for the NCAA National Championships as an all-arounder. He came out strong his freshman year, but that was only a preview of things to come.

He sat out most of his sophomore year due to shoulder surgery, but came back late in the season and tumbled his way to the fourth place all-time UMass high on the floor exercise (9.75) and a second place finish in the all-around at the New England Championships. So he managed to tough it out after surgery, but his performances that year couldn't shake a stick at what he accomplished the following year. As a junior, he shattered school records all over the place, earning himself a permanent slot in UMass history.

LaVallee took the spotlight at almost every meet. Before the season ended, he grabbed the all-time UMass record in the all-around competition with a career high of 58.275. He continued on and brought in the third place UMass high score on rings (9.925), vault (9.80), parallel bars (9.90) and high bar (9.90). He led the Minutemen to their first-time appearance at the NCAA East Regional, where he placed third overall. The gymnastics prodigy then advanced to NCAA Nationals and became UMass' first four-peat All-American with a 57.425 in the all-around, a 9.70 on both floor and vault, and a 9.7125 on the rings.

Last year, LaVallee became the most decorated UMass gymnast in history, and still managed to hit the books. He earned Academic All-America Honors for having above a 3.5 G.P.A. and received the UMass Alumni Association scholarship for outstanding academic achievement.

But outside of collegiate gymnastics, LaVallee has had a lot of training to do to try to make the U.S. Olympic team. This past weekend, he went off to Las Vegas to compete in the annual Winter Cup National

Turn to GYM, page 11

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

After a stellar career in which he has shattered nearly every UMass gymnastics record in the books, Jeff LaVallee is looking for a strong finishing chapter at this year's Nationals.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 18 Friday, February 18, 2000

Faculty Senate ponders budget cuts

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Issues regarding the University of Massachusetts budget allocations were once again the primary focus of yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting.

Both accusations and clarifications flew as members of the senate converged to discuss issues that affect the campus as a whole. Chancellor David K. Scott opened the meeting by explaining to those in attendance the necessity for the proposed cuts and his role in specific University decisions. He explained that there was much miscommunication regarding the issue of the budget in the past five years as opposed to the budget that will be going into effect now.

"I would like to reiterate that our concerns are for the budget for next year and not for what happened in the last five years," Scott said.

According to Scott, typically the University receives about a seven percent budget increase, which is normally less than the institution needs. But, this year due to state projects such as the Big Dig, and current and potential tax cuts, the increase has gone down to 4.3 percent and is projected to continue to decrease to 2.8 percent next year.

"We have spent all of the money that we got, we have not put a lot aside for a rainy day," he said. "There are a lot of commitments that we have."

Also addressed in the meeting was the fact that the President's Office and University President William Bulger were not aware of the budget reductions at the University.

Senator James Tate commented that the President's Office and the Chancellor did not seem to be in agreement about the severity of the budget problems facing the campus.

"The President's Office does not seem to harbor the same concerns that you have," Tate said.

Responding to the comment, Scott defended both himself and his association with the President's Office. "There is no disagreement between the President's Office and our office," he said.

Scott went on to say that the University could have dealt with the situation in a number of ways. He explained that one possible approach to the budget change would be to take a risk, not pre-plan for the future and to hope that the situation turns out for the best.

"Reasonable people can disagree as to what approach should have been taken," Scott said. "And reasonable people can disagree reasonably."

Another budget related issue addressed at the meeting was the lack of available classes for students on campus. John Cunningham, a representative for the Provost Office, explained that classes were more difficult to schedule this semester due to the increased amount of students on campus and because many students did not pre-register.

"This year 2,400 students did not pre-register causing some of the tightness felt on campus," Cunningham explained.

Questions were also posed to the Provost Office regarding funding for both programs and for departments. This prompted conversation regarding the budgetary allocations for each department of study. Scott explained that some programs received more financial assistance than other programs based upon their relative importance to the University and their national standing in relation to other universities. He also explained that the deans in each department primarily made these budget decisions.

"There are certainly differential allocations given to different departments," he said. "We have to look at departments that are top-ranked nationally now, we cannot afford to lose the quality of these programs."

The Spanish program was one of the programs that were suffering from a lack of funding.

"I explained to the chair and the dean that we must find a more efficient way to provide the Spanish language to students," Cunningham said.

Other topics that were addressed that related the budget were the elimination of both the Dental Clinic and the Apparel Marketing major both of which were deemed necessary due to the budget constraints that faced the University.

KARA L. SWEIGART/COLLEGIAN

For the students, from the students

People's market, UMass' cooperatively run health food store, is bustling with activity every day. See page five to read more about the history of this independently student-operated business.

Turn to CCN, page 2

CCN opens eyes with co-op fair

By Jessica Silver
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Career Network Field Experience Program held its 17th annual co-op job fair yesterday in the Campus Center basement. The fair brought together students and organizations in a collaborate effort to assist both in establishing contacts and connections.

Some of the organizations that attended the job fair were Ames Department stores, INC, IBM Corporation and The Union News/Sundas Republican.

The co-op program along with the internship programs offer students opportunities to gain valuable experience and also assists those students in becoming more competitive candidates upon graduation.

David Geurs, the enterprise editor for the Union News/Sundays Republican said he feels that the field

WMUA sends buzz

SNET teams with student radio

"Our transmitter is over 40 years old and it is on its way out. It's not supposed to be this old."
-Rich Zekaria, General Manager, WMUA

KARA L. SWEIGART/COLLEGIAN

WMUAs Community Representative Kevin Moriarty, General Manager Richard Ezra Zekaria, and Program Manager M. Charles Barrett.

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Staff

WMUA, the student-run radio station of the University of Massachusetts will be putting its antenna for its new transmitter on top of the Southern New England Telephone tower (SNET) that will be built in the Orchard Hill residential area.

The tower will be used to provide cellular phone service for SNET and other cellular phone companies. The tower will be replacing a preexisting tower that SNET has, situated near the Observatory on the UMass campus.

Rich Zekaria, General Manager for WMUA said that this is the biggest thing to happen to WMUA in a long time.

"Our transmitter is over 40 years old and it is on its way out. It's not supposed to be this old. Luckily we found this sight and raised the money," Zekaria said.

SNET is donating the tower that will save the station around $10,000 dollars on the project.

According to Glenn Siegel, WMUA Advisor "What [SNET] proposed to the University was to take that tower down but to put another up of roughly the same height."

"The tower will be slightly higher," Siegel said "but the wattage will not be increased. [WMUA] may have to lower the wattage [of the transmitter], so not to interfere with other stations."

Zekaria said that this project has been a "really good experience to be a part of." The UMass Student Government Association, "was really helpful with getting a loan several years ago [to make the project possible], and SNET was so helpful to us." The whole thing was "a real good organization of people to put this thing together." WMUA raised $20,000 in one year through on air fund raising and other fund raising activities including a poster sale.

The entire project is projected to cost $40,000 dollars and should be completed by July.

Turn to WMUA, page 3

UN worker speaks on Iraq

By Dimitri Oram
Collegian Correspondent

The former United Nations Humanitarian Coordinator in Iraq, Dennis Halliday, spoke at Smith College Tuesday night of his dissatisfaction with the sanctions on Iraq. He described the current U.N. policy of sanctions as "punishment of the people and genocide by the definition of genocide."

Halliday, who had worked for the United Nations for 34 years, resigned to protest the sanctions on Iraq. His reason for leaving was that the sanctions undermine the basic principles of the U.N. declaration on human rights and are "designed to target civilians and not the government."

Iraq has been under sanctions for nearly a decade with what Halliday said are devastating results. Since 1991, over one and a half million Iraqis have died as a result of the malnutrition and disease, over half of them being children under the age of six, according to UNICEF and World Health Organization statistics.

Halliday also said, "we have a history of war crimes." He went on to explain during the Gulf War, U.S. forces targeted civilian infrastructure deliberately setting out to destroy such essentials as electric plants, water systems, and sewage disposal systems. They killed defenseless civilians, buried Iraqi soldiers alive and dropped over 340 tons of radioactive and highly toxic cancer-causing substance, depleted uranium.

All of these actions are in direct violation of the Geneva Convention.

Iraq under the oil-for-food program can sell a limited amount of oil in order to buy food, medicine and needed equipment, Halliday said. He continued that the Baghdad government never sees any of this money.

However, Halliday said, the oil-for-food program does not provide adequately for the needs of the country. All money from oil sales, previously up to $6 billion, goes directly into a U.N. escrow account. From that money, Halliday continued, a third goes to compensate Kuwait and Saudi Arabia even though US Forces did much of the damage. Additional money goes to U.N. overhead and to fund the oil-for-food program. The money remaining goes directly to contracts in order to pay for essentials and humanitarian supplies, with far less than a dollar a day per person for Iraq to care for its malnourished and impoverished population and rebuild its infrastructure.

All items not immediately consumable are subject to a Security Council veto, which the U.S. and Britain frequently use on "dual use" military equipment. Halliday explained to the audience. In the past this included such terrifying items as powered milk formula, which has phosphates in it and could thus technically be used to build a bomb, Halliday said.

Nowadays, it is more limited to things like oil drilling equipment and chlorine. The program is failing miserably, Halliday said. This despite Iraq system of food and medicine distribution under the circumstances is considered exemplary.

Halliday noted that the oil-for-food program is not charity. It is fully funded and paid for by Iraq. He went on to say the program was "designed to be inadequate" and simply continue the impoverishment and suffering of the Iraqi people.

He also rejected the latest U.N. resolution on Iraq as "a resolution designed to fail." The resolution he spoke of, Resolution 1284, allows for the possible suspension of economic sanctions, for up to 120 days at a time, if Iraq meets all requirements. However, the requirements are,

Turn to IRAQ, page 2

SGA makes a motion for more beer

Howe looks to increase limit of 24 beers per student to 30

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

During a meeting Wednesday night the Student Government Association (SGA), passed a motion enacting that the alcohol quantity of age students are legally allowed to carry in the campus residence halls, be changed from a 24-pack to a 30-pack. In addition, it allocated $10,000 dollars was set aside for production costs of Spring Concert 2000.

The motion concerning alcohol changes was brought to the Student Senate by SGA President Jeff Howe. Howe could not be reached at time of press.

SGA Senator Mark Boniface supports the motion and said it is a step towards improvement of the current policy. According to the student code of conduct, of-age students are legally allowed to possess a maximum of one 24-pack of alcohol in the residence halls.

Boniface said this limits students right and access to alcohol because according to him, when the alcohol policy was first investigated, all beers were sold in cases or as a 24-pack. Now, with the popular advent of the 30-pack, the alcohol policy on campus has failed to change with it and Boniface said students are limited to how much alcohol they can hold in their residence hall.

"The policy now is that you can bring nothing more than a case of beer," Boniface said. "When the policy was first investigated, they were sold in cases. They later started selling it in higher quantities. I think the University will understand that the only reason we're [the senate] doing this is that beer is primarily purchased in 30-packs and not in cases these days."

Boniface said this change in policy would be more beneficial to students because they can get more beer at a cheaper cost by purchasing a 30-pack than having to purchase the 30-pack and observe the current policy by disposing of six of those beers.

"If you're 21 and you have the right to drink in your dorm room, six beers isn't going to make that much more of a difference other than on your wallet," Boniface said.

When asked about the administration's reaction, Boniface said he didn't believe that they would express significant opposition to the requested policy change.

"I'm sure they're not keen about it, but I don't think they'll put up significant opposition." Boniface said. "When this policy was instituted it was before 30-packs were being marketed. It's [about] changing policy with the changing times."

With the new alcohol policy effected last semester that enforced the consequences of underage alcohol possession, Boniface said he didn't believe that increasing the amount of permissible alcohol possession would necessary encourage underage drinking.

"I don't think it will have too much effect on that because what the University is trying to cut down on is the underage drinking in the residence halls," Boniface said. "The most important thing is that we're not trying to do this to start a trend to get large quantities of alcohol into the residence halls. It's just that the policy is outdated."

In terms of funding for Spring Concert, Boniface said the SGA ruled to pass a motion directing $10,000 dollars of their funds towards the hidden maintenance costs of the concert.

He said that University Productions and Concerts (UPC) and the SGA have discussed making bids for three musical artists and groups, whose names they cannot release for legal reasons, but in order to maintain those bids, then need more funding, Boniface said.

He stated that this is one of the largest Spring Concert funds they've had in the past with $142,760 dollars directed towards costs of the concert. According to him, last year the funding was at $132,760 and they were still able to bring Spring Concert featured The Mighty Mighty Bosstones, KRS-1, Strangefolk and Cypress Hill to perform.

Residents may take six

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Students responded to the Student Government Association's motion passed Wednesday night to Increase the legal possession of alcohol in residence halls, from a 24-pack to a 30-pack, by saying it would ultimately have no affect.

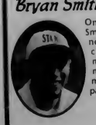
Senior Russian and Eastern European studies major Kirsten Gottwald, 21, said she doesn't believe that the new motion would benefit her at all. According to her, she said students will buy the alcohol regardless of the motion.

"I think it's fine that they're changing it because if you're of legal age then you have to decide how to be responsible or not be," Gottwald said. "I think people already buy more than 30 packs, so it probably wouldn't even matter in the long run."

Sophomore photojournalism major Melissa Schwartz, 19, said she believes that students should have the freedom to decide on how much they will drink and not be limited by the University.

"I think that there should be no limit on how much someone over 21 can have as long as it's not excessive," Schwartz said. "They shouldn't have like 10 kegs in their room, but I think the government's allowing people over 21 to drink should be the precedent of the schools."

Senior education and ociology major Remon Jourdan, 24, agreed with Schwartz by saying that people will drink regardless of restrictions placed on them. He said it is his belief that the university needs to focus its attention more on alcohol awareness education than on trying to monitor the amount of alcohol in residence halls.



"People who are going to drink are going to find their way to drink and if that's what people want then it's a good thing for the students," Jourdan said. "Alcohol education is the problem because I think there needs to be more residential programs on alcohol awareness and I don't think there's enough. That's where we need to direct our attention, instead of limiting the amount of alcohol."

EXTENDED FORECAST

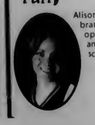
Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 28 LOW: 27	HIGH: 45 LOW: 21	HIGH: 33 LOW: 12

SOURCE: CNN.COM

Notes From Bryan Smith

One thing that Bryan Smith doesn't do is take notes while he's in the campus Center basement. However, he takes mental notes. Pick hi mind on the Ed/Op page.

PAGE 4



Arts Reflects Life

Corporate America looks to Broadway again and this week's video pick in Arts today. You have nothing better to do, so check it out.

PAGE 7

Grand Ole Party

Alison MacFarland can celebrate a win over a ranked opponent and her place among UMass 1,000-point scorers.

PAGE 12

Arts & Living 7
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Classifieds 10
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Campus Perspectives

What do you think of the proposed budget cuts?

Compiled by Mary Grein • Photos by Mark Holloway

Amanda McCreary
Sophomore
Communications

"They suck. I heard in class one percent cuts will cut five TA's and classes will be bigger. It's just stupid and bad."

Salin Nuth
Junior
Management

"I don't like it. I don't understand how they can get an increase in salary when the school itself is getting budget cuts."

Bard Carvalho
Junior
Communications and Theater

"Why are they cutting the budget? That's what I don't know. I've been here three years and all of a sudden UMass is being yanked out like a rug under us."

Ronald Cruz
Senior
Communications

"I think it's unnecessary because they gave extra revenue to the science departments last year and now they are cutting. Plus the fact the president of the University got a raise. The school is looking at the interest of making money, not the students."

Scott W. Bellner
Sophomore
Mechanical Engineering

"I haven't read that much about the subject, but the biggest thing is it wasn't made clear what was happening. They should make it clear. It's a recurring theme, privatization for an example. I feel slighted by the University for not letting student's voice their opinions."

Marni Thompson
Senior
Family and Community Services

"I'm appalled by the way we were notified and it's an atrocity that they eliminated a department. We're doing as much as we can and I think they [the administration] are shocked by the noise."

Small businesses get lift from net

By Leslie Walker
Washington Post

The Internet industry is behaving as if it's going to transform mom-and-pop merchants into e-commerce billionaires — never mind that most big Web sites are still hemorrhaging money or that small sites typically draw fewer visitors than your living room.

Fearful of missing this wave, venture capitalists have poured hundreds of millions of dollars into two dozen Web sites with such names as AllBusiness.com, Workz.com and Bizz.com. They are electronic service centers, providing advice and tools to help small companies do business on the Net.

"The space is heating up," said Michael Shulman, chief executive of AtYourOffice.com, a start-up with 40 employees in the Washington suburb of Rockville, Md. "It's going to have huge business in terms of the potential for profit. We offer a free human resources management tool for small businesses, a background-screening service for new hires, and tools that most small businesses have not been offered before."

How hot are small-business portals? Two weeks ago, NBC Internet Inc. paid $225 million in stock to acquire AllBusiness.com. OnVia.com is on track next week to become the first of these sites to go public in what promises to be a sizzling offering, despite the company's negative gross profit margins. Recently, a California incubator paid $7.5 million to acquire the domain name Business.com to launch yet another entrant. And in Washington, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce is announcing a partnership this week with AtYourOffice.com to provide e-services for its fledgling Web center, ChamberBiz.com.

These portals are in a market-share fight as fierce as the one e-commerce vendors waged over Internet shoppers a few years ago. And just as early Internet consumers weren't too sure they wanted to buy online, much less where they should start, small businesses today seem bewildered by sites vying to help them do e-business.

"It's surprising how many of our clients can't say what their objective is," said Rich Schott, owner of Funmark Internet Advertising, a small firm in Stevensville, Md., that has led more than 1,000 businesses into cyberspace. "The most common response we get when we ask why they want a Web site is 'Our competitors are online.'"

But the smart money says small businesses will figure it out soon and turn into big business for winners of this race. By all accounts, the small-business e-market will be huge. The federal government estimates half the nation's output comes from businesses with fewer than 100 employees. There are 8 million to 28 million of them, depending on how you define small business.

■ CCN

continued from page 1

experience program is wonderful. Geary said it gives students the experience that they need to enter the work world, and that through the program the Union News/Sunday Republican has been able to hire UMass students. He continued to say in this experience the program has been very successful.

Geary said yesterday, "We have more applicants then we have space for. Which gives us a great pick. We have had a lot of luck with this program."

An IBM Recruiter, Steve Welch said he also agrees that the program is helpful. "We at IBM love this program, and we offer six month internships that enable the students to learn about us and for us to learn about them," Welch said. As an example, Welch told of how IBM had just hired one of their interns, a graduate from this past winter and feel that it is working out well.

Doug Gush, a senior at UMass who was at the job fair yesterday looking for an internship felt the fair would be helpful in finding a job for the future. Gush had been through the program before and worked for Johnson and Johnson.

He said that the experience was valuable. "I liked the program so much that I am looking to do it again." Gush received credit from the university for his internship at Johnson and Johnson.

■ Iraq

continued from page 1

according to Halliday, too broad and too vague to be met. In addition he said he feels no business would want to invest under the conditions in the proposal.

He also said he believes that Iraq's weapon capabilities are wildly overrated. Weapons inspectors were successful in destroying the great majority of Iraq's chemical and biological weapons, he said. Halliday noted during the Gulf War, Iraq never used the chemical weapons it had in order to defend itself.

Halliday said Iraq needs a vast new amount of investment, tens of billions of dollars, in order to rebuild. He urged all US citizens to call on their representatives, congressman and government to lift sanctions.

"We are responsible for the foreign policy in Washington as citizens in a democracy," said Halliday.

He continued to say that the United Nations Security Council was in serious need of reform and its five permanent members (Britain, China, France, Russia and the United States) had to let go of some of their power. He said he felt that the United States must work with the United Nations rather than manipulate it.

Halliday concluded his lecture by expressing his belief that weapons must be reduced not only in Iraq, but throughout the Middle East and indeed worldwide.

In the last week, two additional United Nations officials have stepped down in protest of the sanctions.

Are you a morning person?

Would you like to be able to work each morning before classes start?

Then d... Collegian the job

The University of Massachusetts'
Something Every Friday
presents

This award-winning performer has appeared in comedy clubs on the East and West Coast. In her adult style, she tackles issues about male/female relationships that others would consider taboo.

The film "Bone Collector" will be shown following the performance. "Bone Collector" will also be shown on Monday, February 21st at 8pm, in the Student Union Ballroom.

Comedienne "Leslie"
Bluewall Cafe
Friday, February 18, 2000, 8pm, FREE
Visit us on the Web
http://www.umass.edu/events/calender.htm
This program is made possible by a grant from the Campus Activities Trust, Auxiliary Services Department and the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Mirror, mirror, on the...concourse?

Sophomore nursing major Shauna Duarte tries on a jacket in the Campus Center yesterday afternoon.

Japanese line up as new penalties go into effect

By Kathryn Tolbert
Washington Post

TOKYO — Thousands of foreigners in Japan illegally have been lining up at immigration centers for more than two months, trying to leave the country before new penalties take effect today.

So far more than 13,000 people have been given permits for voluntary deportation, with another 7,000 in the pipeline. This constitutes the first such exodus of foreigners who had come to work in factories, nightclubs and construction sites when Japan's economy was booming, but now are struggling in the recession. Some came to Japan illegally, while others are once-legal visitors who have over stayed their visas.

Many said they are eager to go home. "There's been a great change in Japan" said Emmanuel Boateng, who came 15 years ago and has been working in factories. Boateng, who said he is going home to Tunisia, lost his job two years ago. "Since then I've only worked a couple of months a year. Now I have no money." He stood in the line for foreigners with airline tickets, which made him luckier than many.

Those who can leave Japan before today escape a change in the law that says foreigners who have been deported cannot reenter Japan for five years. The current law imposes a one-year ban.

The travel agents across the street from the immigration center was swamped yesterday with customers trying to book flights out of the country. Travel agent Nick Amarasinghe said it was still possible, although seats were getting scarce to Seoul, Beijing, Bangkok and Colombo, Sri Lanka.

The other change in the immigration law would apply penalties, including a fine of $2,800 or up to three years in prison or both, to people who enter the country illegally. Those measures until now had been applied only to foreigners who stayed on after their visas expired.

Immigration officials indicated they would not turn over to the courts people who gave themselves up for deportation voluntarily.

"We surrender!" said a group of Philippine women cheerfully, giving their reason for standing in line in the morning cold waiting for the immigration office to open.

Officials estimated that 270,000 people are in Japan illegally, most of them with expired visas.

The changes in the immigration law are aimed at closing a loophole that allowed foreigners who had entered Japan illegally to escape prosecution if they had been in the country for more than three years.

The government has not dealt yet with the largest issue of whether more foreigners should be allowed to live and work in Japan. There are 1.5 million registered foreigners in Japan, most of them from Korea, China, Brazil and the Philippines. On a case-by-case basis, the Justice Ministry has been granting an increasing number of special residence permits to foreigners, most of them with Japanese spouses or relatives.

But the justice minister made headlines recently by giving permits to foreign families without Japanese relatives who had lived in Japan for nearly 10 years and had children attending Japanese schools.

Immigration lawyers interpreted the minister's decision as relaxing the conditions for staying in Japan, which might benefit other foreigners.

Branch Dividian reenacted, Waco questions to be answered

By David A. Vise and Lorraine Adams
Washington Post

Eight gunmen firing submachine guns and pistols. Grenades exploding near a debris field of broken glass, aluminum and tubs of water. Men with painted faces running from place to place in camouflaged fatigues alongside three tanks. And pilots from the Royal Navy of Great Britain flying Lynx helicopters overhead with special infrared cameras attached to record the entire event.

U.S. law enforcement officials said yesterday they have agreed to all this and more as part of a reenactment of the final day of the deadly 1993 siege of the Branch Davidian compound in Waco, Texas, that left lingering questions about whether FBI agents — or militant officers — fired shots or launched grenades that contributed to the deaths of 74 people.

The reenactment is designed to answer the question of whether flashes visible on videos taken on the day of the siege show gunfire as plaintiffs in a civil lawsuit argue, or are something else, as the FBI has maintained.

No one knows precisely how high explosives will run, but one official said it will cost about $300,000 just to transport the British equipment and personnel across the Atlantic Ocean to Texas. A government official has estimated the entire demonstration will cost an estimated $750,000.

The federal judge presiding over the lawsuit will decide later how to allocate costs between the government and plaintiffs.

■ WMUA

continued from page 1

"[WMUA has] a diverse and eclectic programming, unique to our campus and unique to most other college radio stations. I have learned that is what the beauty of WMUA is. RSOs (registered student organizations) on this campus are the gem of the community," Zekaria said. "I have worked with faculty and professionals on this project. That is what RSOs are all about. This [project] will insure that WMUA will be allowed another 50 years of broadcasting."

Currently WMUA broadcasts at 1000 watts and has a 20 to 30 mile range which should not change when the new tower is built. However the clarity of the signal should increase.

Siegel said that SNET is donating the tower because "having a student group on top of the tower is good public relations."

Cell phone companies have reciprocal agreements allowing other companies to share their tower. The new tower will have four or five antenna bays allowing several other cellular phone companies to broadcast from the tower.

The building will be built on the present location of the SNET tower next the observatory. SNET is currently paying rent to UMass for use of the land and will continue to do so after the new tower has been built.

Staff Meeting for all Photo Staff, Writers and Editors this Monday at 4 p.m. Come or get your pay docked.

WINTER ISN'T OVER UNTIL APRIL!

NOW ONLY $59.99 Was $99.99

NOW ONLY $39.99 Was $79.99

NOW ONLY $49.99 Was $89.99

SAVINGS UP TO 50% OFF
UMASS IMPRINTED WINTER COATS
Sale valid only on coats inside Ustore. Items are priced as marked.

Collegiate Casuals
UMass Clothing for Everyone
M-Th 8:30-6 Fri 8:30-5
Sat. 11 to 4
(413) 545 - 2619

The University Store
Not like a mall... Better.

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!
ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:
THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF
*ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:
Wednesday, March 1st

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Our Opinion
The Money Gap

For the most part, we as Americans live money-driven lives. We fight wars to save a few cents on the cost of a gallon of gasoline, we wear clothes that normally cost $100 or more per outfit, we want the best cars, want to go to the best schools, and of course we want the highest paying jobs. Sure some of us are more materialistic than others, but in general, we all like our money. We all enjoy the fruits that money has to offer us, but those fruits are not available in equal amounts to all members of our society.

While one should never expect all Americans to earn the same income, the disparity between the upper and lower class in this country is disgusting to say the least. We have millions of Americans who can barely afford to buy food, some can't buy clothing, and some are so poor that they can't afford to put a roof over their family's heads. And on the other end of the economic line, we have the Bill Gates-like multimillionaires and billionaires who avoid taxes and spend their "hard-earned" money like water.

Is this implying that the rich should be penalized for their incomes? Absolutely not. Is this statement insinuating that the wealthy did not work hard for their money and that they have easy lives in comparison to their impoverished counterparts? Well, not exactly... not all the time.

Last year, the C.E.O. of the Tufts Insurance Company made over $100 million. Earlier this week, Carl Everett, the switch-hitting outfielder that was traded to the Boston Red Sox, signed a contract for $21 million over three years. The most important man of our society, the President of the United States of America made $250,000 last year. And Bobbie Ice Thompson of Nashville, Tennessee made $13,000 last year from her $6.00 per hour job at WalMart.

See the discrepancy there? Why are so many people filthy rich while so many more are digging in the dumpsters for some leftovers? It just makes no sense.

Did the C.E.O. of Tufts work a lot harder than Bobbie Ice? Perhaps, but did he work 7,692 times as hard? That's what his income compared to hers says. Think about it: 7,692 times more work?! Very unlikely.

And how about Carl Everett and the other professional athletes? Do they honestly deserve that much money? Sure, the fans pay their salaries, but that's only because the ticket prices are so high and people are willing to pay for them. What could a single man who happens to be great at baseball player possibly do with $7 million a year, working only during baseball season? Sure, $21 million is nothing compared to Pedro Martinez's $75 million contract in 1997, but too much is too much.

And what of Bill Clinton? The man that makes the most crucial decisions for our nation only makes a small fraction of what professional athletes and other members of the upper echelon earn annually. The man that protects our very freedom and livelihood makes only 1/28 of what Carl Everett makes. That's it! Now that's disgusting.

Although class differences will certainly always exist in our capitalist society, we can only hope that some attention is brought to this matter and some sort of "capitation" is inserted into "capitalism". It's a shame that there are so many Bobbie Joe's out there in the world that are struggling to get by while others who barely deserve what they have are living in the limelight. Relief can't come soon enough.

Ethan's excellent NYC adventure

With Valentines Day fast approaching, and no special someone to fawn over this year, I decided it would be wise to get out of town. When I yearn for escape from the mediocrity, a train ticket from Springfield to New York's Penn Station is the answer. Usually this results in a memorable experience, and last Friday and Saturday were no different. The following is a true tale; the names have been altered in order to respect the parties involved.

After finishing my Friday class, I was feeling slightly down; the weekend promised to be much like any other: I would be working and sleeping until Monday morning. However this weekend held a special charm, Valentine's Day.

That's right – the holiday you love when you're in love, the holiday that seems like a month when you're not. And to make matters even better I work in a restaurant. This means happy couples, wedding proposals and your humble narrator had his hands in the whole ordeal.

After reviewing my schedule and seeing that Friday night was open, I placed a fateful call to the local Amtrak Ticket dispenser. "Thank you for calling Amtrak can I make a reservation for you" said the friendly and soothing voice of Sue-Ann. My reply was "yes, you certainly may."

I had it all planned out: I would arrive at around 11 at night, head to my favorite club on 52nd street half between 8th and Broadway, a little piece of heaven in the middle of hedonism central called Flout. Float, where the dancing is not confined to the floor and the clientele is so stunning I have more then once forgot my name after entering (which is no problem because when I'm in New York my name is John Cusack, perhaps you saw my last movie).

I walked from Penn station on 34th Street up to 52nd and I must say I looked good. Black on black with a silver tie, sort of borrowing a page from GQ, but hey it worked for me. I crossed the threshold into Float after paying the cover and head to the bar. Backlite bars and flashing florescent tables, cages in the upper level suspended above the dance floor and a laser light show to rival a George Lucas movie. Not more then 5 minutes in I met this woman, a "wow man," she was a killer bee. Swedish, black chunky framed glasses, and deep blue eyes a person could swim in. As I ordered my drink, she put her arm around me and said in a thick Scandinavian accent "my name is Sage." Even though a glance from this pixie could melt butter in a freezer, I'm cool. I used a smooth line to break her down. "Are you religious, because I'm the answer to your prayers," pretty suave huh? Conversation ensues where she informs me that she is an investment banker. (It seems like 6 out of 10 are in New York City).

As I enlightened her as to my impending law school admission, something in her snapped. This is when I found out that Sage hates America and moreover she's not the biggest fan of the legal system. An argument ensued where she used the analogy that lawyers are as useful as "Clogs in Kelp Bed," whatever that means. With that I decided it was time to dance and with the house music blaring in the background of the dark marble floor, it was time to unleash my moves. So as I started to break it down feeling a bit concerned that this woman thought I was a sleazy lawyer. she decided that right in the middle of the dance floor is a good place to pass out! However she was considerate enough to cram her tongue down my throat before lapsing into stumber, which has caused the Flu I now proudly display. At least I hope it's the Flu.

As I carried this limp, blond, investment banker over to a couch, she came around. At this point I wanted to be rid of this woman...

As I carried this limp, blond, investment banker over to a couch, she came around. At this point I wanted to be rid of this woman because in a club like that there are hundreds of interesting, striking women to choose from and this one was beginning to pester me. As she was recovering from her laps of consciousness, she enlightened me that her boyfriend would be arriving at the club in the next few minutes. Then just when I thought she couldn't get anymore charming, she was kind enough to offer coxaine. "Wonderful."

After leaving her in the capable hands of the clubs security, I checked my watch. 1:30 a.m. I still had five and half hours until my train would depart and my stunning dance moves were just clawing to break out. And break out they did, with the bass a rockin' and the lights blinking I toured the club on my heals until I could find another suitable partner. As luck would have, it found me in the guise of a graceful 24-year-old NYU student named Kana. She was much more my style: sober. After showing her that Kevin Bacon has nothing on me, we found a dark, quite corner in Float and spent the remainder of the night discovering our similarities. Have you ever tried to talk in club? Have you ever tried to talk to person in a club whose first language is Japanese? It's not easy.

Kana and I were still mixing when closing time rolled around. I had two hours until I had to be in train 167 headed for Springfield, Mass. Two hours until the harsh reality of Valentine's Day weekend would overtake me. Two hours until I had to prepare to give five star service to droves of couples at my restaurant in Hoboyke, where I would meet cute couples like Bob and Katie, who live in Southwest. Two hours more to remain in Babylon with a mysterious woman who invited me to her place in Greenwich. So yada yada yada and I caught the later train. The experience was most excellent and far from bogus.

Ethan Bergeron is a UMass student.

Ed/op cannot print all letters submitted, especially if they are longer than 500 words.

Appreciating the smaller things

My father, George, or "Da" as I like to call him, gives me sage advice whenever I am feeling down in life, or basically when he sees fit to put his two cents in. Some of the things he tells me really help when I think things aren't going well. Be it problems with school, finding a job, sports, or women problems, my Da is always there to cheer me up and educate me at the same time.

Here are some of the sayings or proverbs that he has bestowed upon me and I'll share them with you all.

"Son, there are no free lunches" is a saying that I keep in the back of my mind at all times. It is actually the title of a short book that Da gave me for Christmas a while back, but nonetheless it is a phrase that rings true. The meaning of it is that, in life, you have to work at everything you want no matter what it is; nothing come easily. Nothing in life is free, and if I want to achieve my goals in life I have to work damn hard to do so.

Another saying that I keep in the back of my mind is "Be still and know." This is a saying that my Da heard from some Cardinal in Boston on WBZ News one night a long time ago, and I guess it just stuck in his mind; now it's it in my mind. I guess that it means you need to just stop and look back at the things you have done in life in order to appreciate what you have or what you still can do.

"Take it all in" is something both my parents repeatedly instill in me. I am the type of person who needs to work on his listening skills more. I have the attention span of a gnat, so sometimes when I'm in a new situation I need to process everything, take it all in. My best friend here at school, Trevor, also rips on me for the same thing, so I guess I have to learn to listen better to those who are close to me.

Wes Wrightson

Those are just three little life quotes that I keep in my mind all the time, and now here is one quote, or personal mantra, that I picked up myself. If any of you all have ever seen the movie Risky Business with Tom Cruise as Joel Goodson then you might know it. Picture this. Joel and his friend Miles (his friend is the guy who plays Booger in the Revenge of the Nerds films) are debating whether or not to throw a party at Joel's house as his parents are away.

Miles: "Sometimes you gotta say 'what the fk?' Make your move... Joel you wanna know something? Every now and then say 'what the fk?' 'What the fk'gives you freedom, freedom brings opportunity, opportunity makes your future... if you can't say it, you can't do it."

That quote means a lot to me because it's all about taking chances or risks in life and not caring about the consequences. If I'm uptown with my buddies having a good time, and I see the most beautiful girl and I don't think I have a hope in hell of her getting digits, I say "what the hell?" I have nothing to lose except my time.

The same idea or concept applies to other areas of life. I am currently applying to some tough jobs, so if I think to myself 'what the hell?' I usually grow a set of balls and go for it regardless of the consequences. I just saw the movie The Beach and that was all about taking chances, so I could relate to some of the choices the main character made. I guess I've come to the realization that life is way too short to be second-guessing things. Take charge of every opportunity that you have and set goals that you think you can accomplish and do them. Accomplishing smaller goals leads to accomplishing larger ones. My mom once told me "change starts with you and then you might change others around you." Parents are wise people too, and we not always agree with all of the stuff they bestow upon us, but my parents have instilled in me things that the words on this page could do not justice. Cool eh?

Take time to appreciate the smaller things in your life because you only have one life and everyday and every decision you make during that day counts. Believe me, I made some pretty dumb decisions in my life, but I know that at least I had the confidence or whatnot to do them. I'm pretty lucky to have as my friends the people that I allow into my life, and every so often, like when you see that guy at the bar thinking of going over the girl of his dreams, say "what the fk?" and make your move, chances are you won't regret it.

Wes Wrightson is a Collegian columnist.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Spring fever will be hitting the UMass campus soon, so professors get ready for students cutting classes in order to take in some rays by the Campus Pond or on the Horseshoe in Southwest.

To my professors, don't worry, I'll be in class while everyone else on this campus is frolicking in the midday sun. If I don't have a tan when you see me it isn't because I wouldn't like to have one, it's because it is impossible to get one if you work at the Collegian.

Let me explain. I spend four hours a day in class, at least four hours a day (in most cases it is seven to eight) confined to the white walls with no windows of the Campus Center basement (that's where the office is), and six to eight hours a night sleeping. I'll give myself the benefit of the doubt and take the lesser of the hours for argument's sake. If I do that, 14 hours of my day are exhausted before I even start.

The problem being, I haven't eaten, done homework, or relaxed. I have to admit something; the latest I get out of class is 2:15. Of course this would lead one to believe that I have the whole afternoon to subject myself to skin cancer, but I say, "You're wrong!"

Bryan Smith

This is where the Collegian comes in.

If you've ever been down to the depths of the Campus Center you know what it is like to have no concept of time because the clocks don't work and the sun doesn't shine. As for my free afternoons, when I'm on campus and if it is at all possible, I avoid leaving and coming back. This is a personal issue of my laziness. When I'm at my apartment I get into a comfort zone and don't want to leave. If this happens, those professors that I told I would be in tonight never see me again.

My mother tells me to not involve myself so much in the paper because it deters me from my academics. I tell her it doesn't, but it definitely does.

Every semester I tell myself that I will not take working at the Collegian personally, but I'm just fooling myself for another day. It's hard not to put your best foot forward when you're a writer, editing, tracing the next day's layout, or arguing with someone to make them do the same things that you are. If that isn't personal then I don't know what is.

If there is one thing that I take from my work at the Collegian (since I'm a Political Science major) it will be the pride that I have gained. The amount of work that goes into putting this paper out everyday is a miracle in and of itself. You have to remember that we are all students, who sacrifice countless hours of studying to give people something to read instead of the textbooks that everyone hates. Everyone who reads the Collegian should come down to see how it functions; it really is an amazing entity.

You have a staff of over 100 students that work for peanuts, most of who don't get paid, to provide our student body, faculty, and community with a reputable source of news. Try to get people to become dedicated when all you can offer them is a pat on the back and a smile for a job well done. That is what the underlying statement is here.

Granted we make our share of mistakes, but it isn't because we lack the effort. Nobody quite understands what it is like at 1:00 a.m. when you have a 2:00 a.m. printing deadline and there is a computer problem. The only thing that most people care about is that the paper is out early enough so that they can do the crossword puzzle during class.

Our publication offers its readers an escape for academia, but shackles its employees in order to do this. I have to keep my phone lines open late at night just in case there is a problem. Not only do I dedicate most of my free time to the Collegian, I have to be able to dedicate what little free time I have aside from my work because of my loyalty to this publication.

We take your complaints to heart, and they come in bunches, but can we get some slack from the outside? God knows we don't get any from the inside. A few calls for doing an exceptional job of covering the SGA meeting would be nice. After all, "coverage is a luxury, not a necessity."

So if you are one of the masses that find the crossword puzzle the most interesting part of our publication then I suggest that you go to the UStore and buy a book of them $1.99. While you're there you can get involved in a privatization argument, too.

I'm not asking for a Pulitzer Prize, I'm asking for a little respect, not just for myself, but the many people that make the Collegian what it is. The students give up a lot to put a paper out everyday, so if you see a writer or anyone else that works here, let them know that you appreciate what they are doing.

And to the professors that say the Collegian is not to be substituted for The New York Times or The Boston Globe, you're right. It is not a substitute to anything at all. It is the student publication of UMass, nothing more nothing less. I would like to add a personal note to the journalism professors (even though I have never experienced this personally, but have heard it through the roots, Get it, we're in the basement?), you should encourage students in your classes to write for us, not single students out that work here and use them as the basis of your teachings of what not to do as a professional writer.

So, in a longwinded sense I have given you the lowdown on the happenings of the Collegian. Take it for what its worth, which should be a great deal because great things happen here everyday. As soon as I signed on, I gave up my studies. Now as I have climbed the ladder that is the Collegian I've sacrificed a tan. Please, if you're going to steal my actual sunshine, maybe you could give my colleagues and I a ray of hope in knowing that what we do is appreciated.

Bryan Smith is a Collegian staff member.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Marc Menichel Finance Manager
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Mary Grein News Editor Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Kara Stokes Photography Editor Alan Fortescue Graphics/Business Advisor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor Ben Alamed Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signet in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Jeff Taylor speaks to the Entreclub

By Shawn Ilinitch
Collegian Staff

On Thursday, February 10, 2000, Jeff Taylor spoke as part of the Entreclub's first event. Taylor, a former University of Massachusetts student, gave students insight as to how he his business began.

Taylor's story is an interesting one. For two years after college, Taylor worked as a full-time DJ, performing at such venues as the Palace in Saugus and the Metro in Boston. In 1984 he joined Search, a tech recruiter. After two years he moved to JWG, an ad agency, before finally starting Adion, his own agency in 1989.

It was here that Taylor first realized the power of a good name. In Adion, al stood for the ads, and ion for a particle of energy, thus ads with energy. While running his agency, Taylor came up with an idea in the middle of the night. He thought of a bulletin board system that would allow companies to find employees.

He founded the Monster Board in 1995. The name came from one of his clients at Adion, who wanted an ad that was not only huge, but monster. His new website became only the 454th web site on the internet. In April of 1994 the company was incorporated. Taylor realized the importance of the name in October 1994.

The name, Monster.com, was a target of much skepticism. Taylor adds, however, "going with your gut is the most important part about being an entrepreneur". Without the name, Taylor believes, the company would not be as successful as it is today, citing name recognition as one of the most important factors of success in any business.

In 1995, Taylor sold his company to TDW, but he remains as CEO of Monster.com and is now a member on TDW's board of directors. Taylor states, "even as a big company, we are making bigger decisions". One of the biggest decisions Taylor made was his first super bowl ad. It is a decision that has obviously paid off. After the ad, Monster.com saw a 450 percent increase in job searches in a 24-hour period. In the same 24-hour period, Monster.com experienced a 350 percent increase in submitted resumes.

The ad was also decorated with awards and honors. It was named to Time's magazine's list of "The Best of Television of 1999". It was also gold winner in the 1999 Account Planning Group awards, a gold winner in the Frances W. Hatch Awards, and silver lion winner at the Cannes Film Festival.

With the success of the 1999 ad, Taylor decided to try his luck again. He used the same advertising agency, Mullen Advertising, and created "the road not taken ad", inspired by the Robert Frost poem. The ad produced good results once again. The site reported a 100 percent increase when compared to the same time last year. Resume submissions also increased by 139 percent. The investment seems to have paid off again.

All of Monster.com's work has paid off. The site receives over 2.6 million unique visitors. This number surpasses its nearest competitor, CareerPath.com, by more than 250 percent. Even more impressive is their power ranking, or the total activity in a given month, which is 1349. This ranking is more than the total combined power rankings than its eight closest competitors.

Taylor was not hesitant to offer advice to college students. He urges them to "use all their tools". When looking for a job, identify the companies that you want you want to work for. He reminds students to highlight their internet experience. Ever the salesman, Taylor suggests that all students post their resumes on-line into site specified. This allows employers to find employees, taking the burden off the applicant.

Jeff Taylor, CEO of Monster.com

The new fashion of Wall Street

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Since the advent of the tech hapo and highly bullish Nasdaq market, which has doubled in less than two years, it has become commonplace for IPOs to increase two or threefold on their first day of trading. In fact, people don't blink as highly anticipated technology stocks soar over 400 percent the only surprise coming when a new record for first day pop is set.

While investors have recently shown slightly more discretion when busing into these highly volatile issues, the most recent crop of IPOs proves there is still a lot of room for IPOs to boom.

Taking advantage of Wall Street's hottest current trend, business to business applications, WebMethods (WEBM) became the fourth best IPO of all time last Friday. The company, which provides both infrastructure software and services for business to business integration, tacked on a whopping 508 percent to close the session at $213. The highest gain for any IPO ever was set late last year by VA Linux Systems (LNUX), which rose 698 per cent on its first day of trading.

However for even WebMethods there are likely two Savvis Communications, which don't get celebrated come IPO day. Savvis (SVVS), which delivers data to financial institutions, including 75 of the top 100 banks in the world, failed to impress investors despite raising the most capital of any IPO last week at $408 million! The stock opened at $27 and change before drifting back down to $24 – it's original offering price.

Likewise Varsity Books.com (VSTY) was met by uninterested eyes and ears in last week's IPO market. After offering shares at $10, below the expected $12-$14 range, Varsity opened higher at $12 before closing at $7/8.

Farther this week another IPO a couple of other IPOs did manage to capture Wall Street's attention. Chordiant Software (CHRD), which provides e-business infrastructure software innovations to help companies stand up, manage its shares at $18, above the expected $14-$16 range, due to anticipated investor interest. The stock's first trade was at $48, and it climbed to over $54 – triple the offering price – on heavy volume. However by day's end, Chordiant had retreated to $9 7/16, a disappointing 114 percent first day gain.

Riding another hot sector, the biotech, Diversa (DVSA) more than tripled its original $24 offering price by day's end. The company, which develops novel enzymes and biologically active compounds, has to increase both the price – from the $13-$15 range – and number of shares it was planning to offer. Still, the company jolted higher by 215 percent.

In the non-tech area, Jeremy's Microbatch Ice Cream (JMIC) went public, and traded fractionally above its $6 offering price to close at $ 3/8.

Some of the other IPOs to watch arriving today include Inforte, Choice One Communications, Netsweb and Gigamedia. Among the group, Inforte appears to have the strongest street buzz. Already being called the deal of the week before a single share has been traded, Inforte (INFT) provides consulting and integration services for (what else?) Internet based applications.

Choice One (CWON) also appears to be peaking investor interest. The provider of broadband data and voice telecommunication services to medium and small businesses has already had to up their price from the $13-$15 range, and appear ready to ride the wave of popularity for communication service providers, especially broadband.

CEO Smith lectures at UMass

By Shawn Ilinitch
Collegian Staff

Students are often treated to guest speakers during class, but it is not often that the guest speaker is the CEO of the largest corporation in the world. On Wednesday, students of the Marketing 425 class "Personal Sales and Distribution Channels," were treated to Jack Smith, University of Massachusetts alum, and CEO of General Motors.

The class, which is taught by Professor Deron Goldman, focuses on the sales and marketing techniques employed by Saturn, one of the many car companies owned by GM. When asked how the idea of the class came about, he takes us back to the beginning. As a Saturn owner, he was, "thrilled with the support and service," that he received from the Saturn dealership in Hadley. One day while expressing his appreciation he was introduced to Mike Ballice, the General Manager of Saturn in the area. Ballis offered Goldman some materials for his class, and Goldman immediately had the idea for the class.

Goldman feels that the class is beneficial for students, explaining that case studies are often used for studies, but because of time constraints, are rarely discussed fully. Believing that Saturn does business, "like a 21st century business is going to have to do business." His goal is to teach sales through Saturn's method.

Smith was introduced by the Dean of the School of Management, Tom O' Brien, and spent the afternoon explaining Saturn's development and what separates them from other companies, including others that GM produces. Saturn began with one simple premise, which was to start over and build cars differently. Throughout the discussion, students learned of strategy and operations that make Saturn unique. Smith explained the wins and losses for the company; one of the lessons being the company did not use lean manufacturing in production. He also told the students that Saturn hurt itself by waiting too long to introduce new types of cars into the market.

The new S1 and S11 our Saturn's first offerings to the field of mid- size sedans. Intellichoice ranked both the Best Overall Value. The new station wagon was also endowed with this award. Some Saturn innovations include the three-door coupe, while GM can boast the new On-Star wireless system in some of their more high-class vehicles. Currently the system is used for wireless cell phone and navigation purposes. In the future, however, Smith envisions much more, including satellite radio and wireless Internet connection.

During the question and answer period, one faculty member questioned Smith as to what he looks for in new employees. He answered with a list that included involvement with activities and he ability to work as part of a team. Goldman's class will end the semester by trying to sell a Saturn to a potential customer. No real customers of course, but perhaps a fellow classmate or some of the Saturn employees.

Equal pay for equal work

Many of you reading this column will be graduating this spring. After graduation, many of you will probably go and work for a company. You will be the future CEOs, presidents and managers at companies. There is one thing that I would like you to think about as you begin your first day at your new job. On average, women are paid 73 cents on the dollar compared to men performing the same job.

You can change this disparity.

Our decisions will determine the workforce that our sons and daughters enter. Do you want your daughter to have to work and extra 5 months to earn the same wage as your son?

In 1998, Equal Pay Day was observed for the first time. On April 3rd 1998, women had earned the same amount of money as men in the same job earned in 1997 alone.

The numbers are even worse among minority women. African American women earned only 67 cents for every dollar and Hispanic women only 55 cents per dollar.

The problem is one of our society. For years, women have been treated as second class, and because of this, for years male dominated companies have not been held accountable for their actions.

The solution begins with us. Here is what must be done:

- Respect your female co-workers. They are your equals. Someday, they may be your boss.
- Once in a decision-making role, ignore the stereotypes and misconceptions that have been placed on you.
- Make your decisions based on the facts, not your feelings you have about gender and class.
- Review the company that you are working for. Make sure that there are no unfair discrepancies in income if there are, fix them.
- Treat women employees as professionals. Do not give them special treatment or exclude them from the decision making process.

As we become the leaders of our country, we have the power to make things change. Hopefully working together we can correct some of the inequalities passed on to us.

Shawn Ilinitch is a Collegian columnist.

UMass President William Bulger(right) giving Smith advice on "cutting the budget."

Winners & Losers

1. SciClone Pharmaceuticals (SCLN): Makes a new drug called Zadaxin, which, when used with current jobs, can be helpful in the treatment of Hepatitis B and C. Over 500 million people suffer from these diseases. Since September, the stock has risen from around $2 to a peak of $10. It is now around $8.
2. Razorfish (RAZF): A designer of corporate websites. Its stock price has soared since September. It has risen to $45 from a low of $20. Yesterday, they joined forces with Audio House, furthering their service capabilities.
3. Applied Materials (AMAT): The stock continues to beat Investor's estimates. Trading at $165 now, the stock was traded at $50 less than one year ago.
4. Cisco Systems (CSCO): They make the guts of the Internet and recently beat analyst's revenue predictions. Their profits were 49 percent higher than last year's second quarter. The stock price has risen from $50 to $130 since March.

1. Yahoo.com (YHOO): On the heels of hacker attacks on Tuesday, Yahoo's stock fell points. As the hacker issue gets resolved, we can only wonder the long-term effects that it will have on internet stocks.
2. Buy.com (BUYX): It is a relatively new IPO. The stock reached $55 before a dramatic fall to $15.
3. Ebay.com (EBAY): A third victim of the hacking incidents. Ebay's stock lost 5 points on the hacking news. After the hacking incidents are cleared up, these three stocks should bounce back.
4. Varsitybooks.com (VSTY): Has been labeled a broken IPO. They originally planned to sell their stock between $12 and $14 a share, but has been forced to sell it at or below $10.
5. B2Bstores.com (BTBC): There future depended on going public, and after doing so, it has seen disappointment. Sales of the stock reached a peak of about $10 but fell back to $8 per share.

Chris Brennan and Shawn Ilinitch contributed to this story.

People's Market continues to thrive

By David Katzoff
Collegia Staff

Music encapsulates the atmosphere, bouncing from each altar/music wall as the caffeinated morning bustle begins. The familiar smells of steamy java and cushiony bagels conjure an unparalled correlation between breakfast and another day of pre-class hustle.

As in on-campus, cooperatively run health food store, People's Market embodies the communal and co-operative existence of a non-profit organization Still, as an independently student-operated business, it maintains the efficiency and discipline of a profit-driven hierarchy. By managing itself collectively via committees and subcommittees, each of the 27 staff members is delegated with equitable responsibility. From brewing coffee and portioning cream cheese, to hiring, purchasing, training and bookkeeping, employees are instilled with the philosophy of togetherness. While requirements such as weekly all-staff meetings and demerits of time (D.O.T.) are intended to bring coherence and structure to the policy system, workers govern and enforce their own regulations by following a mission statement and constitution.

Founded in 1973 by seven undergraduate women, People's began as a simplistic bulk food store with a relatively intimate circulation of patrons. However, with an unrestrained commitment to progression, it has manifested over time into rather lucrative business with a net worth of over quarter of a million dollars each fiscal year; and as a politically non-partisan democracy, its attributes consummate a successful utopia.

Similarly, diversity awareness has also been a long-established characteristic of the Market. The vast majority of its products are purchased from small manufactures and organic farms, where labor is equally exchanged for goods. Although the store aligns itself with the procedures of a corporate institution, People's is vehemently opposed to multi-national corporations infiltrating its product line. Hence, supplies bought and sold by the Market are financially replenished within the communities they are produced.

The aura inside the store itself is wonderfully commingled by messages of awareness and socially conscious vibes. Furthermore, the environmentally congenial attitudes are realistically vilified through progressive action. Proceeds from sales and fundraisers are redirected into the stores growth and development as well as various charity organizations and relief centers, both local and global.

Gravitating around quality food and beverages and selfless principles, People's Market is a uniquely gratifying shopping experience. And, given the decimal potency of its sound system and premium octane coffee, you might find yourself captivated by dance, snack and a heightened awareness of the world.

UMass grad Savel enjoys big career

By Shawn Ilinitch
Collegian Staff

William Savel, a graduate of the University of Massachusetts class of 1955 has had quite an illustrious career. He has served as the CEO of four companies, as well as the Vice President of two others. It all started right here at UMass, where he was an economics major.

After seven years on the sales team of RT French, Savel began his 20-year tenure at Nestle, where he started as a Project Manager. From there, he moved to General Manager of the coffee, tea, water, and later the chocolate divisions of the company. His final position at Nestle was as the Vice President of marketing and sales in Japan, a location where Nestle held 80 percent of the coffee market.

He left Nestle after to become the CEO of the bottling division of General Cinema, a company with revenues in excess of $700 million. The company ran with 17 plants and did 10 percent of Pepsi's business.

In 1985, he joined a then struggling Peter Paul, and Cadbury Company, makers of such projects as the Cadbury Eggs. In four years he pulled the company from the gutter into a highly profitable enterprise, eventually selling to Hershey in 1989.

After the sale, Savel moved into his biggest position yet, CEO of Baskin Robbins. He created an ice cream empire, with over 4,000 stores worldwide, including plants in China and Russia. Baskin Robbins was the third largest restaurant, behind only McDonalds and Kentucky Fried Chicken.

After retiring from the business world, Savel became an adjunct professor at the Peter Drucker Management Center at Clairemont Graduate School in California. After two years, however, the business company ran with 17 plants and did 10 percent of Pepsi's business.

In 1985, he joined a then struggling Peter Paul, and Cadbury Company, makers of such projects as the Cadbury Eggs. In four years he pulled the company from the gutter into a highly profitable enterprise, eventually selling to Hershey in 1989.

After the sale, Savel moved into his biggest position yet, CEO of Baskin Robbins. He created an ice cream empire, with over 4,000 stores worldwide, including plants in China and Russia. Baskin Robbins was the third largest restaurant, behind only McDonalds and Kentucky Fried Chicken.

After retiring from the business world, Savel became an adjunct professor at the Peter Drucker Management Center at Clairemont Graduate School in California. After two years, however, the business company ran with 17 plants and did 10 percent of Pepsi's business.

YAHOO! OUTLOUD presented by Doritos featuring
SMASHMOUTH
plus
LUSCIOUS JACKSON
SHOW UP EARLY - GET FREE STUFF
GO TO
outloud.yahoo.com
Win stuff! Get tour info! Buy tix!
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
LIMITED TICKETS $10 with student ID • Box Office Only
FEBRUARY 28
7PM SHOW • ALL AGES
ALL OTHER TICKETS $15*
ON SALE TODAY AT 10AM!
>>fleescholarships
TEXTBOOKS.COM
CALL FOR TICKETS ticketmaster (413) 773-2500 • (617) 931-2000
Tickets available at Mullins Center Box Office and at all Ticketmaster locations. Please note: Dates & time subject to change without notice.
www.dlclive.com
FROM SFX ENTERTAINMENT
DORITOS and DORITOS Logo are trademarks used by Frito Lay Inc. © Recot Inc 2000

This week's video flashback

By Wes Wrighton
Collegian Correspondent

My video pick of the week is Ben Stiller's hilarious, and sometimes serious, take on Generation X, Reality Bites. Released in 1994, the film stars Winona Ryder, Ieneane Garofalo, Steve Zahn and my personal favorite actor, Ethan Hawke. Ben Stiller proves his worth as a director in his first feature. It's a romantic comedy as well as a stirring look at four college graduates trying to carve out their niche in the real world.

Lelaina Pierce (Ryder), a college valedictorian, is supposed be destined for greatness. Instead, she is stuck in a dead-end job working as a production assistant for the television show Good Morning Grant hosted by John Mahoney (from TV's Frasier). In her free time Lelaina's making a documentary on the lives of her three other friends.

There's Sammy (played to perfection by Zahn who would later star in the George Clooney vehicle Out of Sight), as a guy coming to terms with his homosexuality. There's Vickie (Garofalo), who is working her way up the ladder at the GAP. Then finally there is Troy Dyer (Hawke), a guy who "dropped out of college a few degrees short."

Troy is my favorite because he knows what to say, and when to say it. He constantly spouts out philosophical jargon that makes total sense if you think about it for a while. Troy is madly in love with Lelaina, and everyone knows it except these two. "Life is just a random lottery of meaningless tragedy and a series of near escapes" is my favorite Troy-ism. His character plays gigs with his band Hey That's Me like at local coffee shops, and is basically a starving artist. He is a truly brilliant and gifted person, yet wholly unmotivated. He gives us slackers hope. Lelaina meets Michael Grates (Stiller), and this seriously unnerves Troy, who has true feelings for her, and describes Michael as a guy who "is the reason Cliff Notes were invented."

The film, while at times a true comedy, really is as its best dealing with serious issues. The character of Vickie continually worries about contracting the HIV-virus and goes to get tested. Sammy deals with his coming-out to his family, and Lelaina has to deal with not being the smartest person anymore. At one point she actually applies for a job at the local Burger Barn (David Spade has a cameo as a way-too-stressed manager). Stiller shines as a man who will do anything for Lelaina, but fails to listen to her. Ethan Hawke is the real hero of the film proving he can be a slacker ("...and this, sadly, is where Troy lost his eleventh job during to ask the question are employee snacks subsidized?") trying to find who he really is and wants to become, and winning the girl at the end.

This is a picture of two men with pointy shovels...

Civil Sex, a new play by Brian Freeman explores the life of Black gay Civil Rights leader Bayard Rustin, is running at 8 p.m. tonight at Bowker Auditorium. Call 545-2511 for tickets

Is there anyone listening anymore?

By Justin Davidson
Newsday

NEW YORK — An act of vandalism occurred at the Metropolitan Opera last week during the season's last performance of Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier." As Renée Fleming began the final trio in a silken, ethereal pianissimo, and as the opera's strands of wisdom and buffoonery began to sort themselves out, a cell phone rang, shearing the fragile fabric of sublimity.

It's become an almost daily barrage of noise. Ringing cell phones scarred a Bach recital by the pianist Andras Schiff and, a few days later in the same hall, a performance of Shostakovich by the Emerson String Quartet. Presenters, wary of taking a hectoring tone with their patrons, have so far suffered the noise in silence and so, with rare exceptions, have artists. During the hall's opening night last season, Michael Tilson Thomas was busy eulogizing Gershwin before stepping up to the podium when a phone began to burble.

"I told you never to call me here," said the nimble conductor. Carnegie Hall began inserting into the program a politely worded request to switch off electronic devices. It has had very little effect.

Broadway theaters have resorted to making a firm announcement before the curtain goes up. But even that unpleasant bit of knuckle-tapping is hardly foolproof. When "The Lion in Winter" was in previews last season, a cell phone chimed in as the play reached a climax, ringing incessantly until Laurence Fishburne snarled: "Answer the...phone."

To receive a cell phone call during a performance is an act of violence, not terribly different from aiming a spray gun at a Botticelli. It's worse, in fact, since a damaged painting can be restored. The Met will bring back "Rosenkavalier," and perhaps even that same cast, but those hours had a particular, fragile luminosity, and as they slip into the past, the memory of their perfection is inseparable from the blemish.

Even when no cell phone does go off, the mere knowledge that a high percentage of the audience is packing the dangerous gizmos is enough to inject an intolerable dose of anxiety into the experience of live performance. Musicians and actors have to train themselves to work through piercing distraction, and audiences can no more relax than a visitor to a museum could sink into serene contemplation in the company of a jumpy weirdo with a switchblade.

The communications industry meanwhile, has taken stock of the cell phone's intrusiveness and decided it can be used as a sales pitch. One current television spot shows a grotesquely Teutonic specials, performance being interrupted by a ringing phone. The horned and breastplated soprano hurls her spear at the offending communicant, and the audience applauds. It's not a public service message, though: The camera pans to another supposedly more civil, non-listener, who keeps in touch at the opera by sending noiseless e-mails.

What the commercial makes clear is that ringing phones are not a confined epidemic but one symptom of a generalized refusal to concentrate. We are all multitasking, and simply sitting in silence seems hopelessly uninteractive. Unless we cough, murmur or beep, how will the world know we're there?

Art tends to respond to the uses the public makes of it and already it has developed techniques to cope in the Age of Distraction. Oliver Stone's epic-length movie "Any Given Sunday," for instance, never gives the mind a chance to wander -flapping it back to attention with a constant assault of jump cuts and a high-impact soundtrack loud enough to be corrective.

In the concert hall, some composers have been filling the demand for blandly unassertive orchestral works that will not excessively disturb the audience's meandering thoughts. But others — Thomas Adès, for example — have developed a style of skittering, wheeling, uncertain music, that challenges the ears to keep up. The question is, how long before audiences develop the carpal tunnels to ignore that, too?

Broadway in your own living room

On Wednesday, Broadway Tonight announced that it would premiere as theatre's first global television subscription service in the fall of 2001.

I know no one cares about this, except maybe me. And certainly no one will read this article, except maybe me. But when I found this bit of non-op Playbill On Line, the self-proclaimed official source for Broadway and theatre information on the web, a thought process evolved and prompted me to write.

This theatre on television concept is inevitably going to fail. It not for the ridiculous annual subscription fee of $79.95. BT has a marketing plan that diminishes the value and necessity of theatre.

It goes like this. BT will hire film and television stars for a new play, working under the assumption that these kinds of big name often smooth mugs with really bad actors will draw more support for a particular show. Using a television studio, BT will record this original and unfortunate cast in performance, without the aid of a live audience. In fact, they'll record them before a live audience ever sees the show.

The taped version of the show will be set on a shelf in some lonely BT office. That is until the play makes its out-of-town tryouts, moves on to its NYC opening, maintains a healthy run and comes to an amicable close. Only after the play has left the stage will BT include it in the subscription package.

Some good might come of this. For most of the world, theatre is a very expensive hobby. Prices for Broadway shows are rarely below $60, even for bad seats, making it difficult to see a new play when it's still new. But BT's goal, to find "stars interested in appearing in plays by America's greatest playwrights" bothers me. I don't want to see Calista Flockhart doing David Mamet or Bruce Willis tackling Terrance McNally. Part of Broadway's charm, save recent years with the advent of major corporations sponsoring shows, is that its actors are for the most part well trained, well deserving, and talented. A theatre director doesn't notice people like Christina Ricci because she's weird looking and then casts her on that premise. That kind of luck is reserved for film. But that's another article.

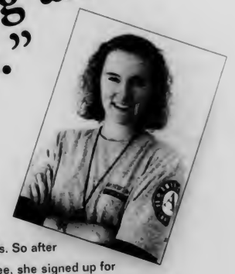
BT seems to forget that all previous ventures to bring Broadway to TV audiences have flopped. Not too long ago there was a brief trial in certain cities of a weekly program in the primetime Sunday night slot featuring current musicals on Broadway. After a couple weeks it was never heard from again. The only networks brave enough to dedicate real time to stage works are small, snobby stations like Bravo and PBS. But those occasions are few and far between. And theatre's biggest night, the Tony Awards, is barely getting televised. Pity draw from actual theatre fans isn't high enough, so CBS is clinging to the depressed hopes of you who tune in because Rosie O'Donnell hosts (we all have to make sacrifices).

And oh yeah, isn't what makes theatre so special the fact that it isn't television? Its fans are fans for that reason. All that magic of the live experience, different every time, seems to...

Basically, my suggestion is for BT to keep its money-hungry, scheming out of most part well trained, well deserving, and talented. A theatre director doesn't notice people like Christina Ricci because she's weird looking and then casts her on that premise. That kind of luck is reserved for film. But that's another article.

BT seems to forget that all previous

Kristi Ceccarossi



...ing to the...
...as long as theatre stays in the region we can hope to maintain its quality and its presence where it belongs. Among the aspiring classics who preceded us, still worthy of reverent and...
...separation from the masses

amc
There is a Difference!
Silence is Golden
In The Entry Court of Sears
Rt. 9 in E. Hadley at Sears
Mt. Farms 4 Mt. Farms Mall
584-9133
WHOLE NINE YARDS: R
Today at (4:40@$3.75) 7:30 10:10
Sat at 1:20 (4:40@3.75) 7:30 10:10
Sun at 1:20 (4:40@$3.75) 7:30 10:10
Mon - Thur at 1:30 (5:30@$3.75) 8:10
SCREAM 3: R
Today at (4:30@$3.75) 7:20 10:00
Sat at 1:10 (4:30 @ $3.75) 7:20 10:00
Sunday at 1:10(4:30 @ $3.75)7:20 10:00
Mon - Thur at 1:20 (5:20 @ $3.75) 8:00
THE BEACH: R
Today at (4:20@ $3.75) 7:10 9:50
Sat at 1:00 (4:20@ $3.75) 7:10 9:50
Sun at 1:00 (4:20 @ $3.75) 7:10 9:50
Mon - Thur 1:10 (5:10@$3.75) 7:50
THE TIGGER MOVIE: G
Today at (4:50 @$3.75) 7:40
Sat at 12:20 2:20 (4:50 @$3.75) 7:40
Sun at 12:20 2:20 (4:50 @ $3.75) 7:40
Mon-Thur 10:30(5:30 @$3.75) 7:00
THE HURRICANE: R
Today at 9:30
Sat & Sun at 9:30
$3.50 'Twi-lite' Show Daily!
* Special Engagement
No Passes or Coupons

Gurdjieff's TEACHING
A Way For Our Time
A talk followed by a concert of Gurdjieff's - de Hartmann music

Choose the Avenue to Your Future
FASHION AV
RETAIL CAREER FAIR '00
OPEN TO ALL MAJORS!
UMass Amherst
Campus Center Auditorium
Tuesday, February 22 2000
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
For more information please call 545-5014
Sponsored by the Apparel Marketing Program Department of Consumer Studies UMASS
Companies attending include
Abercrombie & Fitch
American Eagle Outfitters
BJ's Wholesale Club
Casual Corner
Coach Leatherware
Filene's
JCPenney
Macy's
Nordstrom's
Polo Ralph Lauren
The Children's Place
TJX Companies
Wal-Mart
Yale Gerton
plus many others

MERCYhouse
A church for the next Generation
Sunday nights @ 6pm in the Jones Library just west of the Amherst town center (43 Amity St.)
WWW KNOWMERCY ORG

"I've never felt so strong and capable."

Helping others was a family tradition for Amy Zaleska, of Massachusetts. So after getting her master's degree, she signed up for a year of service with AmeriCorps. She moved across the country to coordinate a hunger program in California, where she developed new skills and decided to pursue a career in nonprofit management. "My project affected so many people," Amy says. "Now I know that one person really can make a difference."
For more information, please contact AmeriCorps Campus Representative Megan McNamara at:
mmcnamar@email.smith.edu
AmeriCorps:
Are you up to the challenge?
1-800-942-2677 www.americorps.org

With blizzard on horizon, skiers challenge the East

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Only time will tell exactly what happens this upcoming weekend when the Massachusetts men and women's ski teams hit the slopes at the Smith College Carnival on their home course of Berkshire East.

Recent history seems to point towards both teams ending the season in spectacular fashion as they have been riding incredible hot streaks of late. Last weekend at the Boston College Carnival in Nesaunes, VT, the women's team pulled out a second place finish in the giant slalom and a third place finish in the slalom while the men finished third in both events.

Two weeks ago at the Brown/Colgate Carnival in Lincoln, NH both teams put out even more startling numbers as the Minutemen came in first place in the slalom and third in the giant slalom, at the same time as the Minutewomen were coming in an even more impressive first in the giant slalom and second in the slalom.

The Smith College Carnival is the last regular season meet of the year for both teams, as the postseason lies directly ahead. In both the men and women's respective conferences the top four schools advance to the USCSA Regionals at Waterville Valley. Right now the Minutewomen rank second behind Boston College while the Minutemen are tied for second with Colby/Sawyer. Only Plymouth State stands ahead of them in the standings.

So far, the men's team has come in as low as fourth place only once in either event. They also have four third-place results, one second-place finish, and a first place showing to their credit. The women's team has one fifth, two thirds, four seconds, and a first place finish for their total score.

Pete Sanford, the Monty Mack of the ski team, continues to shine in the number one position for the Minutemen. He solidified his spot as the go-to guy on the team last weekend by pulling out a second place finish in the slalom and a fourth place finish in the giant slalom. Ken Thomars backs up Sanford in the second position, and has scored in every single meet this season. Beau Gibson and Rich Granger usually fill out the third and fourth positions on the team, and any number of skiers can finish fifth including Jordan Kingdon, Christian Guertin, Pete Glawischnig or Jas Cheronnick.

For the women, Tina King, Carolyn Lewenberg and Lauren Brodey are always fighting amongst themselves to see who can be tops on the team for the week. Lewenberg has especially shined, coming in at least fifth place in every meet so far this year. Last weekend she posted a fifth-place finish in the giant slalom and an eighth-place finish in the slalom while King picked up a 16th and seventh place finish respectively. Brodey scored sixth in the giant slalom and ninth in the slalom despite being sick with the flu throughout the week leading up the race.

■ men's hoops

continued from page 12

through a sore ankle. Crooks left the court momentarily to clear his head, but otherwise he played 39 minutes.

St. Joe's comes in 11-10 and just a game back of the Minutemen for what has become a race for second place in the A-10 East. The Hawks come in after an emotional loss on the road at Villanova, a fellow Big Five member. With Temple already having crossed the finish line, the Minutemen are tied with St. Bonaventure at 7-4 with the Hawks on their heels at 6-5. St. Joe's has an opportunity to make giant leaps by facing the three East leaders in the next two weeks, including both the Bonnies and the Owls at the Hill.

Marvin O'Connor burned the Minutemen for a career-high 28 points in their previous outing, hitting 10 of 17 shots. He comes in as the conference's sixth-leading scorer averaging 17 points per game, teaming up with Naim Crenshaw and Tim Brown to form one of the A-10's most dangerous backcourts. Crenshaw averages over 11 points while Brown's 41 percent clip from downtown is tops in the conference. Brown also leads the team in assists, dishing out nearly four a game.

In the earlier meeting St. Joe's big man Damian Reid got into foul trouble, logging just 16 minutes and springing Rhymer for a solid 12-point, 12-board evening. In addition to Rhymer, Kirkland played what may have been his best game this season, scoring 18 points while adding eight rebounds and six assists.

Luckily for the Minutemen, Mack probably will have recuperated by game time. He went for 19 in the previous meeting, this a year after dropping just 5 of 13 shots in Minutemen's 63-55 victory at Alumni Fieldhouse.

Game time is at 4 p.m.

Lewis mess taints Ravens' finest hour

By Ken Rosenthal
Baltimore Sun

The shame of it is, this should be the Ravens' finest hour. They've signed Shannon Sharpe to the biggest free-agent contract in team history. They've re-signed Tony Banks, Larry Webster and Rob Burmett. ESPN The Magazine actually considers them a Super Bowl sleeper next season.

Finally, it appears the Ravens are on the verge of a breakthrough, the dawning of a new age. But their steady upward climb isn't what attracted live national television coverage yesterday from the team's practice facility in Owings Mills.

The cameras were there for Ray Lewis. And even as the Ravens announce signing after signing, displaying both football acumen and newfound financial muscle, they can't escape the reality that their best player is charged with double murder.

Lewis extended his sympathies to the victims' families, apologized to his family, friends and supporters, adamantly proclaimed his innocence. Team President David Modell nodded at him solemnly as he left the podium. Director of player development Earnest Byner tapped him on the shoulder.

It was a made-for-television event, but not quite a Ravens event, even with Owner Art Modell, vice president of player personnel Ozzie Newsome and head Coach Brian Billick in attendance. Lewis appeared before a stark purple backdrop. The team logo was nowhere to be found.

Lewis, 24, is innocent until proven guilty, and ultimately might be cleared of all six counts against him. But just when the taint surrounding this franchise's move from Cleveland appeared to be fading, along comes this other taint, one that could linger for some time, and can not simply be spun away.

For the first time yesterday, the Ravens conceded they might need a middle linebacker to replace Lewis, who could be on trial when the season starts, or even back in jail. The team didn't announce its intentions directly, mind you. But Billick warned the media that the acquisition of a linebacker should not be interpreted as a judgment on Lewis – a point so obvious, it barely needed to be stated.

As recently as last week, David Modell said, "Ray Lewis is our middle linebacker," as if that ended the discussion. But now that a timetable is starting to unfold, it's clear that Lewis might be unavailable, and that the Ravens need to protect themselves. They'd be foolish not to pursue a linebacker, especially when they've come this far.

Banks returned as the team's starting quarterback last night, signing a four-year, $18.6 million contract. The Ravens are now contracted to have committed approximately $15 million in signing bonuses to four players in the first week of free agency – a marked step forward for an organization that was busy assembling the "$400,000 Club" a year ago.

Is the addition of minority investor Steve Bisciotti making that much of a difference? Well, David Modell did not deny that the Biscilotti money creates greater financial flexibility. But Modell said the Ravens also are running their business better after reorganizing their front office last July, and starting their free-agent planning in November.

At last, it's all coming together – the Ravens are in a sounder financial position, and they also seem to be following a plan. They haven't done anything reckless, like trading two first-round picks for the mouth foer Galloway and paying him a $12 million signing bonus. Every move seems to make football, financial and salary-cap sense.

The Ravens' only loss to this point was backup offensive lineman Everett Lindsay to Cleveland, and they quickly replaced him with Kipp Vickers. They might next lose cornerback Deron Jenkins, but he plays a position occupied by two first-round draft picks, Duane Starks and Chris McAllister.

It stands to reason that there will be other defections from the Ravens' initial list of 19 unrestricted and nine restricted free agents. But they've kept three starters and added another while virtually ensuring that two more – restricted free agents Jamie Sharper and Jeff Mitchell – will return.

The big question now is what will happen at running back, where the Ravens could lose either Errict Rhett and/or Priest Holmes. But should club officials even be concerned? Holmes is a restricted free agent who can be retained by matching any offer. And the Ravens could always take a running back with one of their two top 15 picks in the draft.

Several mock drafts project the Ravens selecting Michigan State wide receiver Plaxico Burress at No.5, but what if Burress goes at No.4 to Cincinnati or a team that trades up for the pick? The Ravens then would be left with Virginia running back Thomas Jones, who could merely turn out to be a superstar.

Morency steers UMass to Rhody for A-10 Championships

By Jon Cormier
Collegian Staff

No one expects much from a collegiate team that has lost nearly all of its key players to graduation. Expectations are low, confidence is down, and coaches, players and media toss around the phrase "rebuilding process" in an attempt to justify underachievement and subpar performance.

Such is not the case for the 1999-2000 edition of the Massachusetts men's indoor track team.

Thus far, the Minutemen have proved themselves to be a gritty, overachieving bunch. Despite losing several top performers in 11 events, the squad has forged through the season with remarkable success, combining the poise and experience of the veterans with the unfettered ability of the rookies.

Now, the time has come for the ultimate challenge.

This weekend, the Maroon and White travel to Kingston, R.I. to compete in the Atlantic 10 Indoor Championship, where the squad will vie for a place among the conference elite. The A-10's, for two games after the features Rhode Island, Virginia Tech, Temple and LaSalle, will provide the team with a chance to prove that it indeed has filled the gaping void that existed at the start of the season.

Coach Ken O'Brien is confident that his team can equal or better its performance from last year, when the Minutemen placed third behind Virginia Tech and Rhode Island. While Virginia Tech is the odds-on favorite to repeat, second place is still up for grabs. The likely scenario will be a dogfight between UMass, Rhode Island and St. Joe's for runner-up status.

Once again, the team's chances rest heavily on the shoulders of senior Vic Morency. Over the past few weeks, with the absence of junior Marc Sylvander (who has been sidelined with an abdominal strain), Morency has emerged as the lone leader of the team.

"Vic is the only person on our team who goes into the meet as a favorite," O'Brien said of his star performer, who will compete in shot put and 35-lb. weight throw. "We're going to rely on his square shoulders to provide a good foundation for us."

O'Brien also hopes to wield what he likes to think of as his secret weapon, sophomore Adrian Zullo. The sprinter joined the team late in the season due to his other UMass athletic duties as a wide receiver on the football team. "He's a little bit of an unknown to the conference right now because he just resumed track," O'Brien noted. "He's only seeded third in the conference [in the 55-meter dash], but he certainly is much better than that."

While the solid core of veterans can provide a firm foundation at the meet, the elders can only lead the team so far. The performance of the rookies could mean the difference between triumph and disaster. While the newcomers have gathered much experience and poise throughout the season, the conference championship provides a completely different, more competitive atmosphere. Freshman jitters could prove to be the squad's downfall.

Despite this fear, O'Brien knows that his team has many advantages heading into the meet. He points to the fact that the Minutemen faced Rhode Island earlier in the season, which gave the players the opportunity to familiarize themselves with the facilities.

The coach also heralds his squad's on-the-road experience as beneficial. While many would view the fact that the team has no facilities for home meets as a disadvantage, O'Brien sees the situation differently.

Whether the squad can match the success of last season will be determined tomorrow. But many would concur – the mere fact that the Minutemen are in the hunt for a second-place conference finish is an accomplishment in itself.

Vic Morency leads the men's track team to the Ocean State for the A-10 Championships.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

PRE-HOLIDAY WEEKEND
DJ REEF
SPINNIN' HIP HOP, REGGAE, AND R&B
10 - 1 AM
fun•food•spirits
THE PUB
amherst
Drink Specials
16 oz Captain & Coke $2.00
20oz Miller Lite Drafts $1.99
"Shot of the Week" Electric Kamikazi $2.00
18 + Welcome
BANGIN' SOUND SYSTEM
MOST ROOOOM TO MOVE IN TOWN

Support Your Local Hooker
Information Session
Campus Center 163
7:30 pm
Sunday February 20th
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
PLAY UMASS RUGBY! PLAY UMASS RUGBY!
USA RUGBY
Questions? Call John @ 546-1452
www.ecs.umass.edu/rugby/umass

THE CITY UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK
The Teaching Opportunity Program
Is Teaching On Your Horizon?
Are you a graduate with a bachelor's degree in mathematics, science or a related analytical field and a strong academic record? Through the new Teaching Opportunity Program (TOP) Scholarships you can build the foundation of a career as an educator teaching in New York City's public schools, earn your master's degree, and guarantee a successful future for thousands of students.
Apply to be a TOP Scholar today.
TOP Scholarships Provide:
A Full Tuition Scholarship for a Master's Degree that will lead to New York State Teacher Certification
A Guaranteed Teaching Position in a New York City Public School
A Fully Supported Summer Preparation Program
For more information and an application call (212) 794-5444/5446 or visit our website at www.top.cuny.edu
The City University Of New York
The Board of Education
CUNY

"I got mine at ZANNA"
downtown Amherst

■ men's swim

continued from page 12

diver Ed Hefferon of Stratford, CT. Hefferon has dominated many of his diving events, garnering first-place finishes in events such as the one-meter and the three-meter, the latter an event in which he owns the school record.

Another swimmer who will be instrumental to the Minutemen's success this weekend at the A-10s is junior Billy Brown, who has consistently claimed victories, established pool records and been named the conference's swimming and diving Performer of the Week.

The competition that the Maroon and White will be facing at the Atlantic 10 is stiff. Although the Minutemen have a solid core of swimmers and divers, and have a respectable winning record, many of their yet undefeated foes will be present.

Still, statistically speaking, the Minutemen are the favorites to win several events. Junior Chris Arsenault of Peabody is the favorite to win the 200-yard freestyle as he holds the conference's top time of 1:42.29. Brown is the top contender for the 400-yard individual medley with his time of 4:07.48, and the odds are in Hefferon's favor as statistics show that he is the most probable candidate to win the three-meter diving event given his score of 441.670 is the top in the conference. Shortly after the Minutemen head home from the A-10's, they will be preparing to do battle at the ECAC Championships in Gloucester, N.J., which will commence on the 17th of February and run until the 26th.

Chris Arsenault leads the men's swimming and diving team into the A-10 Championships.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Maroon and White cooks up recipe for a sweet upset

Aaron Saykin

What is it about ranked teams at home?

First, No. 21 Stanford in December, and last night, to everyone's surprise, No. 25 George Washington. What does this mean?

Simple. The UMass women's basketball team can play ball... and with the best of them. Then why don't they play like that all of the time, you're probably wondering?

Not so simple. A number of things need to happen for the Minutewomen to win against quality opponents. More often than not, only a few do. Those are the givens. But every now and then, the little thing seems to work. Those are the surprises.

This is what happened during their 67-54 win last night. The givens:

1. Playing Hard – Not too complicated. UMass doesn't usually dog it. They fight, but sometimes they look like Big George Foreman chasing a vendor. Hungry, but dann tired.

2. Foul Trouble – Usually was synonymous with death and taxes for the Minutewomen. But like a two-day-old band-aid, it didn't stick last night. Caroline Nehls was the only UMass player to commit four fouls. Most of them were for breathing too hard. I can't think of any other reason why.

3. D-d-d-defense – You'd probably figure that freshman center Jen Butler would set the defensive tone with her muscle in the paint, but in fact, it was the UMass backcourt that shut down the Colonials. Kathy Coyner, Tonia Thomas, and Alison MacFarland could not have defended the GW guards any better. When the second half started, the Colonials couldn't drive and toss the ball back to the set three-point shooters. How do we know? GW's three-point field goal percentage: first half, 45.5 percent; second half, 16.7 percent.

4. Free Throws – This is a had given. The Minutewomen shot better than average last night, 56.7 percent from the line. But, it didn't matter. The game was out of reach by the time the Colonials decided to foul every three seconds.

The pleasant surprises:

1. MacFarland – The senior captain could not have asked for a better night. First, UMass beat a ranked team. Second, she scored her 1,000th career-point early in the second half. Third, that same point gave the Minutewomen a 29-26 lead that they would keep for the rest of the game. Fourth, her teammates and the sparse but loud crowd seemed to feed off the excitement. Fifth, she finished with a game-high 14 points, connecting on five of seven shots... including an important three-pointer to keep the game close in the first half. Not to mention the usually stellar defensive job from the classy veteran.

2. Holy Jaywana Bradley, Batman! – She may have hit only two shots, but both of them bothered GW coach Joe McKeown, who shook his head in disbelief. Bradley canned two runners as the shot clock expired just when the Colonials looked like they had solved the unusually potent UMass offense. Kudos to Bradley for being aggressive.

3. Shooting? – The albatross flew away for at least one night. Minutewoman coach Joanie O'Brien was wondering when the law of shooting averages would actually work for her team. It happened just in time. UMass was a tepid 40.9 percent from the field in the first half. Their 59 percent in the second frame would make any ancient mariner proud.

4. The Thomas leg-lift scouting report – Want to know if Thomas is looking to score? Just watch her right leg when she has the ball at the top of the key. If she lifts it, she's looking to drive and shoot. If she doesn't, she's passing. Tonight she hit a pretty jumper in the face of predictability that gave UMass an 18-point lead with just over four minutes remaining.

5. Bad calls that didn't matter – Coaches never blame, at least openly, blame officials. You usually hear something like: "You know, we didn't play well. We can't blame the refs for that." Well, there were several blown calls, but one of them was on purpose. Coyner was pinned along the right sideline and threw the ball off the stomach of GW guard Lindsey Davidson. The ball shot right out of bounds, but the official gave it to the Colonials. Why? Because he didn't like the playground trick. There was no way he could have missed it. None. Even Coyner, who never complains, approached the ref. It didn't hurt them, though. But I even wanted to say something to the ref, too.

6. Up-tempo offense – Everyone was curious why O'Brien didn't call time out during a frantic sequence in the second half, when both teams were running up and down the floor taking wild shots and turning the ball over. Simple. GW was playing right into UMass' hands. They were tiring themselves out while the Minutewomen were fresh from continual substitutions. Nice call, coach.

7. Smaller was better – The Colonials are known to play a small lineup with four guards on the floor at a time. UMass likes to go big sometimes, playing MacFarland as a big guard. Last night they went small to counter GW, which had no answer... and eventually, no way to pass.

8. Thunder – This time, the Butler didn't do it. It was the other frosh, Amber Sneed, who is called "the quiet storm." She hit two lightning-fast threes to spark an early second-half run that help the Minutewomen pull away.

Does that help?

Aaron Saykin is a Collegian columnist.

Rush suspension damaging to college hoops

The sneaking hand of the NCAA has struck again, suspending Erick Barkley of St. John's for two games after he traded cars with a family friend and absolutely ruining JaRon Rush's next few years of college basketball by suspending him for 29 games.

Particularly vicious punishments to be doled out by a body that supposedly attempts to clean up college athletics, although not surprising considering the recent and ever-increasing need by the NCAA to control every aspect of athletes' lives.

While the NCAA limits the amount of money players can earn, how they live their lives and what they can do in their free time? The NCAA continues to expand its sphere of influence, now punishing athletes for having friends and for behavior in high school.

Unfortunately, while the first decision on Barkley was just wrong. Suspending the point guard for trading automobiles with a family friend, especially when he traded a newer model for an older one, is just ridiculous. The second decision could lead to the suspension of however many countless players have been guilty of the same thing that UCLA's JaRon Rush and his brother Kareem, who plays at Missouri, for accepting money before enrolling at the schools.

Myron Piggie, a Kansas City AAU coach, reportedly gave money and other benefits to the brothers while they played their high school roundball. When the NCAA got word, the brothers Rush were suspended.

JaRon, who led UCLA in rebounding and was third on the team in scoring last season, was suspended for UCLA's last 12 regular season games and the first 17 games of next season. But the suspension is bigger than the suspension of one player at UCLA: it's potentially a way to suspend players across the nation, thus cutting in to the top talent around the nation.

After all, AAU tournaments are one the biggest and best ways to get noticed by coaches and scouts around the nation, the obvious problem being that they are held around the nation. Travel is a necessity.

Sam Wilkinson

And travel isn't cheap, especially for a 17-year-old basketball player who knows full well that being seen at an AAU tournament might be his way to a scholarship on a big name team. Enter the Myron Piggies of the world, offering cash for travel and various other benefits to players. If a kid doesn't know that the NCAA is going to punish him three years down the line, why wouldn't they accept free travel or equipment?

But the message being sent by the NCAA, beyond the clear one that it is unacceptable to take benefits from anyone while in high school is one that limits the types of players that will be seen on college basketball courts.

For some families, their son's basketball isn't the most important thing – just scraping by is. What the NCAA doesn't seem to understand is that by refusing to let anyone pick up the tab for students to travel to tournaments, the organization is effectively limiting the types of players that will be seen on the court. No longer will the best players go to the best universities and colleges. Now the players that can afford the exposure, at least to a certain extent, will, and that is beyond unacceptable.

If the NCAA seriously wants to make a statement about accepting money, the organization needs to redefine the punishments for the crime. Allowing students to receive some amount of stipend of booster money, while ethically blurring the thick line that the NCAA is attempting to draw, is necessary to ensure that AAU tournaments and college basketball teams aren't loaded with players who aren't necessarily the best in the nation, but rather the best prepared to pas for their involvement.

Should the NCAA do something like that, allowing a player to receive some "boosting" so that he can visit tournaments, information about the amount and how it can be received needs to be aggressively disseminated amongst high school athletes so that they can know what the rules are. The NCAA suspending Rush for doing something while a high schooler means that the organization is expanding its effort to clean up the sport, but, at the same time entering realms of athletes' lives that it had not had a part in before. Will high school athletes be limited in what they can earn while in high school? Will their behavior be regulated? Can high school students expect to be suspended for trading cars with one another?

The NCAA needs to be clear on the rules, and the new rules, that are a result of the Rush suspension, and that kind of clarity, in actuality, is the second big problem with the Rush suspension.

The NCAA had never been clear on the issue of high school athletes accepting money for travel and, as a result, they are promising that Rush is being set up as the test case for punishment. He will end up being kept out of competitive college basketball for 44 games, a huge suspension that might have an adverse affect on his draftability in some team's eyes.

That is an unbelievably unfair punishment for a player who had never been told of the rules surrounding his actions because the NCAA never bothered to write them, and until they do, high schoolers will be forced to curtail any behavior that might be suspect. And that is one more good was to curtail the quality of college basketball, something the NCAA shouldn't be interested in.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

■ women's hoops

continued from page 12

pointers from freshman swing player Amber Sneed. Coyner punctuated the run with a dagger of her own, a rainbow three-ball from the right corner that pushed UMass' lead to 40-30. GW forward Erica Lawrence whittled that edge back down to seven with a pair of free throws and a short bank shot, but Smith silenced the comeback with a pair of free throws to repad the home team's cushion to double-digits, 44-34, with 10:59 to play. GW would get no closer than 12 the rest of the way.

"You've got to give UMass a lot of credit," said Colonial coach Joe McKeown. "Sure they took us out of our offense, but I think they just wanted the game more. You don't have to be Red Auerbach or Jack Leaman to evaluate that one."

GW began the fouling game with just under four minutes to play, seemingly a good tactic against a team that came in shooting an unimpressive 57% from the charity stripe. But the Maroon and White stuck 8-of-14 fouls shots down the stretch, including four freebies from Coyner, to protect its margin and yield the 67-54 final score.

"This definitely puts us back on track again," said the junior point guard. "This was an A-10 game; we have to go out and win these. With three games left, hopefully this will carry us over into the A-10 tournament."

The Minutewomen will attempt to build on this victory when they soar into Philadelphia for a Sunday showdown with St. Joseph's. Tip-off is set for 2 p.m. in that matchup.

Nekole Smith was one of several post players to come up big in the Maroon and White's upset of No. 25 George Washington.

■ swim

continued from page 12

Elizabeth Risotto. Competing in the backstroke events this season, Risotto has found herself finishing before her opposition in the 200-yard backstroke events this season.

Joining Risotto in the backstroke is sophomore Becky Hunnewell. Although out for some of the season with an frustrating shoulder injury, since Hunnewell's return she and teammate Risotto have delivered a powerful one-two punch in the backstroke events. Also knowing the sweet feeling of seeing their names ahead of their opponents this season are junior Robin Velonia and freshman Kate Allers. Both Minutewomen did their part for the UMass above the water this semester in the three and one meter diving events. Allers and Velona abilities to break the surface of the water with scores earning victories make them a huge threat to other hopeful A-10 divers.

Andrea Kazanjian

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Now as the Minutewomen enter their second day of the Atlantic-10 championships, whether or not they leave the pool with any more accolades to their credit it will do nothing but further highlight an already successful season in which they have demonstrated the power of UMass swimming.

Entertainment, Food, & Giveaways
AMHERSTONLINE.COM
Bookmark it!

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995

43rd ANNIVERSARY SALE!
FOUR DAYS ONLY
FRIDAY FEB 18TH - MONDAY FEB 21ST
SAVE UP TO 43%
ATTENTION BANDS!
Bring your CD's on Sat. 19th for 99.3 ROCKS
DRUMMERS CHOICE Drum Sticks Selected Sizes Super Sale BUY 2 PAIRS GET 10 PAIRS FREE! (while supplies last)
DEMO COMPETITION Big Bang Music Explosion. At least one band will get on air
ERNIE BALL Classic electric guitar strings gauges 9, 10, 11 BUY 2 PAIRS GET 10 PAIRS FREE! (while supplies last)
MUSIC MALL
5 SHOPS UNDER 1 ROOF
A Division of Falcetti Music
1755 BOSTON RD. • CALL FOR INFO: 413-543-1002 • SPRINGFIELD, MA.

University Liquors
6 University Drive (Newmarket Center)
Across the street from Rafter's

Bud & Bud Light 30 Packs $16.99+dep	Hawk Crest Second label of renowned "Stage Leap Vineyards"	Absolut Citron 750ml $16.99 1.75L $30.99
Sam Adam's 6 Packs $5.99+dep	Chard. 750ml $9.99	Absolut 80pf 750ml $14.99
Coors Light 30 Packs $16.99+dep	Cab. 750ml $11.99	Dewer 1.75L $30.99
Pete's Wicked 6 Packs $5.99+dep	Merlot 750ml $11.99	Smironof 80pf 1.75L $16.99
Miller High Life 30 Packs $12.49+dep	Beringer White Zin 750ml $4.99	Southern Comfort 750ml $11.99
Busch & Busch Lite 40oz $1.45+dep	1.5ml $8.99	1Ltr $14.99
Cider Jack 6 Packs $5.49	Fetzer Sundial Chard. $15.99	1.75L $19.99
Milwaukees Best 30 Packs $9.99+dep	Vallyoak Cab. $15.99	Jim Beam 750ml $10.99
Harpoon IPA 12 Packs $10.99+dep	Rosemount Estate "Winery of the year"	1Ltr $14.49
Guinness Stout Pub 4 Pack $5.99+dep	Cab./Shiraz $6.99	1.75L $19.29
6 Packs $7.99+dep	Cab./Merlot $6.99	Sauza Tequila 750ml $9.99
Harp 6 Packs $6.99+dep	Grenache/Shiraz $6.99	Kamora 1.75L $16.99
Bass 6 Packs $7.19+dep	Semillon/Chard. $6.99	Kahlua 750ml $13.99
Saranac 6 Packs $5.19+dep	Ecco Domani Cab. Sauv. $9.99	Tanqueray 750ml $16.99
Genessee 30 Packs $10.99+dep	Barbera d'Alba $9.99	1Ltr $22.99
Ice House & Red Dog 30 Packs $10.99+dep	Luna Di Luna	1.75L $28.99
Coors / Coors Light 1/2 Barrels $39.99+dep	Specialorder fine wines, also at available! Please call 549-5758	Goldschlager 750ml $17.99
	Sang Merlot $9.99	Gordon's Vodka 750ml $7.99
	Merlot/Cab $9.99	1Ltr $9.99
		1.75L $15.99

Coming Soon www.universityliquors.com

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

3 bedroom condos. Gas heat, hardwood floors, bright heated basement with study and laundry area. 1/2 mile to campus, on bus route. April showings for June and September $1450.00 Lincoln Real Estate. No fees charged. 253-7879.

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. April showings for June and September Lincoln Real Estate. No fees. 253-7879.

One bedroom starting June 1st uptown above Newbury Comics for 2-3 people. Call 256-1422.

Sublet my one bedroom apartment 1 mile from campus. Available 6/00-8/00. $525.00 a month. Call Kate 253-6955.

AUTO FOR SALE

VW Jetta 1988 146K, 5speed manual, power window/seat, alloy wheels, great tires. $1950.00. Call 549-4818.

'94 Nissan Maxima. Dark green, good condition. $6000.00. Call 253-6480.

COMPUTERS

Cannon BJC 4300 color bubble ink jet printer. Creative Cannon software included. laydefayre@aol.com $100.00.

COMPUTERS

IBM ThinkPad Pent II 366 DXD Ether net. $1600 (413)546-0233 Dan.

EMPLOYMENT

Northeastern Pennsylvania camp. Trails End Camp- Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes/challenge course, hockey, arts & crafts (woodworking, ceramics, photography, fine arts, video/film), waterfront (waterskiing, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors and general counselors. TOP SALARIES and BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! 800-408-1404 or www.trailsendcamp.com

Human Services-Relief support needed to work with adults with developmental disabilities, may lead to permanent hours. Hours include evenings, weekends and/or overnights. Required: HS diploma and drivers license. Starting pay is $7.47/hr(for relief), $8.35(for permanent). Locations in South Hadley and Belchertown. Call Mary @ (413)774-2281 ext. 11. AA/EOE.

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132.

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Wayne for girls-sister half of brother/sister camp in Pennsylvania (3 hrs from New York City). If you love children and want a caring, fun environment we are looking to hire staff from 6/20-8/18/00 for: tennis, basketball, softball, soccer, volleyball, golf, gymnastics, aerobics, cheerleading, swimming, sailing, waterskiing, self-defense, ropes, fine arts (ceramics, sculptuer, drawing, painting, silk screening, jewlery), photography, piano, guitar, drama, video, group leaders. On campus interviews March 9th. Call 800-279-3019.

Childcare for handicapped, 15+ hours. Housework, references, car. $9.50/hr. 247-5800.

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

PCA's needed for various duties, various hours am and pm, good pay rate. On bus route, call for more information. (413)323-9633 Martina.

$Great Opportunity$. Marketing company seeks reliable and money motivated student for credit card promo's on-campus. Excellent commission. Flexible hours. 1-800-592-2121 ext. 300.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

Work for exciting college focused internet company at your school. Looking for individual with strong leadership, entrepreneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay, and options! Contact info at uconnections.com

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr. $8. ph. 549-8843.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFE-TIME OF EXPERIENCE

I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our web-site and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR SALE

Everyone has the right to be safe. Simple And Fast Effective Techniques Company is dedicated to keeping you, and the ones that you care about as protected as possible. One OPTIDN that we provide is the DC Alternative. OC is a chemical that is more powerful than mace and is not an irritant like pepper-spray but an inflammatory agent. The instant inflamation of the breathing tubes, caused by the spray, cuts off all breathing except what is necessary to sustain life. Because it is an inflammatory rather than an irritant, OC effective against all of those who feel no pain, such as individuals on alcohol or drugs. The spray disables your attacker for 30-45 minutes and leaves a UV dye on your assailant for easy identification by the police. We are making the OC spray available in a keychain or pen form. The pen does not write but...it may save your life. Check for our other OPTIONS in this newspaper. If you are ready to make a wise, sound and inexpensive investment into the PRDTECTIDN of yourself and your loved ones, then send a check, cash or money order in the amount of $11.95 for the keychain and/or $9.95 for the pen to: Sensei David Seerung, Aikido School of Self-Defense, 24 George St. Cohoes, Ny 12047 (518)237-0775. Please include $3.00 for shipping and handling. There is also a 15 day money back guarantee on all of our products. Please feel free to check out these OC products or any of our other products at www.securityplusprofit.com/RN11112.htm

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do something different. Pi Lambda Phi Fraternity. Call 549-4411. www.pilambdaphi.homepage.com

INSTRUCTION

Private boxing lessons with retired pro G. Djata Bumpus in Amherst. Call (413)256-0364.

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!

LOST & FOUND

Lost: Diamond stud earring, 2/15 at Health Services Eye Clinic. Reward. 577-5007.

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

ROOM FOR RENT

Beautiful, newly painted, hardwood floor, $300 inclusive! Quiet. Less than five minutes from campus! Call Sarah now 549-5946.

Room in beautiful 5 bdroom house. 10 minutes from Amherst Center. Available NOW. $300/mo. 256-2384.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for roommates with references you can trust? Your friends and your friend's friends might know someone and sixdegrees can help you meet them. www.sixdegrees.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

Women volunteers needed for research exploring high school sex education. 18-28 yrs. old. Participate 30 min. interview. Women of diverse backgrounds encouraged. Kim 587-0273 or kcondon@javanet.com

Actress for short film to be shot locally during February. Heavy emotion needed. No experience needed. Willing to work around class schedule. Call 222-4255 for more info.

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Advertise here in the classifieds section of The Collegian!

Call us 545-3500

Hope everyone has a great long weekend!!

Five College Community Calendar

SATURDAY, FEB. 19

Comedy – MISSION IMPROVable, the UMass improvisational troupe, will perform at 8 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@math.ity.com for more information.

Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac116@aol.com or Caleb at 587-3740 by March 5.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m., student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Submissions – Short Cuts, UMass' short story journal, is currently accepting prose submissions for its second annual issue. The deadline is March 1. For more information call Matt at 549-1053, or email submissions and questions to shortstory@acad.umass.edu.

Support – A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone pre-screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5316 if interested.

Support – AL-ANON and ALA-TEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS™ From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,* you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER

Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board		21	Good to Gavel
3	CBS/3	Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4	Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5	Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57	Springfield	25	CNN Fn
7	HSCN	Metro Ch	26	CNN Si
8	UPN/20	Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel		28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain		29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61	Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24	Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WGBH & HSCN		32	Cartoon Network
14	International		33	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV		34	C-Span
16	WB/New Haven		35	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance		36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel		37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19		38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 18, 2000

C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	(12) Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ	Q. Auriemma	Women's College Basketball: Connecticut vs. Syracuse. (Live)					Connecticut Journal		Nova (In Stereo) ⓒ
WFSB	3	(3) News ⓒ	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Winning Lines	Winning Lines	Now and Again (In Stereo) ⓒ	Nash Bridges "Hit and Run" ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WBZ	4	(4) News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Winning Lines	Winning Lines	Now and Again (In Stereo) ⓒ	Nash Bridges "Hit and Run" ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WCVB	5	(5) News ⓒ	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⓒ	★★½ "Liar Liar" (1997, Comedy) Jim Carrey. (In Stereo) ⓒ			20/20 ⓒ		Nightline ⓒ
WLVI	6	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends ⓒ	Nanny ⓒ	Jamie Foxx ⓒ	Jamie Foxx ⓒ	Law & Order: Special Victims	Law & Order "Entitled" ⓒ		News	Tonight Show
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Providence "Sibling Rivalry" ⓒ		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Real TV (R) ⓒ	Change-Heart	Caroline
WTXX	8	(4) Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV ⓒ	★★½ "The Night Flier" (1997, Horror) Miguel Ferrer. (In Stereo) ⓒ			Law & Order "Entitled" ⓒ		News	Tonight Show
WVIT	9	(9) News	NBC News	Extra ⓒ	Ent. Tonight	Providence "Sibling Rivalry" ⓒ		Law & Order: Special Victims	News		Friends ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ
WTIC	61	(11) Simpsons ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	World a Wildest Police Videos		Greed: The Series (In Stereo)	Law & Order "Entitled" ⓒ		News ⓒ	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	(22) News ⓒ	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Providence "Sibling Rivalry" ⓒ		Law & Order: Special Victims	Chill	Red Dwarf	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⓒ
WGBY	57	(6) World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Stars: We're In	Time Goes By		News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WGGB	40	(28) News ⓒ	ABC News	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	★★½ "Liar Liar" (1997, Comedy) Jim Carrey. (In Stereo) ⓒ			20/20 ⓒ		Med Alrt. You	Judge Mathis
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ⓒ	Judge Judy ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	★★½ "The Night Flier" (1997, Horror) Miguel Ferrer. (In Stereo) ⓒ			Star Trek: Voyager "11:59" ⓒ		★★½ "Can't Buy Me Love" (1987, Comedy)
WTBS	30	Roseanne ⓒ	Roseanne ⓒ	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★½ "Basic Instinct" (1992, Suspense) Michael Douglas, Sharon Stone.			Point "The Veiled Lady" ⓒ		Law & Order "Blood Libel" ⓒ
A&E	31	L.A. Law "Gorilla My Dreams"	Law & Order "Apocrypha" ⓒ			Biography: Quincy Jones		Investigative Reports (R) ⓒ	Larry King Live ⓒ		Sports	Moneyline (R)
CNN	32	Worldview ⓒ	Moneyline Newshour ⓒ		Crossfire ⓒ	World Today ⓒ			Newsstand ⓒ		Saturday Night Live ⓒ
COM	33	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Saturday Night Live ⓒ	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		On the Inside "The Rodeo" (R)
DISC	34	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery	Wild Sea	On the Inside "The Rodeo" (R)		Discover Mag.	Storm Warning! (R)		Sportscenter ⓒ
ESPN	35	Sportscenter ⓒ		NASCAR 2000: Families		NHL Hockey: Phoenix Coyotes at Dallas Stars. (Live)					Ronce and Again "Daddy's Girl"
LIFE	36	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Tyne Daly" ⓒ		Chicago Hope (In Stereo) ⓒ		"Fatal Stranger" (1998, Suspense)			Undressed	Lovaline
MTV	37	MTV Jams	Beat Suits	Making-Video	News	Say What Kris	TRL Wanna	TRL (R) (In Stereo)	Behind-Daris	Daris (R)	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
NICK	39	All That	Cedog	Henry and June Jam (In Stereo)					All in Family	Jeffersons ⓒ	Ferocpex "Yuna Returns" ⓒ
SCIFI	40	Sliders "Virtual Slide" (R) ⓒ		Brimstone "Slayer" (In Stereo)		Farscape "Durka Returns" ⓒ		Farscape "A Bug's Life" (R) ⓒ	Lexx: The Series "Terminal" ⓒ		Farscape "Durka Returns" ⓒ
TLC	42	Home Again	Home Again	How'd They Do That?		Police Force: Gangland		Reps – When Anger Strikes	Testimony of Terror (R)		Police Force: Gangland (R)
TNT	43	In the Heat of the Night ⓒ		ER "Shades of Gray" (In Stereo) ⓒ		Goodwill Games (Live) ⓒ			NBA Basketball: Supersonics at Kings
USA	44	Baywatch "Leap of Faith" ⓒ		UFO "Vigil, Tyler" (In Stereo) ⓒ		★★ "Lethal Weapon 4" (1998, Action) Mel Gibson. (R) ⓒ			★★½ "Stealers" (1992, Adventure) Robert Redford, Sidney Poitier. (In Stereo) ⓒ		Chris Rock: Bigger & Blacker (R) (In Stereo) ⓒ	Farm Club
HBO	45	★★½ "The Man Without a Face" (1993) Mel Gibson. "PG-13" ⓒ				★½ "Kinky Coconuts" (1999) "PG-13" ⓒ			★★½ "Beverly Hills Cop III" (1994, Drama) Eddie Murphy. "R" ⓒ		Dennis Miller
MAX	46	★★½ "Stripes" (1981, Comedy) Bill Murray, Harold Ramis. "R" ⓒ				★★★½ "A Few Good Men" (1992, Drama) Tom Cruise. "R" ⓒ			Stargate SG-1 "Untitled" ⓒ		Erotic
SHOW	47	★ "The Godson" (1998, Comedy) Rodney Dangerfield. "PG-13" ⓒ									"Outer Limits "Breaking Point"

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Spoot By Mike Banchick

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Over the Hedge By Fry and Lewis

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You're going to have to be more tolerant of those around you today or you will have no end of annoyance and frustration. Let things be, sometimes!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Don't underestimate your own ability to come through in a crisis situation. You are, despite any doubts, a take charge kind of person.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – It's time to get past your own sense of inadequacy, for today you may be required to offer nothing less than sure, confident leadership, don't screw it up!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Listen to the messages you receive from strangers you encounter along the way today, real or imaginary. You may be able to form a better picture of yourself!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Now is no time to skip town or otherwise try to hide in any way. You must be willing to face the music today – and tomorrow, too.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Progress may not be as quick and constant today as you had expected, but through patience you can better your chances by day's end.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – What you do voluntarily today you must be willing to do with good spirits. Any negativity will only reflect badly upon you at this time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can come close to realizing an important dream today. Work toward improving communication and establishing closer ties with others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A little patience goes a long way today and enables you to enjoy more of what goes on around you. Take care you don't lose sight of a major goal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – A new accomplishment of sorts can be yours today, provided you remain deaf to those who will continue to say that you can't do it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Keep close tabs on all those coming and going today. It'll be up to you to report to others on the true state of your current affairs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – That which is inevitable cannot be avoided, and you must spend more time and energy on preparation than you do on preventive measures.

Quote of the Day

"Coverage is a luxury, not a privelege."

–Bryan Smith

ACROSS

1 Moby Dick, for one
6 Went for a drive
10 Carry on
14 Place of safety
15 Highest point
16 Floored
17 Mountain nymph
18 Squeal
19 Damsel
20 Vainly dem.
22 With a smile
24 "How the West — Won"
26 Bars of metal
27 Fragrant garden plant
31 Cover with grass
32 Not in a whisper
33 Huron and Michigan
36 Paving material
39 Edges
40 Some wines
41 Prince of India
42 Bark
43 Barbary terminal
44 Singer Yma
45 Dry
46 Type of ticket
48 Noble's address
51 The lady
52 Woman's ensemble
54 Postal buys
58 — Karenina
60 Be bold
62 Slow moving person
63 Row
64 Oklahoma town
65 Garuda's cousin
66 Sense organs
67 Emulates Queen Lanfan
68 Appointed

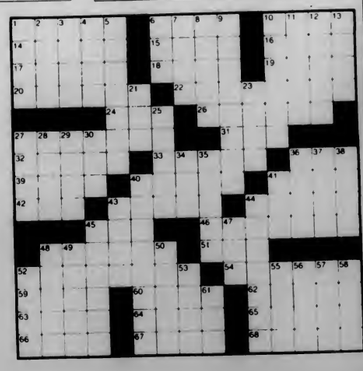
DOWN

1 "To — a may concern"
2 Malia –
3 State confidently
4 Shakespearean king
5 Provided funding
6 Beam
7 Or-gro
8 City in India
9 Overhead
10 Disciplinarian
11 Expect
12 Conceals
13 Whirlpool
21 Jogged
23 Self-images
25 Cannon salute
27 Fluctuate
28 Charles Lamb
29 Frolic
30 Commuter vehicle
34 Assist
35 Ship bottoms
36 Unexciting
37 Open
38 Suggestive
40 Burglar, e.g.
41 Furrow
43 Football's Alonzo Stagg
44 Cowhand's topper
45 Church areas
47 Exclamations
48 Craze
49 Secret
50 Actress Muldaur
52 Liver paste
53 Stumble
55 "Puppy Love" singer
56 Polite address
57 Sinclair's smoke
58 Coasted
61 Asner and Bradley

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

M	A	K	E		V	A	P	I	D	A	N	T	S
C	L	O	Y		O	X	I	D	E		R	A	E
C	A	P	E		E	N	I	N		R	I	O	T
O	M	E	L	E	T		T	O	E	H	O	L	D	S
Y	O	K	E			R	O	M	B	A		P	O	W	L	S
			T	O	D	E					W	A	R	E
S	A	C		U	R	N		A	S	S	A	I	L
C	O	O		E	N	A	C	T			K	E	A
A	N	I	M	A	L			A	T		R	E	N	T
B	E	R	I	T	H				R	A	P
			R	O	S	E		S	T	E	A	R	D	S
G	E	R	A	N	I	U	M		U	S	E	F	U	L
O	L	E		T	E	L	E	S			L	I	N	E
A	M	I	E		L	I	L	T	S		E	R	I	E
T	O	N	S			S	P	E	A	R		R	E	N	T

© 2000 United Feature Syndicate



No Menu Today

MONKEY BOX BY PIREJ

"HMM..PIKA-CHOOSE?"

Night Editor: Ken McDonald
Photo Technician: Kara Stokes
Copy Editor: Bryan Smith
Production Supervisor: Alan Basque
Production Staff: Elana Premack, Vlad Zakashansky

Defending national champs tumble into Cage

The Massachusetts men's gym team will have its hands full as the Wolverines of Michigan claw their way into Amherst.

Despite subpar performances, men's gym looks to pull off huge upset as Wolverines claw into Curry Hicks

By Gary Mendese
Collegian Staff

This is it, folks.

The biggest meet of the season takes place tomorrow in the Curry Hicks Cage at 7 p.m. as the Massachusetts men's gymnastics team takes on the No. 1 team in the nation, the University of Michigan.

The Wolverines are the defending NCAA champions and are packing a mighty punch this year. With Michigan's awesome two-score average of 230.225, the Minutemen are going to have to hit almost every routine in order to knock the Wolverines off of their first place throne. But that doesn't scare junior Andy Leis.

"I think everyone on the team is excited to do their best," Leis said. "We're starting to look stronger and healthier and I think with that will come better performances."

And that's just the type of attitude that UMass needs. While its scores this season haven't been quite as high as Michigan's running mark, if the Minutemen nail their sets tomorrow, a team score of 227 or above is certainly within their range.

Aside from having a lot of talented athletes with some great skills, UMass has the home court advantage. "I'm hoping we get a lot of people to come out to the meet," Leis said. "It's a nice opportunity to see some great gymnastics."

And great gymnastics they will surely see. There is some incredible talent on this team and if they hit, the Minutemen will give the Wolverines a run for their money. They've got quick twisting junior Bryan McNulty, who consistently places first or second on the floor exercise. Freshman Justin Hammar, who ranks 11th in the nation on pommel horse, could swing his way to a gold medal on the event. And sophomore Matt "Rocko" Plumser could come through for the Maroon and White once again, and rack up some impressive scores on pommel horse and the parallel bars.

Freshman Brett Nelligan, who took some of the highest marks on vault the past two meets could keep Michigan on its toes, and Andy Leis could raise some eyebrows as well with his incredibly difficult double-twisting-double-layout dismount on the high bar. The list goes on and on.

One thing UMass has been missing this season is junior co-captain J.J. Hershey. The Pennsylvania native fractured his knee over intersession and has been sitting on the sidelines up until now. But tomorrow, the consistent performer will make a great contribution to the team on rings and pommel horse. "It'll be great to have J.J. back," head coach Roy Johnson said. "We really need him on rings. Although he can't [fully] land on his leg, he should definitely help our rings and pommel horse line-up."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Jeff LaVallee

And let us not forget senior Jeff LaVallee, who was dubbed the 30th best gymnast in the nation last weekend at the Winter Cup Challenge. If he hits his routines as he has consistently done in the past, there's no telling what new school records he could break.

But the most important thing is the team. LaVallee, McNulty and Leis can't do it alone. Everyone competing has to give some great performances in order for UMass to come out on top. And no matter what the final outcome, Johnson remains positive and excited about tomorrow's meet.

"I think it's going to be a great show," Johnson said. "It doesn't get any better than this. We're bringing in the No. 1 team in the nation. If we beat them on the first two events, we've got a good chance of staying with them for the rest of the meet."

UMass rides MacFarland milestone to upset

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The moment itself was surely expected to rock the home crowd. But the performance that followed was enough to shock the entire women's college basket ball world.

The Massachusetts Minutewomen (11-13, 8-5 Atlantic 10) rode a wave of momentum keyed by guard Alison MacFarland's 1,000th career point to a stunning 67-34 upset of No. 25 George Washington last night at the William D. Mullins Center. UMass held the conference leading Colonials (20-4, 11-2 A-10) to a season-low 28% field-goal percentage over the course of the contest, using a decisive 13-2 run over the first five minutes of the second half to put GW away.

Georgia Washington	34
UMass	67

"Obviously, this is a great victory," said UMass coach Joanie O'Brien. "Today was a day that we got a chance to make some easy baskets, and we took advantage of it."

O'Brien's troops knew full well heading into this matchup that the Colonials' offensive attack started with guard Tina Aguilar (14.6 ppg), but the Madrid original gave them a healthy reminder anyway by draining a long three from the right wing to open scoring. A hint of the home team's competitive fire came on it's ensuing possession, however, as floor general Kathi Conner canned a trifecta of her own to bring the home crowd to life.

With the Maroon and White's last few losses having hinged on early foul trouble, all eyes were trained on the team's post defenders over the early goings of the first half. Freshman pivot Jen Butler picked up her first personal less than two minutes into the game, but didn't let it slow her as she leapt into a GW passing lane at the 16:47 mark and nearly came away with a fantastic steal. The play took a dark turn as the Brooklyn native landed in a heap along the right baseline, and the Mullins fell eerily silent as Butler lay writhing on the hardwood for a full two minutes. But as she lifted herself back to her feet, Butler may have given her team a needed emotional boost as well.

The Minutewomen got back-to-back layups from forward Nekole Smith on consecutive transition sequences to hammer out a 13-7 lead over the next three minutes. But the Colonials quickly slowed the game back to a favorable half-court pace, as point guard Marlo Eglseton lacked a trey from the left wing to lock the contest at 15-15 with 7:13 to go before halftime.

UMass would bounce back out to a slim advantage over the next few minutes behind a Butler bucket and a free throw from Jawana Bradley, only to have the Colonials roar back and reclaim the upper hand on a brilliant inside-out sequence between forward Erica Lawrence and guard Cathy Joens. Lawrence felt a hand Maroon and White defensive tag as soon as the ball touched her hands in the low post, and calmly kicked the rock back out to Joens, who stuck a majestic three from the right corner to give her team a 20-18 edge.

GW would leave the court with a 28-23 halftime edge, having connected on a stellar 5-of-11 from international waters.

"We felt that they had taken too many threes in the first half, and a couple of them came on defensive mistakes by us," O'Brien said. "We just tried to clean up a little bit on defense in the second half, and take them out of what they wanted to do."

Having hung within a hoop of the conference heavyweights for 20 minutes, the Minutewomen charged into the second half with perhaps their most inspiring basketball of the year. MacFarland followed up a turnaround jumper from teammate Caroline Nehls with an electrifying steal from Egelson, off of which the UMass captain streaked to the hoop for her ninth point of the night and 1,001st of her collegiate career. As O'Brien called timeout for an emotional moment with her senior star, all in attendance could sense the thrill that surged through the entire team.

"I wanted to get my 1,000th point on a win, and I wanted to get it at home," MacFarland said. "Of course I was excited, but my team was excited, too; from there we just pulled away, with a lot of emotion and a lot of enthusiasm."

But no one could have foreseen exactly how inspiring MacFarland's milestone would be for the Maroon and White. The team rocketed out to an 11-2 run off the moment, keyed by back-to-back three-

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Senior captain Alison MacFarland's 1,000th career point helped key UMass' decisive victory over No. 25 George Washington.

Turn to WOMEN'S HOOPS, page 9

Return of the Mack sets stage for clash with SJU

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

In a period in which the Massachusetts men's basketball team refused to find a second scorer, a 101-degree fever forced it to do so. With Monty Mack sitting on the bench battling the flu, the Minutemen needed to find some way to win on the road at Fordham.

So perhaps it was a blessing in disguise for UMass (13-11 overall, 7-4 Atlantic 10) who had been struggling to find a complement for Mack. Against the Rams, the Minutemen found three, led by Shannon Crooks who filled Mack's shoes with a career-high 29 points. Not only that, but Kitwana Rhymer notched 19 in the paint to go along with Chris Kirkland's 17.

It was about time, too. Coming in, UMass hadn't gotten a 20-point game all season from someone not named Mack or Kirkland. In disposing of the Rams, 81-72, the Minutemen almost got two.

MEN'S HOOPS
UMASS VS. ST. JOSEPH'S
SATURDAY, 4PM
91.1 FM WMUA
REGAN MCKENDRY-PLAY
MATT DENOBLE-COLOR
PREVIEW

Rounding turn four, the Minutemen hope the balanced scoring continues in a short stop at the Mullins Center this Saturday when they take on St. Joseph's.

The Hawks are looking to even the score after the Maroon and White's 73-69 victory at Hawk Hill in early January. It was the beginning of a successful 1999-2000 A-10 campaign on the road, where the Minutemen have gone 4-1.

Crooks' performance came as somewhat of a surprise but it was not completely unexpected. It was known to all that the Everett native would need to fill Mack's role on the perimeter and in the scoring column. In UMass' exhibition opener, Crooks went for 24, but has maxed out at 17 this season. The sophomore 12 of 24 shots en route to his career night.

With Kirkland ailing along with Mack and Rhymer battling

Turn to MEN'S HOOP, page 9

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN
Chris Kirkland will look to duplicate the performance he had versus Fordham when the Minutemen take on St. Joseph's in a pivotal A-10 game.

Swim squads take aim at Atlantic 10's finest

Veterans, freshmen headline squad looking for fourth conference title

By Farrah Alexander
Collegian Staff

This weekend will be the culmination of the blood, sweat and tears that the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team has poured into their athletic careers. This past Tuesday the Minutemen left for Buffalo, NY this year's site of the Atlantic 10 Championship. The all-important A-10 meets initiated yesterday and will run through this Saturday.

Head coach Russ Yarworth is probably not as jittery as he would he had he not had an all-star team including several outstanding seniors who have been repeatedly honored in their conference, and an immensely talented group of underclassmen.

The UMass men's basketball team is not the only team on a winning streak against Fordham. Just this last weekend the men's swimming freshman class was honored for the third time. Freshman Tommy Keane from Melrose, MA, was named the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week, after the Minutemen trampled Fordham 198-98 here in Amherst at the Joseph R. Rogers, Jr. Pool. It was Keane's first time to win the award.

Keane secured a first-place finish in the 500 freestyle with the top time of 4:41.98, the fastest time in team history, which ranks him third overall in the A-10 standings. And his time of 1:46.23 was strong enough to place him second place in the 200 free. To Yarworth's delight UMass freshmen Justin Houck and Ryan Zaucha also won the honor.

Part of the arsenal that Yarworth will be taking with him to this weekend's A-10's also consists of senior

Turn to MEN'S SWIM, page 9

Women's swimming and diving sets sights on conference promised land

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

It may not be Sydney, Australia and the women may not be competing for medals this week, but the University of Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team is currently trying to prove that they deserve the gold in the Atlantic 10.

Yet, earning that position atop the podium will not be any easy task for the Minutewomen. The A-10 championships will span three days, which began yesterday and will continue until tomorrow.

Although, the wet Maroon and White has already seen much of the competition that they will enter the pool against in the A-10 season finale the stakes have now been raised. Each A-10 conference team has only brought with them some of their most prolific point scorers this season, eliminating any chance for an easy victory. Every athlete will have to be at the top of her game to swim away with a victory.

That, however, is not much of a problem for the members of this year's Minutewomen swimming squad. Each woman on the roster has been deadly this season in the chlorinated waters of aquatic competition.

Sophomores Anne Dettloff and Andrea Kazanjian have garnered wins in almost every meet this season, sometimes swimming away with victories in two separate events. Dettloff has been a dominant force in both the 200-yard freestyle and the 500-yard freestyle, while teammate Kazanjian has been equally has effective in earning victories in both the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle events.

Matching her sophomore counterpart's abilities to manufacture points for the Minutewomen is senior

Turn to WOMEN'S SWIM, page 9

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 19 Tuesday, February 22, 2000

Protests expected today

Funding cuts fuel action

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

A rally to protest the elimination of the Consumer Studies department and demand a reversal of the budget cuts will take place today at 11 a.m. in front of the Whitmore Administration Building.

The event is being hosted by the Student Government Association (SGA) and is supported by The Board of Student Businesses, the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) and the Radical Student Union. The rally is in response to a motion set forth by Commuter Senator Phil Zetye during an SGA Senate meeting last Wednesday.

The motion was set forth in response to the Massachusetts state legislatures' failure to keep the university's higher public education as one of its top funding priorities. According to Zetye, he set forth in his motion that students should be excused from attending classes during the rally and should be allowed academic clemency for the remainder of the day.

He said the purpose of this enactment was to free students of all academic obligations so that they may show their support towards public higher education through their participation in the rally.

According to Chancellor David K. Scott, the proposed budget cuts won't take effect until next year, but Zetye said it will affect students for the next five years. Despite this, he said it isn't clear why the state legislature isn't making education a priority.

"Despite $1.2 billion being spent on the Big Dig in Boston and despite Massachusetts economic growth, there are proposed education budget cuts at UMass," Zetye said. "Students need to educate themselves on how they can support their education."

Associate Speaker of the Senate Jennifer Teixeira said that students need to organize events like this to let the university know that they are aware of the issue, and that they want something done about it.

"It seems that most of the stuff that's going on, students don't know about it; but now people are taking the initiative to get the word out to students so they can do something about it." Teixeira said.

However, during last week's Faculty Senate meeting, the issue of the motion failed to be brought up and nothing was decided on it. Zetye said that although students won't be officially exempt from classes, he hopes students will take a stand and show their support.

"If the faculty really want to support quality public higher education in the state of Massachusetts, they will attend this protest and they will also tell students to attend," Zetye said. "I can't imagine a situation where it wouldn't be in the best interest of anyone involved in this university to attend this rally."

Coolidge Senator Jim Ltringham agrees with the purpose of the rally, and said students need to voice their opinion that UMass is affordable education, academically comparable to such schools as Boston University, Boston College and Harvard, and should be recognized through state funding.

"I hope that their concerns are properly heard and considered by the administration and by the state government. If we have a capability of investing in higher education, we should do this," said Ltringham.

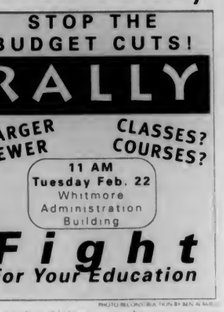


PHOTO RECONSTRUCTION BY BEN SCHMIT
Flyers such as this have appeared across campus in recent days in preparation for today's rally.

UMass CRC reaches ballot signature goal

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC), working in conjunction with Citizens for a Sensible Marijuana Policy, accomplished its two-year long project to add a ballot measure regarding the legalization of marijuana.

According to Terry Franklin, the campaign manager for Citizens for a Sensible Marijuana Policy, the ballot statement would be a two-tiered measure.

He explained that the first part of the statement would ask the town to lobby the State Legislature and the Congress for the legalization of marijuana.

The second part of the statement would be addressed to the area police department. It asked that the police, while waiting to the decision on whether or not to legalize the substance, de-prioritize the importance of laws against the possession of marijuana.

The process for placing the question on the ballot was both long and arduous according to Franklin. Both organizations spent a great deal of time gaining the necessary signatures for the measure to be considered for the ballot.

The group needed a total of 1,892 signatures, a ten percent accumulation, from registered Amherst voters in order to attain a place on the ballot.

Franklin explained that the group turned in a total of 3,082 signatures to the Town Clerk to be considered for validity and met their necessary number requirements. As of Feb. 14 a total of 1044 signatures had been turned in, 762 of which turned out to be valid towards the ballot count. With those signatures that had been turned in the validity count was at about 76 percent, a high from last year. The group reached its necessary signature counts this week with a surplus of those interested in adding the statement to the ballot.

Last year, the group ran a similar program to add the proposal to the ballot, but failed due to a shortage of 99 necessary signatures. Franklin explained that the group was successful this year due to the fact that mistakes made during the previous signature drive were carefully avoided this year. The organization ran the campaign heeding mistakes that were made before and Franklin said the group paid closer attention this year to the validity of the signatures. Volunteers for the organizations spent more time questioning those signing the petition to be sure that the signatures themselves were valid. This helped to weed out any potential bad signatures that may be used towards the total signatures needed to place the proposal on the ballot.

Franklin also attributed much of the success of the drive to increased interest in the cause and more volunteers involved in the process. Local citizens, as well as Mount Holyoke, Amherst College and Hampshire College chapters of Students for a Sensible Drug Policy worked together with the UMass CRC to both collect signatures and register voters in the Amherst area. This year, cooperation between the area college com-

Turn to CRC, page 3

Bridge fails: UMass team disqualified

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Despite bad weather conditions, the annual New England Regional Steel Bridge Competition took place Saturday and featured four colleges competing to construct the most stable and overall efficient bridge.

The teams present at the event were Worcester Polytechnical Institute (WPI), Northeastern University, Tufts University and UMass. The top two teams of the competition would go on to compete in the National Competition in Texas, occurring during late spring.

UMass will not be competing in Texas, as it was disqualified because of the amount of deflection (bending) in the infrastructure of its bridge due to weight.

The bridges are judged based on categories such as aesthetics, cost efficiency, weight, construction speed, stiffness (deflection), overall efficiency and economy.

According to UMass steel bridge coordinator Jaime Helmuth, a senior civil engineering major, the American Society of Civil Engineers Student Chapter at UMass started designing the bridge last September and began construction in early January with the support and advice of two professors in the civil engineering department.

Each year, the American Institute of Steel Construction (AISC) sponsors the event and is responsible for providing the entry rules and judges.

Helmuth said the rules of the competition explicitly state that the competition consists of the assembly stage of the bridge and then the weighing stage.

In the assembly part of the competition, the teams must disassemble all parts and are then asked to reassemble

Turn to COMPETITION, page 3

Russian media still stymied

By Sharon LaFraniere
Washington Post

MOSCOW – Mikhail Berger, editor in chief of the influential Moscow daily Sevodnya, wrote to acting President Vladimir Putin a few weeks ago to ask for an interview. The unofficial answer was quite blunt, said Berger, whose paper criticizes Putin fairly regularly.

"Never, never for the paper Sevodnya," said a Kremlin press officer. "Anybody but you."

Instead, Putin aired his views on the state-controlled television channel ORT. Given a whole hour with the Russian leader, ORT's respectful reporter asked about Putin's family life, his dog and his dacha, or weekend house – no mention of the government's fiercely criticized decision four days earlier to swap a Radio Liberty reporter to Chechen militants for five Russian soldiers.

Trading access for soft stories is hardly a new political tactic, in Russia or elsewhere, especially with a presidential election five weeks away. In Putin's case, though, Russian journalists increasingly fear it's part of a pattern of misuse and mistreatment of the media.

"It's absolutely obvious we are entering into a new epoch for the media," said Raf Shakirov, former chief editor of Kommersant, once Moscow's most respected daily newspaper.

At issue is the vitality of the independent news media, one of Russia's proudest accomplishments since the end of communism. Anything but monolithic, the media range from obvious mouthpieces for Kremlin-connected owners to fiercely independent outlets that excoriate officials and tycoons of any political stripe.

Independent news media are weak – sometimes absent altogether – outside Moscow, and compete with strong, state-sponsored media outlets even within the capital. But they exist, having been protected by former president Boris Yeltsin for a decade, during which no national politician would dare threaten them openly.

What some journalists sense from Putin is a more covert danger. After Yeltsin made Putin prime minister in August, followed by his Dec. 31 appointment as acting president on Yeltsin's resignation, the Kremlin began to steer news coverage noticeably.

Global warming answers closer; scientists still unraveling riddles

By Curt Suplee
Washington Post

Of all the troublesome questions in the study of global warming and potential climate change, none is more forbidding, or more profound, than these:

Is the observed increase in the worldwide average temperature – around 1.1 degrees Fahrenheit over the past 100 years – genuinely abnormal, or is it well within the bounds of natural variability?

And is the apparent super-warming of the past two decades – about 0.5 degree – actually a mistake, in view of the fact that upper-air temperature measurements over the same 20 years show no warming at all?

Both questions get closer to definitive answers last week.

In the Feb. 17 issue of the journal Nature, Henry N. Pollack of the University of Michigan and others took on the issue of multicentury climate change, which has an aggravating built-in difficulty: Accurate measurements of surface temperatures have been taken only since the end of the 19th century.

So to discern how hot it was before 1850, scientists have to rely on what are called "proxy" indicators of temperature change: width of tree rings, chemical makeup of ice cores, type and amount of pollen in sediments, growth rates of coral and the like.

Pollack's group used a different and completely independent proxy indicator: temperature at various depths in 616 borcholes on six continents. These holes, typically 2 to 4 inches wide and a quarter of a mile deep, originally were drilled for geological research, oil exploration or other reasons. Now they provide a handy means of taking the

Turn to TEMPERATURE, page 2

Making the grade in Eunich

UMass student spends semester teaching kindergarten

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Correspondent

One University of Massachusetts senior celebrated New Year's Eve in a freezing Macedonian village, dancing to music played by gypsies.

Gypsies, more accurately known as the Roma people, are "excellent musicians, everybody's a musician here," according to Daniel Ryan. Ryan not only danced in their streets, but he worked and lived with them – and not only for the night of Y2K, but for several months through a grassroots organization called Balkan Sunflowers.

Ryan, a Sociology major with minors in German and International Relations, used the less traveled route when considering options abroad. Instead of studying abroad through the university, Ryan decided to work overseas and found a job teaching kindergarten in Eunich, Germany. After three months of working three hours a day, Ryan took the position of Country Coordinator with Balkan Sunflowers and boarded a flight to Skopje the capital of Macedonia.

It was in a part of Skopje known as Suto Orizari where Ryan lived among the largest Roma population in the world. The population is approximately 60,000, which does not include the influx of Roma refugee families from Kosovo. In Suto Orizari, Balkan Sunflowers set up programs to serve both populations.

The organization runs a kindergarten classroom in the morning for the local children, recreation programs in the afternoon, and English classes in the evening. These programs are held Monday through Friday and Ryan commented that the experience was "really rewarding, especially when you get to work with these children."

Half of the children Ryan speaks of attend school. However, the other half did not attend school for economic reasons: they did not have the money to afford notebooks. The school in Suto Orizari is full, so full it requires morning and evening sessions to educate the youth.

But as a humanitarian organization, Balkan Sunflowers were able to do something. With the help of the International Rescue Committee – who received money to pay for teachers, bus backpacks and shoes – all of the children in their program are now receiving a formal education.

Working with other international aid programs like the International Rescue Committee was a large part of Ryan's job. In his two months as Country Coordinator, he worked with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the British Government, the American Refugee Council and the German government.

One such organization, the UNHCR, funds short-term projects. Ryan and his colleagues implemented a program, repairing nearly 200 homes in order to make the short but very cold Macedonian winter bearable. Also, many of the locals could not afford firewood and the British government funded the purchase of firewood for distribution, Ryan said.

However, assisting the locals was not always easy.

Turn to SENIOR, page 3

COURTESY DANIEL RYAN
Peję, located in the Kosovo province, is one of the locations where UMass student Daniel Ryan conducted humanitarian work.

Fuming over ads

By Marc Kaufman
Washington Post

When cigarette makers agreed to pay almost $250 billion in a landmark settlement with the states 18 months ago, anti-tobacco advocates hoped the national anti-smoking foundation that the deal created would become a formidable counterbalance to the tobacco industry's powerful marketing efforts.

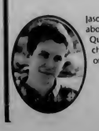
Instead, the American Legacy Foundation has been vociferously criticized by the very advocates who lobbied to create it. The foundation's decision last week to pull two controversial television ads under pressure from the tobacco industry has caused public health and anti-smoking advocates to charge that the group's independence and integrity have been seriously compromised.

Foundation officials said last week they pulled the ads to avoid a drawn-out fight with the industry and its supporters as the first major anti-smoking campaign was being rolled out. They said they might try to use the ads in the future.

But reflecting the growing concern of anti-smoking advocates, Sen. Frank R. Lautenberg, D-N.J., said Friday he would lead other senators in calling for hearings if "the censorship" continues. Pulling the ads, he wrote in a letter to the foundation, "creates the unfortunate appearance that the foundation will back down when tobacco interests object, and undermines public confidence in the foundation's independence and ability to run an effective campaign."

The controversy – over two ads shot in and around Philip Morris headquarters in New York – has also exposed a largely unknown compromise written into the 1998 master settlement agreement between the tobacco industry and 46 state attorneys general. That agreement was signed after the Senate had killed a comprehensive tobacco bill, reducing the leverage of the attorneys general.

In exchange for $1.5 billion from the tobacco industry to fund the foun-

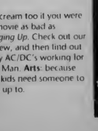


Turn to ADS, page 3

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 42 LOW: 24	HIGH: 46 LOW: 33	HIGH: 54 LOW: 35

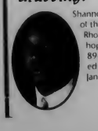
SOURCE: CNN.COM



Kwitcherbitchin'

Jason Trenkle complains about the complainers. Quit you whining and check out the bitter irony on the Ed-Op page.

EDIT PAGE 4



A truly horrifying movie

You'd scream too if you were in a movie as bad as Hanging Up. Check out our review, and then find out why AC/DC's working for the Man. Arts: because the kids need someone to look up to.

ARTS PAGE 6

Another drubbing?

Shannon Crooks and the rest of the Minutemen travel to Rhode Island tonight in hopes of duplicating the 89-50 win that they posted against the Rams on Jan. 22.

SPORTS PAGE 10

Arts & Living 6
Comics 9
Crossword 9
Editorial 4
News 1
Sports 10

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

■ competition

continued from page 1

the bridge in the fastest time possible. However, according to Helmuth, the challenge existed in the fact that the bridge had to be built over a 14 by 15 foot water span, without having any of the team members step into the designated water area. Helmuth said the team received second place in the construction speed category with a time of 16.6 minutes.

In the next step, the weighing stage of the competition, measurements were made to determine the weight of the bridges and the amount of deflection. The UMass bridge weighed approximately 390 pounds according to Helmuth. Each bridge was required to be loaded with a maximum of 2,000 pounds in the center and 500 pounds on the cantilever, a structure that is attached to only one end. The amount of deflection was determined based on how much the structure bent at the middle or at the ends. The teams were allowed a maximum deflection of two inches before being disqualified.

According to senior civil engineering major John Soboleski, co-coordinator of the event, the team had calculated that the bridge could withhold a total of 2,500 pounds. However, the maximum deflection occurred at around 1,200 pounds.

"We put a lot of hours into this bridge, almost 200 hours, and to not pull through at the end is really upsetting and disappointing," Soboleski said. "But it doesn't discourage me from doing another one."

According to Soboleski, last year the team was disqualified in the building stage and this year it got to the weighing stage. He said he hopes to contribute to the team's experience in learning about its mistakes and what to avoid next time.

Helmuth stated that a lot of last minute adjustments had to be made on the bridge, but overall it was a learning experience.

"I think the competition is something most civil engineers should get involved with because it gives you a real life experience outside the classroom," Helmuth said.

TERESA CANINO-RIVERA/ COLLEGIAN

Students from UMass competed against other universities in the Campus Center Auditorium during the Engineering Fair.

Foundation challenging

By Karen DeYoung
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – Money and lobbying muscle flows freely to both sides of the debate. But for years, the unchallenged big gun on Cuba policy has been the Miami-based Cuban American National Foundation, which strongly backs the hard line.

A 1997 report by the Center for Public Integrity identified the foundation as not only "the most potent voice on U.S. policy toward Cuba," but "dollar for dollar, arguably the most effective" lobbying force in Washington. From its 1981 founding until 1997, the report said, the foundation funneled approximately $3.2 million into the U.S. political system. The foundation has financed much of the attempt by Elian Gonzalez's Miami relatives to keep him in this country.

It claims credit for the current pillars of sanctions policy – Radio and TV Marti, a $28 million-a-year taxpayer-financed system broadcasting into Cuba, along with the embargo-tightening Cuban Democracy Act in 1992 and the 1996 Helms-Burton Act.

The foundation tends to remember its friends and punish its enemies without regard to party affiliation. Florida and New Jersey members, along with supporters in positions of power, have traditionally been among the biggest recipients of donations from foundation individuals and the organization's Free Cuba PAC.

But others who are less visibly associated with the foundation's causes are also remembered, such as House Minority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., and Rep. Patrick J. Kennedy, R.I., chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, who has been in the forefront of calls to keep Elian Gonzalez in Miami. The two top Senate recipients so far in the current campaign cycle are Sens. Joseph I. Lieberman, D-Conn., and Charles S. Robb, D-Va.

Those who antagonize the foundation can expect a quick response. In July 1993, David Skaggs, then a Democratic representative from Colorado, succeeded in temporarily killing funds for TV Marti. The next morning, he was confronted by an angry Rep. Lincoln Diaz-Balart, R-Fla., who, Skaggs said in an impassioned floor speech that afternoon, threatened "that if I followed through with my plans, he would do all he could to go after everything he could find that was important to me."

That same day, the Cuban-born Diaz-Balart used a parliamentary "point of order" to axe millions in federal funds for Skaggs' Colorado district, as the foundation was faxing a gloating press release detailing the maneuver, and the reason for it, to every major newspaper in the state.

"We only go after people who come after us," Jose Cardenas, the foundation's Washington director, said in a recent interview.

While acknowledging that "there are (now) some different dynamics in the debate," Cardenas said, "there is a big difference between issuing press releases that you want U.S. policy to change, going down on these pilgrimages to Havana and being wined and dined by the dictator, and actually effecting policy change."

Cardenas dismissed purported changes of heart on sanctions by Sen. John D. Ashcroft, R-Mo., and others. "He's got an agricultural state and a very tough race against a popular governor," he said of Ashcroft. The Senate vote "was more a bone to the farm lobby. ... I think he knew it was not going to go anywhere in the House."

Turn to FOUNDATION, page 3

BECKY BEDDICK/ COLLEGIAN

I spy, in my equine eye...

...something to eat, probably.

■ temperature

continued from page 1

Earth's past temperature.

Heat moves two ways through the ground. One is from the surface down, as thermal energy from the planet's sun- and air-warmed crust seeps downward through rock. The other is from the bottom up, as heat from the Earth's molten innards travels upward.

By lowering thermometers into these holes, and subtracting the bottom-up signal from the readings, scientists can find evidence of past temperature shifts as they propagate down through the rock. It's a slow process; in 1,000 years, heat pulses penetrate only about 1,600 feet.

"By looking at these temperature disturbances," Pollack said, "we can reconstruct surface conditions" from centuries past by combining results from many sites. In all, 479 of the 616 holes showed average warming of 1.8 degrees F since 1500 (a bit higher than what other proxy measures indicate), with 80 percent of that since 1800, and more than half since 1900.

Interestingly, the new five-century findings – which confirm a smaller study the group published in 1998 – suggest that natural temperature variation may be larger than previously thought. Any warming detected during the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries was almost certainly not caused by human society. It is likely to be the product of natural processes – perhaps a recovery from the "Little Ice Age," a cold snap that gripped Europe from 1400 to 1850. Atmospheric carbon dioxide levels did not rise appreciably until the early 19th century.

As for the ultra-hot 1980s and '90s, surface measurements from thousands of land-based stations and ships show an increase of about half a degree. But two other, independent sources – weather balloon instruments and satellites that measure the temperature of the lower atmosphere – show no net warming during that period.

This contradiction suggests that either the surface measurements or the satellite/balloon figures are simply wrong.

Moreover, it casts doubt on the computerized global climate simulations, or "models," that are used to assess the threat of warming. In general, the models predict that enhanced greenhouse warming should heat the air in the lower troposphere – the layer of the atmosphere closest to the Earth, and the one sampled by balloons and satellite readings.

That disparity became so vexing that the National Research Council (NRC) appointed an expert panel to consider the issue.

■ senior

continued from page 1

"Everybody there wanted to get out, they wanted visas. People would ask, 'When you go back to America can you sponsor me?'" Ryan said, and he furthered the organization policy was to deny all requests. "We just said no. It may seem hard, but it was such a common thing."

Although Balkan Sunflowers is an active organization, it is fairly new. It was founded in the Spring of 1999 by Dutch peace activist Wam Kat. The organization is a non-political, non-religious organization that aims to "bring relief to those people and communities who are suffering."

Balkan Sunflowers has programs in Albania, Macedonia and Kosovo. In Albania, volunteers teach courses on gun safety and land mine awareness and were able to build the county's first playground. It is the only organization that will send volunteers to Kosovo. It also works on projects such as collecting books for university libraries that were damaged and looted during the recent war.

Although translators and local staff are hired, the organization is mainly voluntary. Volunteers stay in the country anywhere from three weeks to three months. This, Ryan said, has its advantages and its drawbacks.

"Managing volunteers are sometimes difficult. Volunteers come for short periods of time, so the program is always dynamic, it's always interesting, it's always fresh. You also have to sacrifice some things for continuity."

One of the volunteers currently in Macedonia has a fresh idea: he is recording Roma musicians, aiming to promote a CD and all the proceeds from sales will go to the Roma people. On a more local level, a volunteer from the Essex Technical Center is working to connect his school and a Vermont high school with two schools in Pristina, the capital of the Kosovo province. It is hoped that the schools will become sister schools or penpals when they get Internet services.

Ryan, recently returned from Macedonia, is still a volunteer. He is on the board of directors for Balkan Sunflowers, where his main purpose is to spot donors and find volunteers.

"The thing is, people see these things happening, like the war in Kosovo, things like ethnic cleansing, refugees, violence ... a lot of people say, 'Thi is horrible. I want to help. But, all these big organizations won't take you, you have to have a lot of experience in your field," Ryan said. "But Balkan Sunflowers says, 'Look, your motivation is enough. Whatever ideas and creativity you bring is welcome.' Most of the volunteers that we get are not technical people at all."

Although Ryan continues to work for Balkan Sunflowers in America, leaving Macedonia was hard for him. "It was a good time, good people, I have a lot of good friends there," Ryan said.

COURTESY JASON RYAN

Volunteers for the Balkan Sunflower project help children such as these kindergarteners overcome poverty and other adversity.

■ foundation

continued from page 2

■ CRC

continued from page 1

munities has been at an all time high, with active students from all four colleges attending the UMass CRC meetings.

"We had a lot of hard work done by a lot of volunteers," Franklin said.

Both groups plan to start immediately campaigning for the question in a number of different ways. Franklin explained that the groups planned on sending out information packets to registered voters within the town addressing the issue of the legalization of marijuana and the necessity for the success of the proposal currently on the ballot. In addition, the groups intend upon lobbying area legislature for support in the proposed measures.

Amherst residents will vote on the proposal, as well as others, on the March 28 ballot.

Visit
www.dailycollegian.com
(we know where you live)

All-nighters not as bad, study says

By Emily Sipiorski
Badger Herald

MADISON, Wis. – According to a recent study, pulling an all-nighter may have more benefits than many students believe.

The study, done by researchers at the University of California, suggests that more of the brain actually begins functioning after sleep deprivation.

Contrary to expectations, researchers found that after 35 hours without sleep, the pre-frontal cortex of the brain becomes more active. The pre-frontal cortex aids in short-term memory functions, compensating for the effects of sleep loss. However, some local experts warned against the findings of the study.

"Mental abilities are impaired by sleep restriction," said Steve Weber of the UW Hospital Sleep Disorder Clinic. "Performance is affected beyond 48 hours."

Many UW-Madison students also find the results of the study hard to believe.

"I hear you go crazy after 72 hours. I believe that your mind starts moving in other directions when you don't have enough energy," sophomore Kenzie Rieselman said.

Other students saw the study as an intriguing insight into the realms of the mind.

"I think the study makes sense," senior Gretchen Chojnacki said. "The body always has ways of overcoming struggles."

According to the study, the region of the brain known as the parietal lobe, which collates information, becomes more active after a lack of sleep. This compensation is more effective when dealing with language rather than mathematical problems. Many UW students are forced to experience dreaded all-nighters. Regardless of how mysteriously their bodies function everyone seems to have a way to combat the nighttime sleeplessness.

"As a landscape architecture student it's almost expected to have a few sleepless nights," Rieselman said. "I drink coffee and listen to music."

Pulling the occasional all-nighter is not unhealthy, Weber said. However, the repetition of constant all-nighters can be hard on the body.

Repeated episodes of no sleep during a week will affect irritability and nastiness," he said. "This can affect qualities of life."

TERESA CANINO-RIVERA

Freshmen + snow = fun.

Caitlin Beattie and Beth Lane, both undeclared freshmen, frolicked in the snow other the weekend. Hey, who didn't?

■ ads

continued from page 1

dation's five-year national teen anti-smoking campaign, the attorneys general agreed in the settlement that the effort would not "vilify" the industry or its officers. The two ads were pulled last week after Philip Morris and several attorneys general complained that they were "inconsistent with the objectives of the settlement agreement" and that they vilified the industry.

But public health and anti-tobacco advocates say that attacking the industry for what they see as its duplicity – by producing a deadly product that it advertises as appealing and sophisticated – is essential for any successful anti-tobacco campaign.

"How can you run an anti-smoking campaign and not vilify the industry?" said former FDA commissioner David Kessler, an active anti-tobacco advocate. "It would be better to not take the money if the industry is able to pull the strings and take control."

"I'm very uncomfortable with the tobacco companies being the censors of what kind of anti-tobacco message can be used to reduce teen-age smoking," said Mississippi Attorney General Mike Moore, who led the states' legal fight against the tobacco industry. His state was one of four that settled early with the industry, and he said there is no "anti-vilification" clause in his agreement.

"I think the Legacy Foundation has basically destroyed itself," said Stanton Glantz, a longtime anti-tobacco advocate at the University of California at San Francisco. "The tobacco companies always threaten aggressive ads, and you have to stand up to them. You just cannot turn over control of your ads to Philip Morris.

1:10 p.m. finding a great job.

While you're doing your thing, we're doing ours. Matching you to great jobs with hundreds of top employers - 24/7.

Log on to www.jobdirect.com/cash for a chance to win $500 today!

JobDirect.com
Where students and employers click!

During Engineers Week, You Can

CRASH A PLANE

No pilots licence needed

All you need is the given talent to fold paper in the Paper Airplane Contest Wednesday, Feb. 23 at noon. PRIZES! Open to all - make your plane when you arrive, and fly your plane off the balcony of the Fine Arts Center Auditorium.

You don't have to be an engineer to compete. Other events this week will include:

TOMORROW! 11 am Faculty Research Showcase, Marcus Hall.
TOMORROW! 5:30 pm Discussion, "Who wants to be a Millionaire? Investment Strategies for people Starting out," Gunness Engineering Student Center, Marcus Hall. Fidelity Investment vice president gives the hot tips.
Friday 11 am - 2 pm Mini vehicle desighn and accuracy contest, Gunness Engineering Student center, Marcus Hall. PRIZES! Contact Matt Padkowka at podkowka@student.umass.edu or dsturgis@ecs.umass.edu for more details. Friday 3:30 pm Showcase: Design projects to Aid the Disabled, 19 Gunness lab.

Sponsored by GE plastics, Precision Tectonix, J & E Precision Tool, EMC2 Corporation, I2 Technologies, Eric Thorgerson, Lee Pearlmutter, and JOEL USA.

FEATURED ITEM THIS WEEK

THIS WEEK
$49.99

COTTON EXCHANGE
UMASS HOODED SWEATSHIRT

COLLEGIATE Casuals
M Th 8 30 6 Fr
Sat 11
(413) 545 2819
niversity
Not like a mall Better

Do you want to be apart of the biggest student run business on campus?

Are you interested in a careerin Human Resources?

Collegian is accepting applications for the position of Human Resource Coordinator.

Applications can be picked up at the Collegian in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Interested applicants should possess excellent communication and computer skills.

Any questions can be directed to Christine Carrol at 545-3500 or hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion
Balancing the Funding

Chancellor David Scott finally had good news for the campus last Friday, announcing that outside funding for research had more than doubled from its expected increase.

The thought was that there would only be a five million dollar increase from the $75 million that professors brought in with funding proposals. However, this year's projected increase doubled, as it appears the UMass campus and professors will see something closer to $85 million in research funding.

Through December, UMass professors had brought in $42.1 million, as compared to last year's amount at the same time, $37.1 million. While it isn't guaranteed that professors will be able to continue with such success this coming semester, it is a possibility, and if that happens, professors will get their $10 million increase.

Fred Byron, Assistant Vice-Chancellor for Research, explained that the reason for the increase funding was the fact that professors had asked for much more in their grant proposals. Commenting that professors won't get more money unless they ask for it, Byron said that professors had started asking for it, requesting an additional 15.4 percent in funding from last year's requests. Byron praised UMass faculty by saying that they are doing a "bang-up job."

And indeed they are. On a campus where, somewhere along the line, someone can't figure out how much money is needed to keep programs and majors going, that professors can go out at ask for more money and get it is extremely praise worthy. An additional $10 million can go a long way for any number of worthy projects.

Unfortunately, these professors, while getting support from outside organizations, can't necessarily count on support from their own campus administration. Budget cuts, the cancellation of majors and funding problems are all things that show professors that they can't count on their own superiors.

Like public school teachers, professors can never quite get a fair shake. While certain departments certainly are taken care of financially, most departments are left to fight for the remainders. All departments are forced to look off campus for additional funding, even those departments that are supposedly taken care of. While that has always been typical for public universities, the danger with recent increases has been that professors are counting too much on outside sources of money.

And while those funding proposals have met with great success recently, should economic times turn, and they inevitably will, will those same professors be able to count on the same outside sources of funding? Not necessarily, and for that very reason, The Daily Collegian feels that the UMass system has to work out issues of funding as quickly as possible.

By deciding to wait until more money becomes available, UMass is risking falling into an even shakier financial situation. Should economic times worsen and outside sources of funding dry up, would UMass be able to withstand that sort of financial situation?

Probably not, as UMass can't handle its current financial situation, and that is in an environment with a booming economy and hundreds of millions of dollars in outside funding available. Should that economy vaporize, and UMass can't get its financial situation in order, the campus is going to face tougher times than have been seen in a while.

Your Opinion
Honors is Fair

To the Editor:

As much as I like being taken out of context, I feel it is necessary to clarify a few points in regards to the series of editorials written by Sam Wilkinson about Commonwealth College.

My floormates and I wrote a letter to the editor that was printed on Monday, February 14. Mr. Wilkinson addressed this letter and some other "fan mail" he received in an editorial on Wednesday, February 16. To my chagrin, many of the replies that he has received actually feed his argument that honors students think they are better than everyone else and deserve better treatment. That was one of the themes of the original editorial published a week ago, and some of my honors colleagues have put a lot of effort into proving Mr. Wilkinson's point.

However, that is not my point. First, my main gripe with Mr. Wilkinson was that he was being condescending and derogatory towards the population of honors students on this campus. He used a lot of stereotypes and made a lot of assumptions that were both in bad taste and an example of bad journalism.

More importantly, I am writing to clarify one point from my original letter that Mr. Wilkinson seems to have glossed over. First, I do not think that honors students are necessarily better than any of the other students on campus, and I do not disagree with Mr. Wilkinson that all students on campus should have the same opportunities as everyone else.

My point was that everyone on this campus DOES have those opportunities. Most professors open their honors classes to every student on this campus, and if one were to put in a little extra effort and get the GPA necessary to apply to the honors college, then they could have the same access to the small school environment that Mr. Wilkinson seems to detest so much. The opportunity is there if one were to take advantage of it.

Therefore, if Mr. Wilkinson would get off of his high horse, he would realize that the opportunity to utilize a program like Commonwealth College is there for every student on this campus, if he or she is willing to work for it.

It should be made clear that I am not arguing that honors students are somehow better than everyone else. I am merely arguing that complaining about elitism and then writing condescending editorials is hypocritical and childish, and that there are thousands of opportunities available to all students on this campus. So get out there and take advantage of them instead of sitting around and complaining! It's not the University that holds you back: it is yourself.

Erin O'Brien
Field House, Orchard Hill

Stop all of your complaining!

Over the past three years, this campus has managed to go through budget cuts, a chain of sexual assaults/rapes, elimination of affirmative action based admissions, a Boston Red Sox riot, an on-campus housing overflow and the onslaught of the bothersome virus known as the Commonwealth College; meanwhile the campus continues to complain that next-to-nothing is being accomplished.

The reason for this lack of productivity is that more students prefer to complain and get upset over things than are actually concerned about making a difference. For example, look at the number of students last semester who would rather complain about the lack of security on this campus than actually attempt to improve things. Fingers were constantly being pointed at the UMass Police and Student Security for not showing an increased presence. I know that this is crap because most students didn't care that the UMass Police were overworking themselves 24-hours a day, with a minimum number of staffing and an expired contract that was up for bids with the state. In addition, I thought the students' irresponsibility showed through best when no students showed up for a forum on sexual assaults the day before Thanksgiving break. It made the students seem more concerned about getting out of school than they were for their own safety. At the same time, more than 30 administrators and faculty showed their support. Still, the very next week, some hundred students continued to bitch about how nothing is being done.

Jason Trenkle

As for the elimination of affirmative action in the admission policy, I think most students didn't even know what the term affirmative action meant. One student I interviewed thought the term referred to his right to be affirmative in protesting. Students went around carrying screws, chanting "Don't Screw With Us," and at least a couple of them didn't even know what they were protesting about.

Other areas on campus just seem to complain about things 24-hours a day. In fact, they're so bitter about practically everything that they make the GEO look like angels. For instance, The Minuteman newspaper, a predominantly Republican product, is so slanted in its views that MassPIRG almost decided to use it as toilet paper to conserve the environment. Even so, The Minuteman seems to think that by featuring all kinds of biased articles it can directly affect the administration by forcing it to "open its eyes" to the issues on this campus. That's complete garbage, because if a paper wants to accomplish this it should try to actually make itself visible on this campus and actually attempt to gain recognition and respect, of which The Minuteman has none.

Another organization that is a bitch to the campus is the Commonwealth College. I can't stand this group of academic snobs who cares more about the size of their clout than what they're actually learning in classes. They complain so much about what Sam Wilkinson has to say that I'm willing to side with Sam and say: listen, if you really want to get something done, get involved with the community and don't bitch about what isn't getting accomplished. Get some experience in the real world and don't care so much about your GPA.

Having worked at the Collegian as a reporter, I realize that there are certain things the administration and university could do to improve the lives of students. However, I think the UMass community is more concerned with complaining about just about everything than how much it can actually get accomplished.

As for everyone else, you can bitch about how much I complain or how much I hurt your little egos, but the bottom line is simple: I'm doing my part through the Collegian and everyone else needs to stop complaining because I have much better things to write about.

Jason Trenkle is a Collegian Columnist.

Hallucinating in style

Boomer Pinches

The first thing I saw when I stepped out of Central Station was a pair of dwarves in lederhosen dancing about and serenading an elderly bicyclist with "Yellow Submarine."

This is one of the dangers of Amsterdam. You see a lot of weird craziness before you've even touched any drugs. So later, when your mind is totally fried, you're never quite sure whether the strange things you see are a result of those mushrooms you ate or if they're really there. It's as though the city itself dropped acid before you arrived and saved you the trouble.

But of course you don't go to Amsterdam unless you want the trouble. Amsterdam is a city devoted to indulging that perverse part of the human psyche inherent to everyone in some degree: the desire to obliterate, or at least temporarily warp, your consciousness. Everything is available in Amsterdam - sex, drugs, voyeurism, and violence - and all of it is cheap. This is Europe's playground and nobody is minding the kids. It is nearly impossible to maintain a rational state of mind here. Remaining reasonable in a city designed to drive you mad is just too taxing. There has to be a little give or you snap.

The brochures try and give the more decadent aspects of its culture a benign, tourist-friendly gloss, but there is a very real danger here. There have been plenty of cases in which a relatively respectable member of society has gone to Amsterdam and disappeared forever into its sordid depths. Just last year the BBC aired a program about a successful, young Italian architect whose mother had gone to Amsterdam on holiday when he was just a boy. She never came back, so he went to Amsterdam to find her. He did; she was a junkie, living well below the poverty line. And the real kicker here is that her son, the successful architect, ended up staying in Amsterdam with her and became a junkie too.

Would this happen to us? We were only going for three nights. Surely any psychological damage incurred would be temporary. But we would have to stay on our toes. Surviving this city is akin to ice skating: it's all fun and games so long as you keep moving and don't fall through to the dark waters beneath.

There were four of us: Gavin, Chris, Mike and myself. We arrived on Friday evening. But it wasn't until Saturday night that things started going bad. We had all downed what was, in retrospect, a grossly irresponsible amount of mushrooms. Then we wandered around the red light district, admiring the moonlight on the canal and the all-but-naked prostitutes lounging lasciviously in the windows.

Sometime during that first hour, Mike disappeared. I'm still not sure how it happened. One moment he was next to me and then suddenly, he was gone. The rest of us stopped walking and tried to pick him out of the crowd of dealers, hustlers, tourists and greasy-skinned johns. But we couldn't find him. And in looking for him, Chris had somehow disappeared as well. In my paranoia, I became convinced that the three of them had all conspired to abandon me in the red light district and then ambush me on my way back to the hostel.

I seized Gavin by the arm. "What are you bastards up to?" I demanded.

He looked at me as though my words were total gibberish. Then he laughed and his skin seemed to be slowly melting from his face.

"Oh hell," I said.

The red light district was no place to be having evil visions. Everywhere I turned, there were advertisements for live sex shows, and women with enormous breasts leering at me from behind their windows. Desperate to escape the pornographic freak shows of this post-Freudian urban sex mall, Gavin and I decided to flee. But we couldn't escape. No matter how far we walked or which way we turned, we inevitably found ourselves back where we started.

We crossed canals. We walked down alleys lined with hippopotamus women with Elvis hairdos. We wound our way around a gothic church, avoiding the glares of a swastika-wearing skinheads who lurked in its shadow. The third time we passed the church, the bell in the clock tower began to toll. Midnight had struck. Panic overcame me. Every ominous peal of the bell seemed to be counting down to the moment when this nightmare city would finally swallow me.

Throughout all of this, Gavin remained unflappable. He even seemed to be enjoying himself. I began to suspect that he was plotting to drive me mad.

Sometimes we would duck into a building to find respite, but inside it was even worse. Peepshow strippers would peel off their clothes to reveal the anatomical features of reptiles and flesh-eating beasts. Art shops featured walls of photographs depicting men and women subjected to terrible acts of sexual torture. At one point, I found myself trapped in some poorly lit subterranean labyrinth, evading the grasp of the garish women reaching out from doorways to drag into their lair any schmuck who was too drunk or stoned to resist. No doubt the women would rob me blind given half a chance, and maybe do other horrible things as well . . .

Then I was sitting in the mezzanine of some bar watching the Grammy awards on a gigantic TV screen. It was a litany of horrors: Will Smith's head drifting away from his body . . . Sheryl Crow naked while playing guitar . . . Rosie O'Donnell staring right at me with blazing eyes and shrieking like a banshee escaped from hell . . .

I watched these perverse massacres of reality on the TV for hours, until I couldn't take it anymore.

"We have to get out of here," I told Kenyon.

"Relax," he said. "We just got here."

"What the fesus are you talking about? We've been sitting here for hours." But then I looked at the clock on the wall: it had been less than ten minutes since we'd sat down.

Somehow we made it back to the hostel before dawn. But I couldn't sleep. My mind was tormented by visions of my friends and family growing fangs and long snouts and snapping at me like an alligator. I resisted fiercely the overwhelming urge to bite off my own tongue.

I woke at eleven, having slept for two hours. There were no more hallucinations, but my fear from the night before lingered. Gavin was already up. Chris had come back in the night, but Mike's whereabouts were still unknown. Later we would find out that he had caught an early bus back to London, but at the time I was sure that something terrible had happened. I refused to get out of bed.

"Come on, we'll go have some smokes down at the Grasshopper," Gavin said. "Fix you right up."

"You fool," I said from beneath my pillow. "This city will never let us leave. We're doomed."

But the dark fate I envisioned never arrived. It was a drizzly Monday morning when we finally got out of Amsterdam. Me, Gavin, Chris and three dozen other refugees from reality huddled just outside the station, waiting in the rain for the bus that would take us back to London. Everything around me was the color of exhaust fumes: the sky, and the puddles of rainwater, and the clothes I'd been living in for two days. A nicotine junkie standing next to me took a drag off his cigarette and laughed nervously at a joke no one had told; smoke plumed from his mouth into the air, like memories exhaled.

Boomer Pinches is a Collegian Columnist.

WRITE FOR ED-OP

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 •
http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Ben Alamed Web Developer Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Alexis Pashkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Icanic Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor Maureen Majetowski Assistant Operations Manager
Mary Grein News Editor Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Kara Stokes Photography Editor Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Adam White Co-Sports Editor Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

International Affairs

World Briefs

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Uganda: Uganda's president, Yoweri Museveni, said that his government would not allow irresponsible journalists to scare away tourists and potential investors with inaccurate reporting.

Museveni's comments came a mere two days after journalists from the western Ugandan Voice of Toro radio station incorrectly reported that Allied Democratic Forces rebels in Kijura in Uganda's Kabarole district killed 50 people. The reporters were both arrested and the radio station retracted in the incorrect report.

The president had been on tour of the Kabarole district, as well Kasese and Bundibugyo, all areas that ADF rebels have attacked since 1996. 150 civilians and members of a security force have been killed since last November. Investors met with Museveni to say that foreign interests were being scared away by inaccurate reporting.

Unaware that the radio station had retracted the story, Museveni promised to look into releasing the detained reporters, who had supposedly been tortured while under arrest.

Kuwait: Kuwait routed Bhutan 20-0...in soccer. The defeat, which is the largest ever in international soccer, occurred over the weekend. Bashar Abdullah scored eight times.

The previous record for defeat was Iran's 17-0 victory over Maldives in 1997.

Kuwait scored ten goals in each half and Bhutan had two players sent off for misconduct. The two teams, along with Turkmenistan, Yemen and Nepal are Group Five in the Asians Cup. The winner advances to the 16-nation tournament to be held in Lebanon this October.

Bulgaria: Five seperate companies have expressed interest in acquiring 51 percent of Bulgaria's tobacco monopoly Bulgatabak.

Pullip Morris, British American Tobacco, Altadis Japan Tobacco and Credit Suisse First Boston have all acquired the necessary paperwork to bid on the company.

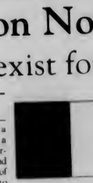
Bulgatabak is expecting a $30 million dollar profit this year after making $36 million last year. The company consists of 22 subsidiaries including 12 tobacco processing factories, nine cigarette plants and one tobacco company that produces driers, filters and packing. The company also has five plants in other countries including three in Russia, one in the Ukraine and one in Romania. Two more will be opened this year; one in Slovakia and one in Paraguay. The company produces 70 cigarette brands.

Buyers promise to expand Bulgartabak's export markets through Europe and to help to retain its dominant position within Bulgaria. Other buyer requirements include maintaining current levels of paid taxes and excise duties, upgrades to some of Bulgartabak's older factories and to keep buying Bulgarian tobacco.

Latvia: Investigators from Latvia's Parliament linked both the country's prime minister and justice minister to a pedophile investigation.

Rumors had circulated for months about the involvement of some government members in a pedophile ring, but none had been named until the Latvia's lead investigator officially named both the prime minister and justice minister.

Close to 40 witnesses named Prime Minister Andris Skele, Justice Minister Valdis Birhavs and the head of the state revenue service, Andrejs Sonciks as members of the ring. All three denied any involvement.



Birkavs described the allegations as politically motivated and went on a hunger strike in protest.

The scandal, which began when the head of a Latvian video company was arrested on suspicion of child pornography peddling, later led to government officials when interviews with the involved boys revealed that they had been forced to perform sexual acts with men in Riga. Latvia's capital. Some of the boys said government ministers were involved.

Some critics of the scandal said that it has been nothing more but an attempt to de-stabilize Latvia's recently formed government.

A check on Northern Ireland
Can peace exist for religious groups?

By Steve Barg
Collegian Correspondent

Northern Ireland is once again facing a stalemate that threatens chances for a lasting peace. On Feb. 11, the power-sharing government of Northern Ireland had been suspended, due to the failure of the Irish Republican Army (IRA) to demilitarize. The IRA broke contact with the neutral disarmament commission since that suspension. This was a large setback for the peace process in Northern Ireland.

The suspended governing assembly is the centerpiece to the Good Friday Agreement of 1998. The peace process already overcame many obstacles in establishing the government early last December. At first the majority protestant party, the Ulster Unionist Party (UUP), would not join the four party government until the IRA turned over its weapons. They eventually relented with the understanding that a proposal for disarmament was to be announced soon.

No such proposal was put forward, so the head of the UUP, David Trimble, announced that he would resign if there was no concession from the IRA. To prevent his resignation, which would dissolve the new government, Britain suspended the Northern Irish Assembly and returned the province to direct rule from London.

It was later released that only hours before the suspension, the IRA did make a vague promise to disarm, but this was too little and too late to stop the suspension. The exact measures made in the proposal have not been disclosed, but sources said that if made earlier, it might have kept the peace process moving forward. After the suspension, however, the IRA cancelled its proposal and ended its dialogue with the disarmament commission.

Tony Blair and the Irish Republic's Prime Minister, Bertie Ahern, have both pledged their commitment to restoring power to the assembly, but as yet no solution has been offered.

A recent article from the Irish Times reported that sources indicated further violence could not be ruled out.

This is only the latest drawback in the difficult task of bringing a peaceful solution to the province. It belies the hateful and violent past familiar in the conflict. The persecution of the Catholics under the last Northern Irish government, dissolved in 1972, and the brutal IRA terrorism are only two examples that contribute to the divisions in Northern Ireland. The deep sectarian lines are drawn by centuries of injustices, exploitation and violence.

The IRA has been fighting for its freedom from an imperialistic power, and has a strong case for its cause if not its means. The British, on the other hand, are fighting ruthless terrorism for a province that they cannot pull out of, since the majority of the Northern Irish want to remain part of the U.K.

Given these circumstances, the situation seems hopeless. However, rational thought seems to be making steady progress. The deaths of seven children in a 1998 terrorist attack convinced many people that the violence had to end. The establishment of the power-sharing government in the first place signified a major victory, and it embodies a real compromise that seems to be acceptable not only to the majority of the population, but also to most of the far left and right political and paramilitary groups.

The Democratic Unionists Party still refuses to communicate with the Sinn Fein members of the assembly, but its participation adds legitimacy to the government. The IRA is causing the current setback, but they did make an offer that disarmament could happen if linked with British military withdrawal. Yesterday, Sinn Fein suggested that this was still a possibility. If the offer could be reinstated, and the British could agree to a military pullout, it might be the last major obstacle towards a real cease-fire in Northern Ireland.

Then there would still be the major task of erasing the lines between the Catholics and Protestants. These kinds of social divisions cause conflicts around the world. Still, peace is possible, as can be seen just across the border in the Irish Republic.

The United Kingdom

A perspective on Cuba: Elian should go home

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Alright, we've all heard quite enough about this little Cuban boy, Elian Gonzalez. Will he remain in the United States, or will he be returned to Cuba? This is the question that is on everybody's mind. However, no one has bothered to ask the boy what his feelings are on the matter, or at least I haven't read any interviews with the boy himself.

In the United States, we have been bombarded with negative images of Cuba ever since the Cuban Missile Crisis. Fidel Castro has remained the token Communist since the Iron Curtain fell in 1989. The US has virtually forgiven Russia and now helps promote her new economic freedom, but it still won't even trade sugarcane with Cuba, which is about 100 times smaller and less 'dangerous' than the former Soviet Union. This seems strange to me. In this new era of world trade and interdependence, why is this country being neglected?

What would really happen if we started trading with Cuba? Well first of all, the economy in the country would grow, leading to a higher standard of living. US companies would probably enter the country and build factories, providing jobs for Cubans and leading to an increased flow of capital. And for us? Well, I guess we'd get more sugar, huh? Mmmm, Americans LOVE sugar.

What does all this have to do with little Elian, you ask? Well, it has to do with the American misconception of Cuba and the stereotypes we hold against the country. We don't want to see Elian returned to his home country because we believe that he would have a better life in our country.

Yes, the United States is a great place to live and raise children. I can't complain; I was raised here and I'm glad about that. Both of my parents are from here and all of my friends are from here. But what about Elian? Where are his parents and family? Well, they're in CUBA. His father, his grandparents and his friends are all Cuba. How would you feel if you suddenly lost your mother and then were forced to live in a far away land, separated from the rest of your living family?

If he stays here, chances are that with all the legal and bureaucratic red tape surrounding his case, he won't see his family for a long, long time. He'll be surrounded not only with people who care about him, but also with controversy. He is six years old. Is this the life for a child?

This is serving as a metaphor for the US/Cuban relations. If he stays here, it will just proliferate a negative image of Cuba and we will be no less closer to a reconciliation. However, if he goes home, it will also just reinstate American views that Cuba is a bad, bad country and we should have nothing to do with it. There's really no way to win.

Is Cuba a bad country? Are Cubans bad people? No. Is Fidel Castro a bad leader? Well, that's a sticky question. Ask an American, and they will say yes, remember, Communism is evil to us). Ask a Cuban, and they will probably have a different answer. Is Elian better off back in Cuba with his family? If you ask me, I say yes. If he stays here, he'll just be immersed in more trauma via the press, the stress from being lonely. I think it should be up to Elian to decide where he calls residency.

In the mean time, I think it is important for the United States to reexamine its ideas about Cuba and start to think of Cuba as a country of PEOPLE, not a target for anti-communist sentiments. This is not the era of Dr. Strangelove. We've come a long way since the sixties, this should be our final step toward a real world of international community.

More controversy heats up in Austria as Haider holds key post

By Simon Perks
Keele University Student, England

Europeans are still nervous about the right-wing party in Austria.

When an Austrian government is sworn in, it is traditional for the new chancellor and cabinet to walk the short distance from Vienna's imperial palace to the chancellery for their first cabinet meeting. Yet when Chancellor Wolfgang Schüssel and his government were sworn in on Feb. 4, they took a more used underground passageway instead, in order to avoid the thousands of angry Austrians protesting outside.

The cause of the protests is Schüssel's coalition partner, the far-right Freedom Party. The party's racist leader, Jörg Haider, is widely renowned as a Nazi sympathiser, having praised Hitler's employment policies and lauded Waffen SS veterans. Although Haider himself will not participate in government, his party holds key posts, including the finance, defence, justice and social affairs ministries.

The Freedom Party achieved second place in Austria's general election last October, winning 27.2 percent of the vote. The incumbent Social Democrats' vote slipped to 33.4 percent and Schüssel's conservative People's Party dropped to 26.9 percent. The new governing coalition holds 104 of 183 seats in the lower chamber of parliament.

The entry of Haider's extremists into government has plunged Europe into crisis. In an attempt to politically isolate Austria, the member states of the European Union have broken off all official contact with the new government.

The Portuguese Prime Minister, Antonia Guterres, whose country holds the EU's rotating presidency, said that Haider's party was "not suitable" to be in the EU. Belgium's Foreign Minister, Louis Michel, went one-step further.

"I think Europe can very well do without Austria," he said. "We don't need it."

Such attitudes do more harm than good. Haider is already a staunch opponent of European integration, and his anti-foreigner stance won him considerable support in last year's election. If we turn Austria into an international pariah it will serve only to strengthen Haider's hand.

It is also wrong to say that Austrian President Thomas Klestil should have refused to accept the new government. As Klestil explained in a letter to the Los Angeles-based Simon Wiesenthal Centre, which tracks down Nazi war criminals, he had no choice but to appoint the coalition, whose members won a majority in the lower house.

Unlike Germany, Austria has never fully come to grips with its Nazi past. Even today, Austrians see themselves as victims of Hitler's aggression, rather than as willing instruments of it. Combined with Austria's forced neutrality since the withdrawal of Soviet troops in 1955, this has lead to a socially tolerated dislike of immigrants.

"Xenophobia has grown in Austria rapidly in recent years, especially since the borders with the former communist countries have opened," Professor Wolfgang Bachmeyer of the OGM opinion research institute said.

Haider has capitalized on this anti-immigrant sentiment. His racist policies have been a hit with the voters, who see competitively priced labour flooding in from the East as a threat to their own jobs.

Yet this is not the main issue. On a more fundamental level, the success of the Freedom Party points to a crisis in the very fabric of Austria's democracy. Haider's rise to power is a reaction against a stagnant political system. Since the Second World War, the two main parties, the Social Democrats and the People's Party, have dominated politics and society, sharing out power and patronage between themselves and their members.

The Freedom Party's success is a product of popular frustration with cronyism and stagnation in government. Haider has promised to fight the domination of the two main parties, and to offer an "optimistic perspective on the future."

Yet many of those who voted for Haider last October don't necessarily share his views in other areas.

"Roughly a third of Freedom Party voters would not vote for Mr. Haider as chancellor," said Bachmeyer. "The want to keep him as a thorn in the flesh of the old system."

Haider's electoral success is also a symptom of a broader European phenomenon: the widespread scepticism among voters that they can no longer trust their parties and governments to make the right decisions. Elections are no longer fought with values, arguments and ideas, but with media manipulation and empty promises. Traditional politics of left and right have been replaced by the politics of getting re-elected and maintaining a hold on power.

In an attempt to maximize voter support, mainstream parties are flocking to the political middle ground. For fear of undermining their popularity, they refuse to adopt clear policies on questions that require urgent action, such as employment, immigration and European integration. Instead of allaying public fears, government inactivity serves only to aggravate them. Out of frustration, voters turn to extreme parties such as Haider's. And as the recent protests in Vienna show, this can rear society apart.

This is not just an Austrian problem. The prominence of similar right-wing parties in Italy, Switzerland, France, Denmark and Belgium shows that this is a pan-European issue. And that is why Haider has European leaders running scared. It is not the events in Austria that worry them, but rather the realization that this could happen in their own countries, too.

The issues raised by Austria's new government must be addressed immediately. For when a national parliament has to be surrounded by a protective ring of baton-wielding police, it is a sure sign that something is very, very wrong.

Femi Kuti rocks U.S. parties with Afro-beats straight out of Nigeria

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

For those of you who are sick of your normal humping reggae music at your weekend social events, this is the album for you. Introducing (for those of you who have not already heard of it.) Afro-beat: a crosspollensation of funk, jazz and African rhythms. Specifically the Album Shoki Shoki, by Nigerian afropopstar Femi Kuti.

Femi Kuti is the son of Fela Kuti, one of Africa's most prolific and original musicians and father of Afro-beat. This amazing artist combines tight funk breaks with scattered hand drums, live and choral bass to create a funked-up percussionist groove that will make you nod your head, put your beer down and dance.

Femi Kuti is taking his father's idea of Afro-beat (which was started in the seventies) to a new modern level, as he flirts with the manic tempos of house and smooth jams of R&B. Kuti is not only a singer, but he is also a saxophonist, one whose rhythms interweave with the two percussion players that are keeping the Afro-beat pulse all the time.

Kuti got his start by apprenticing in his father's band, Egypt 80, for 16 years. This collaboration has been compared to Sean Lennon playing with the Beatles during the sixties. By the time his father passed away in 1997, Kuti was traveling across 18 African countries with his own band of 13 dancers and musicians called Positive Force.

Shoki Shoki is not only an album of hypnotic bass, chiming vocals and humpin' beats, it is also a political statement. Kuti is the leader of an outspoken group of social critics calling themselves MASS-Movement Against Second Slavery. The group is committed to informing the African populus by striving to make the youth of the continent aware and active. He is dedicated to the traditions of the pre-colonial Africa, and his lyrics reflect his radical views.

Songs like "Truth Don Die" and "What Tomorrow Will Bring" both express political messages, and also flow smoothly into the ear. "Beng Beng Beng" won best song in South Africa's 1999 Kora All-Africa Music Awards.

"Blackman Know Yourself" has more of a hip-hop aura with the Roots (who just played in Northampton) making an appearance.

So the next time you're at one of our fine music vending establishments in Amherst checking out the latest and greatest jams to throw in at your upcoming party, pick up Femi Kuti's new release; it is worth owning and everyone will be wicked impressed at your choice of Afro-beat.

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Tuesday, February 22, 2000

Hanging Up a waste of time

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Hanging Up
Directed by Diane Keaton
with Meg Ryan, Lisa Kudrow and Diane Keaton
Playing at Greenfield Cinemas

Hanging Up is a movie built on so little material that after an hour and a half one leaves the theater wondering if anything had transpired at all, and the answer resoundingly comes back as "no." Well, at least nothing worthwhile. From all indications, it appeared that Hanging Up could be no worse than a melodramatic, estrogen-infused romp with a few feel-good family moments tossed into the mix; however, its watchedness goes to depths far beyond this formula. Any inkling of decent filmmaking is immediately abandoned, leaving behind a movie that is perhaps most akin to an ongoing and annoying prank phone call.

Meg Ryan plays Meg Ryan (a.k.a. Eve) in her classic frantic, stressed out mode. Eve bustles about her day dealing with a million mini-crises ranging from car crashes to organizing an uplifting women's event to caring for her sister's overstated dog. In the midst of all this, she spends most of her time on a cell phone talking to her two sisters, Maddy (Lisa Kudrow) and Georgia (Diane Keaton) and taking turns at her dying father (Walter Matthau). Muddled flashbacks and strained family relations follow, culminating in death, reunion and redemption.

Hanging Up rests upon two wooden legs, nostalgia and family, which become increasingly splintered throughout the film so that by the end there's absolutely nothing left. Matthau's character has a John Wayne infatuation, and he is frequently reminiscing about writing the screenplay for one of his movies and the prized bullet, which Wayne presented him as a gift, but it never amounts to anything. The flashbacks serve the slight purpose of enlightening how the present chaos actually came about, but never evoke the heart-felt sentiment of longing for the past. Then, there are the orange roses, which Keaton (who also directed) tries to squeeze into every shot of the film. We know they're the same ones that grew outside the family's former home; it's obvious, but Keaton never does anything else with the metaphor.

The family threads are equally unsatisfying. Basically, the strategy here seems to be to confuse the audience so that it might feel something during the emotionally devoid movie. Again, Matthau pines for his estranged wife, and there are a few flashbacks involving her, but this subplot is almost entirely superfluous. Eve comes off as the best of the sisters, if not overly stressed, working to keep the disparate family together and care for her ailing father. Georgia, the self-made magazine mogul, and Maddy, the wannabe actress, however, are nothing more than self-obsessed and vapid. This lack of character development makes the sisters' emotional clash and subsequent reconciliation seem petty and entirely overdone. Thereby, the movie is left to break and make – or vice versa – relationships that were never more than skin deep in the first place. (Who would believe that Keaton, 54, could ever be Kudrow's, 37, sister anyway?)

The movie's biggest fault though is propitiating the replacement of personal, family relationships in favor of on-the-run sound bytes. Meg Ryan's character makes so many cell phone calls in a ten-minute span that it's sickening to actually believe any family could revolve around such frivolity. The movie brings out our worst fears – that technology is tearing people apart rather than bringing them together (Eve only finds solace after discarding all her communication gadgets). This type of virtual relationship immediately squelches any sense of family closeness, which happens to follow.

To summarize, Hanging Up is an unfunny, unemotional muddle of clichés. The acting is non-existent, as there are no characters to embody. The writing is worse – much, much worse. And, any sense of family, nostalgia, or emotional investment is lost in the awful direction. So, forget Hanging Up, that is one call that should have never been answered. F

Meg Ryan and Diane Keaton can't believe they made a movie this bad.

COURTESY COLUMBIA PICTURES, INC.

Pitch Black a sci-fi treat, intelligent and atmospheric

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

PITCH BLACK
Directed by David N. Twohy and starring
Vin Diesel and Radha Mitchell

Pitch Black is a science fiction movie fan's dream come true. Combining old-school science fiction elements with some tremendous visual imagery, the film succeeds on every level it attempts. Pitch Black also incorporates some horror elements, similar to the above average sci-fi horror film Event Horizon a ten-minute span that it's sickening to actually believe any family could revolve around such frivolity. The movie brings out our worst fears – that technology is tearing people apart rather than bringing them together (Eve only finds solace after discarding all her communication gadgets). This type of virtual relationship immediately squelches any sense of family closeness, which happens to follow.

To summarize, Hanging Up is an unfunny, unemotional muddle of clichés. The acting is non-existent, as there are no characters to embody. The writing is worse – much, much worse. And, any sense of family, nostalgia, or emotional investment is lost in the awful direction. So, forget Hanging Up, that is one call that should have never been answered. F

To summarize, Hanging Up is an unfunny, unemotional muddle of clichés. The acting is non-existent, as there are no characters to embody. The writing is worse – much, much worse. And, any sense of family, nostalgia, or emotional investment is lost in the awful direction. So, forget Hanging Up, that is one call that should have never been answered. F

Meg Ryan and Diane Keaton can't believe they made a movie this bad.

COURTESY COLUMBIA PICTURES, INC.

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!
ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:
THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF
ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER*

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:
Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 5[illegible] or e-mail at [illegible]

Housing Services: Residence Life is now accepting applications for the

Assistant Residence Director Position
for the 2000-2001 academic year

Assistant Residence Directors (ARDs) are entry level graduate students working in the Department of Housing Services: Residence Life. ARDs are live-in staff members working in an administrative, student development, and programming capacity. All ARDs are expected to participate in comprehensive pre-service orientation programs, as well as in ongoing in-service training. The ARD position is a 30 per week assistantship for the 38-week academic year ($/13/00 - 12/23/00, 1/17/01 - 5/29/01). Compensation for the position includes a stipend (approximately $10,000), tuition waiver, and a furnished apartment (valued at $4200.00).

For More Information:
Attend the ARD Information Session
Wednesday, February 23
7:00pm
Campus Center 905-09
or Contact
Dawn Briggs
Residence Life Business Manager
413-545-6923

To Apply:
Submit a Resume, Cover Letter, and Three Letters of Reference to:
Assistant Residence Director Search Committee
207 Berkshire House
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
Priority Deadline is March 24, 2000

Choose the Avenue to Your Future
FASHION AV
RETAIL CAREER FAIR '00
UMass Amherst
Campus Center Auditorium
Tuesday, February [illegible], 2000
10:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.
UMASS

At the box office: bad movies clean up

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

For the first time in a while, the top box office spot was in doubt going into the weekend as a number of factors converged for the four-day holiday stretch. The weekend saw four new films open (all of which wound up in the top ten), the resurgence of Oscar nominees, and the return of well-established franchises in the form of Leo and Scream.

After all the tickets were sold and the numbers were tallied, the race proved too close to call as newcomers The Whole Nine Yards and Hanging Up wound up in a dead heat for first place. Both films, each starring a different member of TV's "Friends," took in approximately $16.1 million for the four-day period.

The Whole Nine Yards, a mob comedy starring Bruce Willis and Matthew Perry, opened on an impressive 2910 screens, but failed to perform well – the film managed only a $5,532 per-screen average. On the other hand, the family melodrama Hanging Up (with Lisa Kudrow) managed more people per showing, averaging $6,149 per-screen, on its way to the first place tie.

Two other films were helped, by both the extra day resulting from the holiday and their respective appeal to children, to equal or better their totals from last weekend's three day period. Snow Day increased its intake by four percent to $14.8 million and finished third behind the more adult fare. The Nickelodeon movie has grossed $51.5 million to date. Likewise, The Tigger Movie saw an increase in its box office receipts by nearly 12 percent. The first animated film featuring the bouncing tiger took in a four-day total of $10.5 million, which earned it a fifth place spot.

Sandwiched between the kiddie fare, in fourth place, was the surprise hit Pitch Black. The space thriller (and Supernova wannabe) averaged an exciting $7,642 per-screen on only 1832 screens. The $14 million opening was the largest that USA Films has had in its brief history.

Despite the long weekend, Scream 3 still tumbled over 40 percent for a second straight weekend. Its $9.8 million weekend brought its cumulative total to $71.4 million. Buzz on the street may be enough to carry this third installment to the $100 million mark, but it's doubtful.

This weekend also proved that Leo is NOT a bankable star (thank God!). The Beach tumbled 48 percent from last weekend to gross $8 million for the holiday period. The seventh place finish proves undoubtedly that this will not resurrect itself.

The last of this week's openers, The Boiler Room, finished in eighth place. Both Ben Affleck's cameo and the Wall St. plotline were good for $7.1 million. Despite the seeming star power, The Boiler Room opened on only 1335 screens, but managed a $5,318 per-screen average.

American Beauty rode eight Oscar nominations to $6.4 million and eighth place for the weekend. On the heels of the Oscar nods, Dreamworks reintroduced the film to 1287 theaters and audiences responded. In its 23rd week of release, the suburban satire brought its cumulative total to $81.2 million.

The Cider House Rules followed Beauty's lead and increased last week's box office gross by 220 percent. The film about orphan Homer Wells was this year's surprise Oscar hit, earning seven total nominations. The $3.3 million weekend brought it's cumulative gross to $26.9 million and the film is poised to ride the wave of popularity further.

Since this weekend's openers had an extra day with which to work, their one-month multipliers could be slightly lower than usual. So, instead of the usual 2.9, expect something more in the range of a 2.5 multiplier. This would put the month long totals for The Whole Nine Yards and Hanging Up at about $40.3 million, $35 million for Pitch Black, and $17.8 million for The Boiler Room.

Bruce Willis in The Whole Nine Yards, looking as bad-ass as ever.

COURTESY WARNER BROTHERS

Primus comes to Providence

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

PRIMUS with P.O.D.
Lupos Heartbreak Hotel
Feb. 18, 2000

Fishtailing on a four-lane highway, coping with zero visibility, and driving for two hours to reach a destination only 45 minutes away. The lengths to which a co-music associate will go to cover the Primus show at Lupos in Providence last Friday night. Yes, a fairly major (at the time) snowstorm stood between me and the eclectic California threepiece, but nothing could stop me from seeing Les Claypool effortlessly pluck those bass strings for a third time. So while the snow did have an affect on some of the night's proceedings, it didn't prevent me from arriving with time to spare before the opening act.

That act being P.O.D. (Payable On Death, sorry you asked?), another west coast metal outfit, this one setting itself apart with a little Latin flavor. The band has been receiving a substantial amount of visibility as of late with radio play for tracks off their 1999 release The Fundamental Elements of Southtown as well as sporadic rotation for their video for the song "Southtown." The set got off to an unimpressive start, with "Outkast" and the following song failing to make any lasting impressions, except in the pit where it was clear P.O.D. had some loyal followers. The group immediately kicked into high gear, however, with "Southtown." The crowd was completely behind the song and everyone in the band was giving their all, especially vocalist Sonny who showed visible emotion when belting out "life doesn't got to be like this!" Sunny definitely should be given credit for actually feeling the lyrics the sings, which seems rather uncommon among many of today's bands, as well as for taking time out to thank the fans and make that all-important connection with the crowd. The energy kicked up by "Southtown" was pretty much sustained throughout the rest of their forty-five minute set, which ended with guitarist Marcos announcing that the fans could look forward to seeing P.O.D. on the main stage of this summer's Ozzfest tour.

After an eternal wait Primus took the stage for what will not be remembered as the group's finest hour, but an enjoyable Primus show nonetheless. The crowd was already moving simply when the band took the stage, and the second they started playing it was complete chaos from that note on. Les was clad in his trademark camouflage fatigues, this time accompanied with a leather cap instead of a helmet, and proceeded to strut along the stage while drummer Brain pounded on the skins and guitarist Larry kept the grooves tight. When the crowd and the band finally got a breather after the first two songs, Les addressed the snow as well as an audience member he perceived to be high, stating that they had a song coming up in their set that he especially was going to appreciate in his condition. Primus then launched into the title track from their most recent CD AntiPop, and kept the energy flowing with the bouncy "Sgt. Baker" from the classic 1991 release Sailing the Seas of Cheese.

AntiPop was well-represented in this performance, which was no problem since it stands as one of their finest CDs with songs that translate perfectly into a live setting. "Laquerhead" has a riff that is almost mechanical-sounding but still manages to bring the funk; "Greet the Sacred Cow" was a surprising but very welcome addition to their live act, and "Eclectic Electric" is a sprawling cut that shifts so many times in tone and speed that it must have been Les's pick for the favorite of the aforementioned high guy.

A few fans of guitar prodigy Buckethead, a touring buddy of Primus, were spotted in the crowd wearing their own KFC buckets on their head. This naturally inspired Les to don the headpiece himself and do his best quirky and robotic Buckethead impression, but he also had to break the news that the real thing would not be making an appearance tonight. Larry tried his best to compensate, at Claypool's request, by attempting some Eddie Van Halen riffs, which led to the first three seconds of "Eruption" and nothing more. Fans were also elated to hear the opening chords of Ozzy's "Crazy Train," possibly inspired by the band's proximity to the legend during their main stage spot on last year's Ozzfest.

The back-to-back goodness of "Jerry Was A Racecar Driver" and "My Name Is Mud" is a hard one to beat, and it was Primus at their finest from the unmistakable opening bassline of the former to the unmistakable repeating drum beat of the latter. The show did lack the extra goodies that would elevate it to the realm of classic, however. Missing was Brain's drum solo, a longer play time (barely an hour and fifteen minutes), and what should be a permanent set list staple, the rousing "Tommy the Cat." The fans didn't mind in the least, though, and were completely insane throughout the entire set, including the solo encore of "Electric Uncle Sam," which Les played in a pig mask, and "Too Many Puppies."

Jazz recital shows myriad of styles

By Jen Jope
Collegian Correspondent

Graduate Composer's Jazz Concert
Bezanson Recital Hall
Feb. 18

Dressed in our best jeans, my friend and I headed to the Graduate Jazz Composers Recital this past Thursday night at the Bezanson Recital Hall. As we sat down in those cushy, crushed velvet seats, we were feeling pretty relaxed. There was no dress code and no formal introduction. It was just a night of original and unique jazz music from people only a few years older than myself.

Like the title of the evening states, this recital was to celebrate the works of the Graduate Jazz Composers at UMass. Joe Green, David Haines, Chris Kozak, Sarah Manning, Dan Williams, Geoff Cunningham and Josh Lizotte all composed multiple pieces for the evening. Some of the pieces were "Alone Together," "Well You Needn't," "Exposition" and "One of a Kind." The Jazz Collective Orchestra and Nonette performed the entire show.

The evening was split into two sections containing mainly the same band members. The first hour before intermission consisted of a smaller group of about six to eight players. The saxophone section was incredibly strong and played multiple solos. Almost all of the players had a solo at some point in the first hour of the recital, each showing off his or her original talents. Interestingly enough, no one conducted this group in a formal fashion and the group held a steady tempo from beginning to end. Sarah Manning, one of the composers, took part in her work by playing saxophone in "The First and Last Dandelions" and "Powell Street Howl." Trumpet player and composer, Geoff Cunningham was acknowledged as an undergraduate helping in the show, and also received a round of applause.

Looking at the band on stage, it seemed as though there were few restrictions. The band members wore what they wanted, from a suit and tie to jeans and a button down shirt. Also, the band members counted each other off, making it seem less formal and more fun. After a solo, not only did the audience clap, but so did the fellow band members on stage. It is obvious that everyone appreciated each other's talents and enjoyed their company.

During the second half of the recital, more band members were introduced to the audience in a Big Band forum. In this portion of the show, there was a guitar, piano, and a percussion/vibes player added creating a new sound. The music was upbeat, loud, and fun. Many people in the audience were moving to the beat, and the music was entertaining. Even with the big band set-up, many solos were still played. This time, the solos were more intense and exciting. Special guest Paul Lieberman played saxophone and flute in many of the selections while leading the band.

After hearing about 10 different pieces of jazz music, it is clear that all of these composers have a different sense of style. Some were funky, bluesy or traditional but all in a unique way. If you missed Thursday night's concert, you missed a laid back night and most of all, some cool music written by some equally cool composers.

AC/DC sells out, shares with charity

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

AC/DC: hard rock whores.

Not only that, but they're peddling themselves over the internet, a form of communication that, at the time of the release of their first record, would not come into existence for another twenty-five years. It kind of makes you wonder.

It's all part of the hoopla surrounding the Feb. 29 unleashing of AC/DC's new Stiff Upper Lip record, their first since 1995's Ballbreaker and rumored to be the best since 85's Flick of the Switch. At this point in their career, they don't have to do anything at all to sell a million records. The promo they're doing now reflects that, seeming like everything else they do to be more catered towards fans that they already have than prospective new ones.

The most notable gesture the band is making is that of selling legendary guitarist Angus Young to the highest bidder, and on eBay, no less. On Feb. 11 Angus will be put on the online auction block, with the highest bidder receiving a one-on-one guitar lesson from one of the all-time greats. The winner will be announced on the day of Stiff Upper Lip's release on that temple of booming guitars and shrieking vocals, MTV's Total Request Live. We can all hope that Carson Daly isn't the highest bidder and Angus doesn't have to hit him with his guitar.

And no, they don't need the money. Every penny is going to a charity, the Nordoff-Robbins Music Therapy Foundation for disabled children.

Also for sale on eBay are an invite to the record's release party at the Hard Rock in New York and a front-row seat to a live AC/DC performance to be telecast on MTV1 with the songs voted on by fans at MTV.com. This is going to be the first ever TV performance with singer Brian Johnson, who's been with the band since 1980, and not to be missed.

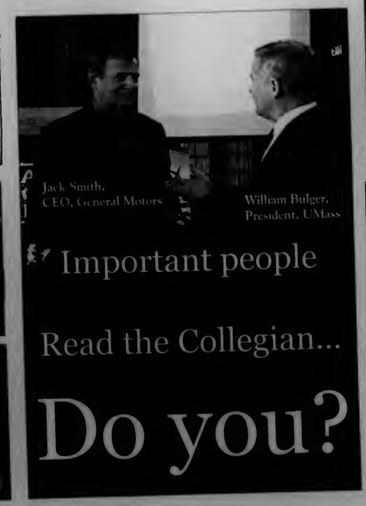
Also available online will be streaming audio of some of the new songs (at AC/DCBand.com) starting Feb. 21 before the actual album is released.

Whores? Definitely. Corporate sellout whores? Judging by the sounds online, the answer is a resounding, high-pitched, three-chord-powered, deafening roar of Hell's Bells!

Whatever that means.

A forum on...
What's the Difference?
ISLAM and CHRISTIANITY

Speakers, Mohammad Salimullah and Joe Greene, will present the respective religions and then the audience will be encouraged to ask quesitons.



February 24th @ 7:30-8:30
Campus Center Room 163C

Council Travel
Student Travel Leads for over 50 Years
The journey is the reward...
Give your family & friends the gift of travel
Gift certificates, passport photos, airport transfers, tours, language programs, work exchanges, ISIC backpacks, rolling duffels, & all sorts of gear, guidebooks, railpasses, tickets, accommodations and more.
44 Main Street
Amherst MA
413-256-1261

Alternative Spring Break
5 days in the Ozarks, MO
Meditation, Yoga, Music & Dance. Self discovery, Lots of Fun.
Vegetarian Food.
$195 pre registration, rideshares
www.ru-students.cx
1-800-870 5348

Gurdjieff's TEACHING
A Way For Our Time
A talk followed by a concert of Gurdjieff/de Hartmann music

McMurphy's Uptown Tavern
Bubble Boy Hockey Tournament
Tuesday Feb 2[illegible]
[illegible]
37 North Pleasant St.

Important people
Read the Collegian...
Do you?

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
Class Begins:
Friday Feb 25 at 6:00pm
Valentine Hall
Amherst College
Act Now, Space is Limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

Tuesday, February 22, 2000

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Hanging Up a waste of time

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Hanging Up
Directed by Diane Keaton
with Meg Ryan, Lisa Kudrow and Diane Keaton
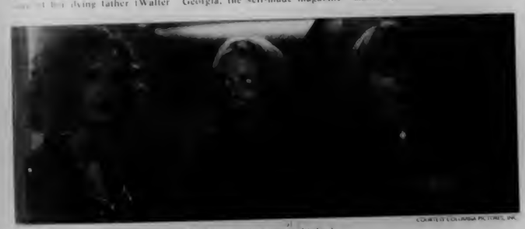
Playing at Greenfield Cinemas

Hanging Up is a movie built on so little material that after an hour and a half one leaves the theater wondering if anything had transpired at all, and the answer resoundingly comes back as no. Well at least nothing worthwhile. From all indications, it appeared that Hanging Up could be no worse that a melodramatic, estrogen-infused romp with a few feel-good family moments mixed into the mix, however, its pathetic laziness goes to depths far beyond the formula. Any inkling of decent filmmaking is immediately abandoned, leaving behind a movie that is perhaps enough to be an ongoing and annoying drunk dare.



Meg Ryan plays Meg Ryan (a.k.a. Lucy) in classic frantic, stressed out mode. She bustles about her day dealing with the million ministries ranging from car crashes to organizing an upcoming women's event to caring for her recently divorced dog. In the midst of all this she spends most of her time on the phone talking to her two sisters, Lisa Kudrow and Diane Keaton and taking turns with Diane Keaton and Walter Matthau) dying father (Walter Matthau). Muddled flashbacks and strained family relations follow, culminating in death, reunion and redemption.

Hanging Up rests upon two wooden legs, nostalgia and family, which become increasingly splintered throughout the film so that by the end there's absolutely nothing left. Matthau's character has a John Wayne infatuation and is frequently reminiscing about writing the screenplay for one of his movies and the prized bullet, which Wayne presented him as a gift, but it never amounts to anything. The flashbacks serve the slight purpose of enlightening how the present chaos actually came about, but never evoke the least sentiment of longing for the past. Then, there are the orange roses, which Keaton (who also directed) tries to squeeze into every shot of the film. We know they're the same ones that grew outside the family's former home. It's obvious, but Keaton never does anything else with the metaphor.

The family threads are equally unsatisfying. Basically, the strategy here seems to be to confuse the audience so that it might feel something during the emotionally devoid movie. Again, Matthau pines for his estranged wife, and there are a few flashbacks finishing her, but this subplot is almost entirely superfluous. Five comes off as the best of the sisters, if not overly stressed, working to keep the disparate family together and care for her ailing father. Georgia, the self-made magazine mogul, and Maddy, the wannabe actress, however, are nothing more than self-obsessed and vapid. This lack of character development makes the sisters' emotional clash and subsequent reconciliation seem petty and entirely overdone. Thereby, the movie is left to break and make – or vice versa – relationships that were never more than skin deep in the first place. (Who would believe that Keaton, 54, could ever be Kudrow's, 37, sister anyway?)

The movie's biggest fault though is its propitiating the replacement of personal, family relationships in favor of on-the-run sound bytes. Meg Ryan's character makes so many cell phone calls in a ten-minute span that it's sickening to actually believe any family could revolve around such frivolity. The movie brings out our worst fears – that technology is tearing people apart rather than bringing them together (Eve only finds solace after discarding all her communication gadgets). This type of virtual relationship immediately squelches any sense of family closeness, which happens to follow.

To summarize: Hanging Up is an unfunny, unemotional muddle of cliché. The acting is non-existent, as there are no characters to embody. The writing is worse – much, much worse. And, any sense of family, nostalgia, or emotional investment is lost in the awful direction. So, forget Hanging Up, this is one call that should have never been answered. F

Meg Ryan and Diane Keaton can't believe they made a movie this bad.

COURTESY COLUMBIA PICTURES, INC.

Pitch Black a sci-fi treat, intelligent and atmospheric

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

PITCH BLACK
Directed by David N. Twohy and starring Vin Diesel and Radha Mitchell

Pitch Black is a science fiction movie fan's dream come true. Combining old-school science fiction elements with some tremendous visual imagery, the al. family relationships in favor of on-the-run sound bytes. Meg Ryan's character makes so many cell phone calls in a ten-minute span that it's sickening to actually believe any family could revolve around such frivolity. The movie brings out our worst fears – that technology is tearing people apart rather than bringing them together (Eve only finds solace after discarding all her communication gadgets). This type of virtual relationship immediately squelches any sense of family closeness, which happens to follow.

To summarize: Hanging Up is an unfunny, unemotional muddle of clich- es. The acting is non-existent, as there are no characters to embody. The writing is worse – much, much worse. And, any sense of family, nostalgia, or emotional investment is lost in the awful direction. So, forget Hanging Up, this is one call that should have never been answered. F

Meg Ryan and Diane Keaton can't believe they made a movie this bad.

COURTESY COLUMBIA PICTURES, INC.

At the box office: bad movies clean up

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

For the first time in a while, the top box office spot was in doubt going into the weekend as a number of factors converged for the four-day holiday stretch. The weekend saw four new films open (all of which wound up in the top ten), the resurgence of Oscar nominees, and the return of well-established franchises in the form of Leo and Scream.

After all the tickets were sold and the numbers were tallied, the race proved too close to call as newcomers The Whole Nine Yards and Hanging Up wound up in a dead heat for first place. Both films, each starring a different member of TV's "Friends," took in approximately $16.1 million for the four-day period.

The Whole Nine Yards, a mob comedy starring Bruce Willis and Matthew Perry, opened on an impressive 2910 screens, but failed to perform well – the film managed only a $5,532 per-screen average. On the other hand, the family melodrama Hanging Up (with Lisa Kudrow) managed more people per showing, averaging $6,149 per-screen, on its way to the first place tie.

The other films were helped by both the extra day resulting from the holiday and their respective appeal to children, to equal or better their totals from last weekend's three-day period. Snow Day increased its intake by four percent to $14.8 million and finished third behind the more adult fare. The Nickelodeon movie has grossed $31.5 million to date. Likewise, The Tigger Movie saw an increase in its box office receipts by nearly 12 percent. The first animated film featuring the bouncing tiger took in a four-day total of $10.5 million, which earned it a fifth place spot.

Sandwiched between the kiddie fare, in fourth place, was the surprise hit Pitch Black. The space thriller tand Supernova wannabe) averaged an eye-opening $7,642 per-screen on only 1832 screens. The $14 million opening was the largest that USA Films has had in its brief history.

Despite the long weekend, Scream 3 still tumbled over 40 percent for a second straight weekend. Its $9.8 million weekend brought its cumulative total to $71.4 million. Buzz on the street may be enough to carry this third installment to the $100 million mark, but it's doubtful.

This weekend also proved that Leo is NOT a bankable star (thank God!). The Beach tumbled 48 percent from last weekend to gross $8 million for the holiday period. The seventh place finish proves undoubtedly that this will not resurrect itself.

The last of this week's openers, The Bider Room, finished in eighth place. Both Ben Affleck's cameo and the Wall St. plotline were good for $7.1 million. Despite the seeming star power, The Bider Room opened on only 1355 screens, but managed a $3,318 per-screen average.

American Beauty rode eight Oscar nominations to $6.4 million and eighth place for the weekend. On the heels of the Oscar nods, Dreamworks reintroduced the film to 1287 theaters and audiences responded. In its 23rd week of release, the suburban satire brought its cumulative total to $81.2 million.

The Cider House Rules followed Beauty's lead and increased last week's box office gross by 220 percent. The film about orphan Homer Wells was this year's surprise Oscar bit, earning seven total nominations. The $5.3 million weekend brought it's cumulative gross to $26.9 million and the film is poised to ride the wave of popularity further.

Since this weekend's openers had an extra day with which to work, their one-month multipliers could be slightly lower than usual. So, instead of the usual 2.9, expect something more in the range of a 2.5 multiplier. This would put the month long totals for The Whole Nine Yards and Hanging Up at about $40.3 million, $35 million for Pitch Black, and $17.8 million for The Bider Room.

Bruce Willis in The Whole Nine Yards, looking as bad-ass as ever.

COURTESY WARNER BROTHERS

Primus comes to Providence

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

PRIMUS with P.O.D
Lupos Heartbreak Hotel
Feb. 18, 2000

Fishtailing on a four-lane highway, coping with zero visibility, and driving for two hours to reach a destination only 45 minutes away. The lengths to which a co-music associate will go to cover the Primus show at Lupos in Providence last Friday night. Yes, a fairly major (at the time) snowstorm stood between me and the eclectic California three-piece, but nothing could stop me from seeing Les Claypool effortlessly pluck those bass strings for a third time. So while the snow did have an affect on some of the night's proceedings, it didn't prevent me from arriving with time to spare before the opening act.

That act being P.O.D. (Payable On Death, sorry you asked?), another west coast metal outfit, this one setting itself apart with a little Latin flavor. The band has been receiving a substantial amount of visibility as of late with radio play for tracks off their 1999 release The Fundamental Elements of Southtown as well as sporadic rotation for their video for the song "Southtown." The set got off to an unimpressive start, with "Outkast" and the following song failing to make any lasting impressions, except in the pit where it was clear P.O.D. had some loyal followers. The group immediately kicked into high gear, however, with "Southtown." The crowd was completely behind the song and everyone in the band was giving their all, especially vocalist Sonny who showed visible emotion when belting out "life doesn't got to be like this!" Sonny definitely should be given credit for actually feeling the lyrics he sings, which seems rather uncommon among many of today's bands, as well as for taking time out to thank the fans and make that all-important connection with the crowd. The energy kicked up by "Southtown" was pretty much sustained throughout the rest of their forty-five minute set, which ended with guitarist Marcos announcing that the fans could look forward to seeing P.O.D. on the main stage of this summer's Ozzfest tour.

After an eternal wait Primus took the stage for what will not be remembered as the group's finest hour, but an enjoyable Primus show nonetheless. The crowd was already moving simply when the band took the stage, and the second they started playing it was complete chaos from that note on. Les was clad in his trademark camouflage fatigues, this time accompanied with a leather cap instead of a helmet, and proceeded to strut along the stage while drummer Brain pounded on the skins and guitarist Larry kept the grooves tight. When the crowd and the band finally got a breather after the first two songs, Les addressed the snow as well as an audience member he perceived to be high, stating that they had a song coming up in their set that he especially was going to appreciate in his condition. Primus then launched into the title track from their most recent CD AntiPop, and kept the energy flowing with the bouncy "Sgt. Baker" from the classic 1991 release Sailing the Seas of Cheese.

AntiPop was well-represented in this performance, which was no problem since it stands as one of their finest CDs with songs that translate perfectly into a live setting. "Laquerhead" has a riff that is almost mechanical-sounding but still manages to bring the funk. "Greet the Sacred Cow" was a surprising but very welcome addition to their live act, and "Eclectic Electric" is a sprawling cut that shifts so many times in tone and speed that it must have been Les's pick for the favorite of the afore-mentioned high guy.

A few fans of guitar prodigy Buckethead, a touring buddy of Primus, were spotted in the crowd wearing their own KFC buckets on their head. This naturally inspired Les to don the headpiece himself and do his best quirky and robotic Buckethead impression, but he also had to break the news that the real thing would not be making an appearance tonight. Larry tried his best to compensate, at Claypool's request, by attempting some Eddie Van Halen riffs which led to the first three seconds of "Eruption" and nothing more. Fans were also elated to hear the opening chords of Ozzy's "Crazy Train," possibly inspired by the band's proximity to the legend during their main stage spot on last year's Ozzfest.

The back-to-back goodness of "Jerry Was A Racecar Driver" and "My Name Is Mud" in a hard one to beat, and it was Primus at their finest from the unmistakable opening bassline of the former to the unmistakable repeating drum beat of the latter. The show did lack the extra goodies that would elevate it to the realm of classic, however. Missing was Brain's drum solo (a longer play time church an hour and fifteen minutes), and what should be a permanent set list staple, the roaring "Tommy the Cat." The fans didn't mind in the least, though and were completely insane throughout the entire set, including the sole encore of "Electric Uncle Sam," which Les played in a pig mask, and "Too Many Puppies."

Jazz recital shows myriad of styles

By Jen Jope
Collegian Correspondent

Graduate Composer's Jazz Concert
Bezanson Recital Hall
Feb. 18

Dressed in our best jeans, my friend and I headed to the Graduate Jazz Composers Recital this past Thursday night at the Bezanson Recital Hall. As we sat down in those cushy, crushed velvet seats, we were feeling pretty relaxed. There was no dress code and no formal introduction. It was just a night of original and unique jazz music from people only a few years older than myself.

Like the title of the evening states, this recital was to celebrate the works of the Graduate Jazz Composers at UMass. Joe Green, David Haines, Chris Kozak, Sarah Manning, Dan Williams, Geoff Cunningham and Josh Lizotte all composed multiple pieces for the evening. Some of the pieces were "Alone Together," "Well You Needn't," "Exposition" and "One of a Kind." The Jazz Collective Orchestra and Nonette performed the entire show.

The evening was split into two sections containing mainly the same band members. The first hour before intermission consisted of a smaller group of about six to eight players. The saxophone section was incredibly strong and played multiple solos. Almost all of the players had a solo at some point in the first hour of the recital, each showing off his or her original talents. Interestingly enough, no one conducted this group in a formal fashion and the group held a steady tempo from beginning to end. Sarah Manning, one of the composers, took part in her work by playing saxophone in "The First and Last Dandelions" and "Powell Street Hotel." Trumpet player and composer Geoff Cunningham was acknowledged as an undergraduate helping in the show, and also received a round of applause.

Looking at the band on stage, it seemed as though there were few restrictions. The band members wore what they wanted, from a suit and tie to jeans and a button down shirt. Also, the band members counted each other off, making it seem less formal and more fun. After a solo not only did the audience clap, but so did the fellow band members on stage. It is obvious that everyone appreciated each other's talents and enjoyed their company.

During the second half of the recital, more band members were introduced to the audience in a Big Band forum. In this portion of the show, there was a guitar piano, and a percussion/vibes player added creating a new sound. The music was upbeat, loud, and fun. Many people in the audience were moving to the beat, and the music was entertaining. Even with the big band set-up, many solos were still played. This time, the solos were more intense and exciting. Special guest Paul Ueberman played saxophone and flute in many of the selections while leading the band.

After hearing about 10 different pieces of jazz music, it is clear that all of these composers have a different sense of style. Some were funky, bluesy or traditional but all in a unique way. If you missed Thursday night's concert, you missed a laid back night and most of all, some cool music written by some equally cool composers.

AC/DC sells out, shares with charity

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

AC/DC hard rock whores.

Not only that, but they're peddling themselves over the internet, a form of communication that, at the time of the release of their first record, would not come into existence for another twenty-five years. It kind of makes you wonder.

It's all part of the hoopla surrounding the Feb. 29 unleashing of AC/DC's new Stiff Upper Lip record, their first since 1995's Ballbreaker and rumored to be the best since 85's Flick of the Switch. At this point in their career, they don't have to do anything at all to sell a million records. The promo they're doing now reflects that, seeming like everything else they do) to be more catered towards fans that they already have than prospective new ones.

The most notable gesture the band is making is that of selling legendary guitarist Angus Young to the highest bidder, and on eBay, no less. On Feb. 11 Angus will be put on the online auction block, with the highest bidder receiving a one-on-one guitar lesson from one of the all-time greats. The winner will be announced on the day of Stiff Upper Lip's release on that temple of booming guitars and shrieking vocals. MTV's Total Request Live. We can all hope that Carson Daly isn't the highest bidder and Angus doesn't have to hit him with his guitar.

And no, they don't need the money. Every penny is going to charity: The Nordoff Robbins Music Therapy Foundation for disabled children.

Also for sale on eBay are an invite to the record's release party at the Hard Rock in New York and a front row seat to a live AC/DC performance to be telecast on MTV with the songs voted on by fans at MTV.com. This is going to be the first ever TV performance with singer Brian Johnson, who's been with the band since 1980, and not to be missed.

Also available online will be streaming audio of some of the new songs (at AC/DCBand.com) starting Feb. 21, before the actual album is released.

Whores? Definitely. Corporate sellout whores? Judging by the sounds online, the answer is a resounding, high-pitched, three-chord powered deafening roar of Hell's Bells!

Whatever that means.

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!
ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:
THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF
ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:
Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Housing Services: Residence Life is now accepting applications for the

Assistant Residence Director Position
for the 2000-2001 academic year

Assistant Residence Directors (ARDs) are entry level graduate students working in the Department of Housing Services; Residence Life. ARDs are live-in staff members working in an administrative, student development, and programming capacity. All ARDs are expected to participate in comprehensive pre-service orientation programs, as well as in ongoing in-service training. The ARD position is a 30 per week assistantship for the 38-week academic year (8/13/00 - 12/23/00, 1/17/01 - 5/29/01). Compensation for the position includes a stipend (approximately $10,000), tuition waiver, and a furnished apartment (valued at $4200.00).

For More Information:
Attend the ARD information Session
Wednesday, February 23
7:00pm
Campus Center 905-09
or Contact
Dawn Briggs
Residence Life Business Manager
413-545-6923

To Apply:
Submit a Resume, Cover Letter, and Three Letters of Reference to:
Assistant Residence Director Search Committee
207 Berkshire House
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
Priority Deadline is March 24, 2000

Choose the Avenue to Your Future
FASHION AV
RETAIL CAREER FAIR '00
UMass Amherst
Campus Center Auditorium
Tuesday, February 22, 2000
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
Abercrombie & Fitch
American Eagle Outfitters
BJ's Wholesale Club
Casual Corner
Eddie Bauer
J.C. Penney
Macy's
New Balance
Old Navy
Ralph Lauren
The Children's Place
TJX Companies
Wet Seal
Zale Corporation
UMASS

Council Travel
America's Student Travel Leader for over 50 years
The journey is the reward...
Give your family & friends the gift of travel
Gift certificates, passport photos, airport transfers, tours, language programs, work exchanges, ISIC backpacks, rolling duffels, & all sorts of gear, guidebooks, sailpasses, tickets, accommodations and more.
44 Main Street
Amherst MA
413-256-1261
www.counciltravel.com

Alternative Spring Break
5 days in the Ozarks MO
Meditation, Yoga, Music & Dance. Self discovery. Lots of Fun. Vegetarian Food.
$195 pre registration. rideshares
www.nu-students.cx
1-800-870 5348

Gurdjieff's TEACHING
A Way For Our Time
A talk followed by a concert of Gurdjieff's de Hartmann music

Important people
Read the Collegian...
Do you?

A forum on
What's the Difference?
ISLAM and CHRISTIANITY
Speakers, Mohammad Salimullah and Joe Greene, will present the respective religions and then the audience will be encouraged to ask quesitons.
February 24th @ 7:30-8:30
Campus Center - Room 163C

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
- Student Discounts
- Professional Bartending Training
- Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
- Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
- National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awarenets Program
- Great Part-time or Summer Job

Class Begins:
Friday Feb 25 at 6:00pm
Valentine Hall
Amherst College

Act Now, Space is Limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

McMurphy's Uptown Tavern
Bubble Boy Hockey Tournament
Tuesday Feb 22
7:30-9:30
37 North
Pleasant St.

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

One bedroom starting June 1st uptown above Newbury Comics for 2-3 people. Call 256-1422.

Sublet my one bedroom apartment 1 mile from campus. Available 6/00-8/00. $525.00 a month. Call Kate 253-6955.

AUTO FOR SALE

1965 Buick Electra 225. PS, PB, Auto V8. 4dr. Maroon with black interior. Rebuilt engine, 90,000 miles. Good tires. $1600 OBO. 559-5027.

'91 Corsica V6. AT, PS, PB, 52,000 miles. Good rubber, clean, good condition. 549-6755.

'88 VW Fox GL 160k. Lots of new parts. Runs strong. $750.00 584-5927.

VW Jetta 1988 146K, 5speed manual, power window/seat, alloy wheels, great tires: $1950.00. Call 549-4818.

'94 Nissan Maxima. Dark green, good condition. $6000.00. Call 253-6480.

COMPUTERS

IBM ThinkPad Pent II 366 DXD Ether net. $1600. (413)546-0233 Dan.

EMPLOYMENT

Nursery/Greenhouse full/time, year/round position to assist manager in multi retail locations. Salary plus benefits. Send resume to Westfield Home and Garden, 81 Springfield Rd, Westfield MA 01085.

Camp Poyntelle seeks counselors for co-ed Northeast PA, overnight Jewish Federation camp- 3hrs fromNYC-General, Sports, Drama, H20 & Arts. 1-800-973-3866 summers@poyntelle.com or www.poyntelle.com

Outdoor leadership jobs/internships that build resumes! Horizon Camps seek fun-loving instructors and directors, with experience leading OUTDOOR activities. canoeing, backpacking, caving, rock-climbing, ropes course, nature study and mountain biking. Many openings at 4 great CO-ED children's camps in NY, ME and PA. Top camp salaries, plus room and board, laundry and travel. Apply online at www.horizoncamps.com or call (800)544-5448 for more info.

EMPLOYMENT

Coach: Swim team looking for part-time head coach. Competitive Swim experience. Salary commensurate with experience. Belchertown Rec. 323-0419 or Mary 534-9904.

Wanna make money doing what you always do anyway? E-mail me at quick-easymonry@aol.com

Summer Employment; Outdoors. Weight loss/sports camp looking for energetic people to lead campers in a fun filled summer. Located in West Stockbridge, MA. in the heart of the Berkshires. Call for more information. Toll Free 877-FIT-CAMP. email marc@camp-kingsmont.com

Human Services- Relief support needed to work with adults with developmental disabilities, may lead to permanent hours. Hours include evenings, weekends and/or overnights. Required: HS diploma and drivers license. Starting pay is $7.47/hr(for relief), $8.35(for permanent) Locations in South Hadley and Belchertown. Call Mary @ (413)774-2281 ext. 11. AA/EOE

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Wayne for girls-sister half of brother/sister camp in Pennsylvania (3 hrs from New York City). If you love children and want a caring, fun environment we are looking to hire staff from 6/20-8/18/00 for: tennis, basketball, softball, soccer, volleyball, golf, gymnastics, aerobics, cheerleading, swimming, sailing, waterskiing, self-defense, ropes, fine arts (ceramics, sculptuer, drawing, painting, silk screening, jewlery), photography, piano, guitar, drama, video, group leaders. On campus interviews March 9th. Call 800-279-3019.

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132 www.biketrips.com

Childcare for handicapped, 15+ hours. Housework, references, car $9.50/hr. 247-5800.

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

$Great Opportunity$. Marketing company seeks reliable and money motivated student for credit card promo's on-campus. Excellent commission. Flexible hours. 1-800-592-2121 ext. 300.

Work for exciting college focused internet company at your school. Looking for individual with strong leadership, entrepreneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay, and options! Contact info at uconnections.com

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr: $8. ph. 549-8843.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER. A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE

I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

EMPLOYMENT

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENT

Pledge different. Pi Lambda Phi Fraternity. Info call 549-4411. pilambdaphi.homepage.com

INSTRUCTION

Private boxing lessons with retired pro G. Djata Bumpus in Amherst. Call (413)256-0364.

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

LOST & FOUND

Lost: Diamond stud earring, 2/15 at Health Services Eye Clinic. Reward. 577-5007.

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

ROOM FOR RENT

Beautiful, newly painted, hardwood floor, $300 inclusive! Quiet. Less than five minutes from campus! Call Sarah now: 549-5946.

SERVICES

Have you been ripped offby a retailer? Contact the Student Legal services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009.

Study Spanish. Internships in Guatemala. College Credit. www.casaxe-laju.com (512)416-6991.

TRAVEL

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Five College Community Calendar

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac11@aol.com or Caleb at 587-3740 by March 5.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Submissions – Short Cuts, UMass' short story journal, is currently accepting prose submissions for its second annual issue. The deadline is March 1. For more information call Matt at 549-1053, or email submissions and questions to shortstory@acad.umass.edu.

Support – A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone pre-screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5316 if interested.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

TUESDAY EVENING C - Campus FEBRUARY 22, 2000

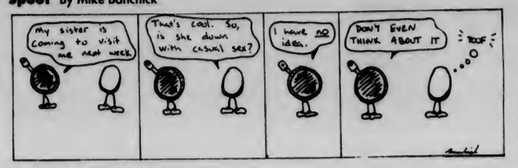
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Secrets of Lost Empires		Nova "Lost Tribes of Israel"		Frontline "War in Europe"		Sports Heroes	Motocyc!
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "People v. Gunny"		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "The Wee Hours"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Entertainment Sc.	JAG "People v. Gunny"		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "The Wee Hours"		News	Nightline
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Sports Night	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)		News	Nanny
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "The Prodigal" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Tonight Show
WHDH	6	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	3rd Rock-Sun	3rd Rock-Sun	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV	I Dare You! Ultimate Challeng		Sheets	Dilbert	News	Real TV (R)	Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	3rd Rock-Sun	3rd Rock-Sun	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	World's Sexiest Television		Party of Five "What If..."		News		Friends	Fraser
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	3rd Rock-Sun	3rd Rock-Sun	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Secrets of Lost Empires		Nova "Lost Tribes of Israel"		Frontline "War in Europe"		Charlie Rose	In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Sports Night	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fraser	I Dare You! Ultimate Challeng		Sheets	Dilbert	Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince			Biography: Queen Noor		Investigative Reports (R)		Love Chronicles	Law & Order "Right to Counsel"
A&E	51	L.A. Law "Beauty and Obsess"		Law & Order "Survivor"		Crossfire		World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand	Sports
CNN	29	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour			Crossfire		World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand	Moneyline
COM	36	Saturday Night Live (R)		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money						Premium	Pulp Comics	Daily Show Stein's Money
DISC	52	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Kalahari		On the Inside "Real LAPD" (R)		New Detectives (R)				FBI Files "Cat and Mouse" (R)	On the Inside "Real LAPD" (R)
ESPN	50	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Auburn at Alabama, (Live)				College Basketball: Indiana at Illinois (Live)					Sportscenter
LIFE	53	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Celine Dion"		Chicago Hope (In Stereo)		"From the Files of Unsolved Mysteries: The Sleepwalker Killing"				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	49	(4:30)	2gether Post.	Tom Green (R)	Lyricist	Say What Kira	TRL	TRL (R) (In Stereo)		Tom Green	Lyricist	Undressed	Loveline
NICK	46	All That	Galdow	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Sheeter	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI	59	Sliders "World Killer" (In Stereo)		Xena: Warrior Princess		Xena: Warrior Princess		Xena: Warrior Princess		Xena: Warrior Princess		Poltergeist, The Legacy
TLC	28	Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours (R)		Trauma: Life in the ER (R)		Trauma: Life in the ER (R)		Turning Point (R)		Doctor Dogs	Trauma: Life in the ER (R)
TNT	54	In the Heat of the Night		ER (In Stereo)		NBA Basketball: Houston Rockets at Charlotte Hornets. (In Stereo Live)						Inside NBA	Bandit "Bandit, Bandit"
USA	55	Brywatch (In Stereo)		JAG (In Stereo)		Walker, Texas Ranger		ss "Live Wire" (1992, Suspense) Pierce Brosnan (In Stereo)				Walker, Texas Ranger
HBO	43	(4:00) ★★★ "Titanic" (1997)		★★½ "Grumpy Old Men" (1993, Comedy) Jack Lemmon, ★★½				★★★ "Analyze This" (1999, Comedy) Robert De Niro, ★½				Sopranos (R) (In Stereo)
MAX	45	★★½ "Nobody's Fool" (1994, Drama) Paul Newman, ★½				★★½ "A Storm in Summer" (2000, Drama) Peter Falk,		★★★½ "The Joy Luck Club" (1993, Drama) Tsai Chin, Kieu Chinh, (In Stereo) ★½				★★ "Color of Night" (1994, Suspense) Bruce Willis, ★½
SHOW	44	(5:15) "Dennis" (1993, Comedy)										It's Black Entertainment (R)

HSCN Hinsing Services Cable Network



2	HSCN Bulletin Board		Gavel to Gavel
3	CBS/3 Hartford		NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston		CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston		CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield		CNN fn
7	WSBK Mass/ Ch.		CNN si
8	UPN/20 Hartford		TBS
9	Weather Channel		QVC
10	NBC/30 New Britain		College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford		Univision
12	PBS/24 Hartford		Telemundo Central
13	WOCH & HSCN		Cortez Network
14	International		TV Land
15	UMass Amherst Cable TV		Sci-Fi
16	WB/New Haven		Court Television
17	Sundance		Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel		Disney Channel
19	UVC-TV/TV		MBCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

Quote of the Day

"If the human body's obscene, complain to the manufacturer, not me."

–Larry Flynt, publisher, Hustler, 1998

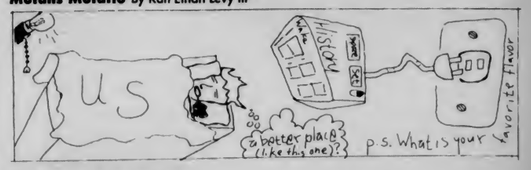
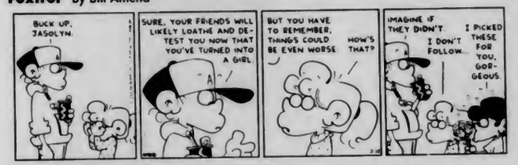
Spot By Mike Banchick



Get Fuzzy By Wiley

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Mutant Mutatio By Kah Ethan Levy III



Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Through it all, the sun will shine and your ability to do something right will stay with you. Unfortunately, the only thing you will do right today is go back to sleep.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – When nobody else is able to step up today, you will be the person to step up. Make sure that nobody else can stand up though, whatever it takes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Strange people may look at you in strange ways today, leading you to believe something is wrong with you. Try wiping your mouth; there might be a crumb stuck there.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Don't waste your time trying to hide today; if you can't face your problems head on, make sure that somebody else is forced to take responsibility for your mistake.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Are you expecting lighting to strike twice? You had a good day yesterday; today is but a trough of misery despite your hard work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Be a positive, caring, selfless, kind, benevolent, wonderful, dreamy, spacey, friendly, soft, furry, forested, trained, obedient, orange and nice person today. It can only do good things for you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Gorillas in the Mist? It's a good movie, perhaps worth a viewing, but you are better off not trying so hard and instead watching Congo.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Can't you just wait a minute? Patience isn't the golden rule, but more of a mauve-silvery colored rule, but still, please, just wait for a while.

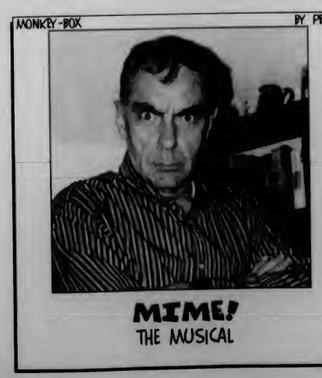
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – If you want to accomplish anything this day, don't listen to anybody, especially those naggy whiny people that just talk and talk and talk.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Unbeknownst to you, Saturn moved into your seventh moon, thus assuring that, for the first time ever, the Daily Collegian will be right about your horoscope. Too bad you don't really have one.

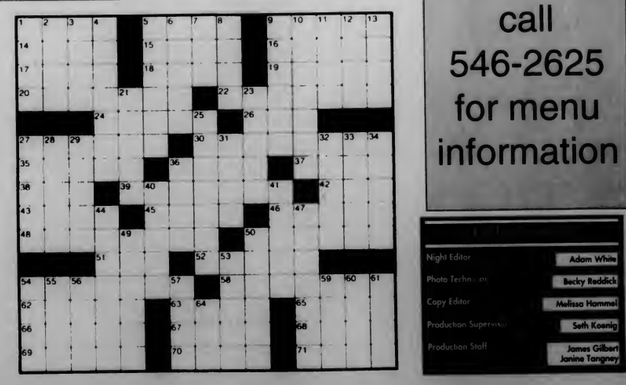
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – It can't be that bad, can it? No, it can't. Did you realize that there are people who go to bed without enough to eat? To think that you took issue with one of your professors over nothing. Shame on you!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Be tolerant of silly people and silly things because one day, you will be their boss, and if they do just one more silly thing, they are absolutely fired.

ACROSS
1 Trudge
5 Jezebel's deity
9 Overact
14 Mature
15 Pulpit
16 Lukewarm
17 Egg shaped
18 Enthusiasm
19 Adhere
20 Fish-eater with a pouch
22 Olympics contestant
24 Understand
26 Antique auto
27 Moor
30 Fool
35 Castle protectors
36 Highway lee
37 Any minute
38 Curve
39 Doctor's sign
42 As well
43 Asterisk
45 Opera song
46 Fewest
48 Closet item
50 Prejudices
51 Contend
52 Seasons
54 Predicament
58 Some Volkswagens
62 Cherish
63 Whitish
65 Tunnel maker
66 Good
67 Went 95 mph
68 Org
69 Snow vehicles
70 Is incorrect
71 Undivided



DOWN
1 Theater piece
2 Dwell
3 October's stone
4 Pleasure
5 Where to get bargains
6 Prayer ends
7 Middle Eastern garment
8 Fatima or Montez
9 Wrote on metal
10 — out: relaxes
11 Mayberry boy
12 Hue
13 Border
21 Angry
23 Fairy-tale creature
25 Fakes
27 Gather
28 Compass heading
29 Chocolate bean
31 Gymnast Korbut
32 Smidgens
33 Loop
34 Snarls of thread
36 Get bored
40 Shea's household
41 Superior group
44 Honored
47 Box camera inventor
49 Clocks
50 Runs, as dye
53 More competent
54 Pairs on
55 Mariner —
56 Solitary
57 Cathedral part
59 Misplace
60 Joy Adamson lioness
61 Transmitted
64 Calendar abbr



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

A	R	A	B	L	E		D	B	S		R	A	G	E
D	O	L	L	O	P		A	L	I		A	B	E	L
O	C	T	O	P	I		N	A	G		F	O	N	D
			S	E	C	O	N	D	N	A	T	U	R	E
S	W	I	S	S		D	E	S		M	E	T	E	R
T	A	R	O		A	D	O		A	I	R
E	X	A	M	I	N	E		B	E	G		C	O	N
N	E	T		M	I	S		D	R	O		R	N	A
O	D	E		S	P	O	T		T	I	S	S	U	E
			E	O	N		A	T	E		M	E	A	T
D	R	U	M	S		O	N	O		S	U	L	L	Y
R	U	B	B	E	R		C	E	M	E	N	T
A	L	O	E		O	H	M		G	O	T	T	E	N
M	E	A	D		L	E	I		G	R	E	A	S	E
A	R	T	S		E	R	A		S	T	R	I	P	E

No DC Menu Today

call 546-2625 for menu information

Night Editor: Adam White
Photo Technician: Becky Raddick
Copy Editor: Melissa Hommel
Production Supervisor: Seth Koenig
Production Staff: James Gilbert, Janine Tangney

Mack returns to lead Minutemen in 76-65 victory

Babul contributes to more than just defense

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

It's a positive nod to be able to win games within the conference. That said, it's especially good when the last eight games of the regular season are against Atlantic 10 teams.

St. Joe's	65
UMass	76

as they are for the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

On Saturday, the Minutemen defeated St. Joseph's 76-65 at the William D. Mullins Center for their sixth-straight victory over the Hawks. Keeping in step with St. Bonaventure for second place in the A-10 East, UMass, which won 14 games last year, improves to 14-11 and 8-4 in conference. St. Joe's, which dropped its third game in five days, falls to 11-13 and remains behind the Minutemen and the Bonnies with a record of 6-7. A second-place finish in the East signifies a bye in the first round of the A-10 tournament next month.

"We won 14 games and that's what we had last year," said UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "We've got to try to get some momentum going into the playoffs; we're keeping pace and we're right there for second place (in the A-10 East). It's always important to get that bye."

Inside plays was key for the Minutemen, as they romped to a 48-17 advantage in paint points. Putting its transition plan into action, UMass took full advantage of its nine steals and converted them into 22 points in comparison to the Hawks' zero.

Senior guard Monty Mack, after sitting out the 81-72 win over Fordham with a 101 temperature on Wednesday, returned with 23 points and three assists to guide the Minutemen. Mack was near perfect from the free throw line, draining eight of nine attempts. A-10 Player of the Week Shannon Crooks, who picked up the slack against the Rams with a career-high 29 points, chipped in 20 points and three assists. Freshman Micah Brand also added eight points.

Senior co-captain Mike Babul tallied a season-high nine points as he shot four-for-six from the floor. Babul, who raked in five rebounds and rung up three steals, was also willing to dish it out, serving up five assists in 33 minutes.

"Forget his defense. It was the other things that he did," said Flint. "He really stuck his nose in there and got a lot of different things done for us; he came up big when our other guys were in foul trouble.

"With (Ronell) Blizzard and (Anthony) Oates out there with him, it was a question of whether we were going to get our offense, and he answered that for us," Flint continued.

Marvin O'Connor netted 15 points on a poor 8-for-13 display from the field for the Hawks. Damian Reid tossed in 12 to go with nine rebounds, but committed four turnovers in 24 minutes.

St. Joseph's was staked to an early 12-6 lead as Andre Howard sank four quick points before Brand and Babul combined for three straight unanswered layups to knot the score at 12-all. The Hawks would build up at least a five-point lead twice more, before the Minutemen tore it back down. In the last three minutes, UMass took off on an 8-1 run to close out the half with a 32-27 lead.

UMass clinked six three-pointers but was perfect from the line, hitting all six attempts in the early half. Reid pulled in seven boards for the Hawks, who shot 36 percent from the floor.

Foul trouble attempted to dampen the Minutemen's efforts with Kiwana Rhymer, Kirkland and Brand logging massive minutes in the second half while being bogged down with four fouls apiece. Rhymer eventually fouled out with two minutes left in the game.

Massachusetts built up a nine-point lead in the first four minutes, as Mack and Crooks teamed up for 10 points and a 44-35 advantage. The UMass offensive splurge halted to just five points in four minutes as the Hawks rallied back with 10 to cut the lead to four at 49-45.

It would be the free throws in the end that clinched the win for the Minutemen. as Mack and Babul conspired for the only four field goals in the final 10 minutes of the game. The rest of UMass' points were posted at the candy stripe with a 14-for-19 outing at the line.

"With 10 minutes left, they were just saying that we'll just make it a free throw shooting contest," said Flint.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Shannon Crooks scored 20 points in the Minutemen's 76-65 win over A-10 foe St. Joseph's on Saturday

Balanced effort burns SJU, sets stage for URI

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

It's a shame that the game is basketball and not golf. The Massachusetts men's basketball team would love to have a few back.

With yet another convincing win within the Atlantic 10 on Saturday, an 11-point decision over St. Joseph's, the Minutemen have used adversity to peak heading into tonight's clash with Rhode Island at the Providence Civic Center. Against Fordham, adversity consisted of the team's leading scorer sitting out with the flu. This weekend, it was foul trouble.

With that in mind, UMass has gelled and found answers for its own questions. Just four games away from the A-10 showdown in Philadelphia, head coach Bruiser Flint is being led to believe that there is indeed life without Mack.

"I think this season is so much better because, these guys, we don't have as much talent as we had last year, not even close," Flint said. "but these guys play hard and work hard every day and they give a great effort."

Shannon Crooks was Wednesday's solution, pouring in 29 in the Minutemen's nine-point win in the Bronx. One might have considered it a fluke, thinking that Crooks' humbling 38 percent shooting from the floor would even out down the road. However, Crooks went for 20 against the Hawks while Mack fought through the flu leftovers to put a 23-spot on SJU. The win essentially makes it a two-team race, between the Bonnies and UMass, for the second bye from the East.

Now the Minutemen take on Rhode Island, whose season couldn't end any sooner. The Rams (5-21 overall, 2-11 A-10) have been turned upside down after current NBAer Lamar Odom and former head coach Jim Harrick left town for larger markets. With just two seniors that play considerable time and a slew of high-flying yet erratic youngsters, new coach Jerry DeGregorio has struggled in an attempt to refine the newcomers. The Maroon and White thwacked URI in the teams' first meeting, forcing 21 turnovers en route to an 89-50 victory at the Mullins Center. After starting the season 3-2, the Rams have dropped 19 of their last 21 games with the only wins coming against La Salle and Duquesne.

"What people don't realize is, this just isn't another game, this is Rhody-UMass," Flint said. "Next to Temple, this is our second-biggest rival. We embarrassed them the first game so if they have got some pride, they're going to be out there ready to play."

On Saturday, the pesky Rams battled George Washington for 30 minutes before the Colonials finally distanced themselves in a 99-81 victory. GW's guard play murdered URI: Bernard Barrow and A-10 Freshman of the Week SirValiant Brown scorched the Rams for 42 points while swingman Chris Monroe netted 19, including 10 for 10 from the line. In addition, they turned the ball over just six times.

"If we don't turn the ball over, we're going to win. I mean we just don't want them sticking around in a game," Flint said. "I think this time's going to be harder because they are going to be more up for the game."

A victory tonight guarantees a winning season for the Minutemen and makes them eligible for postseason play, whether it be in the NCAA Tournament or the National Invitational Tournament (NIT).

Wolverines claw past Minutemen

By Gary Mendese
Collegian Staff

They were hoping for a huge upset on Saturday, and looking to post their season high in points as well. But that just didn't happen.

Despite a valiant effort by the Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, the Michigan Wolverines dug their claws deep into the Minutemen and walked away with a new season best of their own, posting 231.125 points to UMass' 221.225.

The defending national champions dominated every event and posted some mighty high scores, like Justin Toman's near-perfect mark on the parallel bars (9.95). But the Maroon and White didn't have a bad meet by any means.

Breaking through the slump they've been having on rings this season, the Minutemen posted their season high on the event with a team score of 36.975.

"Ring- was really bright for us," head coach Roy Johnson said. "Claston (Kent) started off strong, and that helped the scores for the rest of the lineup." Kent finished eighth overall with a 9.10, falling just short of junior J.J. Hershey's seventh place score of 9.25. Hershey's mark was impressive considering it was his first competition since a knee fracture sidelined him in January.

Coming out on top for UMass once again, senior Jeff LaValle shined throughout the meet and won the all-around competition with a 57.275. He took first on high bar (9.85), second on parallel bars (9.80) and floor (9.75), while grabbing the fifth place spot on rings (9.575). And despite some trouble with falls over on the vault (8.00) and pommel horse (9.30), he still managed to place seventh on both events.

Junior Andy Leis nailed his pommel horse routine, taking the silver with a mark of 9.75 and placed eighth for the Minutemen on floor (9.05), just falling short of junior Bryan McNulty's 9.25. Freshman Brett Nelligan, the only Minuteman to stand up his vault, finished first for the Minutemen and tied for fifth overall with a strong 9.40. Sophomore John Szymczyk posted a career-high of 9.40 to place sixth on the parallel bars, and despite a small break over on high bar, junior Mike Alexander still managed to post his season-high score of 9.35.

Despite the loss to the Wolverines, UMass stood up and defended its own. In spite of some key routines being missed, the Minutemen still posted their second highest team score of the season and brought in some personal highs as well. All in all, the Maroon and White enjoyed the meet and the overall experience.

"It was great going up against [Michigan]," Johnson said. "It was great seeing such a high caliber team. We had a few bright spots, but I wish we had done better on the first and second events. But despite a few breaks, Jeff won the all-around - that just goes to show you, he's tough."

The Minutemen will be in action again tonight at 7 p.m., as they take on the Springfield Pride in Boyden Gymnasium. "I think Springfield will be a good meet," Johnson said. "We hope we can increase our hitting percentage. I've said in the past that we wanted to peak at Michigan. Well, this is where the season should really start to pick up."

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Jeff LaValle captured the all-around title, but despite his efforts the No. 1 Michigan Wolverines found a way to beat the Minutemen.

Hawks fly by UMass

Turnovers burn Minutewomen in loss

By Aaron Saykin
Collegian Staff

And it started so well.

Poised for its second upset in as many games, the Massachusetts women's basketball team jumped out to an early lead against host St. Joseph's Sunday, but watched that edge evaporate into a 17-point halftime deficit before falling, 66-41, in a battle between the top two teams in the Atlantic 10 East.

Angela Zampella's three-pointer seemed harmless at the time. The Minutewomen had been playing well, and only trailed by two, 18-16, as a result. But suddenly they couldn't hit a shot or hold onto the ball, and St. Joe's proceeded to put the game out of reach at the midway point, dealing a wounding 24-2 run that did not stop bleeding in the second frame.

UMass	41
St. Joe's	66

Meanwhile, the Hawks (22-4, 13-2 A-10) need not look over their shoulders in the division, as UMass (11-14, 8-6 A-10) drifts further into second place with the defeat.

"The just outplayed us. They have a toughness that we don't have and we've got to find it somewhere," Minutewoman coach Juanie O'Brien said on the WMUA post-game show. "If you have 15 turnovers in one half of a game, you're not going to beat too many teams. The first half is really what killed us."

During the first half, UMass freshman tweener Amber Sneed (seven turnovers) was whistled for four traveling violations. But it wasn't just the careless play that bothered O'Brien, who believed that the Hawks players were not being penalized for the same violation that Sneed continually committed. In years past, poor officiating for visitors at Hawk Hill, St. Joe's home arena, has continuously been a topic of conversation.

"I will say that if they're going to call Amber [Sneed] for a walking call every time, then they need to call [Hawk forward Jana] Lichnerova because it's the exact same play," O'Brien also said on WMUA. "It's a little unfair; the referees are a little biased. I think when you're a little bit older, you have that reputation, but I thought Amber got a couple of bad breaks on some of the calls they made against her."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Jill Rooney and the rest of the Minutewoman coaching staff are searching for ways to keep post players like Nekole Smith out of foul trouble.

Although unhappy with the traveling calls, O'Brien acknowledged that the officiating did not affect the outcome of the lop-sided game. Instead she pointed to a lack of intensity and poor execution by her backcourt, namely captains Alison MacFarland and Kathy Coyner (six turnovers).

"I thought our backcourt didn't play well. I thought Kathy and Alison made some very poor decisions," O'Brien said. "As much emotion as we had Thursday between those two, they really didn't have it this game. You've got to be able to bring that every time you step out on the court."

When the two teams met at the William D. Mullins Center on Jan. 29, Lichnerova erupted in the second half and proved to be the difference in the Minutewoman loss. Hoping to avoid a similar fate on Sunday, O'Brien's squad defended the versatile, 6-foot-4 Lichnerova more tightly on the perimeter, but could not stop her under the basket.

"We did a decent job covering her," O'Brien said of Lichnerova, who finished with a game-high 16 points this time around. "We didn't give her anything uncontested. But she took us to the basket. The help defense is supposed to be there, but it stepped away every time and she got some lay-ups."

No UMass scorer cracked double digits, as MacFarland and sophomore forward Nekole Smith led the way with eight points apiece. Freshman forward Jen Butler led the team with seven rebounds. The Minutewomen attempted only five free throws, while the Hawks were 20-of-24 from the stripe.

Despite the loss, UMass seems to be in no danger of losing second place in the A-10 East. The top two teams in each division receive a first-round bye in the Atlantic 10 Conference Tournament, which will be played in Philadelphia at The Apollo of Temple from March 3-6. The winner is awarded an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 20 Wednesday, February 23, 2000

Students decry impending budget cuts with rally

TERESA CAMPOS / COLLEGIAN

Students gathered at Whitmore Building yesterday, to protest against the proposed budget cuts.

Scott under pressure

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

Chancellor David K. Scott responded to concerns yesterday, as chants against the budget cuts were heard from students and among members of the faculty, in a protest that began outside Whitmore Building and ended in his office.

"I'm going to try and hold the academic affairs to no more than one percent cuts," Scott said in response to questions posed on what he planned to do about the upcoming budget cuts. "I'm not promising. I can't promise."

Concerns were voiced throughout the two-hour rally, exemplifying the need to remain active. Pleas were made to make both legislatives and administration at the University aware that higher public education is too important to have corners cut.

"We need your help. Some of us have been trying to convince the other legislatives that UMass is a jewel," State Representative Ellen Story said. "Get in touch with your legislative, we need to be very vocal with elected officials."

Many agreed that in order to amend such budget cuts, the state legislative should to be brought closer to the issue.

Student Trustee Seth Avakian said, "The real key is contacting the legislature, they are in Boston, there they are saying we have Tufts, Harvard – but we need UMass for you."

The protest hosted a crowd of approximately 100 individuals including professors and students, both undergraduates and graduates, to support education as Phil Zeyse, a commuter senator and organizer of the rally said.

"I disagree with proposing academic budget cuts. I disagree with eliminating two majors," Zeyse said. "I support public higher education and UMass must be a priority."

Many in attendance did believe UMass was a priority as comments on funding spent on the Big Dig in Boston instead of public education echoed through the crowd.

"$12.2 billion is going to a hole in Boston, while we're getting cuts," Zeyse said.

Despite an overwhelming support from speakers to contact the legislatures, many also felt that the problem was closer to home. They said they felt the Chancellor and others in the administration were responsible for the shortage of funding.

"I've been here for 30 years, but this time is different. What's funny this time is they [the administration] have enough money to run this place," Dan Lenson, professor of Comparitive Literature and a member of the Massachusetts Society of Professors said. "They know they have enough money, but their not doing it. Instead they cut consumer studies, they kill off the Spanish I.A's, they have starved the language department."

He went on to explain that he believed it was an issue of policy. "This isn't just bad management, this is policy. It is infrastructure not people," Lenson said.

Graduate Employment Organization (GEO) President James Shaw had similar ideas to express. He told the audience there were questions they had to ask, including, "why are there budget cuts?" He said he felt the core purpose of any university was academics and at this time they needed to look at the priorities being brought forth by the Chancellor.

"Priorities are shifting to technology and distance learning," Shaw said. "The shift is away from education toward business – it's about profit making ideas."

He said the focus should be put back into academics and funding should remain there. Shaw also said such budget cuts would not only increase class sizes, but also create less class choices.

Others shadowed Shaw's statements with ones of their own. Aaron Johnson, a graduate student focusing on labor studies said, "I'm furious that, especially in a day of economic surplus, that departments are being asked to cut. Academics are going down. It seems the priority of the administration is completely reverse of what it should be."

This feeling of frustration and anger brought spirit to the rally as one student suggested going into the Whitmore Building to deliver over 1,000 letters that had been written in the past weeks by students addressing their concerns on the budget proposal.

With letters in hand, the crowd

Turn to RESEARCH page 2

Turn to RALLY page 2

TERESA CAMPOS / COLLEGIAN

Various members of the UMASS community address their opinion during the rally.

Concerned responses

By Basia Charpak
Collegian Correspondent

Concerned students and faculty converged in front of the Whitmore Administration Building yesterday to protest Chancellor David Scott's proposed one percent budget cuts.

Students and faculty huddled together in large groups against both the cold and against the idea of funding for the University being taken away. However the tone of those who stood and listened was that of great concern.

"I'm glad people are out and I wish more would come. People know of the problem, but I don't think they see it as potentially horrific as it could turn out to be," said Scott Bellner, an Orchard Hill Resident Advisor who sent phone messages to his floor urging them to attend yesterday's rally.

"I felt it was important to reinforce the issue and hopefully people would come to support the cause," Bellner said.

Other reactions stemmed from annoyance at the University for cutting back on classes while students fight to get into remaining over enrolled courses.

"Like everyone else I've had trouble getting into my classes. I've had to demand to get into my classes, and I think it's my responsibility as a student to be here." Mike O'Neil an undeclared freshman said.

Among many of the attendees there was also a sense of confusion.

"Didn't we just have a budget surplus? How can they be cutting funds?" questioned Jessica Murras an undeclared sophomore.

Among the students present were members of the Student Government Association who came to support the rally's cause.

"My primary concern is that when there is a multitude of money I don't want budget cuts to occur at all; especially academic budget cuts," said Alana Caceres Sharp Lancil James.

Other reactions stemmed from annoyance at the University for cutting back on classes while students fight to get into remaining over enrolled courses.

"Like everyone else I've had trouble getting into my classes. I've had to demand to get into my classes, and I think it's my responsibility as a student to be here." Mike O'Neil an undeclared freshman said.

Among many of the attendees there was also a sense of confusion.

"Didn't we just have a budget surplus? How can they be cutting funds?" questioned Jessica Murras an undeclared sophomore.

Among the students present were members of the Student Government Association who came to support the rally's cause.

"My primary concern is that when there is a multitude of money I don't want budget cuts to occur at all; especially academic budget cuts," said Alana Caceres Sharp Lancil James.

Turn to CUTS page 2

Camera bought by Umass funds to aid firefighters

By Jason Trenkle and Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

While Chancellor David K. Scott has asked all departments to prepare for one, two and three percent budget cuts, the University of Massachusetts has announced the purchase, at a reduced cost, of a $21,500 dollar thermal-imaging camera.

The camera will cost the university $9,500 dollars and will be used by the Amherst Fire Department for education and training.

Scott said in a statement that he is pleased that the University can participate in the town's effort to secure another imaging camera.

"As our strategic partnership agreement with Amherst demonstrates, the University is committed to employing its resources to benefit the community," Scott said. "In this case, our resources extend beyond mere dollars."

There are 17 UMass student firefighters in the Amherst department and University employees are also part of the 24-member firefighter force.

The thermal camera will be an additional benefit for all firefighters in the area according to Amherst Fire Chief Keith Hoyle. It is used to locate people inside burning and smoke-filled buildings, to find firefighters

Turn to CAMERA page 3

Mr. Smith comes to UMass; Silent Bob speaks to students

KARA STOKES / COLLEGIAN

Kevin Smith greeted adoring fans last night with self-deprecating humor, profane language, and an undeniable sense of humor

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

After a brief introduction by DVP (Distinguished Visitors Program) secretary John Kazlauskas, independent filmmaker Kevin Smith took the stage at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall to a raucous and eager crowd and a wall of applause and cheering.

"It's reactions like that that make up for any woman who ever said I had a small d--k," he said, one of many moments of self-effacing humor Smith would subject himself to over the next two hours and forty-five minutes on stage. He came with no prepared speech, and made no opening remarks, choosing instead to jump directly into crowd interaction, fielding a myriad of questions from fans, film students, and more than a few people just looking for a good laugh.

As can be expected, one of the first topics hit upon was how upstart independent filmmakers, such as those working towards their Film Studies certificate here at UMass, should go about entering the industry.

"Is there a film school here? You can get a certificate? Well, f--k, I can give you a certificate." Smith himself only attended film school for four months, and advised hopeful writer/directors to spend their money on film projects, not tuition.

Another hot topic of discussion was Smith's most recent film, Dogma, which sparked a backlash of hate mail (and some threats of violence) from religious apologists who saw Smith's movie as a direct attack on their belief systems, the Catholic Church in particular.

"It was a pro-faith movie," said Smith when asked about the reactions Dogma received, and although he says that he tends to view organized religion with "suspicion and disdain," he also noted, "Church I actually enjoy going to. It gives me a peace of mind."

One of the highlights of the evening was Smith's lengthy and hilarious tale about how he came to know Jason Mewes, who has made appearances in all of Smith's films as the character Jay. Although too long (and far too profane) to retell here, one particular anecdote does merit mention. Smith and fast member Jason Lee were in their hotel room when Mewes stepped through the door wearing nothing but a red vest. "Did you order this?"

Smith also talked about his one-time involvement with the new Superman movie, Superman Reborn, for which he was hired as the scriptwriter. Ultimately, the movie was shelved when Tim Burton was hired as a director and insisted on bringing in his own writers. Kevin was dismissed, and the Burton-headed efforts ultimately floundered and died.

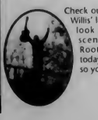
That's not to say that Smith's involvement in the comic book world has come to an end – far

Turn to SMITH page 6

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 45 LOW: 34	HIGH: 55 LOW: 35	HIGH: 46 LOW: 35

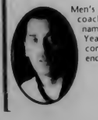
SOURCE WGGB.COM



I'll huff and I'll puff!

Ever been blown over by the hurricane that forms in front of the library? Read today's Ed/Op page to read about Ryan Benharris' solution.

ED/OP PAGE 4



Going the Distance

Check out or review of Bruce Willis' latest and an intimate look at the local music scene, including The Roots at Smith, all in today's Arts. Arts: we read so you don't have to.

ARTS PAGE 6

Yarworth a lot

Men's swimming and diving coach Russ Yarworth was named A-10 Coach-of-the-Year. His team also just competed in the conference championships.

SPORTS PAGE 12

Arts & Living 6
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Campus Police Log

Accidents
Feb. 18
A backhoe reportedly struck a parked utility trailer in Lot #67
Feb. 19
A snowplow reportedly struck a vehicle by Lot #25.
Feb. 21
A vehicle reportedly backed in a parked vehicle on Sylvan Rd. and left the scene.

Arrests
Feb. 18
Marisa E. Staker, age 20, of W. Babbylon, NY was arrested in Lot #32 and charged with drunk driving, unsafe operation of a motor vehicle and possession or use of a false liquor or ID card.
Feb. 19
Joseph Benvenisti, age 20, of Amherst was arrested on North Pleasant St. and charged with drunk driving, possession of a class D substance, number plate violation and possession or use of a false or stolen RMV document.
Feb 20
A 20-year-old intoxicated person was taken into police protective custody on North Pleasant St.
A 17-year-old intoxicated person was taken into police protective custody at the physical plant building.

Larceny
Feb. 18
License plates were reported stolen from a vehicle in lot #64.
Feb. 19
A laptop computer, valued at over $1000 was reported stolen from John Quincy Adams Dorm.
A Playstation and other personal items were reported stolen from Brown Dorm.
Feb. 20
A wallet was reported stolen from Tillson Farm Grounds Building.

Misc.
Feb. 18
A drug law offense was reported in Washington Dorm.
A fight from a previous evening was reported in Cance Dorm.
A liquor law violation was reported in Lot #32. Court action will be sought.
Feb. 19
A resident of John Adams Dorm reported derogatory flyers attached to a door.
A report was received from Prince Dorm of snowballs and sledding.
Police removed an individual from Mackimmie Dorm for annoying behavior.
Staff in Cance Dorm requested assistance to disperse a group.
Fireworks in a stairwell in Emerson Dorm were reported.
Feb. 21
A minor accident involving two motor vehicles on Kennedy Rd resulted in an assault on one of the operators. The victim is not pressing charges.

Vandalism
Feb. 19
Graffiti was reported in a vending machine room in Coolidge Dorm.
Damage to a vehicle was reported in Lot #33.
Feb. 20
Damage to a vehicle was reported in Lot #50.

TERESA CANINO RIVERA/COLLEGIAN

SGA senator and psychology student, Phil Zehti spoke with the press during the rally yesterday.

■ cuts

continued from page 1

"I'm also concerned about other academic areas that may be cut, especially humanities and fine arts where the emphasis is on diversity education and advocacy for color."

However the students were not alone in their support against the proposed one percent cuts. Members of the faculty also came to rally.

"Academic Affairs is the heart and soul of this university. It's the money that goes directly to student learning, and the administration has not explained why academic affairs needs to be cut when Massachusetts economy is booming, and overall university budget is not shrinking," said Nick Bromell, a professor in the English Department.

"Higher education should be a priority to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Academic Affairs should be a priority of the university," said Sara Lennox a German and Social Thought and Political Economy professor.

By the end of the rally, many students said they recognized that this was only the beginning.

"I think one rally like this can't be too effective, but I think it's a good start." O'Neil said.

■ research

continued from page 1

duced a total of approximately five percent more proposals that requested about 9.5 percent more funding. This figure was up from the 1998 proposals.

In addition, Linda Slakey, dean of Natural Science and Mathematics, attributes the increase to both the faculty that have been researching at the University for an extended period of time and new faculty that are bringing in funding for projects.

She concluded that faculty at all levels are making major contributions to the University in terms of research.

Still another reason why funding may be up, Byron explained, is the status of the federal funding climate that now exists in the United States. According to him, the funding climate is the best for research than it has been since the sixties.

He explained that both the Democrats and the Republicans have now begun to value research, and ascribe to the knowledge-economy theory, which is positive for funding within the University atmosphere.

Faculty on all levels are making major contributions towards increasing research funding at the University, in order to combat the budget constraints that are currently being faced.

TERESA CANINO RIVERA/COLLEGIAN

On the table...

Debra Pierce, representing Ann Taylor, during the Retail Career Fair held at noon in the Campus Center.

■ rally

continued from page 1

passed through the doors of Whitmore, up staircases, through halls and finally into the Chancellor's office chanting, "the budget cut has got to go," and "stop budget cuts," amongst shouts of "hey, hey, ho, ho, Chancellor Scott has got to go."

The group demanded a conversation with Scott and ultimately said they would leave once a date was set for a forum on the topic. Although Scott promised to have a forum sometime during the week following next, he said it was impossible for him to confirm anything on the spot.

When asked to justify his decisions, and in particular to explain the money being allocated to PeopleSoft, a software application program, Scott said, "Please understand, there is a six year plan that we have been following. We received more money, but we spent more money."

As conversations lengthened, Scott responded to one student by saying, "Would you like to be Chancellor? Let's put you in charge for a day."

His solution was to plan a forum in the future and asked that the group disperse to the hallway, allowing business for the day to be conducted.

Students weren't satisfied, and though numbers dwindled, many students remained in the Chancellor's office demanding a firm date for the open forum. At that point Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Javier Cevallos read the group the picking code and together the group marched off.

The crowd expressed that though they were leaving, as not to be arrested, the subject would not be dropped.

"We'll be back. The battle has just begun," one student said as he walked out.

Everybody Scores!

REGISTER WITH MYBYTES.COM AND SCORE BIG!

GET A FREE SONIC ABYSS MULTIMEDIA CD AND AUTOMATICALLY BE ENTERED INTO OUR SCORE BIG, SCORE OFTEN SWEEPSTAKES.

YOU COULD WIN AN INSTANT PRIZE!

PLUS, YOU'LL HAVE A CHANCE AT $100,000 TOWARDS YOUR COLLEGE EDUCATION.

$score BIG $score OFTEN Sweepstakes

UpCLOSE travel well SPEND LESS BLOCKBUSTER CALGON SESSIONS SKECHERS OldGlory.com TripHub.com Your Student Travel Source UNIVERSAL UNIVERSAL MUSIC & VIDEO DISTRIBUTION

mybytes.com™

No Purchase Necessary. Void in Florida and where prohibited by law. Must be legal resident of the United States. (except Florida) 18 yrs or older, registered at a college or university during the promotional period. Sweepstakes ends 6:00 PM EST 02/17/00. To Play: visit www.mybytes.com and register for the website using process provided, confirm your contact information on the game page and submit. Instant winners selected at random and notified instantly by site. Grand Prize winner will be selected at random on or about 3/21/00 and notified via email and regular US mail. Odds of winning Prizes depend on the number of entries received. By entering, participants agree to be bound by the complete Official Rules available at www.mybytes.com or send SASE to "SBSO Rules" Common Places, 810 Memorial Dr., Cambridge, MA 02139. BLOCKBUSTER® name, design and related marks are trademarks of Blockbuster Inc. Blockbuster Inc. is not a sponsor of or in any way liable or responsible for the administration of this game. (Coupon redeemable at participating BLOCKBUSTER® store locations.)

© 2000 YouthStream

Protein to be unfolded at faculty lecture today

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Staff

The head of the department of biochemistry and molecular biology at the University of Massachusetts, Lila Gierasch, will discuss "The Unfolding Story of Protein Folding" in her upcoming Distinguished Faculty Lecture.

The lecture will take place in Memorial Hall at 4 p.m. on Wed., Feb.23. After the lecture Gierasch will be presented with a Chancellor's Medal. The Chancellor's Medal is the highest award given by the campus to individuals for excellent and remarkable service to the University. A reception will take place following the presentation of the award.

Many consider Gierasch the leading authority on protein chemistry. She has spent much of her career researching proteins and the three-dimensional shapes they spontaneously form inside cells. Her research could have implications for diseases and disorders as seemingly unrelated as Alzheimer's disease, cystic fibrosis, bovine encephalitis ("mad cow" disease), an inherited form of emphysema and even certain cancers.

The proteins inside of a cell spontaneously fold into specific, three-dimensional shapes to allow the cell to function properly. Generally the proteins form correctly into shapes ranging from spirals to oddly shaped triangles.

In a statement, Gierasch described the process "like a roll of dough twisting itself into a pretzel." But despite the protein's chaotic appearance, she said, the twists and bends must be exact. Because of genetic mutations, overt stress, high heat or forced increase of production of a certain protein, the cells may produce faulty proteins.

Little is known about how these proteins fold or how they are produced incorrectly. "While it's an interesting intellectual problem, there's a sense of urgency in the field, because there is real potential of helping to create new therapies for disease," said Gierasch. "It really is the cutting edge of science." Gierasch uses such methods as dichroism, fluorescence, and nuclear magnetic resonance to study protein folding.

Obtaining this information is especially important as the human genome is mapped. For scientists, having the map of the human genome without understanding how the proteins fold leaves them with tons of information and no tool to interpret it.

Gierasch previously taught at Amherst College, the University of Delaware, and the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center. She joined the UMass faculty in 1994. She received her bachelor's degree in Chemistry from Mount Holyoke College, and her Doctorate in biophysics from Harvard University.

■ camera

continued from page 1

lost inside buildings and to reveal hidden fires behind walls, under floors or near chimneys. According to a press release, they have a range of up to 100 feet.

However, according to Donald Robinson, director of Environmental Health and Safety, the camera will be permanently stationed at the Amherst Fire Department, and will be only be transferred on campus for class use. The use of the camera in his safety engineering classes is the reason the reduced cost was offered by the Kentucky-based Bullard Company. Robinson said, though housing it at the fire station seemed more logical.

"The cameras will be housed on the department's two front-line fire engines to assure they will arrive at fire scenes with the first responding units," Hoyle said in a statement.

Hoyle went on to explain that the first thermal-imaging camera from Bullard is expected to be delivered by the end of the month, although it's a different model, which lacks transmitting capacity. He said he felt the prospect of obtaining this second camera was great news for everyone involved.

Amherst Selectman Hill Boss agreed, saying, "I think this is a good idea for the town." He went on to say there is also legislation pending that could give communities grants to offset the purchase price of the cameras. The additional savings would be even better news for the town if approved Boss said.

www.dailycollegian.com

Drug checks questioned

By Joan Biskupic
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – The Supreme Court agreed yesterday to decide whether police are violating motorists' constitutional rights when they set up roadblocks to conduct random drug inspections.

The case, to be heard at the court next fall, could widely affect police operations nationwide as law enforcement authorities implement an array of checkpoint programs to stem the flow of narcotics trafficking. Lower courts remain split over whether the random stops infringe on Fourth Amendment protections against unreasonable searches.

The dispute involves a case from Indianapolis, where police officers checked drivers for signs of impairment, such as slurred speech, and led drug-sniffing dogs around vehicles. A federal appeals court ruled the practice wrongly detains motorists who have done nothing to raise police suspicions.

In its decision, the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals said the city had failed to establish any "urgent considerations of public safety" to justify randomly stopping drivers. The appeals court panel acknowledged in its decision last year that the Supreme Court had previously upheld roadblocks at which police check drivers for the influence of alcohol. But the opinion by Chief Judge Richard A. Posner, one of the nation's most prominent jurists, said sobriety tests are different from drug stops because they are primarily concerned with road safety for all travelers and not concerned "primarily with catching crooks."

Posner emphasized that the city was using the checkpoints as a law enforcement tool, even though there was no reason to believe that the various drivers stopped had done anything wrong. As such, he said, the practice violates drivers' privacy in an effort to find some evidence of a crime.

In appealing the decision to the high court, the city of Indianapolis noted that a Florida narcotics roadblock had been upheld by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit and urged the justices to clarify what police can do.

The practice was challenged in a class-action lawsuit brought by the Indiana Civil Liberties Union. The challengers, who included two people who were stopped but not arrested, alleged the policy was unconstitutional because it allowed officers to stop people without the usually required "individualized suspicion" of drug dealing or other wrongdoing. They said the narcotics and K-9 stops crossed the line in being designed solely to interdict drugs. The case is City of Indianapolis vs. Edmond.

In returning yesterday from a month-long recess, the justices also issued orders in hundreds of pending cases and ruled in several disputes heard earlier this term. Among other actions, the court:

Rejected an appeal by George Mason University in a sex discrimination lawsuit brought by a woman who said she had been harassed by a university professor. By declining to take the case, George Mason University v. Litman, the court let stand a ruling by the Richmond-based 4th Circuit that said the state-run university in Fairfax, Va., was not shielded from claims filed under a statute that prohibits sex bias at colleges receiving federal funds.

TERESA CANINO RIVERA/COLLEGIAN

Show me the money!

Students form lines in the Campus Center, to make ATM transactions.

Shootings sting already sad city

By Jessica Kowal
Newsday

LITTLETON, Colo. – Sara Blackford worries that she, too, is going to be killed. Sitting in class at Columbine High School, where 12 students and a teacher were gunned down last April, this shy high school senior wonders if another student is secretly plotting to kill her and her friends.

Tentative feelings of security that sprouted in the 10 months after the mass murder were crushed last week on Valentine's Day, when two Columbine sophomore sweethearts were shot to death at a local sandwich shop.

"It doesn't seem like it's ever going to end," 17-year-old Sara said.

With the one-year anniversary of the Columbine tragedy approaching, many residents of this Denver suburb have begun to wonder if their affluent community has been cursed by what one pastor calls "the poison and infection" of April 20, 1999.

The killings of Stephanie Hart Grizzell, 16, and Nicholas Kunselman, 13, as yet unsolved, provided a cruel backend to what some people here call "the incident" – the brutal, bloody rampage by Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold that ruined so many lives and shook a nation.

Friends of Grizzell and Kunselman recently tucked roses into yellow crime-scene tape wrapped around a tree near the Subway sandwich shop where they were killed. Last October, a Columbine parent whose daughter was paralyzed by Harris' and Klebold's gunfire committed suicide. A few weeks ago in another disturbing footnote, the body of a missing 11-year-old boy was discovered in a trash bin near the school, across the street from the park where thousands left notes, flowers and candles last spring. The investigation into the boy's death continues, but police do not think it is related to the shootings.

Parents and students also must deal with the fact that the school has become a target for cruel attention seekers. After repeated threats by others to "finish the job," dozens of students have left Columbine for other schools or home-schooling.

Correction

All references in yesterdays Collegian to Eunich Germany should have been references to Munich Germany. The Collegian regrets the error.

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!

ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER*

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:

Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Deliverers Wanted!

The Collegian is now accepting applications for drivers.

No experience needed (except driving).

Come down to the Campus Center Basement, Room 113 to fill out an application.

Ask for Jon Randall or Christine Carroll.

E-mail hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our opinion

Faculty support necessary

Yesterday, the Student Government Association (SGA) hosted a rally in front of the Whitmore Administration Building to protest the recent budget cuts at UMass that will supposedly cause, through a domino effect, an overall worsened learning environment at the University.

The rally, which was supported by the Board of Student Businesses, the Graduate Employee Organization and the Radical Student Union, came as a response to the notion that, because of the reported funding cuts, fewer courses would be offered and classes would be larger than before, among other things, hindering the educational experience of the students on campus.

SGA Commuter Senator Phil Zetye set forth the motion to excuse students from their classes yesterday during the time of the rally and be allowed academic clemency throughout the remainder of the day. It seems as though Zetye feels that the state of Massachusetts is not being wise with its money, as 12-billion dollars is being spent to fund Boston's painfully slowly progressing "Big Dig" project, and as the state continues to enjoy economic growth.

If this is so, The Daily Collegian cannot disagree with him. Zetye's motion was supported by other members of the SGA and a number of other influential student-run organizations on campus, and rightfully so. While the Collegian realizes that the rally itself will not likely force any direct or immediate changes in the University or state's financial practices, it is important that the student opinion of the current state of affairs be understood.

The Collegian commends Zetye and those who attended the rally, and encourages them to keep fighting on behalf of the educational environment here at the University of Massachusetts.

However, we are disheartened by the fact that the Commuter Senator's motion was not brought up in last week's Faculty Senate meeting. In theory, the faculty, whose jobs are potentially in jeopardy because of the proposed budget cuts, should be the first group to step forward and openly support a rally of this sort. The faculty at UMass must not only be concerned about their employment status, though. It has been said that the cuts would affect the number of teaching assistants available to each professor, hurting the ease with which important subject matter can be detailed and explained to each student at the school. The classes would theoretically also become larger, making hands-on experiences and personal relations with the professors become more difficult.

One of the University's claims to fame is that it strives for a small-school atmosphere while hosting a big population. This point of pride could quickly become indisputably untrue, and the faculty at this school should not stand for that.

The UMass students acknowledged the value of their professors by making a public stand against budget cuts that will potentially harm the teachers here.

The Collegian feels that, by not openly granting Zetye and his fellow students academic clemency when they desired, the Faculty Senate is turning its back on what could be its biggest ally in the ongoing battle over the school's financial situation.

We want a "no sweat" UMass

Look around the University Store and examine the tags of UMass apparel. You will find that most of our t-shirts, sweatshirts and hats are made in foreign countries. The working conditions in many of these Third World factories are deplorable and would fall under the rubric of "sweatshops." Low wages, long workdays, inadequate health, safety regulations and other abuses are common. The collective silence by our school community on this issue is tantamount to an endorsement of these human rights violations. The egregious abuse of workers, or even the possibility of such abuse, should provoke outrage and shame at an institution dedicated to higher learning.

Currently a campus organization called UMass Students Against Sweatshops (UMASS-SAS), of which I am a member, is working to secure the adoption of proactive measures, which would ameliorate poor working conditions in the factories that produce our clothing. The chief tenants of the group are a living wage for the workers, public disclosure of factory whereabouts and conditions, and independent monitoring of the factories.

To accomplish these aims, UMASS-SAS proposes we join the Workers Rights Consortium (WRC). The WRC is a burgeoning independent monitoring organization developed by United Students Against Sweatshops.

Schools such as Brown, Bard, and Loyola (La) have already joined, and efforts are currently under way at the Universities of Pennsylvania and Wisconsin. Membership in the WRC would provide UMass with a contractual apparatus with which to compel licensees to improve conditions in their factories. The twin mechanisms wielded by the WRC are "full disclosure" and independent monitoring.

The WRC believes that "sweatshops flourish when they are hidden." Under terms of membership with the WRC, any company dealing with UMass would be contractually obligated to disclose the location of their factories. Companies will have greater incentive to eliminate poor conditions when they are unable to shroud their sweatshops beneath a veil of secrecy. Moreover, every UMass licensing agreement would stipulate that the company is responsible for insuring acceptable working conditions. The standard used to measure compliance would be a strict Code of Conduct drafted by UMass. The Code would mandate a living wage for workers, the right to collective bargaining and unionization, prohibition of child labor/forced labor, prohibition of sexual harassment and abuse, stringent health and safety regulations, and protection of women's rights.

In addition to disclosing factory locations, the contract would further mandate independent, spontaneous investigations of the licensee's factories. Many companies already engage in factory "monitoring." The monitors, however, are commissioned and salaried by the company itself. Any worker wishing to register a complaint is essentially "ratting out" the company to other company employees. Complaints are unlikely in such an atmosphere. The WRC, conversely, would operate independently from the company in collaboration with local Non-Governmental Organizations (NGO's). The investigations would both inspect factories for violations of the Code of Conduct and verify worker complaints. The workers are interviewed in total confidentiality, away from the factories, and in their own language by other natives.

Richard Anderson

The WRC provides UMass with three methods of insuring compliance with the Code. First, UMass would receive reports of violations from the WRC. Under the terms of the licensing agreement, the company would then be responsible for correcting violations. Follow up investigations would verify whether problems have been remedied. The contract would stipulate that companies cannot simply withdraw from factories found to be substandard. The WRC demands a long-term commitment from the companies to improve conditions.

Second, public disclosure of working conditions means that the WRC could release information on factory conditions to the media. Companies found to be in violation would be subjected to intense public pressure to improve conditions. The third and ultimate threat to the licensee is termination of their contract. The goal of the WRC is to remain with companies and encourage improvements in conditions. However, any company licensing with UMass would be notified that continued Code violations at factories could cause them to lose our business. With more than thirty thousand students across five campuses, most companies would take the proper steps to maintain a relationship with UMass.

UMASS-SAS believes that our school desperately needs a Code of Conduct with teeth. It needs an institutional means to obliterate our embarrassing association with sweatshops. The WRC is a sensible, well-orchestrated mechanism that will bring about tangible, positive change. The addition of UMass would provide the WRC with considerable inertia and crucial publicity. We would also provide encouragement for other schools to follow in our path. Most importantly, joining the WRC is the right thing to do. College is not simply the process of gaining knowledge about the world; it is about taking that knowledge and using it to make the world a better place. UMASS-SAS believes this campus cares about the rights of all people.

Richard Anderson is a Collegian columnist.

Another conspiracy theory

Old friends, Burger King and paranoia. It's the perfect way to spend a couple of minutes on a Saturday afternoon, eh?

I picked up my Big King from the counter and sat down to wait for my friend, whom I will refer to as "Willy," because that's his name. He bought a Herald from the little snack-booth thing and sat down to his Double Whopper with Cheese – a manly sandwich if there ever was one.

As I was picking the onions and pickles off my burger, Willy opened his tabloid to some random page and pointed out a headline to me. It was something to do with the MCAS tests, those standardized graduation tests that Massachusetts public schools started administering a couple years back.

"So, what do you think about this?" Willy asks me with a mouthful of fries – far inferior to the McDonalds fries – I might digress to add.

I shrug. I really don't think about the MCAS tests. I got my Plymouth North High School diploma in the previous millennium, all the way back to the Class of 1998, when all you needed to graduate was four years of English and a couple of bruises to prove you went to gym class to play Slaughterhouse regularly. I spend more time thinking about what it would be like if my arms were my legs than I do pondering the MCAS. This I told to Willy, expecting the conversation to change to something more interesting, like sex or baseball or something.

Rob Schulze

No such luck. Willy tells me that he knows something that I don't – that almost nobody knows. It is, I can tell by the tone of his voice, something of the pants-crap grade of horrible, kind of like the piece of lettuce that got stuck in my throat at about this time in the conversation.

The MCAS is a conspiracy.

You see, Willy knows people on the "inside," people "in politics," who gave him the real scoop on the secret plans. Willy is a part-time student at Cape Cod Community College with no other job. I point this out to him, expressing my sincere doubt that anybody behind the scenes of politics would allow him wash the voting booth, let alone hand him out insider secrets. Prove it, I say: Who, exactly, gave you this "insider information?"

"I cannot reveal my sources," Willy says with an air of smug superiority as though he is protecting the Pope from rumors of singing Episcopalian hymns in the shower.

Sighing, rolling my eyes, and chugging on my medium Coke, I give in to the inevitable and allow Willy to share his theory, um, I mean proven facts, with me. This is how it basically goes:

"Everybody will have a barcode," he says in a voice of horror. When I point out that I, right now, have a Social Security number, ATM number, and who knows how many other barcodes attached to me, he sighs and rolls his eyes saying, "Yes, but they'll have an actual barcode." He does not elaborate on this. I really don't know.

Then he goes on to say that we will be specialized, placed into certain programs based only on our test scores, with absolutely no choice. What we are good at will be on our diplomas, and that's what we will be expected to do.

I told him it sounded a lot like college, which is something that I generally approve of. He gave me a dirty look.

"Do you know what that is when they tell you what you're good at? Do you know what it is when you need to go to school like that? Communism, that's what it is!"

At this point I told him to lay off whatever drugs were making him so paranoid, finished my dinner, and got up to go.

The moral of the story? The MCAS tests are all a setup to inflict communism on the state of Massachusetts, and only Willy Craven knows what's up because of his inside sources. I, personally, think that Willy is full of crap and takes himself and his stature as a high-profile community college scholar a little too seriously, but who knows? When all our children are living on collective farms we may just wish we had listened to him.

What do I know for sure? The Big King really gives me gas.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian columnist.

The library pushed me

Everyone beware! We've got a violent criminal on the loose at the University of Massachusetts. Actually, the criminal is not really on the loose since it's bound to one place, but nonetheless, watch your back. Last week, the library pushed me.

I was pushed once in high school. I won't print the jerk's name, because he may be reading this column, and he may be an alcoholic with a gun, so for the sake of it, I'll call him Dan. Dan was slightly bigger than me. He mumbled something about being tough, and wanted to know if I thought I was a "tough guy." To this I replied, "No. I'm not a tough guy, that's your job to be tough. I'm the smart guy, remember? My brainy wimp, you tough nitwit."

Ryan Benharris

He scratched his head and probably thought that nitwit was some sort of compliment, so he walked away. But the end of this pointless story is that Dan pushed me. Apparently I pissed him off because I was being a smart ass (something that's rare I tell ya!) And, knowing myself as well as I think I do, I probably deserved to be pushed.

However, I'm not quite sure what W.E.B. Dubois was trying to say when he used his mammoth penis-shaped brick house as a shield for the wind to ricochet off of, directly into my face. I'm sure you've all encountered the feeling of walking by the library in the middle of the afternoon, and feeling what would normally be understated as a "light breeze," perpetrated by the most evil of supervillains this side of Gotham. The wind can be strong enough to knock over Rosie O' Donnell, even when she's getting a piggyback ride from Camryn Manheim. All I know is that the library pushed me, and this means war.

You may be asking yourself, how is this wacko going to go about declaring war on the library? Well I've already covered that for you. First of all, in order to declare war, we need an army. Since I don't know the first thing about the army, I will declare myself King. That's right, King Benny. My royal headquarters will be run from 7th floor Dickinson, where I will be defended by the best group of secret service agents on the entire campus: my residents, lead by special agent Verbeek! Since I don't know anything about war, I figure that my chief wartime consultant will have to be Rob Beadle. He's a military man, and frankly, the only person I'd trust to make decisions about the development of this army.

I figure that strength is where I'm going to begin to develop my army from; and I'll top it off with brains and some sweet extra additions. The strength will come from what I believe is the strongest bunch of people on the campus. I'd like to request a meeting with Coach Whipple, and ask to borrow a couple of his biggest linebackers. I figure that we'd send a few of those up the back entrance of the library, and continuously smash into the bricks like a battering ram. The leader of my brut force army would have to be my friend Ben. He lifts everyday, and I have never lifted in my life, so he's strong.

For the brains division of the attack on the library, I'd definitely take members of the Commonwealth College. Even though I'm not in the college, I understand how much more dedicated they are to school than I am. Simply put, I don't think they're nerds, because a lot of them are friends of mine, so I'd be stupid not to utilize their vast intelligence. That is not to say that the rest of you are not smart, and I'd be happy to have any of you in my attack force, if you can prove yourself worthy.

The leader of the smarts department would have to be Co-Ed/Op editor Alexis Pushkar. However, I'm too late, she's too busy running for Vice President alongside the next leader of the free world, Seth Koenig. Instead, I'll have to go with the next best thing, Alexis' editor in training, Rob Schulze. That's right, Rob would be able to use his incredible amount of knowledge, gained by reading wonderful books such as The Pledge, and implement it into destroying the deadly force that stands at 26 stories high. Of course with Rob on our side we're going to lose support of a certain musical force on campus, so we can pretty much count out their help.

Now, if you don't think I'm crazy enough as it is, I'll prove to you that I'm also paranoid. The library has spies. Sanjeev and I were walking to class last week, just talking about the shameful Oscar selections that were released that morning, and I slid all the way down the path by Orchard Hill, on the ice. That's right, folks... the library has other parts of campus working for it. Do you think it's a coincidence that you get stuck in the elevator in your tower? Do you think that there's not a superior force behind fact that you can't get a parking space in the purple lot? Of course there's something behind all of this.

Since the library is allowed to have secret forces, we can have them too. I plan to send people into the heart of the beast, disguised as "students" who are there to "study," but in reality, we will be taking constant inside hits on the library, designed to take it down from within. There's no one on the planet better to run my Special-Op force, than my main man, and partner in the music department, Mike Delano.

Now, much like every fight against a super-villain, the constant battering, and direct attacks will hurt the library, but they won't kill it. Only until I have left my barracks of 7th floor Dickinson, and decide to face the library head on (at this point we have already lost two members of our elite team. Thanks for your noble efforts, Rob and Rob) in a battle to the death. It will certainly be a hard fought struggle, and I personally can't wait to take the mother ship down. That's right, W.E.B. Dubois Library, we all know you started it, so bring it on. You ain't got nothin'!

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Ben Ahmed Web Developer Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gars Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlowsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Jostyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Merschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Respecting the Collegian

It's about respect.

The other day, I went into my class and some people were talking about various subjects, but specifically journalism. One person asked me a question, point blank, knowing full well that I work here.

"You'd surely admit that The Daily Collegian is more pro-administration than pro-student, wouldn't you?"

She asked me with the sort of attitude that she was helping me by explaining my situation down here in the Collegian caves – sort of like when someone's smoking and someone else helpfully tells them that, "smoking kills, y'know," as if the smoker didn't.

Sam Wilkinson

She asked me expecting to get agreement. She wanted me to nod and smile at her, cheerfully validating her point of view, which I didn't do because I don't agree on that small and trivial point. It just reminded me about this campus and its stupid mindset. It's so frustrating working down here when people decide that they should ask those questions. But that person is nothing more than a microcosm of the entire situation surrounding this newspaper.

Not a thing that we do down here is right for people. Not a thing we do is worthy of an ounce of respect. Not a thing we do is enough for various groups on campus.

Everybody seems to think that the Collegian is their right, their blessing, something that they have at their disposal should they need it, like an automobile or a paper towel.

I can't even count the number of times that somebody has called the office demanding that we cover an event immediately, despite the fact that we don't have any more reporters. I can't count the number of times that somebody has called the office insisting that we run their letter to the editor right away, the next day, despite the fact that we've planned differently. I can't count the number of times that our coverage "hasn't been acceptable" to whomever was involved.

It's as if our sole existence in the Campus Center Basement is simply to mouth all of the various statements that our readers feel we should.

And what do we get in return?

Is it the pleasure of a friendly phone call when we've done something well and done it right? Nope. We covered last semester's assaults "right" and got trashed on by the Chancellor and the SGA.

Is it the respect of journalism professors who don't single out our reporters and editors for criticism in their classes? Nope. Regularly reporters come down frightfully stating their disdain for professors who've decided that the Collegian is as good a whipping post as any for classwide criticism.

Is it the thanks of student groups who get free and helpful coverage of their events? Nope. We only get demands for more stories, more coverage, less criticism and more "free flattery."

Is it the students themselves? Nope. They seem to be good at explaining to the writers who work hard down here just how bad they are as journalists.

So what drives us down here, if it isn't the readership that expresses their extreme disdain with almost everything we do? Who knows? Who really knows?

All I do know is that everyday, starting at 9:00 a.m., students, with other responsibilities including classes, start rolling into the Collegian, maybe to sell advertisements or maybe to make advertisements, maybe to edit stories or maybe to write stories. Every night, at 2:00 a.m., when most students are sleeping, we lock the offices and head home knowing that the next day, hot and fresh, there will be a newspaper waiting for students, professors, administration and arts of the other people who so regularly decide that we are nothing more than a morning crossword puzzle, a class whipping post and an administrative complaint.

That we "can't get no respect" is depressing, soul crushing and emotionally painful after awhile. That we exist in people's eyes as nothing more than their own personal message board is irritating. That we're nothing more than a newspaper, which can never be "good" in anybody's eyes is perhaps the worst.

This campus will never realize just how much work goes into this newspaper, just how much we plunge into our work, just how many unpaid hours we work. This campus will never realize how much this newspaper means to all of the writers, editors, graphics and advertising staff. It's embarrassing that this campus is so unaware.

This campus will never realize that there is such a thing as respect and that respect is something that the Collegian has earned, whether it's given to us or not.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

Copywrong, ©2000

I've been going about things all wrong. Here I sit, troubling and toiling over this keyboard to entertain you with my thoughts about the world, hoping to someday make ludicrous amounts of money, and it's all in vain.

The real money out there is in law. And by this, I do not mean that I should be a lawyer. Oh no. I mean that I should copyright things and then sue people.

Case in point: Starbucks (you know, the big faceless coffee company that everybody hates, yet buys from anyway) owns that eye-capturing shade of green that they use on their cups and mugs. If anyone else serves java in kitchenware with that color green, those other people will end up bankrupt quicker than you can say "absurd."

Seth Koenig

Kraft, the macaroni and cheese company for cheese-and-macaroni, if you will), trademarked the word "real" in conjunction with cheese. From this point on, cheese cannot be referred to as "real" unless it's from Kraft, thus making all other cheeses "fake" in the eyes of the general public because, as we all well know, the general public isn't very bright.

Our old basketball coach, John Calipari went ahead and nailed down the rights to the catchy phrase "Refuse to Lose" giving him a nice sum of money every time the UMass hoops team sticks it on a T-shirt, and leaving all the other sports teams in the nation with less powerful slogans, such as "Prefer Not to Lose" and "Be Hard to Convince to Lose."

As a joke, Kourtney McLeod from the University's Communications department decided to trademark the phrase "Freedom of Expression" – beautifully ironic, yes?

The moral of the story so far is that anyone can snatch the rights to anything, and a killing can be subsequently made off of that thing's use.

In fact, the common word "" has been trademarked. If anybody uses the word "" at all, even in casual conversation, that person can be dragged to court and taken to the cleaners. In this column, for instance, I can't say "" because of the imminent legal action, which is unfortunate, because "" is a clean, popular and useful term. I would say that "" is my favorite word, but I won't, because any remote utterance of "" would not be tolerated by the powers that be.

I bet you wouldn't believe it but the next paragraph actually has a pending application for a copyright by a gentleman named Craig Smith, who lives in Sacramento, CA. I'm writing this column on Wednesday, Feb. 15, and the application should be decided on by this time on Sunday, meaning that when this column runs early in the week there might have to be dramatic changes made to keep the Collegian out of legal trouble.

But anyway, I'll go on to say...

There, I think I made my point perfectly. If you don't get it by now, you're hopeless.

The production manager here at the Collegian, Lisa Metcalf, and I have decided to trademark and patent the schwa™ (patent pending). To explain this situation for you, I will enlist the help of my lofty, pretentious use of the language.

First of all, the schwa™ is the most commonly used linguistic device in the world. In the dictionary, it is represented by an upside-down "e" in the phonetic spellings of words. Any sound that leaves the mouth that resembles "uh" is essentially a schwa™, for in the field of linguistics, English letters are considered obsolete because of their lack of universality. With this in mind, instead of an "e" or a "u" to represent the utterance "uh", linguists use the schwa™.

Schwas™ are used at the beginnings of words, in the middles of words and at the ends of words, as evidenced by the pronunciations of the words "uh-bove", "Mass-uh-chusetts" and "chief-tock-uh"

Now, the difference between a trademark and a patent, as phrased by the second edition of Patent, Copyright and Trademark, by Attorney Stephen Elias, is that a trademark is used for "a distinctive word, phrase, logo, graphic, symbol or other device" while a patent is "a document issued by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office that grants a monopoly for a limited period of time on the use and development of an invention..." In short, Lisa and I need to both trademark and patent the schwa™. The symbol's likeness needs to trademarked, while the sound that the symbol represents needs to be patented.

So, if you have a problem with what I sa and I plan to do, make sure you say so without using the schwa™, or we will officially sue your pants off. -Webster, this goes for you and your dictionaries, too.

Well, I have subpoenas to hand out, so I'm going to get moving. Screw journalism, I have money to make.

Seth Koenig™ is a Collegian columnist

Your opinion

Consequences of cuts

To the editor:

My name is Marni Thompson and I am a senior in the Family and Community Services major in the department of Consumer Studies here at the University. Recently, Dr. Mammen told us that the Consumer Studies department is going to be cut from the budget of UMass. Along with that cut is the total elimination of the two majors Apparel Marketing, and my major, Family and Community Services.

Fifty-two years ago, in 1948, my grandmother (then, Barbara Walkowitch) graduated from this University with a Bachelor of Science in Home Economics. Over the last fifty years, Home Economics have evolved into what we know today as the Consumer Studies Department. My grandmother's picture is hanging on the wall of Skinner Hall, and for the last three years, I have walked by and seen my picture hanging on the wall near hers. For three years I have walked down the halls my grandmother walked down. I have sat in the rooms and took notes from the black board that my grandmother did. For me, this budget cut is much more than just a budget cut. It is a little piece of my heritage and family history being erased from existence.

I believe it is very important for so many reasons to keep this department alive. The achievements made by the students of this department provide the greater community with an abundance of knowledge, in the fashion industry, the business world, family and interpersonal systems or economics. It would be a great loss to our society to cut these kinds of programs from a state-funded university. I have to say that I am really appalled at the way we were notified – the abruptness of it and the nonchalant attitude of the administration towards the students of this department in regard to their concerns.

I know that there are "reasons" for cutting our department, and I understand that "these things just happen," but, it's not only insulting to see how our concerns are being treated, but infuriating to know that to you, we are just students here. We have no names, faces or personalities to the administration. I am really beginning to see how decisions are made here at UMass and what little regard the administration and higher ups actually have for the students here. It's all about money. That is such a shame. I wanted to be proud of my school... now I am just ashamed.

Mine is just one story of many that may give this simple little budget cut an element of truth and reality. I am writing to you, asking you to really think about what this means for all these students. Thank you very much for your time and I hope that I conveyed to you just how important this department is to all of us. It isn't just about academics. It is also about being proud of where you come from and knowing you are carrying on traditions.

Marni Thompson
Class of 2000

Now I'm all grow'd up

Just a few short days ago I turned 20. I am excited about the prospect of being 20, but I am downright frightened about not being a teenager anymore. It seems like there is an increased amount of responsibility when a person turns 20. I didn't think that would be a problem for me, after all I am a mature college-going dude, but I learned a lesson a few weeks ago that shocked the hell out of me.

See, I have this friend. I know a lot of stories start that way, but damn it, I really do. Not only is he my friend, he is one of the craziest guys I know. Scratch that... he is the craziest guy I know. He is the kind of guy who, if you dared him to, would throw himself off the Empire State building just to prove that he would do it. But now, I'm not so sure that he would do that. Not that it's a bad thing, but it's a pretty big shocker to see a guy who used to crush things on his head for sport bake cookies for you. I realize that we all have to grow up and start acting like adults, but I didn't know it could happen in a few short weeks.

Brian Lohnes

Admittedly, I hadn't talked to him for a while before I went to see him, but I figured that he was the same old crazy dude. I was also expecting his apartment to be a beer-can-littered, young bachelor mess. What I found was a sparklingly clean, potpourri smelling, candle burning, quaint and homey place. I met his girlfriend and sat down to talk, then the big finale: a little girl comes running out. After several confused seconds he told me that it wasn't his, and that his girlfriend had the child with someone else.

Before we go into this in any more depth, let's take a quick look back on some of the highlights I had with my crazy friend. This guy turned wrecking cars into a sport. He had trucks, SUVs, small cars, big cars and everything in between. We did a lot of stupid, teenage guy, idiot stuff together. He headed off to trade school and I headed off to UMass. Somewhere along the line he grew up real real fast. The nutty guy had become the responsible adult almost as if he were on some kind of crazy Sally Struthers mail order program or something. I always thought of myself as the more responsible and sane member of our duo – not any more. He has bills to pay, a child to look after, rent, food, cooking and all sorts of other worries that I have rarely, if ever, concerned myself with here on campus.

So now as I turn twenty and I look at where I am and where I have to go, I realized a few things that night. First off, I am nowhere near as mature as I had been giving myself credit for. Showing up to classes on time a few times a week is not mature. Showing up to class and going to a full time job every day of the week is. Going out and getting hammered out of your gourd every Friday and Saturday night isn't maturity, taking a three-year old girl out for an ice cream and watching Disney videos is. I do not think that I am totally hapless in this world, but I never really stopped to realize the bubble that we exist in here at school. If life had a pause button, it would have the word "College" written on it. We are able to do things here that just don't happen anywhere else in life. We can study in foreign places, study things simply because they interest us, and meet hundreds of people that may or may not share our heritage, interests and opinions.

And I get me wrong, I love being here. I am not trying to put down anyone, but I just never quite realized that the real world is so much different from what we have here. When I was little, I always used to think about turning twenty in the year 2000. Now that I am here, I don't quite remember what the big deal was.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian columnist.

Feel like writing for Sports, News, or a Diversity page? Then come to the Campus Center Basement and join the Collegian!

Just a few things I'd like to discuss with you

There are some issues that have been bothering me since I first arrived here. With these issues are some misconceptions that I would very much like to clear up. They are all rather sexual. The first issue has to do with GLBT, the second, rape, the third, how a person responds to sexual assault, and the fourth and last, a popular phrase used by some gutless guys.

There is a very popular misconception about the GLBT (gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender) community. This misconception is that everyone who is not straight is promiscuous. My main problem with this misconception is that mainly people who are homophobic bring it about. I've spoken to many straight people who would never want someone who is not straight to touch them because of their so-called "promiscuous" life. In reality, many straight people are much more promiscuous than those in the gay community.

I've noticed that gays are much pickier as to who their partner is, than straight people. Maybe because many think that everyone else is straight. Maybe because the people in the gay community have less to choose from, and so they have to be a lot pickier. I honestly don't know. What I do know is that many straight people on this campus have had a lot of partners. Many of the people that I know who are gay or lesbian have had less than five. Some have only had one; some none. There is nothing promiscuous about their activity. What continues to disgust me is that this comparison is never taken into consideration before people make a broad generalization such as "all GLBT's are promiscuous". It's through their own homophobia and ignorance that they make this ridiculous statement.

The second issue that I feel I have to clear up is on the subject of rape. Many people have the same question: what is the legal definition of rape? According to the Massachusetts General Laws, Chapter 265 Section 22, a rapist is defined as "whoever has sexual intercourse or unnatural sexual intercourse with a person and compels such person to submit by force and against his or her will." The police officer that I spoke to about this informed me that there are many different subsections of rape. He went over many of them with me. The majority of it depends on the evidence, witnesses and the credibility of the witnesses. But when it comes to rape, one very important thing to remember, for women and men alike, is to report it, give your statement, and complete the rape kit as soon as possible. Sorry to break it to some of you out there, but now you have no excuse to rape. All of the faculty, staff, undergraduate students, and graduate students know the legal definition now. There is no excuse.

Emily Vacanti

That brings me to another point, still on the rather serious side. About a year ago, I was reading an article in some teen magazine (my mother has not cancelled the subscription yet. Why? I do not know.). Many young girls (ages 13-17) honestly think that if two people have been dating for a minimum of six months, the male can legally force sex on the female. Now in the article it said that this is textbook rape. I agree with that. What I don't agree with is that it is being planted in girls' heads that non-consensual sex is okay. This pisses me off beyond belief. There is no time limit on sex. Hell, a couple can wait a decade or two if they so desire.

The last issue that needs to be thought about is how a person acts after having been sexually assaulted. Not many people understand that everyone acts differently after assault. My experience has been that a person will become completely closed up and wants no attention, sexual or other, or that a person becomes promiscuous. How the person reacts is their own damn business, and no one has any right to judge them. If a person is lucky enough to survive sexual assault, whatever road they choose to recover is the right road for them. Eventually, people do recover. I know many people who became promiscuous after assault, in an attempt to feel loved. Many others are too afraid to let anyone near them. They do not know how to react.

The last issue that has been pissing me off since I first heard it is a line that someone I dated used on me. This young man, who has graduated, was hoping that I would turn into his girlfriend. So one night, to speed the process, he used the line (in not so many words) "Put out or get out!" This was on our second date. It pissed me off. I said "good-bye" and he started crying, asking me to wait and talk it out with him. To make a long story short, we didn't have a third date. To all the guys out there who think that this will ensure you (1) getting laid, and (2) getting a girlfriend, sorry to have to break it to you, but you become much less desirable. "Put out or get out" is a line that will almost ensure you getting dumped.

I brought these issues to the surface because they have been ignored as long as I have known about them. With the number of rapes that have been occurring on campus I feel that people need to know what is and what isn't. In addition, people need to know how to react to their friends' lashing out after surviving rape. People also need to know the truth about the GLBT community, and that anyone can be monogamous or promiscuous. Last, the "line" is just pathetic. Please don't use it. I wanted to laugh at him, but there's a time and a place for that.

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian columnist.

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all That's going on in the Pioneer Valley

Willis, Perry carry lively mob comedy

Slapstick film entertains

By Wes Wrightson
Collegian Staff

Directed by Jonathan Lynn with Bruce Willis, Matthew Perry and Amanda Peet
Playing at Mountain Farms Theaters

Bruce Willis will bring in the audience and the big-bucks, but it is Matthew Perry who will garner the most attention and praise in his turn as a paranoid neighbor in The Whole Nine Yards. Willis makes a cool turn from this year's surprise hit, The Sixth Sense, the financial and critical flop, The Story of Us, and the bellyflop of a film Breakfast of Champions. He is at the top of his game portraying a hit man, Jimmy "The Tulip" Tudeski. Willis plays this character like he is mocking the very same type of character he played in The Jackal – the ultra cool hit man who can outdo, out-think and out maneuver any gangster. Matthew Perry plays much the same character as he does on TV's "Friends" – a neurotic, self-deprecating, yet sarcastically funny person.

Perry plays Nicholas "Oz" Oretansky, a dentist who can't seem to get a break with his wife, played by Rosanna Arquette (whose French accent blows). When Tudeski moves into the comfortable Montreal neighborhood Perry inhabits, all hell breaks loose. Perry suspects Tudeski from the first go. The early scenes where Tudeski first moves in and he Oz bond, there many Chandler Bing-esque moments revealing Oz's nervousness at being around a contract killer. Tudeski takes a liking to Oz, but warns him, "It's not important that I've killed 17 people, it's important how well I get along with the ones who are still alive."

Meanwhile, Perry's wife plots to have Perry "hit" by none other than Tudeski himself. This all happens when Oz goes to Chicago to tell another mob boss, Ianni (played by Kevin Pollack whose character has problems pronouncing his "vs" and "ws" as he is Hungarian), that he knows the whereabouts of Tudeski. Oz believes that he will collect a finder's fee for revealing Tudeski to people that want him dead. While in Chicago Oz also meets Tudeski's estranged wife (played by Species's Naiasha Henstridge), and falls madly in love with her.

Oz gets back to Montreal and realizes that Tudeski won't take the contract Oz's wife has on him, and now has to face the reality that the Hungarian mob boss is on his way to Montreal to kill Tudeski and, possibly, him. I won't go and spoil and of the other plot twist, of which there are many. Michael Clark Duncan (The Green Mile and Armageddon) does the most he can as a hit man working for the Hungarian mob, but with ties to Tudeski. Amanda Peet does her best as Oz's denial assistant who has a penchant for becoming a contract killer herself. She is wickedly dizzy and charming all at once.

Anyway, the film surprises you when you least expect it, and Perry does a good job as someone who is willing to do anything for love, even if it kills him in the process. The chemistry between Willis and Perry is genuine, and you can tell that Tudeski's character really likes Oz (even though a certain circumstance involving Oz and Tudeski's wife happens). See this film, I recommend it. For $7.50 and two hours of your time, you will not be disappointed. B

Michael Clarke Duncan does Hungarian in Bruce Willis' The Whole Nine Yards

■ Smith

continued from page 1

from it. A longtime fan of the genre, Smith has written for Daredevil, and is currently working on both The Green Arrow and a one-shot comic book detailing the history of Loki and Bartleby, the two angelic protagonists of Dogma.

And speaking of comic book movies, Smith's opinion of the new X-Men feature film was simply, "It's Halle Berry in a bad way."

Following this was a lengthy and hilarious exchange with the audience about unspeakably profane sex acts, a reminder that regardless of how articulate and thoughtful Smith might be, he's still a nutty guy who loves a good, immature laugh.

What will Smith's next movie be? "I know what it is. I just don't want to say it." is all he would divulge.

The evening concluded with a screening of the second episode of the new animated adaptation of Smith's first movie, Clerks, set to premiere this May (a movie that, Smith acknowledges, means that the television company has little faith in its success), and is planning to discontinue work on the series soon after its debute. If the audience's laughter is any indication, however there may be hope for the series yet.

Kevin Smith addressed, X-Men, going to church, his work on the new Superman film, and of course Silent Bob during his nearly three hour talk last night

Bostonian native's debut novel proves to be trashy, trash

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

Ambitious.

There is simply no other word which can so aptly be applied to The Pledge, the debut novel of Bostonian Rob Kean. End to end, chapter to miserable chapter, this book is simply an elaborate suffering machine for whichever poor fool happens to read it.

At fictional Simsbury College in Maine (think Amherst College with really hot babes) something has gone wrong. A freshman pledge is found dead at the Sigma Delta Phi fraternity house, having been beaten, forcefully intoxicated, and scrawled on with Magic Marker previous to falling off a second story balcony. This isn't just any fraternity, however: this is Sigma, the most powerful frat at Simsbury, full of rich white guys who will stop at nothing to protect Sigma, and instantly a cover-up is launched.

It falls to Mark Jessy, a proud native American from Cape Cod who happens to be the best lacrosse player in the country and a former Sigma himself, and Shawn Jakes, his girlfriend, the most beautiful girl at Simsbury and captain of the ski team, to foil the cover-up and secure the truth brought to light, regardless of the consequences.

As you can probably tell by that bare-bones plot description, this book is trashy. You could tell that

Turn to NOVEL, page 8

Do you want to be a part of the biggest student run business on campus?

Are you interested in a career in Human Resources?

Collegian is accepting applications for the position of Human Resource Coordinator.

Applications can be picked up at the Collegian in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Interested applicants should possess excellent communication and computer skills.

Any questions can be directed to christine Carroll at 545-3500 or hrcollegian@yahoo.com.

During Engineers Week, You Can

CRASH A PLANE

No pilots licence needed

All you need is the given talent to fold paper in the Paper Airplane Contest Wednesday, Feb. 23 at noon. PRIZES! Open to all - make your plane when you arrive, and fly your plane off the balcony of the Fine Arts Center Auditorium.

You don't have to be an engineer to compete. Other events this week will include:

TOMORROW! 11 am Faculty Research Showcase, Marcus Hall.

TOMORROW! 5:30 pm Discussion, "Who wants to be a Millionaire? Investment Strategies for people Starting out," Gunness Engineering Student Center, Marcus Hall. Fidelity Investment vice president gives the hot tips.

Friday 11 am - 2 pm Mini vehicle desighn and accuracy contest, Gunness Engineering Student center, Marcus Hall. PRIZES! Contact Matt Padkowka at podkowka@student.umass.edu or dsturgis@ecs.umass.edu for more details.

Friday 3:30 pm Showcase: Design projects to Aid the Disabled, 19 Gunness lab.

Sposored by GE plastics, Precision Tectonix, J & E Precision Tool, EMC2 Corporation, i2 Technologies, Eric Thorgerson, Lee Pearlmutter, and JOEL USA.

Roots bring originality to hip-hop scene, Smith

The Roots w/ Run DMC
John M. Greene Auditorium
February 18, 2000

By David Katzoff
Collegian Staff

One of the detriments to hip-hop's hegemonic assimilation is that its shows have manifested into a symbol of new age hipness. The overtly baggy clothes, the awkwardly deliberate street slang, the elementary rap axiom, "everybody throw your hands in the air/ and wave em' like you just don't care," become staples of a modern rap crowd. So goes the packed house at Smith College on Friday night.

Since The Roots are a band that transcends conventional live rap, they naturally attract a musically diverse following. Combining ferocious lyricism with soulful musicianship and skittish verbal gymnastics, they bring to the stage both a sonic circus and a venerable representation of hip-hop culture. In the Pioneer Valley, a land socially identified by anti-pop entertainment, this sort of credible, urban ethnocentricity is a particularly magnetizing venue. So even with a mid-February blizzard raging outside, thousands of patrons flocked into an uncomfortable, vaudeville-style auditorium to share a piece of the organic energy.

Run DMC led off the program showing a remarkable amount of youthful spunk for such seasoned veterans. Yet, despite their valiant efforts, the heralded "old-school" trio was received as if they were trying to motivate a pep rally for the Origami Club. Clearly, the encompassing spectators had boarded hip-hop's Titanic sometime after Run DMC faded from the helm, giving the room an unintentionally lackluster vibe. To no surprise, the highlight of their performance came with the rendition of rap's first crossover hit, "Walk This Way," which originally featured Aerosmith and therefore presented the sing-along familiarity. (It would be an interesting to contrast the reactions to the same set if performed in the savvy streets of Hollis, Queens.) In any case, anticipation was brimming for the arrival of The Roots.

After a seemingly endless intermission (where was DJ Dini for the halftime show?), Philly's 5th Dynasty finally greeted its Northhampton entourage with vigor. Excitement captivated the crowd and a sea of hands furiously uplifted with the formidable commands of Black Thought. Although many of the song sequences were patterned after the Roots Come Alive LP, they instrumentally revamped several backdrops with a versatile freshness. For instance, on "Concerto of a Desperado," ?questlove (drums), Kamal (keys) and Lennard Hubbard (bass) incorporated Dre's "The Watcher" rhythm as a foundation. Although virtually no one knew the difference, the orchestrated remix was a thoughtfully conceived experiment.

However, unlike their outstanding live CD, the sound mix and physical acoustics were horrendous and thus the overall output was blemished by distortion. Another unredeemable aspect of the concert was the lack of a female vocalist. While the Roots musk is often under-lit by subtle soprano crooning (from the lazzylanastees, Erykah Badu, Jill Scott), the absence of such vocalism was conspicuous. Additionally, despite Scratch's beat-boxing brilliance, Rahzel, who is busy devastating mics on his own tour, was also noticeably missing from the crew.

To The Roots credit, they truly performed as if the platform of John M. Greene was a basement jam session with an audience of their chosen comrades. Relishing the theatrical opportunities of "schooling" their onlookers, they treated us to lengthy, haphazard encore that seemed equally enjoyable (and mockingly amusing) for them. And when it was all over, an exhausted crowd exited into the starry night with both sweaty memories and a hipster's bravado. Kudos, but some of us took Rap Concert 101 many moons ago.

Blais lights up local music

Coalescent Blais is looking to take the local music scene by storm, fresh off their Fire and Water performance

By Julie Dana
Collegian Correspondent

Easing into the local music scene can be difficult and at times disappointing. It requires time, skill, and most of all the drive and determination to make yourself and your music known. Once you've formed a band, found a name, and practiced quite a bit it can feel as though you've struck a brick wall. Where does a young music group go from here?

I checked out the local scene this past Sunday night at North Hampton's Fire and Water Café. The evening featured a cabaret act that included the band Coalescent Blais and solo act J.P. Evans. The two performed at an open mike night a couple of weeks prior and were asked by the owner to return for the cabaret. The open mike is generally held on Monday nights from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. and is open to all who show up and sign in.

The comfortable atmosphere of Fire and Water welcomes all from young children to college students to older adults who are in search of a night of acoustic relaxation and harmony. New friends meet and old are reunited as the pleasant melodies of the local music scene entices their eardrums. It was best said by UMass senior Darren Green who was sitting a few seats away, "It's very Nelly."

Coalescent Blais began the evening off with a set list of three original songs. The powerful vocals of Leo Blais soared harmoniously as the patrons of the small café nodded appreciatively tapping to the beat. Their unique sound left me with a vision of Ben Harper meeting Radiohead and having the two decide to jam. They opened with Sincerity, then followed up with Permanent Fashion and Higher Love. As the band prepared to leave the stage, they were asked to continue playing due to the absence of the third performer. They performed two more original songs, Midnight Moon and The Story.

Coalescent Blais is comprised of Leo Blais on lead vocals, rhythm and guitar, Nathan Blais on the djembe drum and back up vocals, Tim Rehberg on the bass, and Brian Hunt on lead guitar and back up vocals. I was pleasantly surprised by this young, talented band. The fusion between the group was obvious as they lived up to their name for the music truly coalesced. It was apparent that they loved what they were doing and that hours upon hours of practice had been invested.

The following performer, J.P. Evans, took the stage with his acoustic guitar, harmonica, kazoo, and tapping foot. His style was a combination of blues and country. At moments the crowd clapped along, but it wasn't until he brought out the kazoo that he really appealed to the younger audience who appeared to be present mainly to see Coalescent Blais. I turned to the enthusiastic girl sitting to my left, UMass sophomore Katherine Blais, who replied when questioned about what she thought of Evans performance, "That kicks ass! I love kazoos!"

The members of Coalescent Blais aren't quite sure where their next step will fall or what the future holds. They have already managed to overcome the first obstacle, finding a gig and bringing their own sound to the ears of the public. This is where the fine division exists – what separates a few kids jamming on some instruments and playing some covers from the true definition of a band. Yet this is just the beginning of the road. What lies ahead is endless, home to numerous possibilities. The union between a group of talented musicians with an undying love for their art is bridged to the audience who await every new emotion that stems from the music with results that have the power to impact the masses.

■ novel

continued from page 6

just by reading the flap on the inside – this is one of those books where everybody is good-looking and gets laid a lot, jocks are the only people worth mentioning, geeks get beat up, and the person who is the most popular always wins. In other words, the setting, the plot and all the characters are totally pre-fabricated cliches and stereotypes.

This isn't necessarily bad, as trashy books like this have the ability to be loads of fun, a titillating way to waste a couple hours when you're bored. The Pledge however, is a trashy book that is trash. For one thing, it's five hundred pages long – was too lengthy for this type of novel, dragging on any killing any cheap thrills which might have been gained. The characters, by and large, aren't any fun, you hate the bad characters and you end up hating all the good characters, too, just because they're so damn annoying, and they don't ever shut up and stop sermonizing, even when they're jumping into dorm room beds together.

The Pledge also tries desperately to be shocking, but ends up just being gross and wearisome. What Kean doesn't seem to realize is that murder, rape, suicide, etc., aren't shocking – crime. When they come regularly every fifty pages or so it simply becomes disgusting and off putting. The reader is allowed to suffer guilty for reading pulp crap – but it's supposed to be a guilty pleasure, not just a dirty, slimy feeling.

Is there anything positive that can be said about The Pledge? Well, the main evil bad guy (who's name happens to be overbearing) Honet lives in Wellesley, which I always knew was a haven for villains. Also, it is very obvious that Kean is a very talented writer who has the ability to show, when he stops the bullcrap and just writes with things like setting and physical descriptions of the Simsbury campus (if as very real and three dimensional. If he had concentrated more with that instead of the contrived plot and horrible, horrible dialogue The Pledge might have gone somewhere.

However, Kean did not take that route, and in the end has written an atrocious novel that I would not recommend to my worst enemy. Do yourself a favor, stay the hell away from The Pledge. F

Come Visit us on the web!
www.dailycollegian.com

FEATURED ITEM THIS WEEK

THIS WEEK
$49.99

COTTON EXCHANGE
UMASS HOODED SWEATSHIRT

COLLEGIATE ... niversity

University of Massachusetts Boston

Vietnam Today

July 16 – August 10, 2000

This travel/study program based at Hue University in Vietnam, immerses participants in the culture, history, and politics of this fascinating country. Three undergraduate credits.

To learn more, contact:
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Continuing Education
100 Morrissey Blvd.
Boston MA 02125-3393

UMASS BOSTON

617.287.7913
www.conted.umb.edu

Alternative Spring Break
5 days in the Ozarks MO
Meditation, Yoga, Music & Dance. Self discovery. Lots of Fun
Vegetarian Food
$195 pre registration rideshares
www.nu-students.cx
1-800-870 5348

Council Travel
Always in Student Travel Leader for over 50 years
The journey is the reward...
Give your family & friends the gift of travel
Gift certificates, passport photos, airport transfers, tours, language programs, work exchanges, ISIC backpacks, rolling duffels, & all sorts of gear, guidebooks, railpasses, tickets, accommodations and more.
44 Main Street
Amherst MA
413-256-1261
www.counciltravel.com

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE

Wednesday Night is LADIES NIGHT

FEATURING FREE PRIZES AND GIFT CERTIFICATES FROM ZANNA, STYLES BY DEBORAH,
ULTIMATE FITNESS, OASIS BODY WRAPS, AESTHETICS SKIN AND BODY CARE,
and LA CUCINA DI PINOCCHIO
ALSO FREE WEEKEND NO COVER PASS TO ALL LADIES
AND AS USUAL ALL THE JAMZ SPUN BY DJ FOOZ

63 NORTH PLEASANT STREET 259-1600

COURTESY PARK CONNER

You're less than half my age?

Katie Holmes and Michael Douglas will star in the social comedy, Wonder Boys set to hit theaters Friday

Frankenheimer returns to silver screen

By Chris Kaltenbach
The Baltimore Sun

John Frankenheimer is a Class-A director with a 40-plus-year career, four Emmys and a handful of classic motion pictures on his resume. But there was a time when he had lost his confidence.

"The phone wasn't ringing. I was begging off on a lot of stuff," the 70-year-old Frankenheimer says, reflecting on a slack period that began in the late '80s and stretched into the early '90s. "I thought that they had written me off."

Events would prove, however, that Frankenheimer had - and doubtless has - plenty of directing left in him. This week, his latest, "Reindeer Games," opens in theaters throughout the United States.

The first result of a multipicture deal Frankenheimer recently agreed to with Miramax films, "Games" stars Ben Affleck as an ex-con determined to go straight and Charlize Theron as the sweet young thing who makes that awfully difficult. A labyrinthine tale of desperation and deception, it's the sort of film Frankenheimer long ago mastered.

The fact that it stars two of Hollywood's hottest young actors, and is being released by Hollywood's most ambitious studio, confirms that Frankenheimer is still very much a player.

Ten years ago, he wasn't so sure. Three straight subpar films in three straight years (1989-1991), doing mediocre box office can do that to a man.

"I mean, Year of the Gun' could have been better," Frankenheimer acknowledges. "I should have not cast Andrew McCarthy. The Fourth Wall' was a good movie, but circumstances turned a lot of people against it: the (Berlin) Wall came down in the middle of it, and here was a movie about the West German-Czechoslovakian border, and suddenly before we even shoot, we're doing a historical movie. And there was the dreadful experience of working with Don Johnson on 'Dead-Bang.'

"There had been a series of circumstances where things just had not gone well for me, and I thought, maybe you are done, maybe they're right about this."

Frankenheimer can afford this bit of critical introspection. Events of the past six years have proven just how wrong "they" were.

After four years of relative inactivity, Frankenheimer signed on to direct a film for HBO in 1994. The result was "Against the Wall," with Kyle MacLachlan as a horrified young prison guard watching the Attica riots unfold in front of him. Given total control over the production, a luxury he hadn't been afforded since his Hollywood career peaked in the mid-1960s, Frankenheimer found rejuvenation.

"The first day of the cable films, I knew I was back," Frankenheimer says. "I felt great about myself."

With good reason. "Against the Wall" won Frankenheimer his first Emmy, it was quickly followed by Emmy-winners "The Burning Season," also for HBO, and "Andersonville" and "George Wallace," two films for TNT.

And while the theatrical film "The Island of Dr. Moreau" (1996) proved an out-of-control mess, with Val Kilmer and Marlon Brando shamelessly trying to out-weird each other, 1998's "Ronin," with Robert De Niro as an ex-CIA operative roaming the south of France, proved vintage Frankenheimer, full of fast cars, crackling suspense and so many twists and turns that moviegoers had to race to keep up.

Tengo just doesn't have enough to meet high expectations

By Mark T.R. Donohue
Daily Californian (U. California-Berkeley)

(U-WIRE) BERKELEY, Calif. — Sometimes pretty good is not enough. Case in point: Yo La Tengo's new record. It's a question of expectations. Yo La Tengo's name is derived from the cry of a Mets outfielder and their record press materials have featured a ballpark motif, so I will use a baseball metaphor to further explain.

Yo La Tengo - drummer/singer Georgia Hubley, guitarist/organist/singer Ira Kaplan, and bassist/singer James McNew — are the indie rock equivalent of a .281 batter. You count on them to stop our slumps, to give the home crowd cold innings when the bullpen's exhausted and to go out there and set you that all-important first-game playoff win. As any baseball fan worth his salt knows, a good #1 starter has a full repertoire of stuff they can surprise the hitter with. The Pedro Martinezes and Greg Maddukes can get left-handers and right-handers alike out. They have good breaking stuff and good straight stuff, and they know how to mix it up. They can force a groundball for an inning-ending double play or strike out a slugger with the bases loaded.

On Electr-O-Pura and especially I Can Hear The Heart Beating As One, Yo La Tengo were #1 starters. As McNew emerged as the third contributor the band had been looking for since Dave Schramm left in 1986, Yo La Tengo moved into a new period in its career, a time of supreme confidence and seemingly endless possibilities. Bossa nova, dreampop, pedal-steel country, sampledelic freak-rock. White Light/White Heat guitar clang. Antita Bryant covers — YLT was firing on all cylinders. Their curve was popping, and they were really helping the Matador ball team while the egotistical superstars (Pavement), flashy speed demons (Jon Spencer Blues Explosion), and Japanese imports (Guitar Wolf) performed erratically. With the loss of Silkworm and Liz Phair to free agency, Matador skipper Chris Lombardi needs Yo La to go out there and have a 20-win season now more than ever.

And damned if they haven't lost their fastball. And Then Nothing Turned Itself Inside Out is a very pretty, very considered album of slow, organ-supported mood crawls. And nothing else. There are no rock songs, no folkie indulgences, no Burt Bacharach samples, and no Kevin Shields-whammy-guitar workouts. It's not bad at all. Kaplan's "Our Way To Fall," a how-'bout-those-times-gone-by mumble that sounds ported straight from New Wave Hot Dogs, is touching; McNew and Kaplan's exchanged "ba da bas" on the Hubley-led "You Can Have It All" are catchy; and the bizarrely titled "Let's Save Tony Orlando's House" would have been one of the better songs on Heart.

Problem is, none of these songs are tracks from Heart, or Pura, or Painful, they're songs from And Then Nothing Turned Itself Inside Out, and the drum machine clinks and six-minute two-note basslines pile up here faster than a tire surgery at Kerry Wood heated. Closer "Night Falls On Hoboken," a 17-minute clunker of an epic pales in comparison to even the last record's "Spec Bebop," which at least had some feedback to liven things up.

The entire record is composed of "Big Day Coming" reworkings, with nary a "Sugarcube" or "Tom Courtenay" to liven things up.

Yo La Tengo seem to be aiming here for a focused, linear sort of single-statement album that they've never really attempted before (with the partial exception of the brilliantly hung up Painful). And Then Nothing Turned Itself Inside Out is an attempt at large-scale slow-burn spookiness that bands like Giant Sand and Lambchop do much, much better. Yo La lacks a dramatic figure to tie a collection of songs like this together; their strength has always been in their shiftiness, their restlessness, and their clear fan's joy in trying on every hat they ever wanted to wear as young aficionados of rock music.

Hubley's wispy voice works terrifically against guitar wash (see "Blue Line Swinger," "From A Motel 8") and sporadically as an actual song focus ("Shadows"). She's given the bulk of the singing duties here, but seems to be more interested in working on her infuriatingly unvarying drum patterns. Ira Kaplan, a Lou Reed with all of the pretensions removed, gives the album its only hint of charisma on "Our Way To Fall" and then skulks off, leaving keys taped down on the band's Ace Tone new wave organ as he realphabetizes his record collection.

McNew, who's revealed a gift for pop simplicity that neither of the band's founding members seems to possess with his side project Dump, seems along for the ride here, even though his "Stockholm Syndrome" was one of the most widely hailed highlights of the last record.

Say HeLLO. Explore an OpEN Dutch up with friends. Mix & tune with FREE e-mail, online photo albums, meSSage Boards, instant meSSaging, personal web CaMs and more at CollegeClub.com. Or SWEDish to say? LOG on!

CollegeClub.com it's all U.™

No porcupines, living, dead or otherwise, were harmed in the creation of this advertisement.

©2000 CollegeClub.com

Pretty young Girls doing striptease

By James Endrst
The Hartford Courant

HOLLYWOOD - I went down to the local newsstand recently feeling sleazy looking for a copy of Gear magazine, one of a new generation of men's magazines - publications less explicit than Penthouse but often no less squalid in their exploitative intent.

The most recent issue, which no doubt has caused a pleasing fervor for Gear publisher Bob Guccione Jr., features 17-year-old Jessica Biel, star of The WB's top-rated, family friendly "7th Heaven."

Apparently frustrated by the G-rated nature of her role as Mary Camden, one of several very good children with a reverend dad, Biel decided to shed her image along with her clothes by posing mostly nude for Gear, hiding what Sharon Stone revealed of herself in "Basic Instinct," but little else.

"Sold out," said the vendor. "It's a great issue, man," he added with a satisfied smile and too much enthusiasm.

"Hey," I said, in a tone you might expect of a man with a teen-age daughter. "The girl is only 17 years old, you know."

Shrugging, he came back with the most basic of rejoinders. "Yeah," he said, "but. ..." He cupped his hands in front of him, finishing his thought with the internationally recognized sign for large breasts.

Welcome to Hollywood.

It's nothing new. It's just getting worse because it's becoming more commonplace. Check out the cover story in the Feb. 14 issue of People magazine, which asks whether just-turned-18 pop star Britney Spears is "Too Sexy Too Soon."

Melissa Joan Hart, who is 23 but stars in ABC's kid-oriented "Sabrina, the Teenage Witch," raised eyebrows and the ire of the show's producers when she struck revealing poses last fall for Maxim, another of the more recent batch of men's magazines.

Biel's goal was, in part, to get fired from The WB series. In the accompanying Gear interview, she says "7th Heaven" has kept her from being considered for sexier roles like the underage ingenue played by Thora Birch in "American Beauty."

In just a week's time, it looks like Biel has accomplished at least part of her mission, namely to infuriate her boss and win herself a hot part in a new movie.

Last week, "7th Heaven" executive producer Aaron Spelling filed a $100 million lawsuit against Gear (but not Biel), alleging that the magazine defamed him by alleging that he had kept Biel from doing movies and by putting his name as a joke on the Gear masthead, listing him as senior editor, which could leave the impression that he was instrumental in Biel's exploitation.

Hirsch

continued from page 12

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Women's track coach Julie LaFreniere directed strong UMass performances from veterans like Sally Hirsch.

jumpers last Saturday. Abby Rubino accompanied her in the long jump and took the third place spot for the event.

Other athletes in field events also brought points to the team. Rhianna DaCruz placed second in the pole vault, bringing eight points to UMass. Throwers Giselle Nicholas and Shannon Hamilton placed sixth and eighth, respectfully, in the weight toss, adding four points to the UMass total. In the shot put event, Carole LaPlant placed fifth, earning four points.

This was an outstanding performance, but what cannot be seen from the stats is how this team came out on top despite the fact that it was riddled with injury.

Melissa Ward said last week that she was concerned that more than a few of the team's usual scorers were going to have to sit due to injury.

"I feel confident in the attitudes of the other girls and believe they will step up," she said.

It would appear that such confidence was in the correct place. Rhode Island placed first in the meet in front of Temple. The UMass women found themselves rounding out the top five in a very respected position. The team will spring back into action at the New England Championships in Gorham, Maine this weekend.

finish

continued from page 12

O'Brien attributes the poise of the rookies to the fact that they have an estimable group of veterans to emulate. The coach points to the upperclassmen's mentoring of the newcomers as the squad's formula for success.

"[The veterans] basically show the young kids how things are done," noted O'Brien. "They set expectations, they answer questions, they lend support, and they even cover little nickel-and-dime things like where the shower room is on the opposing campus."

O'Brien emphasizes internal team leadership from top performers such as Moreno and Zulko as a major source of motivation for the squad. While the coaching staff can provide some guidance, O'Brien feels that it is the leadership of the high scorers and seasoned veterans that truly guide a team to success.

The resulting chemistry has allowed the Minutemen to savour the fruits of a true team effort. Of the 32 Minutemen that made the trip, 27 scored points and 23 turned in season-high performances.

Although two more championship meets await the squad, the coaching staff can now rest a little easier. This team is not an illusion; the history books will vouch for that.

Griffey takes center stage as hopes will be high for young Reds team

By Ross Newhan
The Los Angeles Times

SARASOTA, Fla. - The only thing missing on this banner Monday for the Cincinnati Reds, outfielder Dmitri Young noted, were the lions, tigers and elephants. It was as if Ringling Bros. had relocated its winter home to the Cincinnati training base.

There was new owner Carl Lindner, top banana at Chiquita pulling up in a limo as long as the Florida turnpike.

There was Deion Sanders, attempting a comeback after two years of strictly football, siphoning off some of the media mob attracted by Ken Griffey Jr.'s first spring workout with his new team. And there was Griffey sitting on the dugout roof with his manager and general manager for an introductory news conference attended by more than 100 reporters who were to learn no new revelations from the former Seattle Mariner center fielder except that he will have to trade his blue wardrobe for red and that he does a much better job of containing his homecoming excitement than his pumped up teammates.

That's just Junior being Junior, of course.

"Junior's very cavalier," shortstop Barry Larkin said. "He's like, whatever. But I know he was excited when he started calling me every day again just before the trade went down, wondering what I was hearing and asking me questions about Sean (Casey) and Pokey (Reese) and some of the other guys. We were so close last year, and this just puts us a step closer."

The young Reds won 96 games last year before losing a wild-card playoff game to the New York Mets. Now they have acquired baseball's best player without sacrificing their nucleus. After all, even Mariner President Chuck Armstrong acknowledged that his team had acquired "four guys I wouldn't know if they walked into this room."

In greeting Griffey on Monday, his new teammates were careful not to knock Brett Tomko, Mike Cameron and the two minor leaguers that Cincinnati General Manager Jim Bowden gave up in his leveraged steal, but there was no question that part of their excitement is that Griffey came so cheaply.

"I was surprised it went down at all," pitcher Denny Neagle said. "You kept hearing about it all winter, and I didn't think it would happen. Pat Gillick (the Mariner general manager) never seemed satisfied with what was being offered, but as long as we didn't have to break up the chemistry of the team and could remain competitive, that was the name of the game and that's what we accomplished."

The Reds, of course, held all the cards in the on-again, off-again negotiations because Griffey, eligible for free agency at the end of the 2000 season, had right of approval over a trade, told the Mariners he would approve only the Reds, and also told Larkin, the shortstop said Monday, that "he would not have come here if we had torn up the club to get him."

Griffey, tending to prove this was not about money and all about his desire to play closer to his home, agreed to a nine-year, $116.5 million contract that includes $57 million in deferred salary and is about $30 million less than he was offered by Seattle and could have received elsewhere, but he continues to be portrayed by many in the media ... and fans in his former city ... as selfish and greedy.

It's a portrayal that caused Griffey to bristle on the day that he wore the Cincinnati uniform for the first time since he was 8 and playing in a father-son game with his dad, Ken Griffey Sr., a member then of the Big Red Machine.

"People don't understand what I'm about and all they can do is criticize," Griffey said. "I was drafted out of high school and gave the Mariners 11 years. Things change and priorities change. I had the right to choose (where I wanted to play).

"If I wasn't a player and wanted to move home, no one would care. They'd wish me luck. But as a player and public figure they say I'm selfish and a whiner. The Mariners gave me the opportunity to fulfill a dream. I gave them some good years in return. Now I'm home, trying to be the best father I can be and to win a championship ring with the Reds like my father did."

Griffey spent 11 years flying to Arizona for spring training and having his belongings trucked. The drive from his Orlando home to Sarasota is only two hours. He will go back after Friday's workout to take his son, Trey, 6, to a monster-truck show. Griffey's grandmother and many other relatives still live in Cincinnati, where he went to school, breaking many of the Moeller High baseball records that had been set by Larkin. His homecoming has ignited the city. The Reds are now keeping their ticket office open seven days a week and have installed 10 new phone lines.

Forget revenue sharing. Griffey may single-handedly change the Reds' small-market economics, particularly as the centerpiece of a new stadium that opens in 2003.

"He should pay for himself over the life of the contract, and there's a good chance we'll come out ahead," Bowden said.

Financially and artistically, perhaps, since the Reds now have a loaded lineup that features the on-base dynamics of Reese and Larkin at the top and the power of Griffey, Dante Bichette and Casey in the middle. The middle defense includes Gold Glove winners Larkin, Reese and Griffey, who was obtained with no loss of relief pitching, a pivotal aspect for Manager Jack McKeon, considering his rotation could be a weak link.

McKeon, 69, received a $400,000 raise but only a one-year extension after being named National League Manager of the Year.

With the Wizards, no saving grace; even His Airness can't fix this mess

By Tony Kornheiser
The Washington Post

Our first question today comes unsigned from a post office box in Chicago and asks, "How bad are the Wizards? I mean, really, how bad? Because I have, um, a friend who just accepted a management position with them, and maybe he shouldn't have done it."

Tell your "friend" that it's too late.

The Wizards are puke bad.

They appear to be making a run at becoming the worst team in the entire NBA. Let's look at the Wizards' recent trajectory. They appear to be rather far down the rabbit hole. They're 0-4 since the All-Star break and have lost 15 straight road games. Their competition for the honor of being the pits of the NBA includes Chicago, the Clippers, Vancouver and Golden State. Check it out. The Wizards are 0-2 against Chicago and 0-1 against the Clippers (losing at home!). On last week's road trip, the Wizards lost to Vancouver (after holding a 15-point lead in the third quarter!!) and Golden State.

Darrell Walker, Washington's fourth head coach in less than two seasons, is 1-8. The longer he coaches this group, the more he sounds like the recently departed third head coach, Gar Heard. Heard complained about the lack of chemistry and intensity among the players. Here is Walker after the Golden State loss: "Nobody is coming in to help us. It's just us. They're going to have to step up and start playing. Quit feeling sorry for themselves and just come out and play basketball." Wow, it's deja vu all over again.

Now like Austin, who is at ebb tide here, is agitating to be traded to Utah, where he believes he'll benefit from the "structure" Jerry Sloan has. "I would prefer ... a team that has a certain structure," Austin said. "That would be best for me. (Utah) would get the best ability out of me, and I realize that."

Sloan is a tough guy like Pat Riley, under whom Ike had his best seasons. I don't know what "a certain structure" means, but it's too bad Ike didn't specify this need when Wes Unseld and Gar Heard traded for him. If it's structure like needed, perhaps Orlando would have thrown in a tool shed.

Things haven't worked out here for Ike, but I was pleased to learn Ike bears Washington no grudge. "This has been a learning experience for me, and I think it was a learning experience for Washington," Ike said.

Ike learned first-hand of The Curse O' Les Boulez. Washington learned, sadly, Ike wasn't immune.

Memo to Unsigned in Chicago: Folks are already starting to carp that the Wizards are worse now than they were before you came aboard. They wonder if you're going to be able to turn the Wizards around. I tell them: This isn't a Greyhound bus. It's more like an entire subcontinent that's inexorably sinking into the mud of 10,000 years of rain. One man can't turn this thing around overnight. Oh, I suppose if anyone could, Michael Jordan could. Hey, listen to me. Like Michael Jordan would ever physically set foot in Washington! I mean, you know, before the beginning of golf season.

I love the Caps. But it's a matter of timing. Whenever it's my turn to write, they don't win. Six out of seven days, the Caps get killed. On my day they don't. Go figure.

awards

continued from page 12

al strong individual performances. In the 100-yard backstroke, Ryan Zaucha took sixth with a time of 52.30 as Houck finished seventh one second later at 52.31.

In the diving events, Ed Hefferon scored a 440.5 in the one meter to finish third while posting a 398.30 to take fourth in the three meter. Jason Fly placed tenth in each event.

When the post-championship awards were handed out, it almost seemed like UM would have to rent some type of moving vehicle just to take the hardware back to Amherst.

Arsenault continued his outstanding season as he took home the Most Outstanding Performer-of-the-Meet award. Deservingly, Coach Yarworth was named A-10 Coach-of-the-Year. "It's nice to get recognized by your peers," Yarworth said.

This was the second time Yarworth has won this title, the first coming in 1986. Arsenault, Brown, Ramos, and Turner were all named to the A-10 All-Championship team.

Arsenault and Brown are potential candidates for the NCAA Championship that will be held on March 23-25 in Minneapolis, Minn.

Senior Henry Turner, a member of the successful UMass 200-yard relay team, made coach Russ Yarworth proud with another gritty effort.

IF YOU WANT TO WRITE FOR COLLEGIAN SPORTS, CALL 545-1851. WE NEED WRITERS... AND YOU COULD USE CLIPS!!!

WRITE FOR SPORTS!!

A forum on...
What's the Difference?
ISLAM and CHRISTIANITY
Speakers, Mohammad Salimullah and Joe Greene, will present the respective religions and then the audience will be encouraged to ask questions.
Tuesday, Feb. 29 at 6:30
Campus Center, Room 163

The Bacchae of Euripides
by Wole Soyinka
Feb 24, 25 & 26, March 2, 3 & 4 at 8 p.m.
Rand Theater, UMass
$4 for students and seniors, $7 general
Call 545-2511

Great Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 A great place to get contacts lenses.
2 Free sample start-up contact lens solutions
3 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass.
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases.
5 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames.
Frederick H Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
University Health Services
For appointments or questions, Call 577-5244

McMurphy's Uptown Tavern
Guitar Dudes
Tonight @ 10:30
Bud Light
Pitchers $6.00
37 North Pleasant St.

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Sublet my one bedroom apartment 1 mile from campus. Available 6/00-8/00. $525.00 a month. Call Kate 253-6955.

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center. 545-1995.

1965 Buick Electra 225. PS, PB, Auto V8. 4dr. Maroon with black interior. Rebuilt engine, 90,000 miles. Good tires. $1600 OBO. 559-5027.

'91 Corsica V6. AT, PS, PB, 52,000 miles. Good rubber, clean, good condition. 549-6755.

'88 VW Fox GL 160k. Lots of new parts. Runs strong. $750.00 584-5927.

'94 Nissan Maxima. Dark green, good condition. $6000.00. Call 253-6480.

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Canadensis, Pocono Mountains, PA. Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, gymnastics, hockey, tennis, mountain bikes, golf, motorcycles, outdoor adventure, ropes, archery, drama, video, photography, fishing, WSI, waterfront activities, arts and crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/21/00-8/18/00. Call (800)832-8228 or apply on-line: www.canadensis.com

$$$Summer Cash$$$. Student bussiness Mngmt/sales position with national firm. Pays $10-12 plus commission. Available to soph, jr and sr only. For info go to http://www.jablon.com

Summer Employment; Outdoors. Weight loss/sports camp looking for energetic people to lead campers in a fun filled summer. Located in West Stockbridge, MA. in the heart of the Berkshires. Call for more information. Toll Free 877-FIT-CAMP. email marc@camp-kingsmont.com

EMPLOYMENT

Aquatics Jobs/Internships that build resumes. Horizon camps seek fun-loving, experienced instructors and directors, with certification, in all WATERFRONT areas. Swim instruction, sailing, canoeing, windsurfing and waterskiing. Many openings at 4 coed children's camps in NY, ME and PA. Top camp salaries plus room, board, laundry and travel. Apply online at www.horizon-camps.com or call (800)544-5448 for more info.

Nursery/Greenhouse full/time, year/round position to assist manager in multi retail locations. Salary plus benefits. Send resume to Westfield Home and Garden, 81 Springfield Rd, Westfield MA 01085.

Coach: Swim team looking for part-time head coach. Competitive Swim experience. Salary commensurate with experience. Belchertown Rec. 323-0419 or Mary 534-9904.

Wanna make money doing what you always do anyway? E-mail me at quickeasymonry@aol.com

EMPLOYMENT

Human Services- Relief support needed to work with adults with developmental disabilities, may lead to permanent hours. Hours include evenings, weekends and/or overnights. Required: HS diploma and drivers license. Starting pay is $7.47/hr(for relief), $8.35(for permanent). Locations in South Hadley and Belchertown. Call Mary @ (413)774-2281 ext. 11. AA/EOE

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132 www.biketrips.com

Childcare for handicapped, 15+ hours. Housework, references, car $9.50/hr. 247-5800.

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Student jobs competitive wages plus bonus. Anual Fund telephone program. Apply in person, basement of Memorial Hall or call 545-3509.

EMPLOYMENT

$Great Opportunity$. Marketing company seeks reliable and money motivated student for credit card promo's on-campus. Excellent commission. Flexible hours. 1-800-592-2121 ext. 300.

Work for exciting college focused internet company at your school. Looking for individual with strong leadership, entrepreneurial and bussiness skills. Tech skills not required. Great experience, pay, and options! Contact info at uconnections.com

Native speakers of Spanish wanted for experiment. 1 hr: $8. ph. 549-8843.

Earn $10+/hr. Looking for outgoing students to do on/off campus promotions. Call 533-2221.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENTS WANTED ONE SUMMER, A LIFETIME OF EXPERIENCE

I could spend the summer learning someone else's bussiness or I could be running my own. For more information visit our website and register to win a palm pilot. www.college-proedge.com or call 888-277-7962.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Pledge different. Pi Lambda Phi Fraternity. Info call 549-4411. pilambdaphi.homepage.com

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

ROOM FOR RENT

Beautiful, newly painted, hardwood floor, $300 inclusive! Quiet. Less than five minutes from campus! Call Sarah now: 549-5946.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Study Spanish. Internships in Guatemala. College Credit. www.casaxelaju.com (512)416-6991.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Advertise today in The Collegian

Call us here at 545-3500

Five College Community Calendar

THURSDAY, FEB. 24

Workshop – A workshop on contraception and safer sex will be held at 3 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services. Men and women are welcome.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@mailsity.com for more information.

Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac11@aol.com or Caleb at 587-3740 by March 5.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5600 for more information.

Submissions – Short Cuts, UMass' short story journal, is currently accepting prose submissions for its second annual issue. The deadline is March 1. For more information call Matt at 549-1053, or email submissions and questions to shortstory@acad.umass.edu.

Support – A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone pre-screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5316 if interested.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

Voting – A reminder to registered voters: A voter can only vote absentee due to absence from his/her residence community during polling hours, physical disability preventing the voter from going to a polling place, or religious belief. For more information call 256-4035.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS™ From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks," you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER

Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 23, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N		Women's College Basketball: Connecticut at West Virginia. (Live)				Mark Russell	Journey into Amazonia (In Stereo) (N			News (N	Late Show (N
WFSB	3	News (N	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Grammy Awards (In Stereo Live) (N
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Grammy Preview		Grammy Awards (In Stereo Live) (N						News	Late Show (N
WCVB	5	News (N	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey (N	Spin City (N	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA) (N		News (N	Nightline (N
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends (N	Nanny (N	Buffy the Vampire Slayer (N		Angel "Hero" (R) (In Stereo) (N		News		Friends (N	Nanny (N
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N	Twenty One (In Stereo) (N		West Wing "20 Hours in L.A."		Law & Order "Fools for Love"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV (N	7 Days "Seas Vu All Over Again"		Star Trek: Voyager "Spirit Folk		News	Real TV (R) (N	Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N	Ent. Tonight	Twenty One (In Stereo) (N		West Wing "20 Hours in L.A."		Law & Order "Fools for Love"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons (N	Frasier (N	Seinfeld (N	Friends (N	Robbie Knievel-Train Jump		Secrets of Street Magicians		News		Friends (N	Fraser (N
WWLP	22	News (N	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N	Twenty One (In Stereo) (N		West Wing "20 Hours in L.A."		Law & Order "Fools for Love"		News (N	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N		Mark Russell	Journey into Amazonia (In Stereo) (N					Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N
WGGB	29	News (N	ABC News	Seinfeld (N	Frasier (N	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey (N	Spin City (N	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA) (N		News (N	Nightline (N
WSBK	38	Judge Judy (N	Judge Judy (N	Seinfeld (N	Frasier (N	7 Days "Seas Vu All Over Again"		NHL Hockey: Boston Bruins at Edmonton Oilers. (Live)
WTBS	22	Rosearine (N	Rosearine (N	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder		WCW Thunder		Ripley's Believe It or Not! (R)
A&E	40	L.A. Law "Petticoat Injunction"		Law & Order "Jurisdiction" (R		Biography "Richard Speck" (R		Investigative Reports (R		American Justice (R) (R		Law & Order "Out of Contro" (R
CNN	43	Worldview (N	Moneyline News	Inside	hour (N	Crossfire (N		World Today (N		Newsstand (N		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	58	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	s ★ "The Scout" (1994, Comedy-Drama) Albert Brooks.				South Park (R	Man Show (R	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	28	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Everglades		On the Inside "Real LAPD" (R)		Survive | (R)		Breakout "Fortress Escapes"		On the Inside	"Real LAPD" (R)
ESPN	33	Sportscenter (R		College Basketball: Villanova at		Syracuse. (Live)		College Basketball: North Carolina at Florida State. (Live)				Sportscenter (R
LIFE	60	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Chicago Hope "Waging Bull" (R		"Navigating the Heart" (2000, Drama) Jaclyn Smith. (R				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	Road Rules	Road Rules	Grammy Preshow		Tom Green (R)	Tom Green (R)	Music Videos (In Stereo)		True Life	Diary	Undressed	Loveline
NICK	55	All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold! (R	Rugrats (R	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Boy: Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons (R	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI	59	Sliders (R) (In Stereo) (R		Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Crypt Tales	Poltergeist: The Legacy (R
TLC	28	Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours "Rocking the Boat"		Extreme Machines "Supercars"		Battle Science: Perfect War		Battle Science: One Man Army		Extreme Machines "Supercars"
TNT	62	In the Heat of the Night (R		ER "Suffer the Little Children" (R		s ★★ "The Green Berets" (1968, Drama) John Wayne, David Janssen.						"The Man Who Would Be King"
USA	63	Baywatch "The Incident" (R		JAG "Clipped Wings" (In Stereo)		Walker, Texas Ranger (R		s ★★ "A Bronx Tale" (1993, Drama) Robert De Niro, Chazz Palminteri. (In Stereo) (R				Texas Ranger
HBO	30	(5:15) "In-Laws"	s ★ "Pink Cadillac" (1989, Comedy) Clint Eastwood. (In Stereo) PG-13 (R					Sopranos (R) (In Stereo) (R		Oz "To Your Health" (In Stereo)		David Brenner: Vengeance
MAX	35	★½ "Hope Floats" (1998, Romance) Sandra Bullock. PG-13 (R				★ "The Patriot" (1998, Action) Steven Seagal. "R"		★½ "Ring Commander" (1999) PG-13 (R				Whole New	(Hot Line (R)
SHOW	36	★½ "Dream a Little Dream 2" (1994) Corey Feldman. "PG-13				★★½ "Star Trek: Insurrection" (1998) Patrick Stewart. "PG" (R				★★½ "A Simple Plan" (1998, Drama) Bill Paxton. (In Stereo) "R" (R

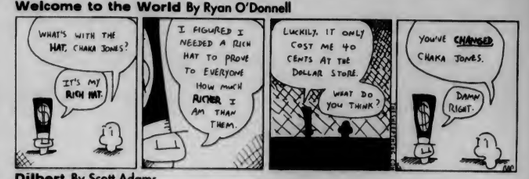
HSCN Hosting Services on Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	22	Good to Know
3	CBS/3 Hartford	23	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	24	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	25	CNN
6	FBS/57 Springfield	26	CNN Fn
7	HSCN Movie Ch.	28	CNN Si
8	UPN/20 Hartford	37	BET
9	Weather Channel	38	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain	39	College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford	40	Univision
12	FBS/24 Hartford	21	Comedy Central
13	WCCH & HSCN International	42	Cartoon Network
14	UMass Academic TV	43	TV Land
15	Wfs/New Haven	44	C-Span
17	Sundance	45	ZDTV (Tentative)
18	The Learning Channel	46	Bloomberg Financial Network
19	UVC-TV19	27	History Channel
20	ABC/40 Springfield	48	HSCN Programming

Adam & Eric By Ross Burach

Room 207 By Kyle Thompson

Foxtrot By Bill Amend



Robotman By Jim Meddick

Hedgeweb By Fry Lewis

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You can be quite unpredictable and lively today, and entertain others with your attitude and your actions.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You're in no mood to be bothered with trivial personal issues today. Indeed, what you're grappling with at this time could be quite serious.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – A more accepting, tolerant, and forgiving stance would suit you well today. There is no reason for you to come off as kind or queen of the world.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Even the most innocent of flirtations can be misunderstood today, leading to many complications and at least one broken heart. Play it safe!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Someone close to you is working up the courage to challenge you directly. Today, you'll receive one or two important warnings.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Something that shows a great deal of promise early in the day may go sour before the day is out – and you knew it would all along!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Take a close and careful look at the emotional and psychic trail you are leaving behind you at this time. Is everything as it should be?

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You can impress many people today by simply being yourself. You have a great deal going for you at this time, and others are sure to notice.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may be getting rather excited about the prospects lying before you at this time. Indeed, professional and personal potential is high.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – High places are likely to hold a special fascination for you today, despite fears you may harbor deep beneath the surface.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Something at which the experts have failed may well prove to be a simple matter of willpower to you. Can you indeed do it?

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take care you don't come across as being too random or offhanded today. Someone has his eye on you – and wants you to be on the mark.

Quote of the Day

"Never forget to read the soup label before you eat it, it could contain milk!"

–Guts'a'chrurin Angie

ACROSS

1 Spew like a
6 Knife handle
10 Doctor's picture
14 Crown wearer
15 Butter substitute
16 Alleviate
17 Type
18 Bank transaction
19 Bites
20 Japanese city
21 Blooms partners
23 Colorado Indian
25 As well
26 Barrette
29 Aberdeen miss
32 Crowbar
37 Varnish ingredient
38 Launder
39 Credit
40 New Age specialists
43 Disregard
44 Diving birds
45 Kicker's stand
46 Plateaus
47 Whim
48 Wheeled vehicle
49 Jungfrau e g
51 Female sandpiper
53 Looked angry
58 Wiped (dishes)
62 Housetop
63 Alaskan port
64 Hollow stone
65 50's
66 Round top
67 Gobbled up
68 Clay pot
69 Canary unit
70 Lean

DOWN

1 Hence
2 Feels sorry
3 Campus neighbor
4 Recover one's spirits
5 Bone, to a dog
6 Cargo area of a ship
7 Baseball family name
8 Elaborate meals
9 Lone Ranger's partner
10 Warrior Princess
11 Pour
12 Cleopatra's snakes
13 "Of course!"
22 Sea anemones
24 Gladden
26 Miner's stake
27 Spacious
28 Computer screen images
30 Type of tray
31 Fleece (a sheep)
33 Wallach or Whitney
34 Scenery
35 Go inside
36 Change the clock
38 Polish city
39 Pastry maker
41 Flightless bird
42 Toupee shortfall
47 Remove weeds
48 Total: e g
50 Does a banking job
52 Boundaries
53 Hockey score
54 Loaf
55 Like falling log
56 Piotr Lazarus
57 Forest denizen
59 Smidgen
60 Garden spot
61 Fender damage
62 Greek letter

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

A	J	A	R		T	R	I	S		G	A	G	S
P	I	L	E		C	U	B	I	C		A	M	I	E
S	L	A	G		E	R	I	C		L	O	V	E
E	T	N	A		B	A	D		S	T	L	A	E	N
			T	O	O	L		J	I	V	E
S	U	R	T	A	X		H	O	N	E	Y	B	E	E
C	L	O	A	K		H	A	L	O		S	O	D	A
O	T	T		R	A	U	N	T		E	G	G
P	R	O	S		E	L	K	S		M	O	R	E	L
F	A	R	M	A	R	K	S		M	O	U	S	S	E
			A	V	I	S		P	I	N	S
S	P	I	R	E	A		L	A	X		T	H	O	R
C	O	O	T		L	E	A	V	E		I	A	G	O
A	N	T	E		S	E	V	E	R		N	U	L	L
M	E	A	D		L	A	S	S		G	L	E	E

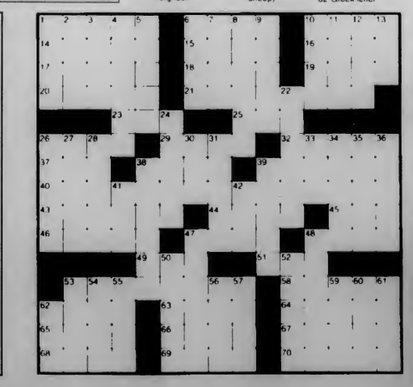
© 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Breakfast

Cream of Wheat
Scrambled Eggs
Texas French Toast
Home Fries



Lunch

Soup du Jour
Fried Clams
Tamale Pie
Savory Rice & Spinach Bake (Berkshire & Worc. only)
Tofu w/ Snow Peas
Pasta & Salad Bars

Dinner

Chicken Fingers/Dips
Sweet Potato Quesadilla
Ginger Black Beans
Pasta Bar
Salad Bar

Night Editor: Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician: Teresa Canino-Rivera
Copy Editor: Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor: Jaylyn Lombard
Production Staff: Melanie Thomas, Roberto Delgado

Minutemen sprint to the finish

URI the fourth UMass victim in the last five games

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

Providence Rhode Island – Make no mistake about it, the Massachusetts Men's basketball team has been playing its best ball of late. And the Minutemen sure can play on the road, the evidence being an impressive record on the conference's foreign soil. But Rhode Island is just bad.

After a 29 point thrashing at the Mullins Center last month, the Minutemen took their show on the road and the result had a familiar one-sided taste to it. UMass' defense forced the Rams into 29 turnovers and the Minutemen got key contributions from every corner of the lineup card in its 57-37 victory over Rhody last night at the Providence Civic Center.

But by no means did the Minutemen search the nets or come out with ample intensity. They shot just 36 percent and were out rebounded by a team that played without senior big man Luther Clay, who suffered a scratched cornea in the Rams loss to George Washington over the weekend. For a while, it looked as though URI had come to play, holding the Minutemen scoreless for the games first 3:49 and jumping out to an early 11-4 lead.

UMASS	57
RHODE ISLAND	37

But then came The Run.

After a Tavorris Bell layup at the 13:04 mark, the Minutemen made their move and Rhody would not light the scoreboard for the next 11:19. Chris Kirkland started the one-way jaunt with a turnaround from the left baseline to cut into the Rams seven point lead. What followed was a binge of Rhode Island turnovers – eighteen of them in fact. And when URI got its shots off, they simply wouldn't fall.

After a Tip Vinson miss, Shannon Crooks took it the other way for a layup, knotting the game at 11 with 8:34 remaining. It was part of a 25-0 run, which ended only with a Bell dunk that at first rimmed out before fluttering and falling through.

"You don't get anything easy," URI coach Jerry DeGregorio said. "Teams like Xavier and George Washington let you play. These guys take away everything. [UMass] can guard you. No tricks. Nothing fancy. They just play solid man-to-man defense."

UMass got out of the gate slowly, misfiring on its first eight shots before Kirkland laid it in, setting up a three point opportunity at the 14:11 mark. Despite missing the free throw, it cracked the door that eventually let everyone in on the fun. The Minutemen forced 18 first half turnovers that led to 17 points on the other end.

"We have to score on our defense because sometimes our offense struggles," UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "That's what got us going. We got a couple of steals and a couple of baskets."

In the second half, the Minutemen's lead grew to as large as 26 when Ronell Blizzard scored two of his career-high nine points with 3:42 remaining to the put the Minutemen ahead 55-29.

Monty Mack, who came in averaging 20 points per outing, wouldn't score until the 14:37 mark of the second half, this when Winston Smith found him wide open under the basket for a bunny off the inbounds pass. The senior marksman shot a horrid 2-12 from the field en route to a five-point night, just one notch above his career low.

"He and Tip Vinson (1-13) were looking at each other saying 'who's going to shoot worse tonight?'" Flint said. "He didn't come out ready to play. He wasn't catching the ball and he could never get himself out of it and that's what happens when you're not ready to play."

But the Minutemen wouldn't need it. Instead, Flint got career highs from Micah Brand (a team high 14 points) and Blizzard.

"Tonight I was fortunate to get the ball down on the low block and some of my shots fell," Brand said.

The Liacouras Center, formerly the Apollo of Temple, will determine the Minutemen's fate in next month's Atlantic 10 Tournament. With the Maroon and White vying for the all-important second east division bye with St. Bonaventure, UMass takes center-stage against the Owls on Saturday, this two days after the Bunnies' clash with Temple in Philidelphia. SBU stands just a half game back of the second place Minutemen.

UMass sophomore guard Shannon Crooks finally looks comfortable running the point, and his Minutemen have four wins in their last five games.

Minutewomen tamed to third-place in tourney

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

Much like the familiar description of next month's weather, the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team entered the Atlantic 10 Championships in true lion style, yet at the end of the three-day march to glory the Minutewomen sheepishly left the competition with a third-place finish.

Roaring into the water on Thursday the wet Maroon and White's performance earned them a place in the record books three times over. Setting three new school records in the first day of the A-10 Tournament, the women looked too strong against conference competition.

Finishing third in the first event and breaking a school record at the same time, the UMass squad got its first points in the 200-yard freestyle relay. The team comprised of seniors Lyndsay Crenshaw and Andrea Spencer with sophomores Anne Dettloff and Andrea Kazanjian completed the race in 1:37.55.

Spencer would then return later to set her second record of the day in the 200-yard intermediate. With a time of 2:07.30, Spencer finished fourth in the race and gained another place in UMass history, however, Spencer was not through yet, as part of the 400-yard medley relay team, she along with senior Elizabeth Risotto, junior Sarah Newell, and Kazanjian set the third school record of the day for UMass finishing third in the medley event with a time of 3:54.90, the Minutewomen were once again on the board and in the record books.

Although she did not swim away with more than one record on the day, Dettloff did post a strong performance with a time of 5:08.43 in the 500-yard freestyle event. It was also not to be when Spencer tried for a fourth record as she with Kazanjian and junior Julie Dragon competed in the 50-yard freestyle.

The trio finished tenth, twelfth, and sixteenth in the fast paced event. But the day's action was not just confined to the pool, as freshman Kate Allers delivered a powerful showing in the three-meter diving event, scoring 332.30 points for her effort. Allers found herself in the fifth position at the close of the day.

The standings at day's end left UMass in third trailing both Virginia Tech, and St. Bonaventure. These results would turn out to be a reference point for the rest of the meet, as they would also be the final positions of the top three in the A-10. The Minutewomen would only score 401 points, but proved the strength of the UMass swimming program, leaving six other teams envious of the Maroon and White's tournament ranking.

Now the Minutewomen will look towards the future and greater accomplishments before they return next season in hopes of proving that not all lions will be tamed to third place.

Awards keep coming

Minutemen shine at A-10 meet

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Men's swimming and diving coach Russ Yarworth, clapping above, was recently named A-10 Coach-of-the-Year.

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Three days.
Nine teams.
One victor.
Now, for the moment you have all been waiting for...

With the previous statement's usual application to beauty pageants around the world, it might be difficult to comprehend its relevance to the UMass men's swimming and diving team's season. It was, however, a perfect introduction to the 2000 Bell Atlantic / Atlantic 10 Swimming and Diving Championships at the Flickinger Aquatic Center in Buffalo, New York.

At the beginning of each season, each A-10 team takes a red pen and draws several circles around the days of their conference championship - all three of them. It is in hope that the next time they mark up that piece of paper, a big red "W" sits aside the words "Atlantic-10 Championship."

Last weekend, UMass (544.50) joined St. Bonaventure (613.50), George Washington (523), La Salle (432), Duquesne (186.50), Fordham (228), Rhode Island (148), and Xavier (129) in the most pressure-packed water this side of the Mississippi as they were all chopped down to newly crowned Virginia Tech, which won with a final score of 729.50.

Although falling short, the Minutemen had nothing to be ashamed of.

"It was awesome," said coach Russ Yarworth. "The kids came to swim. I can't say enough on how well they did. The whole team, from top to bottom, gave it their best."

The Minutemen began the championships with a win in the 200 yard freestyle relay. The relay team of swimmers Carlos Ramos, Henry Turner, Mike Sabina, and Chris Arsenault won with a time of 1:22.7. Tommy Keane took third in the 500-yard freestyle with a time of 4:34.64, while Anthony Bianchini finished thirteenth in 4:41.15 and Brian Grimes wound up in sixteenth with a 4:47.25 mark. That same night, Arsenault, Turner, Sabina, Ramos all qualified for the 50-yard free.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Chris Arsenault

Brown and Arsenault stole the show on Friday and Saturday. With their accomplishments, both gained the incredible opportunity to swim in the Olympic Trials. Arsenault, with a time of 1:38.41 in the 200-yard freestyle, set a new Atlantic 10 and UMass school record while qualifying for the Olympic Trials and NCAA Championship consideration.

Brown, like Arsenault, achieved the same four feats with times of 55.73 and 2:00.09, respectively, in the 100 and 200-yard breaststroke events.

"Chris and Billy swam incredibly, but it shouldn't overshadow how everyone else swam," Yarworth said.

The third place over-all finish for the Minutemen was undoubtedly an entire team effort with several

Turn to AWARDS, page 9

Top finish ever for men's track

Morency, Zullo and Russ stand out in A-10 finals

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

And suddenly, in one fell swoop, it was all laid to rest. Every ounce of doubt, every trace of uncertainty, every smidgen of misgiving anyone had about the 1999-2000 edition of the Massachusetts men's indoor track team was quelled this past weekend.

On Saturday, the Minutemen were the epitome of a team in harmony, mingling power, finesse, and agility to propel themselves to a second place finish in the Atlantic 10 Indoor Championship, surpassed only by conference powerhouse Virginia Tech. The squad managed to edge host Rhode Island and St. Joe's, which finished third and fourth, respectively.

The newly crowned runners-up have earned themselves an endless supply of bragging rights. The team's second place finish was the highest in UMass history, an awesome feat in itself. Take into account that a significant portion of the team is first-year blood... now that's the stuff of legend and lore.

Heading into the weekend, Coach Ken O'Brien expressed concern about potential rookie jitters. How, he wondered, would the newcomers respond to the tremendously competitive atmosphere and the high-pressure situations that accompany a conference meet?

It was freshman Stefan Russ who eased his coach's fears, leading the rookies to an overall solid performance. Russ placed first in high jump with a leap of 6'9", an effort that nudged him to second place on the all-UMass all-time list. He also nabbed fourth in the 200-meter with a time of 22.33, the third best time in school history. The German exchange student's poise and maturity did not go unnoticed by A-10 officials, who proclaimed the freshman Most Outstanding Rookie at the Championship.

O'Brien beamed about his star rookie's performance.

"He's been a nice addition to the team, not only in terms of his performance, but also in the way he's added a huge spark to the team," O'Brien commented. "He seems to have really gotten into the whole team atmosphere of NCAA track and field."

Senior Vic Morency provided the veteran foundation for the squad, clinching first in the shot put and third in the 35-pound weight throw. The master thrower's appetite for rewriting the history books was fully satisfied — his shot put effort shattered the school record he set only weeks earlier. The toss was also an A-10 meet record.

The distance runners further established themselves as an integral force on the team with a series of remarkable performances. Sophomore Kevin Curtin turned in a career-best performance in the 3000-meter. His time of 8:29.93 catapulted him to a first place finish. Senior Kevin Somers and sophomore Ryan Corbett placed second and third, respectively, in the 3000-meter.

Sprinting and mid-distance running also proved to be strong events for the Minutemen. Sophomore Adrian Zullo had a noteworthy day, nabbing third in the 55-meter and ninth in the 200-meter.

Turn to FINISH, page 9

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kevin Curtain and the men's indoor track team enjoyed their highest A-10 Championship finish in school history last weekend.

Hirsch wins big at indoor championship

By Jon Tafarella
Collegian Staff

Led by senior standout Sally Hirsch, the Massachusetts women's indoor track squad took fifth place at the Atlantic 10 Indoor Championships last weekend with a total of 82.75 points.

While her team finished in the middle of the pack, Hirsch ran right to the top. Hoping to improve upon a third-place showing from a year ago, the Brookline, Mass. native gave a season-best time of 10:04.28 to take first place in the 3,000-meter race.

Just steps behind Hirsch, senior teammate Sharon Tillotson crossed the finish line second to pick up eight points for UMass. In addition to this outstanding performance, the distance medley team had an exceptional day.

The team consisting of Melissa Henderson, Chrysal Murphy, Monica Elmore, and Kristen Ciswoski, placed first at the meet with a time of 12:20.26. In other events on the track Melissa Henderson came in fourth with a time of 5:02.08 in the mile with Kristin Ciswoski right behind her only eight seconds later.

In the 5,000-meter run, Elizabeth Sheptyek placed seventh with a time of 18:10.25, scoring another two points for the team. The four-by-eight relay team came in seventh, tacking a couple of points on to the UMass total as well. Melissa Ward had an excellent day qualifying at eighth in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 8.75, and then beating her qualifying time to finish the meet at seventh.

In the field, Melissa Ward put on an incredible performance on the field as well placing second in the high jump and fourth in the long jump. Ward was not alone among the elite

Turn to HIRSCH, page 9

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kristin Ciswoski, left, and Sally Hirsch helped the women's indoor track team to a fifth-place finish in the A-10 Championship Meet.

Women's tennis strikes back

Four consecutive losses to start the season must have been tough, but the Massachusetts women's tennis team stared the obstacle right in the eye. It bounced back from four-match losing streak to capture its first win of the season over Colgate, 6-3, on Sunday at Hampshire College.

But the win came at a price. The Minutewomen suffered a loss at the hands of Army on Friday by the same 6-3 count. The weekend split improves the Maroon and White's record to 1-4 on the young spring season.

UMass had its best start of the year in the match against the Red Raiders, winning two of its three doubles matches. The tandem of Ola Gerasimova and Anne Hamilton took down the Colgate's No. 1 doubles pair of Jenny Buntman and Lorraine Coulter 8-2. The No. 3 doubles pair of Michelle Kuhr and Robyn Lebovitz won a barnburner, 8-6.

With a 2-1 advantage heading into singles competition UMass continued its dominance, winning four of six matches. Leading the charge were Helena Horak, Hamilton, Katie Stammen, and Lebovitz.

Horak, the native of Westlake Village, CA, defeated Lauren Erickson in straight sets, 6-1 and 6-3. Hamilton gained her second consecutive win, beating Coulter 6-2 and 6-2. The victory barrage continued when Stammen trounced Cyan Brakhage 6-0 and 6-1.

In a struggle, Lebovitz won her match 6-3, 1-6, and 6-0. After she won the first set with relative ease, the junior suffered a letdown, dropping the second set 1-6. The native of Marietta, GA stormed back by not allowing a single game to Kelli Provenzano.

The win came on the heels of a frustrating loss to Army to start the weekend.

The Minutewomen spelled their own fate when they lost the first two doubles competitions. Jamie Baker and Jen Blatty defeated Lebovitz and Kuhr in a rout, 8-1. Army then captured its second consecutive victory as Lillian Lien and Ann Collier beat Stammen and Horak.

The Maroon and White's lone bright spot in doubles action came when the tandem of No. 1 of Gerasimova and Hamilton defeated Annie Weber and Cheryl Hamilton.

In singles competition Gerasimova defeated Weber for her first win of the season and Hamilton ousted Blatty in straight sets to even her season record at 2-2.

The Minutewomen will next be in action when the battle the Brown Bears on Feb. 26.

- Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 21 Thursday, February 24, 2000

Professors speak out on cuts

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Since the announcement for campus-wide budget cuts was made, departments have been facing tough decisions and negative effects to their programs.

The order was sent down by Chancellor David K. Scott in late January that each department on campus must skim their budget from one to three percent. Due to this order, departments such as Consumer Studies have had to cut programs, while other departments have been left with little of the funding necessary to continue to run smoothly.

According to Reb Roy, the office manager for the Spanish Department, the program has already seen some of the consequences of the lack of funding for the program.

"We offered 180 sections to students this year," she said, "We are only allowed to offer 90 sections for this upcoming year."

In addition, the department has also seen the elimination of teaching assistants. According to Roy, the lack of teaching assistants will make it difficult for students to get into the classes that they need for the upcoming semester.

"We see students struggling to get into classes that they need for their degree," she said. "We have pre-registration coming up soon and it is going to be a mess."

The program was recently faced with a shortage of teaching assistants this semester. Due to the lack of funding they were not allowed to hire the personnel necessary for teaching the number of classes that were being offered to students.

"We were told that we had the funds, and we hired in good faith," she said. "We were then told that we had no money."

She explained that many people on campus were concerned about the budget cuts and were looking for a potential solution to the problems that faced the campus. She went on to say that the lack of help from the University proved to be overall frustrating for many departments.

"I don't know if they are offering any solutions to these type of things," she said. "Everyone seems to be walking around scratching their heads."

She went on to say that, "It is very hard to understand exactly what they [the University] are trying to accomplish.

Some departments with programs cut during a previous round of budget problems remember all too well the difficulty of lack of funding. One department, the Slavic and East European Studies program, was forced to cut Russian as an individual major three years ago due to monetary issues.

According to Professor Joseph Lake, the head of the department, the program is now running along side of the Slavic and East European Studies major and allows students to pursue the Russian language in different ways. He explained that he was not concerned about budget cuts in the program, due to the cuts that had already been made during previous years.

"The adverse effect already happened a few years ago," Lake said.

The Labor Studies Department also remained optimistic about the upcoming budget cuts. Tom Juravich, the head of the department, explained that no definitive plans had been made as to what to do about the budget constraints. He commented that because the department did not know by what percent their budget would be cut so they could not specifically state what would and would not be cut from the department. He did however, express concern about the cuts as a whole.

"All of the departments are deeply concerned about what the budget cuts will be," Juravich said.

Some faculty is trying to prevent these cuts from happening in the academic areas of campus. Over 200 faculty members have signed a petition begun by two sociology professors in protest of the budget cuts.

Turn to PROFESSORS, page 2

TERESA CAMPOS-RIVERA / COLLEGIAN

I smell a sale
Students mingle with J.C. Penny representatives at this week's Career fair held in the Campus Center

History Department begins anew

By Brian Lohnes
Collegian Staff

The UMass history department has welcomed Professors Marla Miller and Alice Nash to its ranks. Members of the department said that both professors are active and bring an array of research to the University.

Both women had done work in the area before becoming members of this university.

Miller hails from Reedsburg, Wisconsin and her historical focus is directed towards the Revolutionary period as it pertains to women. When asked why she was drawn towards women's historical studies she said, "Ever since I was an undergrad I gravitated toward those type of sources, books written by women and women's diaries."

Her interest in the revolutionary time period also stems from her days as an undergrad in Wisconsin. "I was a history major as an undergrad. I had two great professors, one taught colonial history and the other taught early American literature and they had me on the edge of my seat," Miller said.

Miller teaches a new class here at UMass called, "The Power of Place: The Politics of History on the UMass Campus." This course investigates monuments, plaques and other reminders of historical events to compare the differences in how they were developed.

The idea for the course came from a friend Miller explained. "I had a friend that was teaching a very similar course at Rutgers University, she had a great time and so did her students," Miller said. "Also I have done a lot of research and published several papers on monuments. I like to look at the differences between monuments created by men and women."

Miller said her strengths lay in her commitment to the local area, "I use local resources and museums to teach the students. I like to use the local area to explore the national picture."

She added that she was, "delighted to be here."

Professor Alice Nash a Ph.D. recipient from Columbia University has also joined the history depart-

Turn to PROFESSORS, page 2

S.G.A. to begin its nominations

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) Senate appointed two students to the Elections Commission at last night's meeting, after they failed to reach the minimum number of commissioners needed to hold elections.

The original motion could not be passed because three of the five appointees failed to show up.

Elections Commissioner, Jeremy Rouille, is in charge of overseeing the election process. He said it was his hope that they would be able to appoint all empty Elections Commission seats in order to start with the elections process. He said nominations for Area Government, Student Trustee and the SGA President position could open immediately upon appointment of these commissioners.

However, when Dustin Marceau was the only student to show up for the nomination, the SGA was forced to scrounge for non-SGA members to fulfill the two empty seats. The Senate took a 15-minute liberation before reconvening to discuss their options. Speaker of the Senate Mikale Billard said if they failed to get the two seats filled, the earliest the elections could have opened would have been next Thursday.

"That would have made nominations close in the middle of spring break," Billard said. "That would have made it difficult for the [elections] commission to go through the ballot and notifying people they were on the ballot would have been impossible."

Nominations for Elections Commissioners were opened up on the floor. Allison Kisper and UVC Channel 19 camera operator Christian Langord, two non-SGA members were nominated and

Turn to SGA, page 3

Equality in education discussed

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Upholding the beliefs of author W.E.B. Du Bois, Dr. Ruth Simmons, the president of Smith College, advocated for both an improvement in race relations and more accessible college education.

During a ceremony celebrating the 132 birthdays of Du Bois, at an event sponsored by the W.E.B. Du Bois Department of African American Studies, Chancellor David K. Scott, and the Five College Consortium, Simmons spoke to a group of both UMass students and faculty members about the importance of equal opportunity in education.

In her speech entitled "Du Bois's Prophecy, The Color Line and Education at the Start of a New Century," she told her own stories of poverty as she expressed to listeners the necessity for hope in inner city schools.

"If you put sad people to work with young people the young people will be sad. If you put hopeless people to work with young people the young people will be hopeless."

She went on to say that she tries to visit inner city schools in order to give students hope for the future.

"Sometimes I leave there overwhelmed," she said. "There are still people out there that are saving souls in the inner cities."

Another major part of her speech was the issue of minority admissions to colleges around the country. She renounced the necessity for SAT scores in the appraisal of students for admissions, while also commenting on the need for students to be looked at as individuals with potential.

"SAT scores cannot evaluate character, they cannot evaluate promise, and they cannot evaluate the will to succeed," she said.

She explained these tests do not give the students the opportunity to adequately show their learning potential, but that these standards are still in place due to large corporations and government institutions.

"There is no formula that we have quantified to determine promise or merit," she said.

She commented that admissions decisions should be made by educators and not by other outside sources.

"When are we going to use our intelligence and energy and fight these decisions?" She continued commenting, "These decisions should be made by people who have experience in admissions."

She explained that education reform was failing in this country due to the fact that those making the policies involved had little to do with education and schools on a personal level.

"Everybody has an idea of how education works, and they have taken the educators out of it," she said.

Another goal that Simmons had for the future of education is to diversify campuses while allowing for educators to recruit students with promise and potential. She explained that while it was difficult, faculty members should unite in order to support education.

"You have to stand up, if you fail thes [the students] have seen that someone was there to fight for them," She said. "Sometimes it is the fight that really matters."

Colombian Army accused of continuing paramilitary ties

By Koren DeYoung
Washington Post

The Colombian Army, which the Clinton administration proposes to supply with up to $1 billion in assistance over the next two years, continues to maintain close ties to Colombian right-wing paramilitary groups responsible for extensive human rights abuses and escalating involvement in drug trafficking, according to a report released yesterday.

Compiled by Human Rights Watch after a yearlong investigation aided by Colombian government prosecutors, the report comes at a particularly sensitive time in the administration's effort to gain approval for a massive aid package it hopes will stem the flood of cocaine and heroin entering this country from Colombia.

In recent weeks, the administration has assured skeptical members of Congress that Colombian President Andres Pastrana has made major strides in separating the armed forces from the paramilitaries. In meetings in Bogota last week, Undersecretary of State Thomas R. Pickering said, "Pastrana ... made very clear that he understood, for the future of Colombia, how important it was to continue to push ahead in that area."

Last night, Colombian Vice President Gustavo Bell Lemus issued a sharp response to the report, saying his government has never denied residual ties between paramilitary groups and armed forces individuals, and has moved to break and punish them.

But the suggestion of a "deliberate, institutional will to help and support these illegal groups is something the government does not accept, because it is untrue," Bell Lemus said.

The fact that Human Rights Watch received much of its information from

Turn to COLUMBIA, page 2

KARA STORETS/ COLLEGIAN

Lookin' good!
A Campus Center employee checks out his own reflection in the barber shop mirrors while on his way to the Student Union.

Professor Gierasch discusses protein unfolding in Distinguished lecture

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Staff

At the University of Massachusetts' Memorial Hall, yesterday, Lila Gierasch, head of the UMass department of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology presented her research on protein unfolding as part of the Distinguished Faculty Lecture series.

Each year, 30 faculty members are nominated by staff and students to be a part of the lecture series. Four finalists are elected by a five-member panel of faculty members to speak and receive the Chancellor's Medal, the highest award bestowed for service to UMass. The lecture's purpose is to highlight the diversity of the UMass campus and to enrich students and faculty with knowledge and expand awareness of what is going on around the university.

In the lecture Gierasch discussed her research on protein unfolding. She spoke of how proteins are an essential type of molecular life. In order for the protein to function it must go through a process called unfolding. Each protein has a complicated form that it must adhere to in order to function properly, when a protein does not unfold correctly, it can lead to diseases such as Alzheimer's disease, cystic fibrosis, bovine encephalitis (mad cow disease), an inherited form of emphysema, and even certain cancers.

Gierasch's research is especially important today as the process of decoding and mapping the DNA structure of the 25 human chromosomes is approaching completion. Each chromosome has a specific purpose pertaining to the functions of the body. Chromosomes contain long DNA strands. DNA strands are like biological blueprints, which contain the instructions for proteins.

"Proteins are like three-dimensional puzzles," Gierasch said. "Each protein has its own purpose. It's their structure that allows them to do those specific functions." Understanding protein unfolding and how it goes awry is key to establishing gene therapy techniques to cure or eliminate certain genetic diseases.

Having the DNA sequences without the understanding of protein unfolding makes the information virtually useless. "It's as though you have the blueprints for a house but no idea how to build the house," she said. "What causes [the protein] to fold is a lot of weak interactions, there is no main driving force." That is what makes it so hard to understand exactly what is going on.

Gierasch illustrated her point by showing a cartoon of a scientist saying, "we finished the genome map, but we don't know how to fold it."

The process of protein unfolding is analyzed by comparing the relative florescence of different proteins. The actual process takes less than one second therefore the unfolding must be recorded in milliseconds. Gierasch and her staff compile the raw data from the experiments to create computer animation of the unfolding process. She describes them as being "elegant and beautiful."

Gierasch's descriptions of protein unfolding were accompanied by three-dimensional, computer-generated models of proteins created by Ken Rotondi, a UMass graduate student. The models showed the complex structure of the proteins and the intricate pretzel like structure they fold into.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 55 LOW: 34	HIGH: 47 LOW: 31	HIGH: 53 LOW: 38

Southwick Representin'
Read about one of Massachusetts towns history as seen through the eyes of our very own Dan Viens
PAGE 4

Cook Inside If You Dare
We've got reviews for all the big summer movies and some cool concerts. Plus, we'll tell you what to do and where to go during your first week back. So, check out Arts. Who knows? You might even see dead people.
PAGE 5

Making a Markus
The men's hockey squad has itself a three-headed monster with Finnish flavor. Read the full story in today's sports section.
PAGE 16

Arts & Living 5
Comics 15
Crossword 15
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 16

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

professors

continued from page 1

ment. When asked about her interest in Native American studies she said, "I think my back round explains my interest, one half of my family is 11th generation Americans, my mother who is Japanese was put into a camp during WWII. It is that kind of disjunction that is very powerful."

She spoke about how she feels there is a need for people to be better informed about Indian affairs. "Everyone thinks they know something about Indians, unfortunately a lot of it is misinformation," she said.

Nash was drawn to UMass by several things, including the community, five college program and the good reputation of the school. In addition, her area of study is rooted in the area. "My research focuses on the Indian people of the Northeast and I am very supportive of the struggles of Indian people in the Northeast."

Finally, when asked about what she brings to the department she replied, "My ability to teach Native American history because I don't believe that you can talk U.S. history without talking Indian history."\

Currently she teaches two classes at the university, "Indian Peoples of North America" and "Indian Peoples of the Northeast."

History department chairwoman Mary Wilson spoke with much enthusiasm and excitement about the new editions to the department. Nash and Miller were chosen out of a very large pool of applicants and when asked what was special about each, Wilson said, "Their ability to communicate historical knowledge to academic and non academic audiences and both of them have books that are well on their way to publication."

She added, "For a state university their biggest contribution is their knowledge of the colonial history of the region." Wilson also said that, "These women are worth their weight in gold, they bring new ideas to the department, not just academic, but also teaching ideas."

JAMES MARK / COLLEGIAN

A proud mascot

This statue overlooking Metawampee Lawn is backlit against the sky on one fine winter morning.

columbia

continued from page 1

government prosecutors, he said, "indicates clearly and emphatically" that the government is doing its job in investigating military crimes. While Colombia is determined to remain open to human rights scrutiny, Bell Lemus said, he rejected the "explicit intention" of the report "to obstruct the legislative procedures" on U.S. aid for Colombia.

Jose Miguel Vivanco, the Latin America director of Human Rights Watch, said yesterday that Colombian federal prosecutors are frustrated by their inability to apply civilian justice to military officials. Although Pastrana and U.S. officials frequently note that 15 senior army officials have lost their jobs due to alleged paramilitary ties, Vivanco said none of them has been prosecuted. Prosecutors and human rights officials live in constant fear for their lives, he said, and many have fled the country under threat.

Although its intentions are good, Vivanco said, the Pastrana government has been unable to impose its will on the Colombian Army.

KARA STORER/ COLLEGIAN

A free read

Students enjoy an undisturbed, inexpensive read in the Atticus bookstore in town yesterday.

Report causes concern

By Charles Trueheart
Washington Post

PARIS – A report released yesterday describing massive U.S.-led eavesdropping of private telephone conversations, faxes and e-mail messages around the world prompted a wave of concern and indignation in Europe.

The report by a special European Parliament commission said the network had the potential to violate the privacy of millions of European citizens and suggested that it has been used to benefit U.S. corporations in economic and industrial espionage.

The ground and satellite-based intercept system, which is known as Echelon, was designed primarily for use against non-military targets, such as terrorists, drug-traffickers, and money-launderers, the report said.

But the system "enables the countries using it to obtain significant economic information and, hence, to secure a leading position on the commercial markets," the report said.

The system, which is operated by the U.S. National Security Agency in partnership with the intelligence services of Britain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand, intercepts "billions of messages per hour," said Duncan Campbell, the report's principal author, in Brussels yesterday. "We are not talking about a trivial thing here."

The unveiling of the inquiry's findings precipitated a flurry of comment from European politicians.

"In effect, democratic states and a member of the European Union could have organized large-scale espionage operations in order to reinforce their economic interests to the detriment of Belgium and other European countries," said Belgian Foreign Minister Louis Michel.

"The Anglo-Saxon Echelon eavesdropping network constitutes a serious infringement on national security and on the freedoms of all French people," said Rene Galy-Dejean, a French member of parliament.

U.S. officials have routinely dismissed European alarm at Echelon as being unwarranted. The system, U.S. officials say, is strictly for national security use.

Intelligence officials also dispute the economic espionage charge on practical grounds, claiming that the sheer volume of intercepts makes targeted industrial spying all but impossible.

"U.S. intelligence agencies are not tasked to engage in industrial espionage, or obtain trade secrets for the benefit of any U.S. company or companies," State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said yesterday. He declined to acknowledge the existence of the Echelon program.

The surveillance network dates to 1947. But it has aroused deep concern among America's allies in Europe in recent years as the scope of the surveillance of foreign telephone calls, faxes and electronic mail became more apparent.

Echelon itself was created in the mid-1970s, and grew in complexity and reach through the last years of the Cold War.

Loopholes in anti-terrorism law

By Jay Hancock
Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON – On the dusty plains of northeastern Syria, U.S. oil giant Conoco is tapping valuable natural gas fields and building a 155-mile pipeline toward the Mediterranean. It is doing so even though the U.S. Antiterrorism Act of 1996 outlawed dealings between Americans and Syria and other terrorism-sponsoring states.

In the water off Iran, French energy concern TotalFina is developing the huge, South Pars gas field – in spite of a second 1996 U.S. law, the Iran-Libya Sanctions Act, which threatens companies operating in those countries with economic penalties from the United States.

Across the Middle East, at least a dozen U.S. and foreign oil companies are dealing with governments in direct defiance of U.S. anti-terrorism laws. But the Clinton administration has never penalized these businesses.

The anti-terror laws have been fought by lobbyists for American oil companies and by France and other European nations unhappy with U.S. attempts to strong-arm their corporations. And the oil companies and the Europeans have gotten much of what they wanted, sometimes with the help of the U.S. State Department.

Four years ago President Clinton called the Iran-Libya law a move toward "zero tolerance" for terrorism. The Antiterrorism Act, Clinton said, provided "the tools to fight ... the murder of innocent civilians to achieve a political end."

But in case after case, Clinton's administration has exempted individual oil companies from sanctions under the laws, created loopholes for entire terrorism-sponsoring countries, such as Syria, or avoided decisions on sanctions through months of review.

Administration officials insist that they've obtained significant concessions from Europe on fighting terrorism in exchange for withholding sanctions on European companies. And they justify U.S. investment in Syria as helpful in drawing that country into the Middle East peace process.

But the lack of action has upset some Republicans, who view sanctions as necessary weapons against terrorism, and the pro-Israel lobby, which favors economic pressure against Iran, Libya and other enemies of Israel.

Rep. Benjamin A. Gilman, R-N.Y., chairman of the House International Relations Committee, charges the Clinton administration with "essentially creating a blanket waiver" for oil companies investing in Iran or Libya.

Iran, in particular, he said, "remains a major terrorist threat around the world and a source of instability for our allies throughout the Middle East."

This year the Clinton administration will come under new pressure to pull its punches on sanctions as Libya opens its doors to international oil investment and Western corporations line up to tap that nation's brimming oil fields.

"There's a sense that there are big finds yet to be made" in Libya, said Marvin Zonis, a business professor at the University of Chicago and consultant to international corporations.

Court strikes voting law

By Joan Biskupic
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – Ruling in a closely watched race discrimination case, the Supreme Court yesterday struck down a Hawaiian voting restriction designed to benefit descendants of the original islanders. The justices said the law unconstitutionally makes distinctions among people based on their ancestry.

By a 7-to-2 vote, the court declared the Hawaii law violates the Fifteenth Amendment's mandate that people not be denied a vote on account of race. Dissenting justices said the decision ignores the history of the 50th state and government efforts to compensate for past bias against indigenous peoples.

While the ruling directly affects only Hawaii, the attitude of the majority opinion reflects the Rehnquist Court's continuing drive against government policies that give advantages to racial minorities who historically have faced discrimination. It also apparently marks the first time the court has used the Fifteenth Amendment, which was adopted after the Civil War to protect blacks, to safeguard the rights of a white man.

The law involves elections for trustees to a state agency that provides economic and social aid to people who trace their ancestry to the islands' inhabitants in 1778, when England's Captain Cook and his expedition arrived. Under the law, only those descendants of native Hawaiians could vote for trustees of the agency, the Office of Hawaiian Affairs.

In the court's opinion yesterday, Justice Anthony M. Kennedy emphasized that the voting requirement rests, in the end, on the demeaning premise that citizens of a particular race are somehow more qualified than others to vote on certain matters."

He was joined by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, all of whom voted with him. That five-some has vigorously rejected racial classifications, and their opinion echoed a theme from past decisions: that drawing lines between races perpetuates rather than redeems, past wrongs.

To accept the position advanced by the state would give rise to the same indignities and the same resulting tensions and animosities the Constitution "was designed to dispel," Kennedy wrote.

NIH defends its oversight

By Rick Weiss
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – Officials at the National Institutes of Health yesterday defended their oversight of the controversial field of gene therapy, as a congressman accused the agency of failing to thoroughly investigate experiments in which patients may have been harmed.

In a letter sent yesterday to NIH acting director Ruth Kirschstein, Rep. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., scolded the agency for its "inadequate" regulation of gene therapy, an experimental form of treatment that has come under intense public scrutiny since the September death of a teen-age volunteer at the University of Pennsylvania. Criticism of the field increased this winter amid revelations that researchers had failed to report hundreds of adverse events – including many deaths – to the NIH as required by federal regulations.

While much of the initial criticism following the Penn death was aimed at researchers who broke federal disclosure rules, Waxman and others have been focusing on possible lapses by federal regulators at the NIH and the Food and Drug Administration. Wednesday's letter outlines three cases in which Waxman believes the NIH allowed mishaps to slip between the regulatory cracks.

Its first involved James Wilson, a leader of the study that led to last year's death at Penn who wrote to the NIH in 1996 to report the death of a volunteer. The letter prompted only a couple of lines on the draft minutes of that meeting, which, Waxman said, would be expected by the agency to help clarify the causes of deaths. But in documents recently released by NIH, Waxman said, "not one word of evidence that such data were ever considered ... that NIH ever asked for them."

It is a recurring issue. At 18 separate NIH meetings, patients died during a gene therapy experiment at the MD Anderson Cancer Center in Houston without appropriate intervention from NIH.

In a third example, an NIH pharmacologist at the same peer-based experimental meeting in December in Georgetown, Texas, where those who died in the drug have since passed.

An NIH spokesman said all three incidents were addressed appropriately by the NIH and the FDA and that NIH will respond shortly to Mr. Waxman in depth and in writing.

The first two cases were among many made public by the agency's last December. In actual, all of which were already known by a special ad hoc committee of experts.

They could be famous someday!

The Active Ingredients improv group, shown here at a performance last semester, will be performing this Friday night at 8 P.M. in Fine Classroom. They will be holding open auditions for new members the following day from 12 P.M. to 2 P.M. in Campus Center room 101.

In the depths of the library...

Students study hard in the W.E.B. Dubois Library.

SGA

continued from page

appointed on the spot.

It's always difficult to get freshmen interested in Billard said. It's tough to get people who want to be dedicated to be an election committee because it's such a small time span but requires a lot of dedication and commitment."

Billard said there is a good possibility that election nominations might open today.

Other business approved by the Senate during last night's meeting included a proposition by President House that would allow students to seek exemption from the campus meal plan once they have lived in a campus residence hall for more than four semesters or fulfilled the minimum Student Senator Seth Avakian spoke on behalf of President House and stated that the current system allows exemption only if both requirements have been met. However, the University considers a student to be full time when they are enrolled in 12 credits per semester.

Over a period of four semesters, this could result in a student having fewer than 30 credits and thus would require them to remain on the meal plan in the beginning of their junior year, Avakian said.

The approved motion states that only one requirement needs to be met in order to seek exemption.

During the meeting, Avakian spoke on a current court case in the Supreme Court. The hearing of Southworth v. Grebe involves a ruling that could decimate the Student Activities Fund and significantly impact the Ways and Means process, Avakian said.

According to him, this would mean that all religious groups and many political groups on campus could loose all funding. He said the Senate is trying to be pro-active in regards to the ruling that could potentially mean the elimination of funding for many Registered Student Organizations (RSOs).

A press conference is tentatively set to be held next Wednesday at the State House.

Correction:

In the Collegian, yesterday, February 23, 2000 an article entitled, "Camera bought by UMass funds to aid firefighters," it was said that the University purchased the thermal camera, but the University has actually arranged for a reduction in the sale price and the funds will be reimbursed by the Town of Amherst. The Collegian regrets the error.

DATADYNE, a private global technology corporation, is looking for trustworthy individuals of all backgrounds interested in the opportunity to reshape the future.

We are looking for risk takers to handle highly sensitive technological information who are able to accomplish
a variety of tasks while maintaining an open mind.

Offering excellent pay, flexible hours, full benefits, travel, stock options, on-the-job training and more.
Ability to work well under pressure and adequate self-defense skills a definite plus.
Part-time/full-time help needed in entry-level and above.
No experience necessary.

Visit our Web site for more details.

DATADYNE corp.

Coming to your campus soon

www.datadyne.com

Our opinion

Cruel and unusual

The death penalty. Cruel and unusual punishment. These are thorny issues, often combined, sometimes with no clear solution. In one recent case, however, the logical answer appeared to be cut-and-dry; then the decision was made.

By a five to four vote yesterday, the Supreme Court ruled in favor of the state of Alabama keeping the electric chair as its only available form of the death penalty. An in inmate on the Alabama death row had taken the state to court over the lack of other means of execution. Robert Lee Tarver, the inmate in question, made his case on the claim that the electric chair was old, and exposed him to the risk of excessive pain and burning that could be avoided by other types of execution.

The court decision was not binding and did not set precedent, but it will allow Tarver and other inmates in the Alabama and other systems which rely solely on the electric chair to be executed in that manner up until the time where the court does make a permanent decision.

1890. That was the year in which the electric chair was first used to execute a convicted killer. Over one hundred years ago, a century which featured more than a little technological innovations over its course. The electric chair still functions today as it did then, with electrodes fastened to the head and ankle of the convict, and then a current run through the person's body until death.

It isn't quite that simple, however. The very first electric chair execution took two tries, with the body and hair of the condemned man burned and blood coming from the man's face. The process never really became much smoother, as cases of faulty wiring, human error, and simply not working have come to light consistently over the years. As recently as the 1990s two electric chair cases reached the Supreme Court, one of a man where it took four shocks to kill the inmate while he literally smoked and sparked, and another where the man was burned to death rather than electrocuted because the cables of the chair were connected wrong.

It is true that other methods of execution are not perfect. The prisoner is conscious while the poison rises around him in the gas chamber, and sometimes people can have allergic reactions to lethal injection, or it can be difficult to find the vein in order to administer the drugs. Either of these methods, however, are much more modern and fail-safe to use than the electric chair.

The Supreme Court case wasn't about banning or discontinuing use of the electric chair – it was about providing an alternative to prisoners who, even if they cannot live, want a more reasonable chance of ensuring that their deaths will be clean.

Alabama will not have to scrap their current methods, but in the name of the humanity of the prisoners on death row they should be required to give the option of the gas chamber or lethal injection to their inmates. It is cruel and unusual punishment to force people into archaic, faulty equipment where it is known that there is a great chance that the death will be painful and slow.

We at the Daily Collegian believe that the Supreme Court has made the wrong decision in this case, and that, the next time an appeal of this sort should come around, the more human decision should be reached. Give prisoners the option.

The Southwick will rise again

I'm from Southwick, Massachusetts. I've only lived there for about five years, but that's the town on my first driver's license so I guess that's where I'm from. If you look at a map of Massachusetts Southwick is the little notch in the Southwest that dips into Connecticut. Although it may seem like a very insignificant part of the state, country, and world nothing could be farther from the truth.

Let me start by telling you a little about this town. It is a small town where values and morals are still important. Southwick is a town where your neighbors are your friends unless you don't get along. It's a town without ugly fast food restaurants except for McDonalds. It's a town where the enticing aroma of cow manure can be smelled for miles around on a hot summer's day. It's a town where men are honest except for when they lie and women are faithful except for when they cheat. Most importantly Southwick is a good spirited small town with the best doughnuts on the East Coast.

Dan Viens

At the turn of the century (100 years ago not last month) this country was on the verge of its second civil war in 50 years. This time it wasn't over slavery it was all over the small Connecticut town of Southwick. The people of this town felt that they could no longer be a part of Connecticut. There were two alternatives at the time. They could either secede to form their own state or they could attempt to be annexed by the great state of Massachusetts. In 1901, the townspeople of Southwick, Conn. officially voted to become a part of Massachusetts. The vote was 318 to 7. The seven people who voted to remain part of Connecticut turned out to be oxen with family in Southern Connecticut.

On the fifth day of May Southwick declared its secession from the state of Connecticut. This is why they celebrate Cinco de Mayo in Mexico. Eric Varnhook, a brave young Southwickian, brought the now-famous Declaration of Secession to the statehouse in Hartford, Conn., Included in the DOS were the reasons why Southwick wished to no longer be a part of Connecticut. The reasons stated were as follows:

1. Hartford is going to be a very substandard state capital in about 70 years.

It would make us all much happier to live in a state that starts with the letter N than the letter C.

2. No pro sports teams. (The Red Sox were a juggernaut in those days)

3. Gas prices are now and in the future will be way too high in Connecticut.

4. We want to be highly visible on a map. If we stay with you we will just be a small part of that straight line separating CT and MA. And finally...

5. We want to be from the same state as the Kennedys.

Let me clear something up for all of you. The then leader of Southwick was known only as Kukoshvian. He was a self-proclaimed psychic who warned his townsfolk of the future dangers of living in the state of Connecticut. He felt that by sharing his psychic visions he would be helping future Southwickians live happier and simpler lives.

When Eric Varnhook arrived in Hartford with the Declaration of Secession he promptly had his throat slit. He was then fastened to his mule and sent back to Southwick. The main problem with Southwick's declaration was that the governor's son was the chief mapmaker in the state of Connecticut. He was going to be damned before he made a whole bunch of new maps just so a little notch could be taken out of CT. He threw such a temper tantrum that the governor decided to slit the messenger's throat and go to war over the matter. He figured that a war would be cheaper than making a ton of new maps.

When Eric Varnhook returned to Southwick dead on his horse Kukoshvian and the rest of the town were terrified. They didn't know what would come next. Kukoshvian was getting psychic signals that Connecticut was coming to attack Southwick. The town knew that if they didn't want to live in a state with a substandard capital they would have to act fast. The small group of citizens knew that by themselves they had a very slim chance of conquering the huge army of Connecticut (It had the eleventh biggest state army at the time). They knew the only way they would be able to beat the CT army was Ewok style. The Southwickians would have to prepare traps and secret attacks just like the Ewoks in Return of The Jedi.

> "In 1901 the townspeople of Southwick, CT officially voted to become a part of Massachusetts. The vote was 318 to 7. The seven people who voted to remain part of Connecticut turned out to be oxen with family in Southern Connecticut."

About 36 hours after Varnhook returned dead on his mule the Connecticut army was advancing on the small border town of Southwick. The Connecticut army equipped with their tanks, guns and huge infantry began laughing. As they saw the hundreds of Southwickians standing approximately 100 yards behind the town's windmills with slings and shovels in hand. General Mackom of the Connecticut army felt that he would be greatly rewarded if he could avoid many fatalities in this foolish battle. He also knew that if things got out of control this could escalate into a civil war. He instructed all of the tanks and army vehicles to advance on the townsfolk. He said that this would intimidate them and then everyone could go home. All of the vehicles advanced. The Southwickians stood strong. The tanks got closer. The Southwickians actually kind of smiled. Then it happened. As soon as all the tanks got about ten feet past the windmills they sunk into a swamp of manure. The Southwickians had taken all of that year's manure and made a huge moat of it. They then covered it with turf to appear like ground. Upon seeing this some of the infantry started shooting and some retreated. When this happened the Southwickians began firing manure from their catapults into the windmills. This manure covered what was left of the infantry.

The Connecticut army was beaten. Each soldier either drowned in manure or was sent back to Hartford covered in it. From that day forward Southwick has been postal code number 01077 in the state of Massachusetts. It has turned into a great town which many famous people like Rebecca Lobo and ... well, I guess just Rebecca Lobo, can call home.

Dan Viens is a Collegian columnist.

Kathleen Ralls

Dreams fizzle but hot pink skates never die

Did you ever want to be that person in the middle of the roller or ice skating rink? You know the one who has the whole outfit kicking and the top of the line equipment (skates without rainbows or hot pink wheels?) I always did. But I was just one of the herd who narrowly escaped destruction as I weaved around the four pylons that protected those few standouts. I had accomplished so much in those laps, crossovers, going backwards, shoot-the-duck, but never had the courage to take my game into the ring.

Sometimes it's hard to let old dreams die. When I was 14-years-old a friend told me a story she read about this 24-year-old woman who became depressed when she realized she was probably never going to rule the world. The woman was working at a good job but felt sadness, the kind that lets you know those childhood dreams are gone and not coming back.

I haven't experienced those pangs yet, maybe because my minute ego never lets me think that far in advance. Well that's not entirely true. I once thought I had the tools to be a great figure skater. I still do, actually. But I know that's not a realistic goal in my life. For one thing, I don't know how to apply blue eye shadow or how to whisp my hair up into a perfect ponytail. Not to mention that I have no poise nor mini-skirts and leotards to practice in.

That doesn't mean I have completely given up on my dream. This semester I've hit the ice in a big way – free skate at the Mullins Center every Tuesday and Thursday with my friend Amy. I thought I would give it one more chance, I guess you could say it is my college try. After this semester, I'll will either have to fast-forward my training for Utah in 2002 or just find Michelle Kwan's design your own uniform and routine game to play on my computer (you even get a replica locket just like the one she wears in competition).

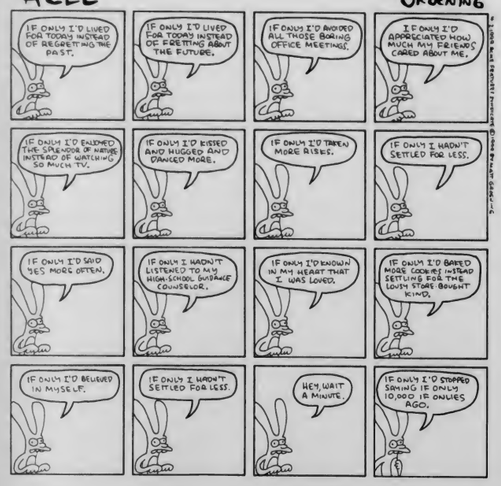
None of that matters at Mullins, though, as little girls with pink knee braces hold themselves up by leaning on crates and grown men whiz around on their old-school Dick Button figure skates. With only a few other delusional people out there (Amy and I might be the only two, the others out there haven't reached kindergarten yet), we find time and room to explore our artistic and athletic abilities. Nonetheless, even on the days when there is no superstar twirling around the middle, I still feel like its hallowed surface cannot be scratched up by my meager skills.

Amy has a couple slight advantages over me. One is the fact that she took Figure Skating I last semester with the second being that she has real white figure skates and I scrape around on my CCM Tacks. Other than that, we have pretty much have the same non-graceful style that any judge in their right mind would disqualify on first site. My skates are without toe picks, making it difficult to perform any kind of miracle on ice besides crossovers, but I try not to let that stop me. She can actually turn one revolution while I focus on the bunny hops in my own circle. My main skill is that I can kind of stay on course when doing Russian circles, all the while wishing they were the most difficult compulsory to qualify for the Olympics.

I know about judges from my experience with the 1988 Winter Olympics. Of course I was in fourth grade and wasn't actually there. In fact, I hadn't even been on ice skates at that point in my life, but that didn't stop me.

My best friend at the time, Katie, and my sister Sarrah and I pretended we were real skaters. I had to be American Debi Thomas. She was the U.S. national champion that year and was destined to capture the gold. Katie was the evil Katerina Witt from Germany, who dueled Thomas with the same song "Carmen." Since my sister is three years younger and wasn't really a willing participant, she was the judge. I was kicking myself for not being nicer to her prior to the big competition.

I imagined myself swirling around on the Olympic-size rink to the song of my choice, maybe even George Michael's "One More Try" would do (since Debi skated to that in the freestyle). We would make up routines right on the brown rug of my living room, announcing whether each move was a double or triple Sow Cow. We were an even match since Katie had those expert dance class moves but I had home turf advantage.



Unfortunately for Debi Thomas, she fell and took home the bronze medal while Witt seduced the judges to the top and a gold medal. Luckily for me, I took home gold that same night, somehow nullifying Thomas' disappointing performance in my own elementary mind.

I'll admit that I have a long way to go before I can even make it into the circle with the good players. My running pants probably won't impress the judges, nor will my oven-mitten gloves, but those are minor setbacks. Maybe I can set an example for the little kids concerning what not to do on skates in public.

For now, I can still wish that my pink and blue roller skates could come back and style. And come back in my size.

Kathleen Ralls is Collegian columnist.

LIFE IN HELL

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Ben Alamed Web Developer Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jamie Gorlowsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stoker Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor

Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Mensched Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Amy Gargania Assistant Business Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Real life Indie legend visits UMass

Kevin Smith. The indie film world's success story. Or at least the best known success story on a college campus. Explicit during his to visit to UMass this week, Smith has become a cult hero among students, embraced for his penchant for genitalia jokes and base but truthful humor about life. The honesty in his work is appealing, addressing relationships, disenchantment, sexuality, and religion without inhibitions.

Clerks is where it all started for Smith; a 90 minute film about two guys working in a convenient store, shot in black and white, fully funded by the writer/director/actor himself. In 1994 Clerks caught the attention of major audiences at the Sundance Film Festival. From there its recognition steadily increased, establishing a strong Smith following and eventually became his definitive film. Clerks was the first film to speak so unabashedly about post-adolescence apathy with a wealth of oral sex references as it thrived on its ability to make people feel good about doing nothing with their lives.

His follow up project, Mallrats was largely a disappointment. This time he used "real actors" like Shannon Doherty of 90210 fame. But some good came of it, giving birth to the Jason Lee and Ben Affleck rapport that followed in his next two films. The film didn't attempt to tackle any issues of real substance beneath its watered down Smith humor and though adored by the Smith following of Clerks days, the movie is often given secondary credit. But it did bring Smith into national movie theatres and mainstream reception.

Chasing Amy, his third film, completely reassured any wavering in Smith fans. Tackling his most poignant topics yet, the movie was an open forum about homosexuality and the unfortunate dynamics that tend to destroy relationships. Smith got serious, but continued to deliver his ideas under the protective mask of bathroom humor. Chasing Amy critically put Smith in the same circles as major filmmakers, expanding his audience and his validity in the industry.

In his most recent theatrical effort Smith gained a new kind of press with violent attacks from the Catholic Church, claiming that his film Dogma was an uncensored attack on their institution. Smith defended these assaults on the grounds that although it was a movie that examined the Catholic Church, it ultimately encouraged audiences to have faith. At the box office the movie was a success. It received mixed reviews for its technical delivery, but Smith's originality and audacity to broach his own concepts of religion was undeniable.

While Smith's respect as a writer and filmmaker grows, he is making a slow but tasteful transition into the mainstream film world. His movies have big names, big budgets, and lots of advertising now, but his dedication to doing what he wants, what he feels is honest, has hardly been touched.

Kristi Ceccasrassi is a Collegian staff member.

layout and design by Kara Stoker

Mike

Defining art from commerce

Kristi

ossi

Dav

During the aftermath of America's hyperculture detonation, its independent film genre was gradually diffused into contemporary cinema. Engulfed by a whirlwind of business mega mergers and international Internet marketing, the hair-line price dividing major minor market movies became indecipherably blurrier. As a result, filmmakers working in the indie circuit were narrowly defined by a common formula: low budgets, art house innovations and technically adept styles. Cable television's Independent Film Channel (IFC) is a prime illustration of how these formulas are legitimized by entertainment systems, and over time, the mediated mainstream ultimately re-identified the characteristics of independent film.

Through the incredible layers of the industry, enthusiastic cinema has been hoisted and aggressively repositioned in popular culture. Wherein, the outcast artist quickly became the enterprising peddler, pushing his product with the new international current he demonstrates. Paralleling the music renaissance of the "grunge" era, paradoxical stars, films were given a social spotlight and megaphone to stage and voice their stories. Miramax, the flagship company of the mid-nineties cult film renaissance, produced a variety of angsty, avant-garde movies from Reservoir Dogs (1991) to Trainspotting (1995) to Swingers (1996). Even Kevin Smith's Clerks (1994), the raunchy, Gen-X comedy that redefined a "shoe-lace budget," was somewhat circumscribed as an art-house film because of its Sundance acclaim. Certainly Smith's ability to augment and cleverly analyze reality, via heavy dialogue, is directly linked to his appeal. Ironically, some of his indie contemporaries have magnetized their demonstrative audiences by satirically shocking them. Sophomore writer/director Todd Solondz (Welcome to the Dollhouse, Happiness), Neil LaBute (In the Company of Men, Your Friend's Your Neighbors) and Alexander Payne (Citizen Ruth, Election) have collectively applauded black comedy with a lucent understanding of characters and society.

In Happiness, a wrathfully profound under-look at American suburbia, Solondz aesthetically masters the emotionally-ritual conflict. With his calm and blissful textures, his viewer is lured into hypnosis, unconsciously filtering the film's abhorrent climate. LaBute does equitable wonders with his sinister comedy. In the Company of Men. He creates mockeries so malicious that we break into exuberant hysteria and later morally chastise ourselves for it. Payne, perhaps the satirist of satirists, effortlessly dissects a neoteric high school in Election, a movie that constructs its ethnical frame and then vengefully tosses it like a paper airplane. While each of the aforementioned filmmakers has received appropriate acclaim, the dark and disturbing cynicism embodied by their films

Turn to MOVIES page 9

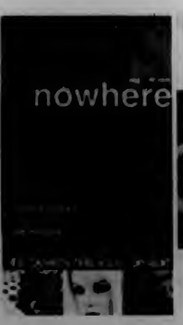
Independently successful

What is an independent film? What constitutes an independent director and how does that director stay independent? These are questions that can be argued about by people who have nothing better to do than throw around the word "sell out" and condemn the major studios. I usually don't get involved in these conversations. All I know is that some of the finest films of recent years have been made by so-called "independent" directors. These films help remind us of the auteur in filmmaking, when a director's vision prevails instead of the need for star power or the latest trend. All of these films are creative and original that they remind us why we love movies in the first place. Therefore, here is my pathetically incomplete, but hopefully partially enlightening list of recent "independent" film directors and some of their best films.

Paul Thomas Anderson is certainly one of my favorite directors as of late. He has directed three films, 1996's Hard Light, Boogie Nights, and his recent love it or speak-loudly-about-how-you-hate-it opus, Magnolia. Hard Light was a great little film about the inner of some lowlifes in Las Vegas, except these guys definitely weren't money, baby. This is the film that established the core group of actors that Anderson has made roles for in all three of his films. From that group in Hard Light are Philip Baker Hall, John C. Reilly, and Philip Seymour Hoffman. Stellar performances from all naturally, though the complex relationship between Hall and Hoffman is the most interesting and emotional.

Non-Anderson regulars Gwyneth Paltrow and Samuel L. Jackson are also present to give stellar performances in a film that is like Magnolia in that the performances far outweigh the plot in terms of impact. Boogie Nights, Anderson's best film, was where outstanding performances were met with an outstanding plot for truly one of the most memorable film experiences of the 90s. A film detailing the 70's porn industry would have been interesting enough, but Anderson goes above and beyond by creating unforgettable characters and situations. Boogie Nights was a grand and epic film in terms of emotion, but Anderson felt the need to be even grander in the recent Magnolia.

Unquestionably an in-your-face statement of fancy filmmaker tricks, but the film transcends feeling like a snooty lesson in camera work by creating some of Anderson's most memorable characters. Actors apart from the core crew know they must be completely on their game to not look ridiculous beside the regulars, and Tom Cruise certainly lives up to the task as the hilarious Frank T.J. Mackey. The Aimee Mann singalong, raining frogs scene, and masterful dialogue in Magnolia all reaffirm Anderson's place as one of the most daring and creative directors of recent memory.



Todd Solondz is another director whose short time on the scene has turned a lot of heads. His two films, Welcome to the Dollhouse and Happiness, both have characters that feel so real that you wonder if Todd was at your last family gathering with a camera in the bushes. Dollhouse introduced the world to Heather Matarazzo, the perfect candidate for the film's tortured adolescent girl. The characters are all hilarious, and Matarazzo's interactions with her fictional family and friends are ones you won't soon forget. Happiness is damn near brilliant. Its all about how people hate each other and treat each other like crap, so it's a film that is easy to relate to for most people. Sometimes disturbing, often hilarious, but always deadly accurate, it stands as one of the most accurate and telling portrayals of human nature in recent cinema.

Wes Anderson is another director who has

Turn to INDEPENDENT page 9

Oasis lets out; Cure brood in finale

Buckethead fries up plenty of guitar-driven masterpieces

GO LET IT OUT
Oasis
Big Brother

Go Let It Out" is the first single off the new Oasis album Standing on the Shoulder of Giants, and it is also the first release from Noel Gallagher's new record label Big Brother Records. This review also begins a series of reviews, including the new album and subsequent sequels, where I transform from music critic into obsessed fan. I love Oasis; they are probably my favorite band so a review of their music should probably be left to an objective outsider who can look at things rationally. Not a chance. If any Oasis product is released from albums to showerheads, I will be in the Collegian telling everyone how it is brilliant and everyone needs to have it. Now that this is out of the way, let's get on with it.

"Go Let It Out" is classic. I didn't really like it when I first heard it, namely because any new Oasis would be a little disappointing, even to me, after three years worth of anticipation. But as I heard it more and more, all the subtleties revealed themselves: the unforgettable bassline, Liam's perfect vocals, the rousing reprise at the end. I still don't get the whole "princes and kings" lyric, but I don't get a lot of Oasis lyrics and the mystery makes them that much cooler. The other two tracks on the single are "Let's All Make Believe" and "(As Long As They've Got) Cigarettes in Hell." The first is an excellent ballad with some of the group's most powerful lyrics. Liam questions God, lovalty, all before the depressing chorus of "Let's all make believe/that we're still friends and we like each other."

The second is unfortunately one of the worst Oasis tracks I have heard in a good while. The whole thing is just silly, from the title to Noel's seeming to take the lyrics seriously. But wait, it's Oasis, so it only achieves a low level of badness, and it's certainly listenable. "Let's All Make Believe" is good enough to recommend a purchase even if you have the album. But with only two extra tracks instead of the traditional three and one of them being pretty lackluster, I can't give the single what the first two songs would deserve, which is an A+. So it will have to settle for an A-.
(Michael Delano)

THE CURE
Bloodflowers
Fiction/ Elektra

After twenty years in the business The Cure's thirteenth studio album, Bloodflowers, has been said by the band to probably be their last. This claim has been made several times in the past, but if there is sincerity this time than what a way to go out.

Boxed with writing of light and happiness, singer/songwriter/guitarist Robert Smith exposes us to the darker side of his personality as he so powerfully did with 1982's Pornography and 1989's Disintegration. The singer's painful awareness of his own mortality seems to be the theme. Even the track "There Is No If..." progresses from what one would think is a love song to a realization that both Smith and his love will die. The music is brooding, atmospheric sounds swirl like a vortex around melodic vocals. Acoustic and distorted guitars

The disk opens with "Out of this World" where Smith reluctantly admits that his time in his own created world is fleeting: "I realize we only get to stay so long/Always have to go back to real lives where we belong." This song flows effortlessly into the disassociative "Watching Me Fall." This is an eleven-minute song about a past meeting with a Geisha girl. "Where the Birds Sing" and "39" are pleasant, but the best song on the album is the title track, where tribal-sounding drums meet with swelling guitars. Being the last track on the album, it is fitting that Smith's character dies "I let fall flowers of blood." And, perhaps fitting for the end of The Cure's recording career...

All in all, Bloodflowers is a hauntingly beautiful album full of epic songs (only one clocks in at under five minutes). Rejecting many pop rules, this album is a wonderful alternative to the twelve-year-old-girl directed music on today's radio. Robert Smith and the boys prove once again, maybe for the last time, that as time goes by The Cure just gets better and better. A wonderful piece of art. A-
(Tim Dolan)

BUCKETHEAD
Monsters and Robots
Cyberoctave

Yes, it is true that this album hit the streets close to a year ago, but when someone gives you a free CD, you just don't say no. After seeing the guitar prodigy Buckethead perform twice with Primus I was intrigued to pick up one of his albums when Monsters and Robots landed in my hands. Buckethead as a performer is kind of hard to miss on stage. He stands nearly seven feet tall, is incredibly thin and lanky, wears a white mask and a bucket of KFC chicken on his head, and will put on a demonstration of his skills with nunchucks if the spirit moves him. Oh yeah, he is also one of most talented guitar players one will witness in his or her lifetime. His robotic movements on stage seem fitting, since his skill on the guitar is so great it is hard to believe it is human. While Buckethead only had a limited time to wow the crowd both times I witnessed him on Monsters and Robots he is able to wow the listener for close to an hour. The album also gives Buckethead a chance to impress

Turn to TRAX, page 9

Trax On Trax Off

Filmmaker's lens turns to hate crimes

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Brent Scarpo, a very experienced filmmaker who has spent a good part of the last few years compiling a film about hate crimes, will preview a fill that will eventually run as an HBO special at UMass on Thursday night. The film, which Scarpo co-produced with Martin Bedogn, Journey to a Hate Free Millennium, includes interviews with people such as Judy Shepard, (Mother of Matthew Sheperd) students and parents of Columbine High School, the family of James Byrd, Holocaust survivors, Elton John, John Dye, and Olivia Newton John.

The presentation will be shown at 7 p.m. at the Campus Center Auditorium and is free to the public.

Scarpo has been taking his project on the road in an attempt to encourage discussion about hate in America. His project includes some very extensive coverage of the beating death of Matthew Shepard, who was the victim of a homophobic crime in October 1998. The project boasts that Shepard's parents agreed to participate in only one project since the hate-related murder of their son, and this is it.

In some of the interviews with Judy Shepard, the victim's mother explains her deep sorrow and her hope that hate can be eliminated from our society. She goes on to say how "excited" she is about Scarpo's film, and "would like to express their (Shepard and her husband) wholehearted support." When talking about Scarpo and Bedogne's film, she explains how she and her husband have been "overwhelmed by requests to endorse films related to their son," but have chosen to endorse theirs over the many others because they believe that the filmmaker's mission and goals are in line with our own, and those of Matthew.

She went on to say, "We are especially enthusiastic about their plans to develop an educational component for distribution in schools throughout the country. There is a tremendous need to address these issues with our young people in order to create a world where every person is accepted and valued, and therefore ensure that what happened to Matthew and our family will never happen again."

Besides the interviews with

Turn to HATE, page 8

PLEASE DRINK RESPONSIBLY.

Or you could wake up handcuffed to a very large, sweaty man wearing a blonde wig and lederhosen.

CIDER JACK HARD CIDER

Council Travel
The journey is the reward...
Give your family & friends the gift of travel
Gift certificates, passport photos, airport transfers, tours, language programs, work exchanges, ISIC backpacks, rolling duffels, & all sorts of gear, guidebooks, railpasses, tickets, accommodations and more.
44 Main Street
Amherst MA
413-256-1261

Alternative Spring Break
5 days in the Ozarks, MO
Meditation, Yoga, Music & Dance, Self discovery, Lots of Fun.
Vegetarian Food,
$195 pre registration, rideshare
www.ru-students.cx
1-800-870 5348

安琥中國餐店
AMHERST
CHINESE FOOD
we do not use "MSG"
253-7835 • 253-2813
82 Main Street, Amherst

ON SALE SATURDAY AT 10AM!

CREED

with special guest

SEVENDUST

SATURDAY • APRIL 15

MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst

TICKETS AT THE MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE,
AT ALL ticketmaster OUTLETS
& CHARGE-BY-PHONE: (413) 733-2500 • (860) 525-4500.
PURCHASE TICKETS ONLINE: www.ticketmaster.com
EVENT DATE & TIME SUBJECT TO CHANGE.
OUTLET, INTERNET & PHONE CHARGE ORDERS SUBJECT TO CONVENIENCE CHARGES.

PRODUCED BY METROPOLITAN ENTERTAINMENT GROUP
AN OGDEN ENTERTAINMENT COMPANY WWW.CONCERTHOTLINE.COM

Creed's Albums Human Clay and My Own Prison in stores now

COURTESY PATRICK'S COSMIC MUSE

Machina to come

The Pumpkins, minus D'Arcy, encourage you to check out next week's Arts cover where they'll take center stage.

■ hate

continued from page 6

the Shepard family. Journey to a Hate Free Millennium also presents issues that arose from the horrible massacre at Columbine High School in 1999. The crime centered on Dylan Klebold's and Eric Harris' hatred towards races and religions that they felt were inferior to their own. The film also includes an interview with a former Neo-nazi, and also several interviews with Holocaust survivors.

Scarpo has worked in Hollywood for the past fifteen years as an actor and casting director. Some of his work has been donated to films such as Air Force One, That Thing You Do!, and The Shawshank Redemption. He says that the purpose of his film is to "challenge viewers to question the purpose of hate in our country. To discover why hate occurs, what happens to those who choose to hate and what might be possible if hate could be eliminated from our society." It is also Scarpo's desire to spark a lot of discussion during the event, stemmed from the interviews that will force people to feel the painful consequences of hate.

■ independent

continued from page 5

made a strong name for himself in the span of only two films. Bottle Rocket follows the trail of some bumbling thieves who have much more ambition than talent, a realization that comes all too fast. Luke and Owen Wilson are easily the standout performances in this film, and when I see them go on to do Home Fries and The Haunting, respectively, it's enough to bring a tear to my eye. Rushmore was a complete change of pace from Anderson's first film, but showed amazing maturity and talent for a sophomore effort. Bill Murray plays Herman Blume and tones down the humor for a truly affecting performance that was, like so many, neglected by the increasingly retarded (I'm reluctant to use that term, but come on, they just are) Oscar voters. Blume's relationship with the young Max (Jason Schwartzman) brings out amazing qualities in both actors and by the end it seems almost like destiny that the two found each other.

I couldn't write an article about independent film without mentioning the coolest movie studio of all time: Troma. But since we are on the subject of directors, I will pick out the obvious one. Lloyd Kaufman. Although some of his finest work is in the past, such as The Toxic Avenger (best movie ever) and Sgt. Kabukiman N.Y.P.D., Tromatics recently got a lot to be happy about with 1996's Tromeo and Juliet. It had the gore, nudity, and humor that made Troma the name it is today. And since Lloyd has recently released a new horror film, Terror Firmer, fans have a new reason to get excited. I can't explain the appeal of Troma movies; you either get it or you don't. But if you get it, you can experience some of the most hilarious and over the top films ever made.

There are many great directors that I missed, so here's a quick list of other great directors that I wish I had the time and space to address in more detail. Spike Jonze, who is definitely the man, just directed Being John Malcovich and if you have any interest in film you should have already seen it or be in the process of dropping this paper and running to any theater that still has it. Alexander Payne is the mind behind last year's incredible Election as well as Citizen Ruth. You can call David O. Russell mainstream since he did Three Kings, but he is still amazing and you should check out his earlier work like Spanking the Monkey and the hilarious Flirting with Disaster. Finally, don't miss James Toback's upcoming film Black and White, which looks extremely promising, and if you have any interest in him make sure to find a copy of 1997's Two Girls and a Guy.

Mike Delano is a Collegian staff member.

During Engineers Week, Learn To

Make a Million Bucks

Does not require printing press and green ink

 What it does require is the good sense for you to attend the talk "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire: Investment Strategies for People Starting Out" on Wednesday, Feb. 23 at 5:30 p.m. in the Gunness Engineering Student Center, Marcus Hall.

You don't have to be an engineer to attend. Other events this week include:

Today! 11 a.m. The tables are turned: Faculty Research Showcase, Gunness Engineering Student Center, Marcus Hall.

Today! Noon. Paper airplane contest. PRIZES! Make your plane when you arrive, and fly your plane off the balcony of the Fine Arts Center Auditorium.

Friday 11 a.m. – 2 p.m. Mini vehicle design and accuracy contest, Gunness Engineering Student Center, Marcus Hall. PRIZES! Contact Matt Podkowka at podkowka@student.umass.edu or dsturgis@ecs.umass.edu for more details.

Friday 3:30 p.m. Showcase: Design Projects to Aid the Disabled, 19 Gunness Lab.

Sponsored by GE Plastics, Precision Tectonix, J & E Precision Tool, EMC² Corporation, i2 Technologies, Eric Thorgerson, Lee Pearlmutter, and JEOL USA.

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS

Discount Discount

18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441

Featuring "Ickehouse & Red Dog" $10.49 30/PK

Setter Home White Zinfandel $3.99 750 ml

"Busch & Busch Light" "Pabst Blue Ribbon" $9.99 30/PK

MILWAUKEE'S BEST $9.99 30/PK

HOLLANDIA Imported from Holland $14.49 case both

Vodka 80 EVERYDAY PRICE! $8.99 1.75 lt

Brewery Hill Micro Beers $4.49 6/pk

Guinness "Pub Cans" $4.69 4 pk

Yagermeister	$14.99 750ml
Kahlua	$12.99 750ml
Glen Ellen, Cabernet Sauvignon & Chardonnay	$4.99 750ml
Bacardi Limon	$19.99 1.75 liter

Check Out RUSSELL'S In Door Special's

• Delivery Available • OPEN 9:00AM to 11:00PM • Visa/Mastercard • All Beers Plus Deposit •

IT'S YOUR BODY

If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.

DANA BODY SHOP

968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

Warehouse Selectors Needed!

If you need a job that fits into your busy school schedule, then look into the outstanding opportunities available at C&S, the nation's fastest growing wholesale food distributor. We have immediate openings for enthusiastic, team-oriented students to play an integral role in our expansion.

Flexible Schedules • Great Pay

We'll train you, give you $12.50 per hour working part-time, extend your hours to full time during breaks, and offer you a dynamic work environment. For more information, please visit us on campus, call 1-800-621-5953, or apply in person Monday-Friday, 8am-4pm, or Saturdays from 9am-1pm, at: Employment Center, C&S Wholesale Grocers, Inc., 142 Elm Street, just off Route 91, Exit 21, Hatfield, MA

Visit us at The Campus Center Feb 24th, 10am - 3pm BRING YOUR FRI...

Looking for the perfect PART-TIME job?

C&S WHOLESALE GROCERS, INC.

C&S is an Equal Opportunity Employer and does not discriminate on the basis of age, gender or any other protected category in accordance with applicable law.

FEATURED ITEM THIS WEEK

THIS WEEK $49.99

COTTON EXCHANGE

UMASS HOODED SWEATSHIRT

COLLEGIATE ... niversity

■ trax

continued from page 6

with his compositions, which have to be pretty impressive on an instrumental album to not become tedious, and thankfully here they are very impressive.

Buckethead has four previous albums, and Monsters and Robots does have a feeling of experimentation and adding new elements to the sound to make it more exciting. Primus members Les Claypool and Brain have been recruited to spice up the proceedings with their bass and drum talent, and Claypool sings on "The Ballad of Buckethead." The only other vocals on the records are samples, provided by Phonosycographdisk, who also contributes turntable scratches on a variety of tracks. The album requires a few listens to just comprehend the amazing talent that Buckethead possesses, but as you get used to it, nearly all of the tracks are completely listenable, making for a CD not to just display talent, but one that may actually secure a spot in your listening rotation. Highlights include the full-throttle opener "Jump Man" and the wildly creative "Jowls." B+

(Michael Delano)

COREY COKES

Coreyography
Varunee Recording Group

I'll never write music. I'm not a poet. Apparently Core Cokes is a poet. This is what he is trying to prove in his spoken word album, Coreography. The album has some strong verbal portrayals of racial identity and historical background. Cokes is a man who is takes on such important cultural issues such as racism in public advertising. He uses other people's voices to enhance his own.

However, the only problem I have about the album, is that much of it is not music. There are some selections on Coreography that have acoustic guitars, but for the most part, it is all Cokes and his spoken word. There's not much that a music critic can critique about an album that doesn't really have music in it. Of course, all music is derivative of poetry, but not all poetry is music. An awful comparison would be to an Adam Sandler album. Of course there's stuff on there that resembles music, but the truth is that you can't call "Lunch Lady Land" a song because Adam plays a guitar. He's only rhyming a poem that he wrote, that is never going to win a Grammy for Best Pop Song. This is the case with Corey Cokes. I'm sorry my man, your poetry is intense, but you'll never take

Turn to TRAX, page 10

Fox cancles quiz show debacle; Letterman returns

Apparently FOX has listened to my cries. Well, maybe they didn't specifically hear what I had to say, but nonetheless, they've got some problems on their hands. The FOX network announced Tuesday morning that there will be no more "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire" specials. (Hey ladies, stop crying, you can still marry me!) They also announced that there would not be a re-run broadcast of the new show that seems to be the big talk of February sweeps period.

The lack of desire to continue with "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire" has stemmed from a few different places. The first, and most obvious, reason for the show's cancellation is the fact that almost all of the public response for "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire" has been cynical and negative. No one cares about the people who were married, and everyone seems to be joking about it. The show has been constantly battling public humiliation from all over for the past week - all of it centered around how ridiculous the idea actually is. Everything from the shallowness of the fifty contestants to the shameless perverted personality of "multi-millionaire" Rick Rockwell, (clearly a stage name that sounds like it came out of his favorite Porno flick) has been mocked to no end. With all of the mockery, comes rumors and allegations. Yes, that's right, much like the time you heard about Pee-Wee Herman visiting the local Stop and Bop, or when you found out that Hugh Grant was picked up by the local constabulary for letting a prostitute borrow the British Missile, I'm about to tarnish your opinion of "Slick" Rick Rockwell. Allegations of physical abuse in a past relationship have arisen, causing all sorts of problems for FOX. Apparently, Rockwell had a restraining order filed against him for hitting his ex-girlfriend and threatening to hit her. For some reason, I'm guessing that FOX doesn't have fifty lovely ladies screaming "ooh, ooh, can I please marry the multi-millionaire now?" My question to FOX is: Didn't you check out the track record on this guy before you threw him at fifty women? I can imagine my new favorite game show, "Who Wants to Hang Out With the Mystery Football Player," and as the winner walks down the stage to find out who they'll be chilling with, you see OJ with a football in one hand and a seventeen inch carving knife in the other. I can't believe that FOX was so careless as to let something like this happen. But, at least an executive at FOX was quoted as saying, "This is the end for the show, we're not doing another one." Oh that's terrific brainiac, you're not doing another one, what does that say about how you're trying to help out the poor woman that you married off to the guy? The allegations of abuse are not where the story ends either. Apparently, Rockwell returned home from his honeymoon alone. No one really knows what went wrong on the honeymoon, but I'm assuming it had something to do with the fact that he's psycho!

Tube Notes with Ryan Benharris

I'm just glad that FOX announced that they will not be running the stupid special again, and maybe this will be a step toward more networks realizing how worthless the entire game show craze actually is.

Although almost all of the publicity for ABC has been centered around their game show, "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire," some pretty big news was announced earlier this week about the future of "Spin City." As it was announced last year, Michael J. Fox, who has won two Emmys for his role on the critically acclaimed sitcom, is leaving the show because of his ongoing battle with Parkinson's disease. ABC finally has found a replacement for him in Charlie Sheen. The series will finish shooting in New York, and move to Los Angeles, to be closer to Sheen's home. Sheen will reportedly be paid 2.7 million dollars a week. Which translates into $125,000 per episode. You know what that means? It means that somewhere on the streets of Los Angeles, there's a game show going down right now called, "Who Wants to be a $2.7 Million Dollar Prostitute." Either that or, "Who Wants to Buy $125,000 Per Week Worth of Cocaine." It will certainly be interesting to see how Sheen does on "Spin City." He's got some big shoes to fill. I hear someone like Fox, who did an awesome job. Personally, I think it's like allowing Daryl Strawberry to play for your baseball team. You know it's just a matter of time before he

Turn to TUBE

What's up

The Bacchae will open tonight at 8 p.m. in the Rand Theater. The production will run through this weekend and next.

■ movies

continued from page 5

are like incandescent shadows sheltered from the mainstream light. Thus, the value of shock has flourished amidst the waves of underground cinema.

Although the industry seems to be migrating back towards the vertical integration it once escaped, it has become more difficult to predict what will constitute a commercial success and when. The most profitable movie of all time, Blair Witch Project (1999), was more of an ultra-inexpensive cinematic experiment than a visually executed screenplay. Still in spite of its profound success, blockbuster-sleeper-seekers from large companies are lining the gates of indie film festivals like Sundance in hopes of procuring the next Blair Witch. Consequently, the maverick filmmakers of yesteryear are being given generous (if not astronomical) deals to shoot their next picture, seemingly removing the deprivation and hunger that commonly attaches itself to independent artists.

Director Steven Soderbergh is an obvious example. His consummate stylish, his films (sex, lies and videotape and Out of Sight) have been highly anointed by art-house standards and industry-savvy producers who recognized his accessible attributes, entrusted him with Erin Brockovich, Julia Roberts' mainstream vehicle. (Not bad for a camera-shy guy). His previous film The Limey never opened nationwide. However, indie filmmaking is now determined by who and how the project is funded. For instance, Quentin Tarantino (Reservoir Dogs), Danny Boyle (Trainspotting) and Doug Liman (Swingers) were each given substantially increased budgets for their follow-up films Pulp Fiction, The Beach and Go, respectively. On the other hand, David O. Russell (Spanking the Monkey, Flirting With Disaster), a commercially unproven director, was given an anorexic budget for his ludicrous Persian Gulf epic, Three Kings. So go the unwritten regulations of the business.

In the broad spectrum, movies still reign supreme as domestic entertainment, and as a result, a communication of budget independent filmmaking continues to thrive in the sub-terrain. While innumerable "outsider artists" have been embraced by the limelight of commercial success, many will be vitalized in the 21st century for its ability to poetically define the hazy line between art and commerce.

The family of University of Wyoming student Matthew Shepard has agreed to participate in only one project.

This is it.

"Journey to a Hate Free Millennium"

a documentary film and presentation about the struggle against violence in America

with discussion by filmmaker Brent Scarpo

TONIGHT – 7:00pm
Thursday, February 24, 2000
Campus Center Auditorium
Free Admission

Sponsored by:
Housing Services: Residence Life
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Photo by M. Nanette Martin, used with permission.

Friday February 25th

UMass BC

Umass vs. Boston College
7:00pm, Mullins Center

Machina to come

The Pumpkins, minus D'Arcy, encourage you to check out next week's Arts cover where they'll take center stage

■ hate

continued from page 6

the Shepard family. Journey to a Hate Free Millennium also presents issues that arose from the horrible massacre at Columbine High School in 1998. The crime centered on Dylan Klebold's and Eric Harris' hatred towards races and religions that they felt were inferior to their own. The film also includes an interview with a former Neo-nazi, and also several interviews with Holocaust survivors.

Scarpo has worked in Hollywood for the past fifteen years as an actor and casting director. Some of his work has been donated to films such as Air Force One, That Thing You Do!, and The Shawshank Redemption. He says that the purpose of his film is to "challenge viewers to question the purpose of hate in our country. To discover why hate occurs, what happens to those who choose to hate and what might be possible if hate could be eliminated from our society." It is also Scarpo's desire to spark a lot of discussion during the event, stemmed from the interviews that will force people to feel the painful consequences of hate.

■ independent

continued from page 5

made a strong name for himself in the span of only two films. Bottle Rocket follows the trail of some bumbling thieves who have much more ambition than talent, a realization that comes all too fast. Luke and Owen Wilson are easily the standout performances in this film, and when I see them go on to do Home Fries and The Haunting, respectively, it's enough to bring a tear to my eye. Rushmore was a complete change of pace from Anderson's first film, but showed amazing maturity and talent for a sophomore effort. Bill Murray plays Herman Blume and tones down the humor for a truly affecting performance that was, like so many, neglected by the increasingly retarded (I'm reluctant to use that term, but come on, they just are) Oscar voters. Blume's relationship with the young Max (Jason Schwartzman) brings out amazing qualities in both actors and by the end it seems almost like destiny that the two found each other.

I couldn't write an article about independent film without mentioning the coolest movie studio of all time, Troma. But since we are on the subject of directors, I will pick out the obvious one, Lloyd Kaufman. Although some of his finest work is in the past, such as The Toxic Avenger (best movie ever) and Sgt. Kabukiman N.Y.P.D., Tromatics recently got a lot to be happy about with 1996's Tromeo and Juliet. It had the gore, nudity, and humor that made Troma the name it is today. And since Lloyd has recently released a new horror film, Terror Firmer, fans have a new reason to get excited. I can't explain the appeal of Troma movies; you either get it or you don't. But if you get it, you can experience some of the most hilarious and over the top films ever made.

There are many great directors that I missed, so here's a quick list of other great directors that I wish I had the time and space to address in more detail. Spike Jonze, who is definitely the man, just directed Being John Malkovich and if you have any interest in film you should have already seen it or be in the process of dropping this paper and running to any theater that still has it. Alexander Payne is the mind behind last year's incredible Election as well as Citizen Ruth. You can call David O. Russell mainstream since he did Three Kings, but he is still amazing and you should check out his earlier work like Spanking the Monkey and the hilarious Flirting with Disaster. Finally, don't miss James Toback's upcoming film Black and White, which looks extremely promising, and if you have any interest in him make sure to find a copy of 1997's Two Girls and a Guy.

Mike Delano is a Collegian staff member.

During Engineers Week, Learn To

Make a Million Bucks

Does not require printing press and green ink

 What it does require is the good sense for you to attend the talk "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire: Investment Strategies for People Starting Out" on Wednesday, Feb. 23 at 5:30 p.m. in the Gunness Engineering Student Center, Marcus Hall.

You don't have to be an engineer to attend. Other events this week include:

Today! 11 a.m. The tables are turned: Faculty Research Showcase, Gunness Engineering Student Center, Marcus Hall.

Today! Noon. Paper airplane contest. PRIZES! Make your plane when you arrive, and fly your plane off the balcony of the Fine Arts Center Auditorium.

Friday 11 a.m. – 2 p.m. Mini vehicle design and accuracy contest, Gunness Engineering Student Center, Marcus Hall. PRIZES! Contact Matt Podkowka at podkowka@student.umass.edu or dsturgis@ecs.umass.edu for more details.

Friday 3:30 p.m. Showcase: Design Projects to Aid the Disabled, 19 Gunness Lab.

Sponsored by GE Plastics, Precision Tectonix, J & E Precision Tool, EMC² Corporation, i2 Technologies, Eric Thorgerson, Lee Pearlmutter, and JEOL USA.

RUSSELL'S
Discount LIQUORS Discount
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441
Featuring " Ickehouse & Red Dog" $10.99 30/PK
Setter Home White Zinfandel $3.99 750 ml
"Busch & Busch Light" "Pabst Blue Ribbon" $9.99 in bottles
MILWAUKEE'S BEST $9.99 30/PK
HOLLANDIA Imported from Holland $14.99 case bots.
Vodka 80° EVERYDAY PRICE! $8.99 1.75 lt
Guinness "Pub Cans" $4.99 4 pk
Yagermeister $14.99 750ml
Kahlua $12.99 750ml
Glen Ellen, Cabernet Sauvignon & Chardonnay $4.99 750ml
Bacardi Limon $19.99 1.75 liter
Brewery Bill "Micro Beers" $4.49 6/pk
Check Out RUSSELL'S In Door Special's
• Delivery Available • OPEN 9:00AM to 11:00PM • Visa/Mastercard • All Beers Plus Deposit •

IT'S YOUR BODY
If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

Warehouse Selectors Needed!
If you need a job that fits into your busy school schedule, then look into the outstanding opportunities available at C&S, the nation's fastest growing wholesale food distributor. We have immediate openings for enthusiastic, team-oriented students to play an integral role in our expansion.
Flexible Schedules • Great Pay
We'll train you, give you $12.50 per hour working part-time, extend your hours to full time during breaks, and offer you a dynamic work environment. For more information, please visit us on campus, call 1-800-621-5953, or apply in person Monday-Friday, 8am-4pm, or Saturdays from 9am-1pm, at Employment Center, C&S Wholesale Grocers, Inc., 142 Elm Street, just off Route 91, Exit 21, Hatfield, MA
Visit us at The Campus Center Feb 24th, 10am - 3pm BRING YOUR FRI
Looking for the perfect PART-TIME job?
C&S WHOLESALE GROCERS, INC.
C&S is an Equal Opportunity Employer and does not discriminate on the basis of age, gender or any other protected category in accordance with applicable law.

FEATURED ITEM THIS WEEK
THIS WEEK
$49.99
COTTON EXCHANGE
UMASS HOODED SWEATSHIRT
COLLEGIATE ... niversity

■ trax

continued from page 6

with his compositions, which have to be pretty impressive on an instrumental album to not become tedious, and thankfully here they are very impressive.

Buckethead has four previous albums, and Monsters and Robots does have a feeling of experimentation and adding new elements to the sound to make it more exciting. Primus members Les Claypool and Brain have been recruited to spice up the proceedings with their bass and drum talent, and Claypool sings on "The Ballad of Buckethead." The only other vocals on the records are samples, provided by Phonosycographdisk, who also contributes turntable scratches on a variety of tracks. The album requires a few listens to just comprehend the amazing talent that Buckethead possesses, but as you get used to it, nearly all of the tracks are completely listenable, making for a CD not to just display talent, but one that may actually secure a spot in your listening rotation. Highlights include the full-throttle opener "Jump Man" and the wildly creative "Jowls." B+

(Michael Delano)

COREY COKES

Coreyography
Varunee Recording Group

I'll never write music. I'm not a poet. Apparently Core Cokes is a poet. This is what he is trying to prove in his spoken word album, Coreyography. The album has some strong verbal portrayals of racial identity and historical background. Cokes is a man who is takes on such important cultural issues such as racism in public advertising. He uses other people's voices to enhance his own.

However, the only problem I have about the album, is that much of it is not music. There are some selections on Coreography that have acoustic guitars, but for the most part, it is all Cokes and his spoken word. There's not much that a music critic can critique about an album that doesn't really have music in it. Of course, all music is derivative of poetry, but not all poetry is music. An awful comparison would be to an Adam Sandler album. Of course there's stuff on there that resembles music, but the truth is that you can't call "Lunch Lady Land" a song because Adam plays a guitar. He's only rhyming a poem that he wrote, that is never going to win a Grammy for Best Pop Song. This is the case with Corey Cokes. I'm sorry my man, your poetry is intense, but you'll never take

Turn to TRAX page 10

Fox cancles quiz show debacle; Letterman returns

Tube Notes with Ryan Benharris

Apparently FOX has listened to my cries. Well, maybe they didn't specifically hear what I had to say, but nonetheless, they've got some problems on their hands. The FOX network announced Tuesday morning that there will be no more "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire" specials. (Hey ladies, stop crying, you can still marry me!) They also announced that there would not be a re-run broadcast of the new show that seems to be the big talk of February sweeps period.

The lack of desire to continue with "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire" has stemmed from a few different places. The first, and most obvious, reason for the show's cancellation is the fact that almost all of the public response for "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire" has been cynical and negative. No one cares about the people who were married, and everyone seems to be joking about it. The show has been constantly battling public humiliation from all over for the past week – all of it centered around how ridiculous the idea actually is. Everything from the shallowness of the fifty contestants to the shameless perverted personality of "multi-millionaire" Rick Rockwell, (clearly a stage name that sounds like it came out of his favorite Porno flick) has been mocked to no end. With all of the mockery, comes rumors and allegations. Yes, that's right, much like the time you heard about Pee-Wee Herman visiting the local Stop and Bop, or when you found out that Hugh Grant was picked up by the local constabulary for letting a prostitute borrow the British Missile, I'm about to tarnish your opinion of "Slick" Rick Rockwell. Allegations of physical abuse in a past relationship have arisen, causing all sorts of problems for FOX. Apparently, Rockwell had a restraining order filed against him for hitting his ex-girlfriend and threatening to hit her. For some reason, I'm guessing that FOX doesn't have fifty lovely ladies screaming "ooh, ooh, can I please marry the multi-millionaire now?" My question to FOX is: Didn't you check out the track record on this guy before you threw him at fifty women? I can imagine my new favorite game show: "Who Wants to Hang Out With the Mystery Football Player," and as the winner walks down the stage to find out who they'll be chilling with, you see OJ with a football in one hand and a seventeen inch carving knife in the other. I can't believe that FOX was so careless as to let something like this happen. But, at least an executive at FOX was quoted as saying, "This is the end for the show, we're not doing another one." Oh that's terrific brainiac, you're not doing another one, what does that say about how you're trying to help out the poor woman that you married off to the guy? The allegations of abuse are not where the story ends either. Apparently, Rockwell returned home from his honeymoon alone. No one really knows what went wrong on the honeymoon, but I'm assuming it had something to do with the fact that he's psycho!

I'm just glad that FOX announced that they will not be running the stupid special again, and maybe this will be a step toward more networks realizing how worthless the entire game show craze actually is.

Although almost all of the publicity for ABC has been centered around their game show, "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire," some pretty big news was announced earlier this week about the future of "Spin City." As it was announced last year, Michael J. Fox, who has won two Emmys for his role on the critically acclaimed sitcom, is leaving the show because of his ongoing battle with Parkinson's disease. ABC finally has found a replacement for him in Charlie Sheen. The series will finish shooting in New York and move to Los Angeles, to be closer to Sheen's home. Sheen will reportedly be paid 2.7 million dollars per episode. Which translates into $125,000 per episode. You know what that means? It means that somewhere on the streets of Los Angeles, there's a game show going down right now called, "Who Wants to be a $2.7 Million Dollar Prostitute?" I know that or, "Who Wants to Buy $125,000 Per Week Worth of Cocaine." It will certainly be interesting to see how Sheen does on "Spin City." He's got some big shoes to fill. Even someone like Fox, who did an awesome job. Personally, I think it's like allowing Daryl Strawberry to play for the baseball team. You know it's just a matter of time before he

Turn to TUBE

What's up

The Bacchae will open tonight at 8 p.m. in the Rand Theater. The production will run through this weekend and next

■ movies

continued from page 6

are like incandescent shadows sheltered from the material light. Thus, the value of shock has flourished amongst waves of underground cinema.

Although the industry seems to be migrating back towards the vertical integration it once escaped, it has become increasingly difficult to predict what will constitute a commercial success and when. The most profitable movie of all time, Blair Witch Project (1999), was more of an ultra inexpensive experiment than a visually executed screenplay. Still in spite of its profound success, blockbuster-sleeper-seekers from large companies are lining the gates of indie film festivals like Sundance in hopes of procuring the next Blair Witch. Consequently, the maverick filmmakers of yesteryear are now given generous (if not astronomical) deals to shoot their next picture, seemingly removing the deprivation and hunger which commonly attaches itself to independent artistry.

Director Steven Soderbergh is an obvious example. As a consummate stylist, his films (sex, lies and videotape, The Nightl) have been highly anointed by art-house standards and industry-savvy producers who recognized his acumen for narrates entrusted him with Erin Brockovich, Julia Roberts, mainstream vehicle. (Not bad for a camera-style previous film The Limey never opened nationwide). Even indie filmmaking is now determined by who and how the project is funded. For instance, Quentin Tarantino (Reservoir Dogs), Danny Boyle (Trainspotting) and Doug Liman (Swingers) were each given substantially increased budgets for their follow up films Pulp Fiction, The Beach and Go, respectively. On the other hand, David O. Russell (Spanking the Monkey, Flirting With Disaster) a comparatively unproven director, was given an anorexic budget for his ambitious Persian Gulf epic, Three Kings. So go the unexplainable liaisons of the business.

In the broad spectrum, movies still reign supreme in the domestic entertainment, and as a result a community of low budget independent filmmaking continues to thrive in the subterrain. While innumerable "outsider artists" have been embraced by the limelight of commercial success, many more will be vitalized in the 21st century for its ability to successfully define the hazy line between art and commerce.

The family of University of Wyoming student Matthew Shepard has agreed to participate in only one project.

This is it.

"Journey to a Hate Free Millennium"

a documentary film and presentation about the struggle against violence in America

with discussion by filmmaker Brent Scarpo

TONIGHT – 7:00pm
Thursday, February 24, 2000
Campus Center Auditorium
Free Admission

Sponsored by:
Housing Services: Residence Life
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Photo by M. Nanette Martin, used with permission.

Friday February 25th
UMass BC

Umass vs. Boston College
7:00pm, Mullins Center

tube

continued from page 9

[illegible] up. We'll all be watching Charlie, especially the president of "The West Wing," who's otherwise known as your dad.

The final note on the tube this week has to be a shout out to David Letterman. How any man can get through quintuple bypass surgery, and soon return to their day job in the predicted amount of time is beyond me. The fact that Letterman was able to do it in even less than the suggested amount of time blows my mind. Even though his show was struggling in the ratings for a while, it seems that he may be back in more ways than one. The episode that he interviewed Hilary Clinton was the first time that he was able to beat rival, Jay Leno, in the ratings in over five years, and his return to work on Monday was the second. An estimated twelve million people watched his return to television, which was the best rating that he has gained in six years. Upon his return, Letterman joked that, "He has a whole new respect for President Clinton. He (Clinton) has lived with Hillary for all these years, and I'll (Letterman) spent one night with her and end up in the hospital." He will be easing his way back into the late night circuit for the next few days with help from such friends as Regis Philbin and Bill Cosby.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian columnist.

Fiasco becomes story

By Brian Lowry
Los Angeles Times

Fox's fiasco with the special "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire?" is turning into a windfall for rival networks' news organizations, which have scrambled to follow the story as the February sweeps speed toward next week's finish line.

"Dateline NBC" received an apparent ratings boost Tuesday by virtue of its interview with the program's would-be groom, Rick Rockwell, while ABC's "Good Morning America" devoted an extensive segment yesterday to its exclusive chat with the chosen bride, Darva Conger, who will also appear on tonight's "20/20."

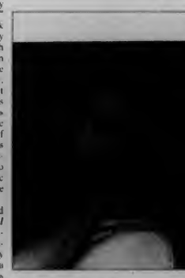
Tune-in for "Dateline," which surged by nearly 2 million viewers during the half-hour when the Rockwell interview was broadcast. He will also appear on today's "Good Morning America" after telling NBC, according to sources, that he hoped the "Dateline" appearance would be his last in relation to the story.

Even more interest was anticipated for Conger, the nurse who had yet to speak out about her instant Feb. 15 marriage to Rockwell on live TV before it was revealed the groom once faced allegations of abusing an ex-girlfriend.

Fox issued a statement Tuesday largely blaming the special's producer, Next Entertainment, for an inadequate background check of Rockwell. The network has said it won't air any additional specials of this kind and will conduct its own investigation to see if any additional action needs to be taken.

Still, one veteran TV executive said that Fox – as the final arbiter of what gets on the air – should have taken responsibility. "What's worse than what happened is all this finger-pointing."

Both Rockwell and Conger have now indicated the instant marriage will be annulled. In her interview with ABC's Diane Sawyer, Conger insisted she was aware about the process and "didn't know how to escape" after Rockwell chose her from among the 50 contestants at the end of the special, which drew nearly 23 million viewers during its final half-hour.



trax

continued from page 9

home the gold if you're up against Britney Spears. C
(Ryan Benharris)

GOV'T MULE
Life Before Insanity
FDT

If ever there was a band that could construct a musical bridge from the heart of the 1960's into the present day music scene, it is Gov't Mule. The band, which consists of singer/guitarist Warren Haynes, bassist Allen Woody and drummer Matt Abts, has established itself as the premier blues-rock power trio of its generation. Rather than relying on traditional blues and southern rock blueprints, Gov't Mule has drawn from a diverse pool of influences to form a truly unique sound for their new album, Life Before Insanity.

From the bottom heavy opener "Wandering Child," to the closing acoustic track "In My Life," the journey through the album is both lyrically and musically an extraordinary one. On the Zeppelin-esque title track, Haynes lays down a brilliant mix of hard hitting chords and a myriad of subtle notes that mesh flawlessly over the airtight rhythm section of Abts and Woody. Haynes' voice, which slides effortlessly from quiet whisper to soulful roar, is a dynamic element that elevates the song to another level.

"Bad Little Doggie" and "I Think You Know What I Mean" hit the ground running, both urgent blues numbers superbly augmented by the addition of Hook Herrera on harmonica. Haynes puts his virtuoso slide playing to the test on "Lay Your Burden Down," a solid piece of music featuring the immensely talented Ben Harper on vocals and lap steel. "World Gone Wild" is a tour de force of power chords and solos, a sound that the Mule fully embraces in both the studio and live environment. Not a band to tie itself to any one particular sound, Gov't Mule is as equally successful when it turns down the Les Paul and adopts a slower, more acoustic approach. Songs like "No Need to Suffer" and the stirring "In My Life" are the culmination of this desire to simply make good music and not adhere to any formula. The hidden bonus track, a smoldering cover of Robert Johnson's "If I Had a Possession Over Judgment Day," is a fitting close to a disc that covers all ends of the musical spectrum.

Rock and Roll dead? Not as long as this Mule keeps kickin'. A-(Matt Depres)

WILLIAM ORBIT
Pieces in a Modern Style
Maverick Records

Apparently I've become the Collegian's resident expert on classical music. This is the second CD that I've picked up for Trax On Trax Off, without even realizing what it was. I saw this picture of some dude, who apparently had a "astonishing rare bridge between pop and classical" song with his Top 5 UK single "Adagio for Strings," according to Rolling Stone. Being the idiot that I am, I'm thinking, "hey, this dude must rock pretty hard. I'll review this one." Well, it took me about half an hour to realize that he wasn't going to say any words, and that was about song number six.

The truth is that I'm not really a big fan of classical music and don't have much to say about it. I guess all that I can mention about Pieces in a Modern Style is that I kind of enjoyed it. Yes, I know I'll take heat from my heavy metal adoring co-editor, but the truth is that if you're just sitting around writing a paper, it's not much of a distraction. Plus, based on the fact that I don't listen to that much classical music, and I found myself saying, "Hey, that sounded kind of cool." I guess that must be an improvement on my standing a cultured individual.

I may not be the absolute best person to give you a review for a classical music album, but I liked it. Many of the songs that Orbit composed were from famous people (and I say famous, because I've heard of them) such as John Cage and Ludwing van Beethoven. If you're into the classical stuff, pick this up and give it a listen. However, it may suck. I'm not that bright. B
(Ryan Benharris)

Why
Collegian Arts ?
Because Ben loves it.

MIKE'S WESTVIEW CAFE

Thursday Night Kicks Off Our Great Week of Specials!

This week featuring BUD Pitchers for just $4.00

- Screwdriver	$1.75
- Rum & Cokes	$1.75
- Kamikaze Shots	$2.00

Also Enjoy FREE appetizers on Thursday Night from 9-11 and on Friday afternoon from 4-6

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!
ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:
THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF
ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:
Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

PHILADELPHIA, PA ...

SITE OF THE 2000 ATLANTIC 10 CONFERENCE MENS & WOMENS BASKETBALL TOURNAMENTS

Come and cheer the Minutemen on to Victory in Philadelphia and stay at

EMBASSY SUITES

The Embassy Suites Center City is offering a special rate of

$125.00* per night
March 2-11, 2000
including full buffet breakfast each morning

(215) 561-1776 / reservations
Ask for the Atlantic 10 student rate
(must present student i.d. upon check in)

Located in the heart of the city

 double occupancy, $15 for each additional person, rate does not include 14% tax.*

How Universal Gave Up a Big Piece of `Pie'

By Claudia Eller
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD Studios typically rush to take out boastful ads in the Hollywood trade papers when one of their movies breaks a box-office milestone.

So it was unusual when Universal Pictures neglected to do so when its hit teen comedy from 1999, "American Pie," recently crossed the $200-million mark in worldwide box-office receipts.

The reason seemed obvious to many Hollywood insiders: Universal didn't want to draw attention again to its embarrassing decision last year to sell off the lion's share of international rights to a low-budget movie that, judging by its testing with audiences, seemed destined to be a big hit.

By doing so, Universal left tens of millions of dollars on the table, underscoring how well-intentioned plans for reducing the risks of the volatile movie business can sometimes go awry.

While studios often defray the risks of big-budget movies by taking on financial partners to protect their downside, Universal's sale, in retrospect, was unquestionably shortsighted. For one, at a cost of $11 million, "American Pie" was not a big bet, and international revenue can often account for more than half a film's total earnings.

The move, made by a previous studio regime, was a result of a mandate by Universal management to raise cash quickly to offset losses from a string of costly flops such as "Babe: Pig in the City" and "Meet Joe Black."

But the puny $5 million or so that Universal received as a minimum guarantee for selling the rights to foreign sales outfit Summit Entertainment turned out to be a big price for the studio to pay. "American Pie" has grossed more overseas than it did domestically: about $114 million so far compared with $102 million.

Universal at least retained rights in the English-speaking countries of Britain, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. Combined grosses from those territories total an estimated $34 million, which accounts for approximately 30 percent of the film's overall international theatrical earnings.

Patrick Wachsberger, president of Summit Entertainment, said "American Pie" is still playing in some territories and will probably gross more than $120 million once its run is over.

Fox's Mechanic Hopes to Repair Box Office Slump (Hollywood)

By Claudia Eller
LA. Times

HOLLYWOOD Bill Mechanic is something of an anomaly in Hollywood.

He's the first to admit blame when movies fail.

And, he's the last to boast when they hit.

While Mechanic has had a generally strong run as head of Fox Filmed Entertainment and enjoyed an extraordinary 1998 with such mega-hits as "Titanic" and "There's Something About Mary," the last year has found him in the uncomfortable position that studio chiefs inevitably find themselves when the box office slumps.

"This is what happens when you don't do well," jokes Mechanic, gesturing to the bare-walled hallways under construction outside his office, where framed posters of Fox's classic movies ordinarily hang.

Mechanic, who usually shies away from in-depth interviews, is trying hard to be good-natured about his lousy run in 1999, capped by expensive flops such as "Anna and the King" and "Fight Club."

But Mechanic, a passionate movie buff, takes it to heart when movies he considers "so creatively satisfying" flop.

"From a commercial standpoint, it's clearly disappointing, and we, or I – however you want to look at it – didn't do their job properly," the plain-spoken Mechanic acknowledged in an interview. "I had more stuff on the edges than I had down the center. It was a bad mixture of pictures, and it didn't work."

Mechanic assures that product for the rest of this year and next will be more diverse, including comedies as broad as "Me, Myself & Irene," starring Jim Carrey, high-profile dramas such as Robert Zemeckis' "Cast Away," with Tom Hanks; and smaller, quirkier films such as Philip Kaufman's "Quills."

In 1999, Fox's strategy of having "different movies for different audiences just didn't flow that way ... It was a much narrower slate," Mechanic says.

Other than the Jodie Foster period drama "Anna and the King," which Mechanic considers "mainstream entertainment," Fox's releases in the last half of 1999 largely consisted of dark, edgy movies that lacked broad appeal, such as David Fincher's graphically violent "Fight Club," Kimberly Peirce's "Boys Don't Cry" and Julie Taymor's Shakespearean tragedy "Titus."

Other than "Star Wars: Episode I The Phantom Menace," a colossal hit for which Fox sees a distribution fee but no profits, and the moderate successes of "Entrapment" and "Never Been Kissed," the studio had no breakout hits, but rather a string of mostly inexpensive clunkers including "Light It Up," "Pushing Tin," "Brokedown Palace," "Office Space," "Wing Commander" and "Anywhere But Here."

Fox's slump prompted Mechanic's boss Peter Chernin to refocus some attention on the movie side of the studio, which he headed for four years before becoming president and chief operating officer of Fox's parent, News Corp., in October 1996.

"He's going through the lineup a little bit more thoroughly," Mechanic says. "Peter and I have worked together for 6 1/2 years. He's my partner in the whole process, so I welcome him. What we're doing is not a science, so if someone has the ability to see something and has the experience of doing the same job, that's valuable."

Chernin says that although "I have a lot on my plate, you obviously spend more time on businesses that are going through a rough period." Chernin stressed that none of the year's box office duds represented big losses other than "Anna and the King," which is expected to lose at least $40 million.

Moreover, for Fox's fiscal year ending June 30, Mechanic says the filmed entertainment unit, which includes television production, "is on track to do in excess of $200 million in profit and will be one of the top three years in the studio's history."

He says only $15 million of that was from television.

www dailycollegian.com

NHL Suspends McSorley for Remainder of Season

By Helene Elliott
Los Angeles Times

Responding swiftly and decisively to an incident that has spawned big headlines and bigger headaches, the NHL on Wednesday suspended Boston Bruin defenseman Marty McSorley for his team's remaining 23 regular-season games and the playoffs, the longest suspension in league history for an on-ice offense.

The NHL also reserved the right to extend the sentence should McSorley sign a new contract after his current agreement expires this summer. McSorley had been suspended indefinitely for using his stick to strike Vancouver Canuck winger Donald Brashear on the right temple with a two-handed blow Monday. Brashear fell backward to the ice and struck his head, resulting in a concussion. He must avoid physical activity for three weeks.

"This sends the message you can't do this. You can't strike another player with your stick. If you do, the repercussions will be severe," said Colin Campbell, the NHL's director of hockey operations and a former player and coach. "I guess the difference in this case is the actual blow, the unsuspecting blow from behind with the stick to a part of the head we all fear, the temple..."

"Are we breaking new ground? Sure, when it comes to the number of games. But have you seen anything like that? I haven't."

The suspension is two games longer than the punishment levied against the Washington Capitals' Dale Hunter for a blind-side hit on New York Islander center Pierre Turgeon during the 1993 playoffs.

McSorley, a seven-time offender who has not been sanctioned since 1994, will forfeit $72,000 of his $600,000 salary to the Players' Emergency Assistance Fund. The Bruins were six points out of an Eastern Conference playoff spot before they played Wednesday at Edmonton. Because he may face criminal assault charges, McSorley took the advice of counsel and did not attend a hearing Wednesday in New York before Campbell and William Daly, the NHL's chief legal counsel.

He had requested a postponement, but NHL officials said a delay would not have served Brashear's best interests or those of the National Hockey League. Daly said he spoke with Vancouver police officials and intends to cooperate with their investigation. McSorley could face a maximum of 14 years in jail if convicted of aggravated assault, but Daly said he hopes law enforcement agencies will let the NHL police itself.

Daly also said the suspension was open-ended because the league wants to hear McSorley's version of the incident. McSorley apologized to Brashear, the Bruins and hockey fans Monday night but has not commented publicly since. His remorse was not enough to prevent Campbell from ending his season and, perhaps, his 17-year career.

McSorley, 36, is the third-most penalized player in NHL history. He was Wayne Gretzky's bodyguard on two Stanley Cup-winning teams in Edmonton before accompanying Gretzky to Los Angeles in the landmark 1988 trade between the Oilers and Kings. Before that, he was perhaps best known for being caught with an illegal stick during Game 2 of the 1993 Stanley Cup finals, giving the Montreal Canadiens a power play that helped them tie the score and the series and defeat the Kings in five games.

"He's a player who came into the league and made it strictly on his toughness and became a pretty good hockey player," Campbell said. "... It's unfortunate this incident will probably be his legacy."

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE

Now Featuring Drink Specials
Coors Lite Bottles $2.25
Gin and Tonic $2.00
Michelob and Michelob Light 16 oz Draft - $1.75
THE MONKEY BAR'S UNIQUE MENU FEATURES MEDITERRANEAN AND CAJUN CUISINE
AFTER 10 IT'S TIME TO DANCE

WEDNESDAY - Coming Next Week - LADIES NIGHT
THURSDAY - DJ FOOZ spins house music all night long
FRIDAY - House Hip-hop and Top 40 music spun by SATURDAY - S48 Productions DJ's Fooz, Crome and Uncol

63 N. Pleasant Street 259-1600

The University of Massachusetts'
Something Every Friday
presents

An [illegible] brings to the UMass campus their beautiful [illegible] sounds. Opening for IMANI will be UMass's very own NOSTALGIA.

Campus Center Auditorium
Friday, February 25, 2000,
8pm, FREE

The film The Real Matrix will be shown following the performance. The film will also be shown on Sunday February [illegible] at [illegible] in the Campus Center Auditorium. Visit [illegible] for more info.

http://www umass.edu/events/calendar htm

IMANI

[illegible] is supported from the Campus Activities Cluster, Auxiliary Services, [illegible] the Student Affairs and the Everywoman's Center.

Do you want to be a part of the biggest student run business on campus?

Are you interested in a career in Human Resources?

Collegian is accepting applications for the position of Human Resource Coordinator.

Applications can be picked up at the Collegian in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Interested applicants should possess excellent communication and computer skills.

Any questions can be directed to christine Carroll at 545-3500 or hrcollegian@yahoo.com.

Big grin returns to Braves' camp as Galarraga returns

By Jon Heyman
The Sporting News

In a back field at the Braves' training site in the world of Disney, Andres Galarraga began to write a happy ending to his tearful tale. All baseball smiled when Galarraga swung a bat for the first time in 16 months last week. The legendarily upbeat Galarraga had spent the past year battling cancer. Yet it was like he'd never been away. His patented, full-face grin was constant, his torso robust, his swing as quick as ever.

How great is Galarraga? He made everyone in Braves camp forget John Rocker for a full day. Now that's power.

On the remote field a few miles from Mickey and the rest, Galarraga was magic. He did what he does best, which is to put a smile on everyone's face. Then he picked up his rather large stick. Batting against a coach he knew only as "Chino" with what he described as a half-to-three-quarters swing, Galarraga looking fit and ready for April, cleared the fences eight times without ever trying too hard.

The script is perfect for Disney. Galarraga was starting his comeback on Feb. 18, a date he could never forget. It was on that day last year when doctors told Galarraga he had cancer in a vertebra in his back. And then Galarraga had to hear it a second time, when he told his wife, Elenda, and three young daughters' words no 37-year old should have to say. I have cancer.

The smile he wore last week looked equal parts relief and jubilation.

"I'm so proud of myself for what I did today," Galarraga says. "I can't wait to call my wife."

Galarraga was due for his once every two-month checkup, but he told reporters who gathered around him in a celebratory-tinged interview that he'd have to wait a day or two to see the doctor. He didn't want to spoil the moment. Understandably, he couldn't take the idea of seeing the doctor on the anniversary of the worst day of his life.

"I felt like I'd be dying any time," Galarraga recalled of the bad Feb. 18. "The way everyone was looking at me, the way everyone knew."

The news struck Galarraga perhaps even a little harder, as he instantly recalled several spring trainings earlier when his father, Francisco, died of pancreatic cancer. That was 1992, one year the smile was wiped from Galarraga's face, which might explain why the career .290 hitter batted .243 that season.

Last year was no joy. He watched the World Series and wondered whether he and Javy Lopez, who missed most of the second half with a knee injury, could have helped against the Yankees. They're both back now.

It's no surprise what Galarraga's secret was the past 12 months: to keep smiling and stay positive. The chemotherapy for the non-Hodgkin's lymphoma cancer ended in August, the radiation treatments a month later. He began light workouts in October and started working harder in November. Doctors checked him out with a CAT scan in December, and they found that the cancer was gone and the bone was getting stronger. His chances looked real.

The smile and swing were working meals in tandem on this fitting-ly sunny day in central Florida. This was great for the Braves, even better for baseball, which could use a lift with Rocker on almost everyone's minds. Smiling as usual while sitting in the dugout, Galarraga listed his two goals: to win and to beat the cancer. He views himself as a role model for cancer fighters. "I'm happy to help a lot of people," he says.

Even the crustiest of baseball veterans felt something come over them.

"He's probably going to make everyone cry before it's all over," says Braves Manager Bobby Cox. "You're pulling for him so hard, it gets into your heart."

Everyone's crossed fingers did not go unheeded that first day of spring. Everything looked and felt right. Galarraga, who will turn 39 in June, appeared and swung like he did two years ago, when he hit 44 home runs and batted .305 for the Braves. He had been practicing in a cage while at home in West Palm Beach, Fla., 150 miles down the Florida Turnpike from the Braves' training site in Lake Buena Vista, Fla. But he hadn't faced a "real" pitcher on a real field since the playoffs in 1998.

Chino Cadahia didn't have a chance. "I'm surprised to hit the ball like that, especially the way the ball was jumping off the bat," Galarraga says. "It made me excited and really happy. I'm feeling like a new kid, a rookie."

Cox couldn't believe what he was seeing. He wasn't expecting even these three-quarter-type swings, and he halted Cadahia at one point, wanting things to go slower, wanting to eliminate any chances. Cox wouldn't even admit that Galarraga is being penciled into the cleanup hole yet, even broaching the idea of employing Walt Joyner, who is fighting age (though he's a year younger than Galarraga) and who posted only a .330 slugging percentage for San Diego last season.

After crushing baseball after baseball, Galarraga turned to observers, smiled his famous smile and said, "Not bad, huh?" He was as surprised as they were. After watching Galarraga on this day, there was no doubt in anyone's mind that he will be the Braves' first baseman on opening day. It has to be that way.

Swim squads head to ECACs
Arsenault, Brown lead the Minutemen into talent-rich pool

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

From New York to Amherst to New Jersey. Yuck.

If you have ever traveled this route, or even somewhat close to it, or for that matter even thought about doing it, then you can certainly understand how frustrated one can become in the midst of its omnipresent traffic.

Well, it is exactly what the UMass men's swimming and diving team has had to do this week and it has dealt with it admirably. Last Thursday it was the Flickinger Aquatic Center in Buffalo, New York. Tomorrow it will be the Gloucester County Aquatics Center in Sewell, New Jersey where UM will compete in the 2000 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) Swimming Championship.

The top conference divers will travel to Drexel University where they plunge for bragging rights in the 2000 ECAC Diving Championship.

The championship will feature top teams from the Division I rankings and other top teams from Division II and III. All will compete to see who takes the ECAC crown.

UM heads into both the swimming and diving tournaments as an underdog. In the team swimming competition, the University of Maryland-Baltimore County is expected to arrive in pinnacle form, looking for a repeat of last year's triumphant performance. The Minutemen fell just short of knocking off the Retrievers, 121-116, in Amherst last month. The College of William and Mary, who placed second in 1999, is looking to even the score.

Keeping in mind that the team title is won on the basis of the individual events, the mindset of everyone is on strong swims. The UMBC men are looking for repeat relay performances after having won the 200-, 400- and 800-yard freestyles in 1999.

UM junior Billy Brown will challenge last year's champion in the 200-yard breaststroke, junior Kevin Goh, who will be heavily counted on for key UMBC points. Brown has been a steady swimmer all season long, swimming a 4:07.48 in the 400 IM at the Rhode Island Invitational, good enough for best in the Atlantic 10 this season.

Mehdi Addadi, last year's 100-yard backstroke champion, will take the pool alongside UM senior Chris Arsenault in a highly competitive swim. Arsenault was named A-10 Championship Most Outstanding Performer of the Meet last weekend. The Peabody native had the best regular season time among conference competitors in the 200 free, posting a time of 1:42.29 in the Minutemen's weekend stay in New York for the Syracuse Invitational.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Billy Brown

Look out for Central Connecticut State along with junior Dominik Matuzewicz to threaten the aquatic depths. He won three individual event titles (100-, 200- and 500-yard freestyle) at the 1999 championships and alongside his teammate Marcin Kaczmarek, last year's champion in the 100- and 200-yard butterfly, CCSU will be considered armed and dangerous.

On the heels of a third-place finish in the 2000 Bell Atlantic/Atlantic 10 Championships, the Minutemen are looking to make some noise. Head coach Russ Yarworth, now grasping the title of A-10 Coach of the Year, is quietly bringing his team up the ladder. It is not unlikely that UM could watch some jaws drop, their opponents' jaws that is.

A-10s behind them, women take on ECAC

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

After a stormy Atlantic 10 Tournament showing, the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team will return to the water for a three-day break in the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) Championships. The Minutewomen do so only to find the pool flooded with competition, as they will try to prove that they are not the small fishes in a big pond.

Beginning tomorrow and continuing on Saturday, the ECAC's will pit the Minutewomen against some of the best aquatic athletes on the East coast. Their opponents will no doubt be difficult and will absolutely refuse to just go belly-up for UMass.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Andrea Spencer

It will be the second three-day swimming competition the Massachusetts women of the water will have competed in the last two weeks, the last being the A-10 Championships where UMass finished third amongst a field of nine schools, one position higher than last year. The Minutewomen battled valiantly but eventually fell short against St. Bonaventure and the champion Hokies of Virginia Tech, but only by a small margin. The Minutewomen accumulated 461 points in the contest, finding their ways into the school history books multiple times.

During the A-10 showdown, the Minutewomen broke three school records on the first day of the meet. Posting a new time in the 200-yard freestyle relay was the team of seniors Lyndsay Crenshaw, Anne Dettloff and Andrea Spencer along with sophomore Andrea Kazanjian. Despite breaking into UMass' history books, the time of 1:37.33 was good for only third place.

A record was also set in the 400-yard medley relay which was swam by senior Elizabeth Risotto, junior Sarah Newell, Kazanjian and Spencer.

Spencer, who was a member of both record-setting teams, set the only Minutewoman individual record on the day with her third place finish in the 200-yard IM. Her record came in the earlier stages of the competition, when she timed in at 2:07.30 to finish fourth in her heat.

Although not breaking a new record or establishing any new benchmark herself, freshman Kate Allery did finish fifth in the three-meter diving event. The South Hadley native was the highest scoring diver, scoring a 352.30 for

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Anne Dettloff

UMass, landing just outside of the top three.

The wet Maroon and White will not only be looking to replicate these results at the ECAC's this week, but will also be striving to improve them against the steeper competition. However, no matter what the odds, the Minutewomen will compete at the best of their abilities to make some waves in the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference and have the rest of the fish avoiding them.

Collegian Sports

READ ABOUT SPORTS

MARCH ON OVER TO LIQUORS 44 FOR THE BEST DEALS AROUND!
LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink and Drive
Everyday Pricing
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, BUDWEISER, MICHELOB, MICHELOB LIGHT, AMBER BOCK, COORS LIGHT COORS $39.99 +dep
1/2 KEGS NATURAL, NATURAL ICE, $34.99 +dep
1/2 KEGS BERKSHIRE BREWING STEEL RAIL PORTER, TRADITIONAL IPA $82.99 +dep
LITE & LITE ICE 30 Pack $16.49 +dep
ICEHOUSE RED DOG 30 Pack $10.49 +dep
MILWAUKEE'S BEST 30 Pack $9.49 +dep
KILLIAN'S IRISH RED 12 Pack $9.49 +dep
HEINEKEN $19.99 +dep
MIKE'S HARD LEMONADE $5.49 +dep
WINES OF THE MONTH
CARTA VIEJA $4.99
LIVINGSTON CELLARS $6.99
LINDEMAN'S BIN 65 $6.49
NATHANSON CREEK $6.99
TORRESELLA PINOT GRIGIO $10.99
ARBOR MIST $5.49
POLAND SPRINGS VODKA $8.99
GILBEY'S GIN $12.99
BACARDI LIGHT & GOLD RUM $7.99
CLUNY SCOTCH $12.99
JAMESON IRISH WHISKEY $16.49
JACK DANIELS $14.99
Discounts Available on Cases of Wine & Liquor. Ask For Details.
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 2/24/00 THRU WED. 3/1/00

THE INSANITY IS BACK!
COME FOR THE GUINNESS TOAST SATURDAY!
A PINT OF GUINNESS $2!

Throwing in a couple camel cluthes along the way

fin

continued from page 16

injured now when the most important games are coming up, but what can you do?," Jalkanen asked.

However, the rookie has shown promise in his inaugural campaign in Amherst, and should continue his steady play in the next few years.

Keeping the pipeline flowing.

The success of the Finnish trio has been evident through its stay in Amherst. Together, Helanen, Soderholm and Jalkanen have been an integral part of any team accomplishments that the Minutemen have produced, and have opened the door for other native Finns to play for UMass.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Samuli Jalkanen

"There's been nothing but success for the Finnish kids and we have to keep up with the Joneses in the league," Mallen said. "We want to keep the pipeline going and we want to be competitive in Hockey East at the same time."

NHL

continued from page 16

next step to make it a more permanent gesture. The quick movement by the league is encouraging, but to truly make an impact it must do something more concrete to send a message that won't soon be forgotten. In an age when goons still roam freely, what could possibly work?

Hand McSorley his bags and a one-way ticket out of the league. Too severe a punishment for one infraction? Take into consideration that Brashear, who escaped with a concussion, could have been severely hurt or possibly even killed. Had McSorley put just a little more juice into his swing there is no telling what the results would have been. McSorley has made a career out of policing the ice and playing aggressively, but this transcends the boundaries of acceptable play and warrants a punishment of a similar nature. Anything less would be a slap on the hand, and McSorley would soon forget the situation entirely, no matter how sorry he professes to be now. The ruling would send a strong message to every player in the league that this type of play is entirely unacceptable.

Aside from what the NHL has brewing, there is also a potential police investigation. The Vancouver Police department, flooded with calls following the incident, is beginning to pursue the matter. Canucks General Manager Brian Burke, who was once the NHL's head disciplinarian, has stated that the police should stay out and leave the situation entirely in the hands of the league. He's right. In any other setting this is an act that would, and should, be prosecuted in a court of law. It did not occur on the street, though, and should be left to the NHL to deal with accordingly.

In a day and age where violence in the sports world is growing off the playing field at an alarming rate, instituting severe punishments for game infractions is the way to keep tabs on what we do have some control over. A player can apologize and play dumb all he wants to the media afterwards, but it does not erase or lessen the severity of the act that the player has committed. A similar situation in an office workplace would most likely result in a firing, and this should be treated no differently. Very simply, Marty McSorley does not deserve to participate in an NHL contest ever again. I don't see how an argument could be made otherwise.

The McSorley incident is only the latest act in the tragedy that has unfolded to be the Boston Bruins' season. With goaltenders Rob Tallas and Byron Dafoe now ailing, it looks as if John Grahame may be back on the radar map. Grahame did nothing but impress in his short stint at the beginning of the season, and to see him provided another shot in Boston would certainly be a welcome one. Don't expect him to shift to the driver's seat for the long haul, though. Once Lord Byron is back, inconsistent as he has been, he'll be the one trying to pull the team along. It would be nice to see the Bruins shop Tallas, though, and put some faith into the young Grahame. The kid can hang, and can only get better given the chance to get between the pipes.

Bruins owner Jeremy Jacobs, who rarely comments on the status of his team during the season, provided another twist in the plot. Jacobs explained to the media that the root of the problem was coach Pat Burns, citing the coach for simply failing to get the job done. When was the last time Jacobs looked at the team he in part assembled, or does he even remember that he owns an NHL franchise? Burns is one of the top coaches in the league, and is doing the best he can with what he is given, which is not much. The ignorance displayed by Jacobs's statements is truly disheartening for fans and players alike that have a genuine interest in the fortunes of the team. Jacobs has shown that the Bruins are merely a toy to him, and he no longer cares if they break. As long as the Jacobs/Harry Sinden tandem remains at the helm, it will be a long time coming before any substantial success comes to dock in Beantown.

Matt Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

LaVallee paces men's gym in rout of SC

ECAC foe awaits UMass in Philly

By Gary Mendese
Collegian Staff

"Let's go, Snoop!" roared the crowd as freshman Brett Nelligan muscled his way to a career-high score of 9.45 on the pommel horse, ranking him third overall.

That was just one of the many exciting moments of Tuesday night as the Massachusetts men's gymnastics team floored the Springfield Pride. UMass posted its team season-high at the meet with a 223.275 against Springfield's 200.700, and also raked in season-bests on the floor exercise (38.1251 and pommel horse (38.4501).

Senior Jeff LaVallee, competing in his final home meet, dominated the all-around with a 56.85. He finished first on the floor with a mark of 9.725 and on pommel horse with a near-perfect 9.925. He also took home the blue ribbon on both the still rings and high bar with a 9.750 and 9.550 respectively.

Junior Bryan McNulty nailed his floor set, earning him a second-place-finishing season-high score of 9.65. Not trailing too far behind him was junior Eric Bacon (third), who came through for his team with a career-best of 9.40 on the event. Over on the pommel horse Andy Leis had something to say. The junior from Suffield, Conn. had a very clean and powerful routine, giving him a 9.775, which was good enough for second place.

McNulty won on vault with a 9.45, just passing Nelligan's 9.35. And rounding out the top three finishers on the event was junior Mike Alexander, who posted a respectable 9.25. On the parallel bars, sophomore John Szymczyk walked away with the win (9.250) and freshman Ben Jacobs posted his career-best (9.250) on high bar to rank second on the event.

So there were some great performances in Boyden the other night, but they still failed to give the Minutemen the score of 225 or higher they were looking for.

"I was hoping for a better day," head coach Ron Johnson said. "In the first four events, we only had two or three major breaks and that's just what we needed for a 226. But we struggled a little on vault and p-bars, and that brought our score down a bit."

But despite a little disappointment Johnson was excited about some of the highlights of the meet. "[McNulty's] floor was great. That's what we need: more 9.65's to get that national ranking. And [Nelligan's] pommel horse routine was awesome. And he was early in the lineup. That's a great way to get us going."

For the most part, UMass fared well on Tuesday night and will be in action next on Saturday at 7 p.m. as it travels to Pennsylvania to take on the Temple Owls. Temple, UMass' archrival, stole the UMass Open crown in December and the Minutemen plan on getting revenge. With senior Mike Moran on their team, the Owls will be tough to beat.

But if the Maroon and White start out the competition like they did on Tuesday and keep the momentum going throughout the meet, UMass will be just that much closer to an appearance at this year's NCAA Nationals, leaving Temple in the dust.

DAN SANTELLA COLLEGIAN
After throttling Springfield College this weekend at Boyden, the men's gymnastics squad takes its show on the road, squaring off against Temple on Saturday.

A forum on. . .
What's the Difference?
ISLAM and CHRISTIANITY
Speakers, Mohammad Salimullah and Joe Greene, will present the respective religions and then the audience will be encouraged to ask quesitons.
February 24th @ 7:30-8:30
Campus Center Room 163C

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
Ill Lake Manasse
Jon Manasse clarinet and the Manhattan String Quartet
Jon Manasse's brilliant tone and expression is matched note for note by the Manhattan String Quartet's flawless musicality. Join them for Brahms's Quintet in B Minor and Mozart's Quintet in A Major.
FRIDAY, MARCH 3, 8:00PM, BOWKER AUDITORIUM
Thomas P. Parker Young Artist Community Residency. Sponsored by WGBY-TV 57
Run Away to the Circus
Oops! The Big Apple Circus
It's no accident—when classical theater runs headlong into an uproarious circus the result is one of the most hilarious, magical, exciting nights you'll spend at the Fine Arts Center. The Big Apple's famous clowns, acrobats, unicyclists, aerialists, and the smartest birds on record are just part of the fun. Bring the whole family!
TUESDAY & WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7 & 8, 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL
Sponsored by Fleet Bank, WRNX 100.9 FM, and Family Fun Magazine
Masters at Work
SMITHSONIAN JAZZ MASTERWORKS ORCHESTRA
One of America's leading jazz orchestras plays Ellington, Gillespie, Goodman, Davis and more. A masterful showcase presented by a collection of jazz artists who are second to none.
SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 8:00PM, CONCERT HALL
The winning band of the Second Annual High School Band Jazz Festival will perform prior to the concert at 7:15pm
Sponsored by Health New England, WGBY-TV57, and WFCR 88.5FM
We bring the arts home
PLEASE NOTE NEW TIME! WEEKNIGHT PERFORMANCES BEGIN AT 7:30PM.
www.umass.edu/fac/spotlight
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMASS for tickets
TICKETS ONLY $7.50 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS

Spring Break...
let's get packing!

ZANNA
downtown Amherst
www.zanna.com

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00

The Finest
silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One Aging St., Northampton 584-3334
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3334
www.silverscapedesigns.com • 800-729-0971

The Center for Public Policy and Administration Welcomes
Brenda Bushouse

Department of Political Science
University of Massachusetts-Amherst
"Motivations of Nonprofit and For-Profit Entrepreneurs: Findings from the Child Care Industry"
CPPA Colloquium Speakers Series
Monday, February 28th at Noon
Room 620 Thompson Hall
Free and open to the public
For details call The Center @ 545-3940

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. April showings for June and September Lincoln Real Estate. No fees. 253-7879.

3 bedroom condos. Gas heat, hardwood floors, bright heated basement with study and laundry area. 1/2 mile to campus, on bus route. April showings for June and September $1450.00. Lincoln Real Estate. No fees charged. 253-7879.

Sublet my one bedroom apartment 1 mile from campus. Available 6/00-8/00. $525.00 a month. Call Kate 253-6955.

AUTO FOR SALE

1965 Buick Electra 225. PS, PB, Auto V8. 4dr. Maroon with black interior. Rebuilt engine, 90,000 miles. Good tires. $1600 OBO. 559-5027.

'91 Corsica V6. AT, PS, PB, 52,000 miles. Good rubber, clean, good condition. 549-6755.

AUTO FOR SALE

'88 VW Fox GL 160k. Lots of new parts. Runs strong. $750.00 584-5927.

EMPLOYMENT

Spend your summer in Montana! Glacier National Park. Imagine hiking over thousands of miles of almost untouched trails, breathing in fresh, crisp Rocky Mountain air. Imagine conquering the challenge of biking the famous Going-to-the-Sun Highway or the thrill of whitewater rafting, or setting up camp next to a turquoise blue glacier lake. Imagine no more! St. Mary Lodge, Glacier Park's finest, is now hiring for the 2000 summer season. Call (800)368-3689 or e-mail name and mailing address to jobs@glpark.com for an application. Check out our website at www.glcpark.com to learn more about the opportunity of a lifetime.

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132 www.biketrips.com

EMPLOYMENT

Arts and Medie Jobs/Internships that build resumes! Horizon Camps seeks fun-loving, instructors and directors with skills in : website management, desktop publishing, video, journalism, photography, graphic design, arts & crafts, woodworking, ceramics and stained glass. Many positions at 4 great, co-ed children's camps in NY, ME and PA. Top camp salaries plus room, board and travel. Apply online at www.horizoncamps.com or call (800)544-5448 for info.

Camp Wayne for girls-sister half of brother/sister camp in Pennsylvania (3 hrs from New York City). If you love children and want a caring, fun environment we are looking to hire staff from 6/20-8/18/00 for: tennis, basketball, softball, soccer, volleyball, golf, gymnastics, aerobics, cheerleading, swimming, sailing, waterskiing, self-defense, ropes, fine arts (ceramics, sculptuer, drawing, painting, silk screening, jewlery), photography, piano, guitar, drama, video, group leaders. On campus interviews March 9th. Call 800-279-3019.

EMPLOYMENT

Nursery/Greenhouse full/time, year/round position to assist manager in multi retail locations. Salary plus benefits. Send resume to Westfield Home and Garden, 81 Springfield Rd, Westfield MA 01085.

Coach: Swim team looking for part-time head coach. Competitive Swim experience. Salary commensurate with experience. Belchertown Rec. 323-0419 or Mary 534-9904.

-Misprint 2/22 & 2/23-Wanne make money doing what you always do anyway? E-mail me at quick-neasymoney@aol.com

Summer Employment; Outdoors. Weight loss/sports camp looking for energetic people to lead campers in a fun filled summer. Located in West Stockbridge, MA. in the heart of the Berkshires. Call for more information. Toll Free 877-FIT-CAMP. email marc@camp-kingsmont.com

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132 www.biketrips.com

Childcare for handicapped, 15+ hours. Housework, references, car $9.50/hr. 247-5800.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Sigma Delta Tau would like to welcome their new members: Lindsay, Kirsten, Colleen, Rachel, Kelly, Katie, Brooke, Maggie, Brynn, Nicole, Melissa and Allison. Congratulations!!!

INSTRUCTION

University Bertending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com Space is limited!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

SERVICES

Massege winter away. $15.00 for an hour session. Michael 585-8577.

Rentel problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Qestions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009.

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $229 rt. Europe $169 ow. Other worldwide destinations cheap. ONLY TERRORISTS GET YOU THERE CHEAPER! Book tickets on-line www.airtech.com or 212-219-7000.

Study Spanish. Internships in Guatemala. College Credit. www.casaxelaju.com (512)416-6991.

#1 Paname City Vacetions! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring breek Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endless-summertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Paname City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386.

WANTED

WANTED: 48 people to lose weight now! Safe, Natural Dr. recommended. Call Anna 1-508-324-3252.

Call us NOW at 545-3500 to get your ads put in The Collegian Classifieds!!

Five College Community Calendar

THURSDAY, FEB. 24

Workshop – A workshop on contraception and safer sex will be held at 5 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services. Men and women are welcome.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest coed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@mailkitty.com for more information.

Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac11@aol.com or Caleb at 587-3740 by March 5.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5600 for more information.

Submissions – Short Cuts, UMass' short story journal, is currently accepting prose submissions for its second annual issue. The deadline is March 1. For more information call Matt at 549-1053, or email submissions and questions to shortstory@acad.umass.edu.

Support – A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone pre-screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5316 if interested.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

Voting – A reminder to registered voters: A voter can only vote absentee due to absence from his/her residence community during polling hours, physical disability preventing the voter from going to a polling place, or religious belief. For more information call 256-4035.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,* you get a stamp on your card. When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER

Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	231 Govt to Govt
3	CBS/3 Hartford	256 NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	333 CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	334 CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield	335 CNN fn
7	HSCN Movie Ch.	336 CNN SI
8	UPN/20 Hartford	337 TBS
9	Weather Channel	338 BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain	339 College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford	340 Univision
12	PBS/24 Hartford	341 Comedy Central
13	WOCH HSCN	342 Cartoon Network
14	International	343 TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV	344 C-Span
16	WB/New Haven	345 ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Syndance	346 Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel	347 History Channel
19	UVC-TV19	348 HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 24, 2000

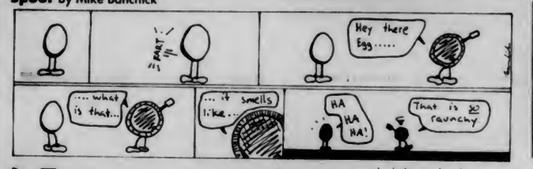
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	(12) Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⧖		Lost Treasures-Ancient World		Mystery! "Trial by Fire" (In Stereo) ⧖				Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	(3) News ⧖	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Chicago Hope "Simon Sez" ⧖	48 Hours "In a Panic" ⧖			News ⧖	Late Show ⧖
WBZ	4	(4) News ⧖	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Chicago Hope "Simon Sez" ⧖	48 Hours "In a Panic" ⧖			News ⧖	Late Show ⧖
WCVB	5	(5) News ⧖	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⧖	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	20/20 Downtown ⧖			News ⧖	Nightline ⧖
WLVI	6	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends ⧖	Nanny ⧖	Popular "Lord of the Flies" ⧖		Charmed "Give Me a Sign" ⧖	News			Friends ⧖	Nanny ⧖
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⧖	Friends ⧖	Jesse ⧖	Frasier ⧖	Stark Raving	ER "Be Patient" (In Stereo) ⧖		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV ⧖	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ⧖			News	Real TV (R) ⧖		Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT	9	News	NBC News	Extra ⧖	Ent. Tonight	Friends ⧖	Jesse ⧖	Frasier ⧖	Stark Raving	ER "Be Patient" (In Stereo) ⧖		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons ⧖	Seinfeld ⧖	Seinfeld ⧖	Friends ⧖	★★½ "The Nutty Professor" (1996, Comedy) Eddie Murphy. ⧖			News			Friends ⧖	Fraser ⧖
WWLP	22	News ⧖	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⧖	Friends ⧖	Jesse ⧖	Frasier ⧖	Stark Raving	ER "Be Patient" (In Stereo) ⧖		News ⧖	Tonight Show
WGBY	4	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⧖		This Old Hse.	Drs. on Call	Mystery! "Trial by Fire" (In Stereo) ⧖				Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⧖
WGGB	29	News ⧖	ABC News	Seinfeld ⧖	Frasier ⧖	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	20/20 Downtown ⧖			Net a Xt.	Nightline ⧖
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ⧖	Judge Judy ⧖	Seinfeld ⧖	Frasier ⧖	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ⧖						Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Rosanne ⧖	Rosanne ⧖	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★½ "Rumble in the Bronx" (1995, Adventure) Jackie Chan.						★★½ "The Running Man" (1987)	Arnold Schwarzenegger
A&E	23	L.A. Law "The Bald Ones"		Law & Order "Benevolence" ⧖		Biography: Tanya Tucker		Investigative Reports ⧖				Inside Story "Ygrl Like a Girl"	Law & Order ⧖
CNN	28	Worldview ⧖	Moneyline	Newsnight ⧖	Crossfire ⧖	World Today ⧖		Larry King Live ⧖				Newsstand ⧖	Moneyline (R)
COM	36	Saturday Night Live ⧖		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	★★½ "Scooby Doo" (1987, Comedy) Jamie Foxx, Tommy Davidson.						Sinbad: Brain Damaged (R) ⧖	Daily Show
DISC	43	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Running Wild		On the Inside "Real LAPD" (R)		Science Mysteries				Into the Unknown	On the Inside "Real LAPD" (R)
ESPN	40	Sportscenter ⧖		College Basketball	Purdue at Michigan. (Live)			College Basketball. Marquette at South Florida. (Live)				Sportscenter ⧖
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Chicago Hope (In Stereo) ⧖		★★½ "Cast the First Stone" (1989, Drama) Jill Eikenberry.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	MTV Jams	Beat Suits	Celebrity	Senseless	Say What Kriss	TRL Wanna	TRL (R) (In Stereo)		Celebrity	Senseless	Undressed	Lovelins
NICK	46	All That	Caroline	Hey Arnold! ⧖	Rugrats ⧖	Thornberrys	Rewrite	Brady Bunch	Rev. Hillbillies	All In Family	Jeffersons ⧖	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI	45	Sliders "Just Say Yes" (R) ⧖		"Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai Across the 8th Dimension"				★★½ "Addams Family Values" (1993, Comedy) Anjelica Huston.				"Addams Family Values" (1993)
TLC	24	Home Again Home Again		48 Hours "In the Danger Zone"		Deluge: Flash Floods		Deluge: Drowning Earth		Deluge: Race Against Nature		Deluge: Flash Floods (R)
TNT	48	In the Heat of the Night ⧖		ER "A Rock in Its Head" ⧖		★★½ "Pale Rider" (1985, Western) Clint Eastwood, Michael Moriarty.						★★½ "Sudden Impact" (1983) Clint Eastwood. ⧖
USA	47	Baywatch (In Stereo) ⧖		JAG "Wedding Bell Blues" ⧖		Walker, Texas Ranger "Patriot" ⧖		★★½ "Buried Alive II" (1997, Suspense) Tim Matheson. ⧖				Walker, Texas Ranger ⧖
HBO	31	(5:00)	★★ "Dance With Me" (1998, Drama) Vanessa L. Williams. (In Stereo) PG ⧖					★½ "Gloria" (1999, Drama) Sharon Stone. (In Stereo) R ⧖				Strippers: The Naked Stages
MAX	32	★★ "The Package" (1989, Drama) Gene Hackman. ⧖				"The First 8 1/2 Weeks" (1998) Phil Mercuno. ⧖		★★½ "Cocktail" (1988, Drama) Tom Cruise. (In Stereo) R ⧖				"Surrender" ⧖
SHOW	33	"Love Songs" (1999, Drama) Robert Townsend. (In Stereo) ⧖				★½ "Docufile" (1998, Science Fiction) Matthew Broderick. PG-13 ⧖		★ "Point Blank" (1998, Action) Mickey Rourke. R ⧖				Lino's (R) ⧖

Adam & Eric By Ross Burach

Dilbert By Scott Adams



Doonesburry By Gary Trudeau

RobotMan By Jim Meddick

Spoot By Mike Banchick

Adam & Eric By Ross Burach

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Nona By Anna Faktorovich

Doonesburry By Gary Trudeau

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You should be able to get a friend to open up to you today, and reveal a few things that he or she has been keeping hidden away for too long.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You should be able to move well ahead of the pack today, provided you are properly prepared for the next stage of an important project.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're feeling a little detached and aloof today, but you needn't stay that way if you don't want to. All you have to do is reach out.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may find yourself thinking back to a recent event or journey which still provides you with a great deal of pleasure.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You can learn a great deal today by watching how others do certain things. You don't have to agree with the methods, but the energy is admirable.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Commitment is the keyword today. You won't be able to accomplish anything important without dedicating yourself fully to the endeavor.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can put a little more magic and adventure into your life simply by choosing one or more of the fascinating options open to you at this time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Take care that you don't let your self-centered side mark an unwanted appearance today. Be sure you answer all questions fairly.

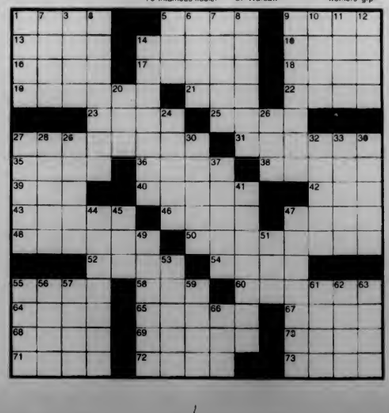
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may be feeling as though someone is "testing" you in some way, and indeed you'll be riding an emotional roller-coaster at times.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – A fond memory inspires you to do something new and different today, though that very thing will be closely related to a past triumph.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You have a great deal to offer today, but you mustn't let the cat out of the bag prematurely. There's a time for revealing what you know.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You can have a fascinating day, provided you open the right doors at the right time. Ignore opportunities, and you'll be condemned to routine.

Quote of the Day



"And on the eighth day God created Mankind. Why was he having such a bad day?"

–Mick Foley

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

"YEAH, I'LL TAKE A PACK OF SMOKES, SOME CONDOMS, AND, UHH... HOW MUCH FOR THIS?"

ACROSS

1 Make a sweater
5 Mount — Japan
9 Intensity, as of a storm
13 Own
14 Plains grazer
15 Popular cookie
16 NYSE alternative
17 Construct
18 Writer Ayn
19 Built an avian abode
21 Glide downhill
22 Hawkeye of "M*A*S*H"
23 "— a Kick out of You"
25 Environmental problem
27 Sweater type
31 Turns inside out
35 Emmy's relative
36 Serve sighs
38 Love greatly
39 Tennis shot
40 Pack animal
42 Weapon
43 Like a teacup
46 Nature's bandage
47 Took to court
48 Put on a play
50 Some police officers
52 Pesky insect
54 Melody
55 Humorous poet
58 Apron part
60 New Jersey city
64 Writer Wiesel
65 Pita or rye
67 Novelist Turgenev
68 Cinema canine
69 Slants
70 Infamous fiddler

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ERUPT MAFT XRAY
RULER OLEO EASE
GENRE LOAN INPS
OSAKA DUSTPANS
U E T
CLIP ASS LEVER
LAC WASH BYLINE
AROMATHERAPISTS
IGNORE AUKS TEE
MESAS URGE CART
ALP REE
GLOWERED ORTED
ROOF NOME GEODE
HALF DOME EATEN
OLLA STAR SLANT

3-14:00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

71 Drove a nail obliquely
72 Novelist Ferber
73 Seize

DOWN

1 Genghis —
2 Appoint
3 Singer Burl
4 Fabric
5 Conifer
6 Puts to work
7 Athletes
8 "Just —"
9 Searched for food
10 Caspian feeder
11 Split
12 "Return of the Jedi" name
14 Harass
20 Type of trip?
24 Blabs
26 Eggs
27 Warsaw natives
28 Suit
29 Zodiac sign
30 Respond
32 Scoundrel
33 More accurate
34 Mails
37 Like Mensa people
41 Teems
44 Intellectual 45 Cozy room
47 Gushing
49 Putter
51 Small bill
53 Bushed
55 Orderly
56 Plus
57 Place
59 Legume
61 Say firmly
62 — avis
63 Drawer pull
66 Medical-workers' grp

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH
Grilled Cheese Sandwich
Chicken Rotini Casserole
Vegitarian Paella

DINNER
Soup du Jour
Beef Stroganoff
Cheese Spinach Strudel
Jamaican 3 Bean Stew

Worcester

LUNCH
Grilled Cheese Sandwich
Chicken Rotini Casserole
Vegitarian Paella
Grilled Cheese on Multigrain Bread

DINNER
Soup du Jour
Beef Stroganoff
Cheese Spinach Strudel
Jamaican 3 Bean Stew

Hampshire

LUNCH
Grilled Cheese Sandwich
Chicken Rotini Casserole
Vegitarian Paella

DINNER
Soup du Jour
Beef Stroganoff
Cheese Spinach Strudel
Jamaican 3 Bean Stew

Berkshire

LUNCH
Grilled Cheese Sandwich
Chicken Rotini Casserole
Vegitarian Paella
Grilled Cheese on Multigrain Bread

DINNER
Soup du Jour
Beef Stroganoff
Cheese Spinach Strudel
Jamaican 3 Bean Stew

Night Editor: Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician: Kara Stokes
Copy Editor: Kathleen Rolls
Production Supervisor: Lisa Metcalf
Production Staff: Dan McGuinness-Rossi, Lovee Garg

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Page 10 Thursday, February 24, 2000

Bruins' McSorley to take big hit, but penalty still soft

"It was a real dumb play."

Really? Hadn't noticed. (Note to self: stick to head = real dumb).

And so, in the aftermath of the game between Boston and

Matt Despres on the NHL

Vancouver on Monday night, this is the best that Boston Bruin defenseman Marty McSorley could come up with after trying to go yard with the head of Canuck left wing Donald Brashear.

Undoubtedly you've seen the footage, and if you haven't by now, consider yourself lucky. With the final 2.7 seconds of the game about to roll off the clock, McSorley decided to avenge an earlier scuffle by delivering a two-handed slash that caught Brashear in the right temple. The blow sent him crashing to the ice, causing him to strike his head and bleed considerably from the nose. The requisite all-out brawl between the two teams ensued, accomplishing nothing more than having the game called before the final 2.7 seconds could be played out. It was an ugly scene that would not have happened if not for the half-wit wearing number 29 for the Black and Gold.

Hockey by nature lends itself to moments of violence, but this was a moment of sheer stupidity that went above and beyond anything this league has seen for some time now. Whatever possessed McSorley to take action I was there an actual thought process there?) is irrelevant at this point; it's done and there's no turning back. What is relevant, however, is what action the league will ultimately take, certainly a decision that will be debated heavily in sports circles in the weeks to come. The NHL has already handed down a suspension of indefinite proportions, and hopefully will take the

Turn to NHL page 13

Mullins bids adieu to trio

MacFarland, Bradley, Thomas move on

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Take a picture of Massachusetts women's basketball.

Take a step back and snap a shot of a team trenched in, at 11-14 overall and 8-6 interconference, to Atlantic 10 East silver with two games remaining.

Switch to a zoom lense and check out frontrunner St. Joseph's, cruising along at a 22-4 clip.

Now freeze it.

Rewind your film to Sunday's 66-41 UMass-acre at the hands of the Toma-Hawks. Write a caption about foul calls, then file under motivation.

Time to step into the darkroom.

The inside of the William D. Mullins Center will be unusually loud but predictably shadowy at tonight's 7 p.m. tip-off with Fordham, so pack aflash. Shed some light on the visiting Rams' 4-21 mark overall. Catch the glint of three conference wins and 492 three-point attempts among the Bronx crew's haul.

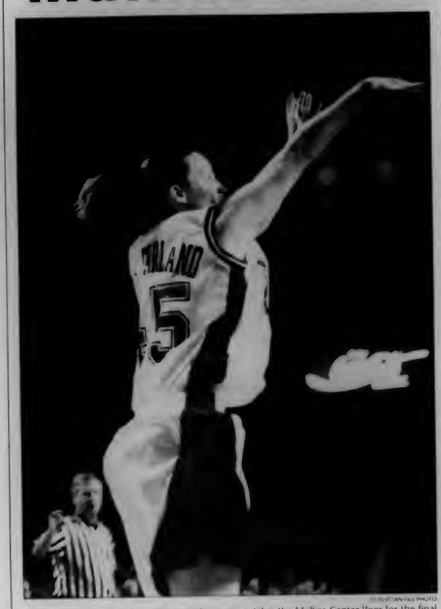
Now burn in the image of three UMass seniors putting on a final home showing. See what's starting to develop?

Coach Joanie O'Brien's troops hope to frame the home portion of their regular season with a win over the downtrodden Rams, and open up the stage to final Mullins heroics from seniors Tonia Thomas, Alison MacFarland and Jaywana Bradley in the process via this evening's Senior Night light with Fordham. After grinding out a 61-54 rumble at Rose Hill Gym on Jan. 20, O'Brien's Minutewomen don't appear to need any reminder about Fordham's forte.

"Going into this game, I think our kids remember back to the last time we played them," O'Brien said on her weekly WMUA radio show yesterday. "We had ourselves a decent lead, but they're a team that really jacks up the three. We'll be very aware of that and what they tried to do to us last time."

There's little doubt that the Kevin Morris-led Rams will also remember a thing or two from these teams' last meeting. Thomas connected on a pair of long-range treys and hauled in four rebounds for UMass, while MacFarland and Bradley teamed to hold the starting Ram backcourt scoreless from the field. Fordham was able to keep the contest interesting, however, behind the double-barreled scoring attack of forwards Chinyere Vann and Nailah Wallace (combined 33 points on 11-of-16 shooting). O'Brien appears to have centralized the devastating range of that tandem in the minds of her players this week.

WOMEN'S HOOP B-BALL
UMASS VS. FORDHAM
TONIGHT, 7 P.M.
DAVID ROSE-PLAY
JUSTIN REED-COLOR
WEEKEND PREVIEW



"They shoot over 20 threes a game," O'Brien said. "They've got some kids that can really shoot it well from out there."

Fortunately for the Maroon and White, long rangers like MacFarland and Thomas have kept UMass in the hunt through each swing of the regular season pendulum. The newest enshrinee into the University's 1,000-point scorer club, co-captain MacFarland paces the Minutewomen with a 9.4 ppg average. Thomas leads the assault from international waters with a team-high 33 trifectas made, despite having rustled up her game down home in Seguin, TX. Bradley injects the UMass lineup with athleticism and a knack for clutch performances, such as her electrifying display in last week's upset of No. 25 George Washington.

Even as she acknowledges the emotional impact her seniors' home send-off should have tonight, O'Brien foresees her team's last two games, tonight and 2 p.m. Sunday at Rhode Island, as a sort of season-ending mirror.

"We've got three seniors on the team, and all three of them have been a big part of what we've tried to do," O'Brien said. "Emotions sometimes do carry you a long way. But the last two games are going to be much more about ourselves, and figuring out ourselves instead of who we're playing."

Kind of like looking at yourself in a picture.

Alison MacFarland, along with two other seniors, takes the Mullins Center floor for the final time tonight when the Minutewomen take on Fordham.

Turn to MULLINS, page 13

Finnish trio making a big impact for UM hockey team

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Since the fall of the Iron Curtain more than a decade ago, hockey has truly become a game that showcases the best players in the world.

The loosening of the Curtain's stranglehold on Russia's finest athletes has helped the National Hockey League prosper not only from the play of CCCR graduates but also from skilled Europeans such as Jaromir Jagr, Dominik Hasek and Teemu Selanne. A number of the continent's top junior hockey players have made their way into collegiate programs in the United States.

Case in point the Massachusetts hockey team.

In the past three years, Finnish natives Markus Helanen, Toni Soderholm and Samuli Jalkanen have all departed their native country in favor of attending school and playing hockey in Amherst. The pipeline began for the 1997-98 season, when Helanen made his debut on the UMass team. A year later, Soderholm donned the Maroon and White for the first time, while Jalkanen continued the trend this season.

"The thing that sticks out about all three of them is that they bring a lot of maturity on the ice. All three have been in the [Finnish] army and possess a high level of skill," UMass hockey coach Joe Mallen said. "Individually, they are great people to have in our program."

The man between the pipes

Now in his second season as the starting goaltender for the Minutemen, Helanen has established himself as one of the top netminders in Hockey East. In 25 games this year, he has a 9-13-2 mark, but has posted a solid 2.77 goals-against average.

"Markus has played very well this year, and has really improved his game over the last three years," Mallen said. "Going into his senior year, I think he can be one of the best goalies in the country, and he already is definitely one of the best in Hockey East."

"He's been the backbone of this team night in and night out," added Mallen. "He always puts us in a position to win."

The pioneer of the Finnish contingent, Helanen first came to the United States via a domestic exchange program during high school. The Vantaa, Finland product attended New Hartford [NY] High School, where he was a standout in both hockey and tennis. Following New Hartford, he returned to his native country for a final year of junior hockey before matriculating at UMass.

"That was my dream after high school, to come to college. At first, I didn't have a clue where I wanted to go," Helanen said. "But I started looking at schools and then UMass started to recruit me. It's been a lot of fun here."

Although the high school credentials of the future UMass goalie were impressive, it was Helanen's all around experience that led the Minutemen to actively pursue the 6-foot-3, 205-pound goaltender.

"We get about 200 or 300 letters a year from kids who want to play hockey here. But when the letter from Markus came across my desk, I liked his size and background, so we decided to follow up on him," Mallen said. "We knew that he had played high school hockey in New York, but then we found out that he had played junior hockey in Finland and was planning to go back there for one more season."

Some programs tend to go for the Massachusetts kids, but we found Markus to be the type of goalie that we were looking for," added Mallen. "He fit the bill."

Last season, the Finnish goaltender recorded a 10-18-2 record, but helped spark the Minutemen early in the season by shutting down Maine in an early-season series in Amherst. Helanen made 87 saves in two nights and allowed UMass to earn three of four points from the eventual national champions.

He then saved some of his best for last, going 5-1 in his final six regular season games and propelling the Minutemen to a sixth-place finish in Hockey East. For his efforts last season, the man behind the mask earned All-Hockey East Honorable Mention laurels.

Overall, Helanen has been an important reason for the success of the Minutemen in the past two seasons, but he realizes that UMass must step up its level of play in the final two weekends of the present campaign. With home-and-home series against No. 6 Boston College and No. 4 New Hampshire on the slate, UMass must record at least one win if it wants to earn a berth in the Hockey East playoffs.

"These last games are going to be like playoff games for us," Helanen said. "We definitely need to win some games, so there's going to be some pressure. But we know how to handle it, so it's going to be a good challenge for us."

A steady presence on the blueline

The first Finn to follow Helanen to UMass was Toni Soderholm, a defenseman from Helsinki. The sophomore defenseman for the Minutemen took a similar path to Helanen, receiving a portion of his secondary education in Ontario before eventually enrolling at UMass.

"I heard about UMass through my old high school coach in Canada. He started the initial process [of contacting colleges]," Soderholm said. "It's always easier to go somewhere that you know someone [in Helanen], especially in a different city, or even a different culture. That makes a big difference."

As a freshman, Soderholm led all freshman defensemen in scoring with nine points. A year later, the 6-foot-2, 185-pound blueliner has paced the defensive unit in scoring with 14 points and is fifth on the club in that department.

"Toni came in last year and down towards the end of the year showed promise of being a solid defenseman in our league," Mallen said. "He is a solid, consistent defenseman who is good at handling the puck and bringing it out of our end."

Said Soderholm: "What made it easy as a freshman was that you were always on your toes and you never knew to expect. As a sophomore, I haven't really been pleased with the way that I have been playing. I've been too inconsistent, and I think that part of that is because I came in this year expecting to do too much. It's something that I'm going to address after the season is over."

Following Soderholm to the United States this season was Jalkanen, also a fellow defenseman. Although they have not played together on the same line this year, the older statesman has tried to assist the freshman during the adjustment to life in a new country – just like Helanen did for him a year ago.

"Markus helped me get started last year, and I'm trying to act in the same way with Sami this year," Soderholm said. "Having people from the same country [on the same team] can make a big difference in their lives."

"Sami and I were from two different teams in Finland, rival teams in fact. When you are at the age of going to college, you are still immature enough to put an opponent in a lesser position than someone who is on your own team," added Soderholm. "I think it really helps to put down those barriers, and doing that has opened up the lines of communication for people at home."

However, on the ice, Soderholm remains one of the club's top defenseman. With a formidable frame and solid two-way play, it seems apparent that the sophomore will make the necessary adjustments in the off-season and return next season ready to take on all challenges.

The new kid on the block

Unlike his fellow teammates, Jalkanen arrived in the U.S. without any previous playing experience in North America. So, not only did the freshman blueliner have to adjust to a new style of hockey, but also a new culture.

"Actually, it's been pretty easy [making the adjustment]. I haven't faced any big problems," Jalkanen said. "Markus and Toni have been really helpful, and living with Toni, he's helped me with my schoolwork and everything else."

At first glance, Jalkanen might be mistaken for a forward. Standing 5-foot-10 and weighing 187 pounds, he does not have the size of a prototypical defenseman. However, the newest member of the Finnish connection has made an immediate impact for the Minutemen. He has seen action in all 30 games this year, scoring six points.

"Coming in, we didn't know how big or small of an impact Sami was going to have," Mallen said. "He plays a lot of minutes and is on our first power play unit, which are two strong statements. I think that he and Tim Turner have made significant contributions to the team as freshmen."

Added Jalkanen: "I came here to play, not to sit on the bench. I came in ready to work for ice time."

Unfortunately, Jalkanen is not likely to aid the Minutemen in their playoff push, as he suffered a broken left wrist in practice last week and will probably miss the remainder of the season.

"Of course, it's a shame to get

Turn to FIN, page 13

As a first line defenseman, Toni Soderholm has transformed into a solid two-way player for the Joe Mallen and the Minutemen.

With a 2.77 goals-against-average, many will make an argument for Markus Helanen as the Hockey East's most stingy netminder.

The Massachusetts

Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 22 Friday, February 25, 2000

Families forced to move

Lead paint detected in Lincoln Apartments

Families residing in Lincoln Apartments were moved to North Village Apartment buildings due to the discovery of lead paint in their homes last week.

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

A total of 14 families with children under the age of six, were removed from their homes in the Lincoln Apartment Complex, last week due to the discovery of lead paint.

Per order of the University of Massachusetts Housing Department and due to state and federal laws designed to protect children younger than the age of six from the potential for poisoning, residents were moved to North Village apartment buildings.

Tenants that previously lived in the complex will not receive any additional costs in their new apartments.

Those who currently live in the new apartment complex will pay the same rent as they did at Lincoln Apartments, for the duration of their lease. Moving costs for the venture as well as phone installation fees were covered by Housing Services.

According to comments made by Housing Services director Michael Gilbert, no lead was detected when the testing of the inner buildings at the complex were conducted in the spring of 1999. Unfortunately, later tests performed with more sophisticated equipment revealed the presence of lead on some interior painted surfaces in the building. Surfaces such as the doorframes and bookcases were primarily painted with a paint containing lead.

Gilbert explained that lead paint was detected at 11 buildings in the complex, mostly on door and window frames, as well as on exterior railings and desk fenestration. In most cases, several layers of non-toxic paint have covered up the paint containing lead.

According to information provided by the Coalition to End Lead Poisoning in Children, the disease is the number one environmental disease in the country. Yearly, it affects nearly one million children under the age of six, and also strongly effects pregnant women.

The disease is acquired by oral ingestion, such as the inhalation of lead dusts, often found in lead paint. When the lead enters the blood stream it remains in the body, being stored in the soft tissues of the liver, kidneys and the brain.

Even low levels of the toxin cause serious damage to children, the organization explained. They can cause hyperactivity, reading disabilities, lowered I.Q. and aggressive behavior in children. All effects are both irreversible and permanent.

The Lincoln Apartment Buildings consist of 16 two-bedroom and 65 one-bedroom apartments, also 24 studio apartments, for a total of 105 units. The building was constructed in 1958 to be rented out to area residents.

UMass student chosen All-USA Today College Academic Team

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Correspondent

Senior Phillip Barron opened a copy of USA TODAY last week to find that he was one of the 60 chosen, out of the 828 applicants, to be on the All-USA College Academic Team.

USA TODAY sought the nation's most outstanding undergraduates to be part of its 2000 All-USA Academic Team. On Feb. 17 the newspaper announced its first, second and third team, each consisting of 20 students. The first team received $2,500 and was invited to a special awards luncheon in Arlington, VA the next day. The second and third teams were recognized in the newspaper for their academic success, leadership and use of their skills outside of the classroom. Barron is acknowledged on the third team.

"I was honored. I was very surprised," Barron said. The UMass Office of National Scholarship Advisement (ONSA) that nominated Barron and several other students, was not so surprised. Coordinator Susan Whitbourne met with Barron in September to discuss his options.

Whitbourne explained, "They were looking for students that had done really unusual, extraordinary things." After noting his academic record, learning of his teaching experience and that he is a firm activist in social issues, the office decided he was a solid candidate for the 2000 team.

A key element in the academic team application is an essay that explains the student's most outstanding original academic or intellectual product. Barron wrote on his summer experience developing and teaching a philosophy course to pregnant and/or parenting low-income teenage mothers at the Care Center in Holyoke.

Teaching began as an effort to back the Bard Program, which allows low-income people who have not gone to college to study the humanities with top-notch professors. The plans to implement the program in Holyoke occurred in October of 1999.

According to Barron, he was able to develop a pilot course in July at the Care Center, to see how Holyoke locals would react to philosophy. The Care Center has an all-female environment and offers GED preparatory courses, so all of Barron's students were females between the ages of 15 and 20.

Although Barron had experience tutoring, he had not taught formally and his students had not studied philosophy prior to his class. "Where some of them had heard the word philosophy before, they didn't really know what it was, that you could study it in college," Barron said.

His course, an introduction to moral philosophy, covered the three main ethical theories: Aristotleanism, Utilitarianism and Kantianism.

The students' reaction was so positive that although the course was intended to last only one month, they requested an extension. The class went into August and during that time Barron was also able to teach a feminism course. One of his students went on to the Bard Program in October.

Barron said they "had fun" but, more important, that the experience "confirmed that the humanities are not reserved for a wealthy class of people." When the philosophy course ended, Barron continued to work for the Care Center teaching science, writing and math.

Along with the work he does for the Care Center, Barron is working as a paralegal on a capital case in Massachusetts. In the past, he was also a paralegal and investigator in his home state of South Carolina with the Center for Capital Litigation, a non-profit defense agency that represents death-row inmates on appeal. He said he continues to advocate against the death penalty.

Barron hopes that this honor will help him as he is currently looking into graduate school. He plans to pursue a doctorate in philosophy and said he would like to teach.

Variety of issues to be covered in revived journal

By Jason Spears
Collegian Staff

Students and faculty from the five colleges will be relaunching the Five College Journal of Law & Society.

It will serve as a forum for students and faculty of the five colleges to publish professional, academic papers concerning law and society while receiving national recognition for their work. The journal will take submissions in the categories of, but not limited to, legal theory, political theory (foreign and domestic), Constitutional law, international law, sociological issues, civil liberties, ethics of law and legal philosophy.

Students on the editorial board of the Five College Journal decided it needed to be brought back because the five college area has such an abundance of knowledge on legal issues.

"The five colleges are just so rich [in legal studies]... You have so many institutions here, it's a shame we are not more well known," said editorial board member Marika Dunn.

"We do not want to limit the people who are willing to submit things. We are looking for a broad base journal, on a variety of issues," said editorial board member Aaron Macus.

The Journal of Law hopes to print 500 copies of its first issue and distribute 400 of those copies to other colleges and institutions nationwide.

In the beginning, the Five College Journal will place an emphasis on student work. Then the journal will try to include more faculty submissions to gain greater respectability. However, editorial board members Alex Kriel and Aaron Marcus emphasized that there will always be room in the journal for undergraduate and graduate work. Aaron Marcus hopes with an increase in funding and distribution, the journal's length can be expanded to prevent the exclusion of students' work and to allow an increase in faculty work.

While the Five College Journal has a faculty board of professors from all five colleges, the journal is essentially a student run publication with the professors acting as advisors. Students from each one of the five colleges will be editing, soliciting funds and choosing the submissions that will be published.

In the past, the Five College Journal has come and gone, with the last issue being printed in 1995. The current editors hope to prevent the journal from slipping away again by bringing in new students each semester to make the journal continue.

"We are hoping to have it established firmly enough that it will continue and be a reputable publication," said editorial board member Jessica Nelson.

Students interested in getting more

Bush losing support

Bob Jones U. visit hurting chances

By Juliet Eilperin and Hanna Rosin
Washington Post

For years, Bob Jones University was a routine campaign stop for conservative Republicans visiting South Carolina, as innocent as visiting local landmarks like the Peach Festival in Gilbert or the Darlington Motor Speedway.

But since George Bush kicked off his South Carolina campaign there earlier this month, the evangelical university in Greenville has become toxic – and not just for Bush. Democrats have pounced on the episode as their latest political club against GOP candidates, pressing their rivals to denounce the school's ban on interracial dating and its anti-Catholic teachings.

This week, Senate Democrats went after John Ashcroft (R-Mo.), who is facing a tough re-election bid this year, for accepting an honorary degree from Bob Jones in May. Lawmakers in both houses are introducing resolutions condemning the university's policies, and

Turn to BUSH, page 2

Bush hesitancy helps McCain

By Thomas B. Edsall and Dan Balz
Washington Post

Texas Gov. George W. Bush squandered key opportunities to cement his image as a candidate capable of broadening the Republican party's appeal, leaving the political opening that John McCain has seized, GOP strategists say.

Bush began his bid for the Republican presidential nomination with what seemed a determined effort to break with the antigovernment conservatism associated with former House speaker Newt Gingrich. In policy stands on issues as diverse as taxes and education, and in his political strategy, Bush declared himself as a "compassionate conservative" empathetic to the working poor who could reach out to minorities and women.

At a number of key moments during the campaign, however, Bush has avoided taking his defiance of party orthodoxy to levels that might irritate the GOP's conservative wing. He differed with House Republicans on some policies, then backed off from directly challenging them. He refused to speak on the flying of the Confederate battle flag in South Carolina, an important issue to African Americans nationwide, but also to Republican conservatives in that state.

Bush also declined last week to distance himself from televangelist Pat Robertson and his attacks on McCain, which appeared to damage his image with moderates and independents.

"People look for firmness, and it's not clear that this is a leader with firm convictions who is prepared to stand his ground and tell even those who are

Turn to MCCAIN, page 3

GU student dies in fight

By Caryle Murphy and Nancy Trejos
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Two Georgetown University soccer players have hired a criminal attorney following the death of a fellow student who suffered a severe head injury last week during a campus fistfight apparently fueled by alcohol.

David A. Shick, 20, a junior business major, died Tuesday at 4 p.m. at Georgetown University Hospital, more than four days after the fracas early Friday in a campus parking lot. He had been in the neurosurgery intensive care unit and remained in critical condition throughout his stay, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

Deputy Chief Medical Examiner Jacqueline Lee said yesterday that an autopsy is complete but that more toxicology tests and police investigation are needed before a cause of death can be declared.

Attorney David Schertler said he has been retained by two students who were "present" during the fight, but he declined to identify them.

"There is the potential... for a criminal charge here, but I think that depends on the nuances of what occurred," said Schertler, who once headed the homicide unit in the U.S. attorney's office. Police and prosecutors will have to decide, he said, "is there a crime here, or was this just a very tragic accident?"

Shick's death is the second serious incident at the university in the past two months caused in part by alcohol. In December, a Georgetown student vandalized an outdoor display of a Jewish menorah, sparking outrage among many at the Catholic campus. The student, who apologized and withdrew from school, said he was drunk at the time.

"It's not that this campus so much has a hate problem or a violence problem," said Ian McClatchey, a resident assistant in one of the dorms. "It's the alcohol problem that is so incredibly dominating on this campus. You can't avoid it on the weekend."

Last spring, a campus task force concluded in a special "Campus Culture" report that underage and "binge" drinking by students is a major problem. There is "ample evidence to suggest that alcohol abuse is becoming increasingly more serious among Georgetown students," the report said.

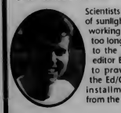
Georgetown's president, the Rev. Leo J. Donovan, said in a statement: "Our deepest condolences are with the family, friends and loved ones of David Shick... We are profoundly saddened by this immeasurable loss."

University officials declined to provide details of the fight, saying they are cooperating with District of Columbia police in the investigation.

But according to some students, Shick and several friends were returning from Champions, a Georgetown bar, about 2:30 a.m. Friday when they crossed paths in a campus parking lot with another group of students, including members of the school soccer team. The two groups, which a university spokesman said totaled about 10 students, jostled each other, and a fight broke out.

Sgt. Michael Farish, of the D.C. police, said Shick fell after being punched or pushed, striking his head on either the pavement or the curb. He said police have questioned most of the students involved in the fight and have identified the person who pushed or punched Shick.

Police and students say at least some of the students had been drinking, including students who were under the legal drinking age of 21.



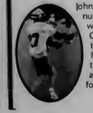
A hate free night

After screening his film, Journey to a Hate Free Millennium, last night in the Campus Center, filmmaker Brent Scarpo brought student volunteers onto the stage to partake in an exercise in which they attempted to define words such as fear, ignorance, hate and suffering.

Extended Forecast

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 41 LOW: 5	HIGH: 45 LOW: 7	HIGH: 56 LOW: 13

Notes from the CC Basement — Page 4



Scientists say that the lack of sunlight one gets from working at the Collegian too long can do damage to the brain. Co-Sports editor Brett Mauser tries to prove otherwise on the Ed/Op page with his installment of "Notes from the CC Basement".

The King of Cate Night — Page 5

Wes Wrightson delivers with the Video Pick of the Week this "Conan" doesn't have an opening monologue... that's funny, anyway. Plus, the end of Cats and the arrival of Percy Hill. See Arts for the all the juicy stuff.

Setting up Camp — Page 12

John Madigan will be one of a number of Minutemen who will help out goaltender Chris Campoletano and the rest of the men's lacrosse squad open up the season this weekend against Hofstra. See Sports for details.

Arts & Living 5
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Campus Perspectives

Compiled by Andrea M. Peers • Photos by Mark Holloway

What is the most embarrassing thing that has ever happened to you?

"It had to be when I got into this accident on the school grounds. I hit sand on a sharp turn going 40 and hit a boulder and then my car fell into a brook. It was in front of all my fellow students."

Greg Goldfarb
Major
Performance Improvement
Sophomore

"I was trying to run after the PVTA bus and I fell over in front of the bus and it drove away."

Yolanda DaCosta
Nursing
Junior

"I trip over everything. I'm just a big klutz."

Frank Batchelor
Undeclared
Freshman

"On my 21st birthday I was puking outside of Antonio's in front of the Mass Live camera while everyone was singing happy birthday to me."

Chaps Chapdelaine
BioChemistry
Junior

"We had a test in our Bio of Cancer and Aids class, and we were taking the test, and I passed gas. No one knew who did it." "We had so much trouble trying not to laugh. It smelled so bad. People were like, 'whoa!'"

Elvin Horgandorffer/Simone Swolodorf
Undeclared/Social Thought and Political Economy
Juniors

"I once woke up naked on a bathroom floor. It was just some strange person's bathroom."

Nick Palumbo
English
Senior

U.S. resists Europe victory trade rules

By John Burgess
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – U.S. officials scrambled yesterday for ways to counteract a European victory in a fight over the legality of a tax break for U.S. export promotion – $4 billion in tax breaks annually for U.S. companies that sell abroad.

The final ruling by the World Trade Organization, announced in Geneva yesterday, is potentially the biggest loss the United States has suffered in a trade dispute. Canceling the tax break would cut jobs and produce exporters, said trade officials who added that they will seek a negotiated settlement.

"However this comes out," said Deputy Treasury Secretary Stuart Eizenstat, "we have to make sure we have not put our exporting companies at a competitive disadvantage. That is our absolute drop-dead bottom line."

Under consideration are inducements such as tariff reductions that might make Europe amenable to a settlement. At the same time, officials were also studying the option of filing counter-claims against Europe. They also are working to get support from European companies whose U.S. subsidiaries benefit from the credits when they export.

U.S. officials are seeking early meeting with their European counterparts, who are all cats as to what the United States will propose. "This is a case with a big economic impact on the United States," said John Richardson, deputy chief of the European Union's Washington mission. "We're aware of the ways it's creating on this side of the Atlantic."

The decision set off immediate protests on Capitol Hill.

Senate Finance Committee chairman William Roth said it "ignored economic reality." Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, chairman of the International Trade Subcommittee, said it would complicate a vote due later this year in Congress on whether the United States should stay in the WTO. "It comes at a very bad time," Grassley said in an interview. "For a lot of people, the WTO is a questionable institution."

In a 61-page decision, a WTO appeals panel upheld an earlier ruling against a 16-year old program by which companies exporting from the United States can set up "foreign sales corporations" solely to serve as tax shelters. The panels consider them to be a government subsidy of exports, which in general are not allowed under world trade rules.

Tax treatment is a key factor in countries' competitiveness in world markets. Lower taxes at home mean that companies can offer lower prices to customers abroad. Countries often eye each other's tax systems, contending they confer unfair advantage if they target exporters for such breaks.

■ Bush

continued from page 1

the House Democratic campaign committee yesterday sent out packets on Bob Jones to help its candidates attack Republicans.

The issue is resonating on the GOP side as well: Arizona Sen. John McCain has attacked Bob Jones' policies, and some GOP lawmakers have urged the party to distance itself from the university. By Wednesday even some Bush advisers were admitting that choosing Bob Jones was a mistake.

Part of the furor is just routine campaign warfare. But the powerful reaction to the Bush visit this month also highlights how the Christian right, still powerful in many Southern states, is also a potential liability for Republicans as they seek to portray a more moderate, results-oriented image for the fall elections.

While much of the rest of the Christian right movement has softened, reaching out to minorities and playing down differences with Catholics, the visits to Bob Jones have revived moderates' worst fears about the GOP as the captive of the far right, according to some political analysts.

"It became a nice handy target for belaboring the Christian right broadly, for showing the Christian right at its worst," said James Guth, a professor at Furman University.

The association has already scared off some GOP moderates. Rep. Peter King, R-N.Y., switched his allegiance to presidential candidate Sen. John McCain, (R-Ariz.), to protest Bush's ties to the university, saying the incident could damage him and other House Republicans in the fall election.

"I didn't want it hanging around our neck up here in New York that the presidential candidate of my party consorts with and condones the bigoted policy of Bob Jones University," King said in an interview Wednesday. "It's going to be a problem and we're not going to be able shake ourselves loose of it unless we shake ourselves loose of George Bush."

The school which dubs itself, "The World's Most Unusual University," has always attracted some attention. Its 5,000 students follow rules on everything from rock music to holding hands to skirt lengths. All dating is chaperoned and none is permitted between any of three defined racial groups.

Its fundamentalist teachings promote ministering to the poor, but also classify Catholicism as "a satanic counterfeit." The current president, Bob Jones III called then-Vice President George Bush "the devil" and former Secretary of State Alexander Haig "a monster in human flesh and a demon-possessed instrument to destroy America." In 1983, the Supreme Court upheld an IRS decision to deny Bob Jones tax exempt status because of its discriminatory policies.

■ McCain

continued from page 1

close to him they are wrong," said Bill Bennett, a Republican who has been acting as a mediator and adviser to both campaigns.

For now, Bennett noted, McCain "is turning out people who wouldn't normally turn out. I would describe it [a McCain victory in November] as arguably more likely."

Bush's top domestic policy advisor, former Indianapolis mayor Stephen Goldsmith, on yesterday acknowledged worries about Bush's hardening ideological image: "I'm concerned that the current perception of the governor among many has submerged the compassionate conservatism."

Goldsmith said it isn't in Bush's personality to pick fights with particular constituencies to make a political statement as President Clinton did during his 1992 campaign by disagreeing with organized labor on trade, or criticizing the rap singer Sister Souljah at a meeting of Jesse Jackson's Rainbow Coalition.

"It is not his style to gather people around him and tell them what's wrong with their views, whether from the left or right," he said. "He doesn't look for opportunities to score symbolic victories."

But some GOP strategists appear close to concluding that Bush's failure to take such steps has weakened his prospects as a general election candidate.

"Bush gave an opening to McCain, an opening to the media and an opening to Gore," said former Republican Party chairman Richard Bond. Bush had an effective plan that appeared to be working, but "he seems to have deviated from that model," Bond said.

Yesterday, the Bush campaign began to try to move back from the right to the center. "We've gotten the word out to Pat Robertson's people to knock it off," a Bush aide said, referring to the head of the Christian Coalition who had taped highly controversial phone messages to voters that attacked McCain.

Last fall, for example, Bush challenged House Republican proposals to pare back tax credits for working families. But, when asked if he was criticizing Republican House leaders, Bush backed away, effectively mooting that challenge that had made front pages in newspapers nationwide.

And when Patrick J. Buchanan was openly exploring switching from the GOP to the Reform Party and published a highly controversial book questioning the legitimacy of U.S. participation in World War II, Bush pointedly avoided criticizing Buchanan, despite the furor created among Jews, veterans and many mainstream Republicans.

While Bush hesitated in continuing down the path he was breaking, McCain showed no such doubts. The Arizona senator charged into the Buchanan fray and declared he would welcome the conservative icon's departure from Republican ranks. McCain, too, has trimmed his political sails at times. He offered contradictory statements on the flag, ultimately ending up with Bush's position that it was a state issue. But McCain has also repeatedly challenged his party, questioning whether big tax cuts are sensible, and peppering his speeches with attacks on Republican pork barrel spending.

As McCain emerged as a significant and threatening challenger, Bush found himself forced to return to the party's base to save his candidacy. Rather than reaching out to non-Republicans, he and his supporters have accused McCain of using his support among independent and Democratic voters to hijack the Republican Party.

■ law

continued from page 1

information about the journal or how to submit papers can e-mail the editors at LawandSociety@Hotmail.com.

The importance of the Five College Journal of Law & Society was best summarized by editorial board member Marika Dunn.

"Law involves so many small aspects of our daily life and we just want people to be aware of that and be willing to submit anything they feel strongly about."

Attention all newswriters:

There will be meeting this Sunday at 3:30 p.m.
All current and interested writers are encouraged to come.

Venezuelan flood survivors relocate

By Serge F. Kovaleski
Washington Post

GURI, Venezuela – Horana Navos and her husband are modern-day pioneers, born of desperate circumstances that led them to this tiny town in a southeastern Venezuela savanna.

After the country's worst natural disaster in memory annihilated their house in the northern port city of La Guaira in December, they volunteered to move hundreds of miles away under a pre-existing plan by President Hugo Chavez to ease crowding on the Caribbean coast and give the urban poor a chance at better lives by creating communities in the sparsely inhabited hinterlands.

Navos, her husband, Manuel Mendezes, and about 2,000 other homeless storm survivors have been assigned three-bedroom apartments in a state compound built in the 1970s for workers building a hydroelectric dam. The government gives them food, health services and temporary jobs, such as street cleaning, that pay up to $100 a month while offering training in construction, carpentry and plumbing.

"Sure, the future is still uncertain, but this could be the promised land for us... Although we do not have much furniture or a real livelihood yet, we have a home, a roof over our heads and a shot at starting over," said Navos, 40.

Of Venezuela's 23 million people, 70 percent live on a narrow coastal strip. Following a year in which Chavez made little headway in ameliorating coastal overpopulation, the devastation caused by December's flooding, mudslides and rock avalanches has accelerated the program.

Many of the new dwellings are to be built by the displaced themselves on public land or donated tracts, using materials supplied by the government. These outposts in parts of Barinas state in the southwest and Bolivar state where Guri is located, would be sustained by farming, light industry and small businesses.

But exactly how economic life will be spurred remains unclear. The economy of Venezuela, the largest exporter of oil to the United States, contracted by more than 7 percent last year [although rising oil prices are expected to provide relief] and continues to be mired in one of its worst recessions.

"What I do not understand is how do you move people wholesale to the country and expect them to have tools at their disposal to make a living and raise their families," said Caracas political consultant Eric Ekvall. "Doing what? Selling what? Creating what? Where is the demand coming from?"

For now, relocated families are relishing having homes many of them nicer than the ones they had in congested, crime-ridden city neighborhoods. But observers say Chavez's program will face a tough test as storm-ravaged sections of the coast are rebuilt and economic opportunities return.

The storm, which destroyed 40,000 homes and damaged countless others, exacerbated a housing shortage. And with 150,000 people left homeless by the catastrophe – in which 10,000 to 50,000 people are believed to have died – many despairing Venezuelans are willing to colonize the interior.

Troubling signs, however, are emerging about the effort's long-term viability.

There are few opportunities in Guri, a drab town about 25 miles south of the Orinoco River. Commercial life consists of a general store, a supermarket, a bank, a restaurant and a hotel.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTOS

Campus wildlife
Warm weather yesterday allowed for more February wildlife spottings on campus than usual. A thawed out swan was spotted sleeping by the campus pond while a lonely puppy was seen tied to a building, waiting calmly for his owner.

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!

ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF
ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:
Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Do you want to be a part of the biggest student run business on campus?

Are you interested in a career in Human Resources?

Collegian is accepting applications for the position of Human Resource Coordinator.

Applications can be picked up at the Collegian in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Interested applicants should possess excellent communication and computer skills.

Any questions can be directed to christine Carroll at 545-3500 or hrcollegian@yahoo.com.

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our opinion

When push comes to shove

Most people don't call a hockey game a good one unless some blood was shed. Many don't enjoy football games without vicious tackles. Some baseball fans aren't content unless their favorite team races from the bullpen and rushes the pitcher's mound. And a lot of basketball fans aren't happy unless there is some Dennis Rodman or Charles Barkley attitude thrown out onto the court.

But how much is too much? How far should the violence be allowed to go before someone gets seriously injured? If this question is a difficult one, just ask Colin Campbell, the executive vice president of the National Hockey League.

Campbell recently handed down the harshest penalty in NHL history, prompted by excessive violence in a game of the Boston Bruins versus the Vancouver Canucks. Marty McSorley, a Bruins defenseman, gave Vancouver's Donald Brashear an unwarranted two-handed slash to the temple on Monday night, leaving the Canuck with a concussion and possibly other medical problems as well.

As punishment to McSorley, the league ruled that he is to be at least suspended from Boston's remaining 23 regular-season games and the playoffs, if by some miracle they were to make it that far. This marks McSorley's seventh NHL suspension of his 17-season career, and all in all will cost the 36-year-old $72,000 in salary. Poor baby.

Clearly upset by Vancouver's 5-2 victory, Mc"sore loser" wanted to finish a fight with Brashear that started in the first period. And as you could probably guess, at that point, McSorley was losing. So to get revenge against the Canuck, McSorley decided to sneak up behind him and hit him in the right temple, sending him down for the count, hitting the back of his head on the ice, knocking him out cold.

Well, we hope he feels better now. Not only was the hit unnecessary and un-sportsmanlike, but it was physically damaging to Brashear as well. Brashear told reporters that he wakes up with headaches every day and he experiences severe pain even when he talks on the phone. His concussion will keep him off the ice for at least the next few weeks, and possibly even for the rest of the season. So is the fact that McSorely is sitting out for the rest of the season punishment enough? Hardly.

As it stands right now, McSorely's suspension could be indefinite, pending a meeting with the heads of the NHL. But there should be nothing "pending" about it. His behavior could have permanently damaged a fellow member of the NHL, and it also gives the sport of hockey a bad name.

In general, hockey is a violent game. But there is a limit to that violence. Sure we all enjoy the checks and occasional fights that break out, but what we saw the other night was just disgusting. McSorley is clearly a bad seed and is surely not representative of the other 700 players in the NHL or the countless others who play the sport.

We at the Daily Collegian hope that justice prevails and weeds like Marty McSorley are pulled out before it's too late.

Communication is the key

Life would be much simpler if we could all communicate well. If you did not understand any first sentence, this is exactly the column you should be reading in this newspaper. Do not turn to the sports section. Do not read the national news. You should even save the comics for later because this is what you need to read the most. (Do not worry, Robot Man will still be there when you are done with my column.)

Jason Czernic

Are you seen as a jerk because you cannot get you point across intelligently? Have no fear because you are not a jerk, but instead you are a pseudo-jerk. A pseudo-jerk is just somebody who happens to be having a bad day, happens to be Howard Stern, or just cannot communicate clearly. You are not a true jerk if you truly care about communicating well with others. To accomplish this follow these simple tips.

Do not describe every great thing that you speak of with the phrase "The Bomb." Saying, "That pizza was really the bomb!" will make you seem unhip and just plain stupid. "The bomb" or its variant, "da bomb" is a phrase that had the rare ability to go out of style 1.5 seconds after it came into style (a record I think). People basically know that phonies, wannabes, and phony wannabes generally use it. If people hear you using this phrase then you will by mocked behind your back and you wouldn't want that. Healthier alternatives to da bomb include: "the best," "It was so kickass," and, "the s."

Another way to get the lines of communication working is to speak clearly. Bob Dylan needs to seriously work on this. When I was watching a Grammy broadcast in the early 90s, Jack Nicholson said that the person he was introducing was what they call "a real hoot" in Jersey. Then Bob Dylan played. I could not understand a single word he was singing! It was as if he was falling asleep on stage. For years I changed the station when a radio announcer would mention that he/she would be playing Bob Dylan next. I can see why Jack Nicholson and the people of New Jersey called Dylan a "real hoot" because they must have been laughing at him behind his back!

During my sophomore year here at UMass, I had roommates who constantly played Bob Dylan. When I finally listened, I found that I could actually understand him! When he played live I could not, but when he played on the radio or on a recording he was more audible. I realized that my first impression of Bob Dylan was marred because I could not understand him. I could hear his message more clearly when he was in a recording studio, not when he was nervously mumbling at a televised concert. When your words are clear you can get across a clear message.

Still another tip I can think of for proper communication is knowing when to shut up! Communication is a two-way street. To respond to a person you're communicating with, you must let them have a chance to say something you can respond to. One-sided conversations lack dimension and are only interesting for the person doing the talking. If your ideas or theories have holes in them you'll never find out if you don't listen to the other person. You could be making a big fool of yourself if you don't let others have their say as well. Who knows? Maybe what "the other" has to say will really appeal to you.

> "I can see why Jack Nicholson and the people of New Jersey called Dylan a "real hoot" because they must have been laughing at him behind his back!"

A last tip to pass along about communication is the opposite of knowing when to shut up. In other words, actually contribute something to the conversation, or don't be afraid to express yourself sometimes! Some people are very shy and never express their true opinions and feelings on a topic. These same people can be a big obstacle to good communication because if something is bothering them they never let on until it's too late. Not communicating clearly and with tact can result in arguments and fights. Don't wait until you reach the boiling point; let someone know your opinion. If he/she doesn't agree with it then there's nothing else you can really do about it. If his/her unchangeable disagreement is something you can't tolerate then maybe you shouldn't necessarily associate with that person. Then you can just stop communicating all together, but keep in mind you'll just be back at square one all over again.

That's all I can say on communication. I hope it came through loud and clear. If it didn't then stop me in public sometime and I'll shut up and listen.

Jason Czernich is a Collegian columnist.

Licensing and registration

In his State of the Union speech in January of this year, Mr. Clinton called again for new gun control measures. This time he proposed to require a license (a photo ID) for any new purchases of handguns. The democratic presidential hopeful Al Gore supported his boss's proposal and made it clear that handguns would be just a first step; licensing for rifles and shotguns will follow.

Dennis Drygin

His opponent in the democratic primary Mr. Bradley boasted that if he were elected, he would require the registration of all handguns as well. That comes as no surprise for the man who while serving as a senator from NJ, tried to push through the law that would make all handguns illegal. This of course failed, and Mr. Bradley resorted to gun controller's favorite tactics: if you cannot abolish it straightway, then do it piece by piece.

The concepts of both licensing and registration of firearms have major legal and logical flaws. No matter what some self-proclaimed gun control gurus say, the Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution prohibits the federal government from infringing upon an individual's right to own a firearm. And most importantly, the results that would be achieved by these procedures will, no doubt, dramatically differ from the goals publicly advocated by their supporters.

What is the reason behind licensing? Gun control advocates will tell you that it is "To protect guns from falling into the wrong hands." This is pure BS: you already have to pass a background check in order to buy a gun. The real reason behind licensing is to create a huge bureaucracy machine, which will empower the government to further infringe upon the people's rights.

Registration also does not serve any other purpose than to control law-abiding people, because they will be the only ones who would actually register their firearms. Criminals will not register their guns because it is already illegal for them to own one. And the best part is that government will not be able to prosecute these criminals for that, because by forcing criminals to register their guns, you force them to incriminate themselves, which is prohibited by 5th amendment to the US Constitution.

Supporters of gun control will tell you that registration of firearms will give law enforcement the ability to allocate the owner of the gun, which was used in the crime. What they will not tell you is that BATF already has that ability.

History teaches us that registration of firearms almost always leads to confiscation. That happened in Germany and in Russia; that also happened in NYC and is happening now in California. This registration will give government the ability to impose and enforce the ban on private ownership of all firearms on the federal scale. And then you can just forget about "The Land of the Free."

Dennis Drygin is a Collegian columnist.

Attention all current ed/op columnists: If you are interested in having a photo bendee taken or if you are interested in having yours retaken, come to the Collegian office next Thursday, March 2 at 12:30 p.m. We will be taking pictures at that time.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Ben Alamed Web Developer Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pashkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendoza Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Amy Gargantia Assistant Business Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Here's an idea for the athletic department. You want to bring UA football to Amherst? Bring back the beer. Football isn't football without the pre-game festivities. The tailgating is the students' incentive. Who cares why they're at the game? They're there. You need the attendance average and you need the support. Let 'em drink, gentlemen.

Ah hah, another idea. Full of ideas these days. I think the conservationists need to start by checking out ATMs. The damn things spit out receipts when no college student from coast to coast wants to see how little they have stored away. Hell, I don't want it. Half of 'em don't even tell you; they tell you how much you just took out 'cause your short-term memory is shot all of a sudden. Keep the receipts and save some trees.

***

How on Earth did Ralph Macchio and Elisabeth Shue in Karate Kid? It's the only fault in the movie. It is inconceivable that Daniel-san would ever have a shot.

***

Jennifer Lopez...God Bless her.

***

My roommate brought up a good point and it's grown on me. I was rubbin' it in some when Republican candidate John McCain took both Michigan and Arizona earlier this week. I was running around the place, exclaiming that I should have put money down against my oh-so-sure colleague. But the bottom line is, I and most of America know very little about what each candidate stands for. I think I know the basics, but the bottom line is, I couldn't hold a political debate to save my life. And my guess is that you can't either. At least most of you. It's what the country has become, a sit-com watching, video game playing society without a hint of knowledge for what really matters. I'm ashamed of myself.

***

The other day, I dropped seven deuces in a 24-hour period. That's a record. Ladies and gentlemen, My buddy Cory back in New Hampshire said one time that he took 14 dumps in one day. Yikes.

***

And this one time...at band camp...

***

This global warming stuff can't be so bad. Hey, the skateboarders ought to come out of their holes pretty soon, so get your front-of-the-Campus Center seats while they last. Not only can you scout U Mass' finest decked out in next to nothing, but for the record, very little is more entertaining than watching the thrashers hit the deck.

***

I wonder if priests masturbate. C'mon, we're all adults here. The way I see it, they have to. I know it may be a sin, but let's be realistic. You know they'll sneak it in every now and again.

***

My final year in baseball, this being around eighth grade, my Pop's the head coach and I'm playing alongside my brother. I was clearly too small for the Babe Ruth ranks, but still, you'd think that I'd get mad playing time with the old man filling out the lineup card. Nope. I played the mandatory three innings and then sat the pine, spending much of my time in the bad kid's position, right field. I led my squad with eight hit batsmen, but I did that every year (rumor had it I crowded the plate). Thing is, I came up with no hits that season, retiring for good afterwards. My batting average in my final campaign was .000. Thanks Dad.

***

You want one hell of a cheating tactic? Stick your books in the bathroom trash can and during the exam, say you gotta take a leak. Works every time. Hey, I'm a senior, I can blow my cover.

***

I'm gonna make up a long-distance code called 10-10-ENOUGH ALREADY.

***

All right, you know you're a meathead when you marry Texas' Betty Lou Beets. She's 62, has five children, nine grandchildren and six great-grandchildren, BUT... she got sentenced to the death penalty in Texas for killing not one, but TWO of her husbands. The last two of her four husbands were found buried in front of her mobile home in 1985. All this comes after Beets shot and wounded husband No. 2 in '72. But husband number four... buddy...what were you thinkin', pal?

***

I wonder if birds check each other out. I was lookin' at one the other day and she was pretty hot.

***

Hey guys, take a dance class here at the University. Yeah, go ahead and laugh, sucka, but you show a little sensitivity and a little rhythm and you're in... in the frickin' sack. Chicks dig it when you swallow your pride and shake your booty.

***

Independent study idea: do an investigation on Icehouse's effect on your chute. Frequency, temperature, solidity, the stuff is lethal. Just an idea.

Brett Mauser is a Collegian columnist.

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

Final Meow for B'way's Cats

Once in a great while a work of art comes along that unites and defines a nation, captures a moment in history and transcends the test of time. Eighteen years ago when Andrew Lloyd Webber's Cats opened on Broadway, it certainly wasn't this kind of art.

Nevertheless, on June 19, 1997 Cats broke all previous records, ushering in a new era of American tragedy and it became the longest running show on Broadway ever. A musical with adults dressed like cats, singing and dancing about being cats, with an anti-plot that consummates when a prostitute cat ascends to heaven on a giant rubber tire had been seen by more people than any production on Broadway in the history of theatre. The societal implications here are much too deep to explore in one brief column. It is true, however, that during the last three years Cats was only seen by tourists. Not that there is anything wrong with that.

Kristi Ceccarossi

Despite being completely devoid of any aesthetic or intellectual worth, Cats has lived a colorful life. A few years back a woman sued the production for something like $6 million in sexual harassment charges. On the evening she attended the performance, Rum Tum Tugger, the gigolo cat, was doing his usual provocative cat dance in the audience and according to reports, thrust his furry pelvis so close to her face. Plenty of famous Broadway actors, like Elaine Paige, Betty Buckley, and Liz Callaway earned their names starring in the production. And who could forget the time the Actors Equity went on strike and producers tried to keep the show running by putting actual cats on the stage?

Three years ago when Cats celebrated its record, the name was officially changed to Cats, Now and Forever. The steady drop in ticket sales since then just goes to show that nobody like a cocky kitty. And after long last, The New York Time finally announced last week that Cats will be closing at the end of June.

The obvious question is how did Cats make it this far? I don't know how it made it at all. Certainly, it wasn't the libretto, stolen from T.S. Eliot's collection of poetry "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats"—why hasn't anyone attacked Eliot for writing an entire book of poetry on cats? Perhaps it was the dancing. The show is constant movement and the concept of human cats running around a stage in unison is undeniably enchanting.

There isn't a musical without a memorable song and Cats has one landmark, "Memory," which has been sung by everyone. But aside from that, the score is rather flat and uninspiring with lots of synthesizers. Probably, it's the lowest common denominator tendency at work when the basest forms of entertainment become the most famed due to their universal accessibility and appeal.

But none of that matters now because Cats is leaving. It will probably resurface in five years with the Cats anniversary special, which will air non-stop on PBS pledge shows for at least six months and raise money for AIDS organizations. In 10 years Broadway money minds will decide to do a revival, updating the production so that all of the cats are scantily clad or homosexual or something new and exciting like that.

Gosh, now we can anticipate what musical, if any, will have a run exceeding that of Cats! Footloose. The Musical is clearly a contestant, as are the innumerable Disney-goes-to-Broadway features. Next season's premieres like Dark Shadows (yes, based on the TV show) have some potential because, historically, vampire musicals have a large attraction. At any rate, Cats is coming off Broadway, ending an era and as Grizabella, the mangy, depressive cat who is disenchanted with her life on the streets, says "a new day has begun."

Kristi Ceccarossi is a Collegian Staff member.

This cat is very angry about The Winter Garden Theatre's decision to take Cats off Broadway after 18 years of frightening audiences.

Jam band packed weekend in Valley

By Dave Siegel
Collegian Correspondent

If you are into the jam-groove music scene, then a great weekend to be in the Pioneer Valley. Three solid performers are coming to the UMass area, making this weekend very exciting. Established jam bands Percy Hill and Moe. are returning trips to Amherst and Northampton, while relative newcomers Uncle Sammy headline their respective gigs on the Hill.

Starting this off this weekend is Percy Hill upon the 11th floor of the Campus Center Complex. It is their first time playing this venue and it is almost guaranteed to be a packed house, so get there early. Opening the show will be Hartford based Rane, the only band other than the Dave Matthew Band to play at the Meadows Amphitheater three times this past summer. Both bands fall into the groove-rock category and are sure to make for a very electrifying night.

On Saturday night, Moe comes to the Calvin Theater in Northampton starting at 8 p.m. Moe, a four-piece band out of upstate New York, is one of themost heralded jam bands on today' scene. Their newest album Tin Cans & Car Tires creates an interesting mix of awesome originals including "Stranger than Fiction" and "Plane Crash," as well as cheesy, quirky cover tune. Moe has been known to break out into crowd favorites like "Blister in the Sun," as they did at their last Bay State appearance at Assumption College in Worcester.

Centered around is thumping bassist Rob Derhak, who lights up the crowd with his fast fingers and, at times his fast mouth, making cracks at the other band members throughout the show. Flanked to Rob's left is lead guitarist Al Schnier, with his graceful lyrics and awe-inspiring jams. On the other side of the stage is rhythm guitarist Chuck Garvey who holds his own in this talented ensemble. Making the beat is Vinnie Amico with a few other percussionists. In most ways this do not get as much attention as the other members, even though they are the backbone of the band.

Possibly crossing over the Moe show will be new local favorites Uncle Sammy, playing up on Orchard Hill at Butterfield Dorm. As the headlining band, Uncle Sammy plans on playing from 10 p.m. until somewhere in the vicinity of 2 a.m. It should most certainly be a spectacle as Uncle Sammy is coming off its first headlining appearance at the famed Wetlands Preserve in New York City. This four piece band's music is very difficult to categorize, but it is easy to enjoy and groove to. All four members are talented musicians who study at the Berklee School of Music in Boston. Even though these three shows are planned so close together, it is definitely possible to catch a glimpse of all of the bands. You will not be disappointed.

COURTESY SKYBOX

New Hampshire based jam-band Percy Hill performs tonight at the top of the campus center with Hartford's Rane.

COURTESY JON CRISPIN

Follow the White Rabbit...

To Smith College this weekend where Alice: Adventures in Wonderland and Through the Looking Glass is being presented at the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theater. Performances run Feb. 24-26 and March 1- 4. Call 585-ARTS.

This Week's Video Pick: Conan the Barbarian

By Wes Wrightson
Collegian Correspondent

Everyone had their idols when they were growing up. Michael Jordan, Magic Johnson, and Sly Stallone to name a few. Well folks, my idol was Arnold Schwarzenegger. That's right, Mr. Universe himself. He has tracked down an alien in Predator, and protected John Connor in The Terminator. My video pick of the week is an Arnold movie that is definitely one of his best: Conan the Barbarian.

Released in 1982, this movie was directed by John Milius who also scripted Apocalypse Now. Conan the Barbarian stars, alongside Arnold, the wonderful James Earl Jones (the voice of Darth Vader in the Star Wars trilogy), Sandahl Bergman and Max von Sydow. The story concerns itself with a young boy, Conan, a Cimmerian, who witnesses the beheading of his mother, and slaying of his father at the hands of the dreaded Thulsa Doom (Jones). Thulsa has the ability to transform himself into a snake at any given point, as he is the leader of a snake-cult called the Set.

Conan is captured by Thulsa and forced into a life of slavery by King Osric, who is ruthless, yet compassion is also in his heart. Conan grows up into a life of gladiatorial combat, and soon finds himself yearning to seek revenge for his mother's death.

After fifteen year of agony, and leading the life of a Pit fighter, he is freed by his master. While defeating a gladiator after a bold duel, King Osric asks Conan what life is all about. To this Conan answers: "To crush your enemies, see them driven before you, and to hear the lamentation of women." Conan is a finally set free by Osric, but with a catch, in order to be fully set free, he has to find the King's daughter who has been captured by Thulsa Doom and his evil snake-cult.

Conan, upon being set free, joins forces with a Mongolian warrior/thief named Subotai the Mongol (played by Gerry Lopez) and Valeria, Queen of Thieves (Sandahl Bergman). Together, they soon fight their way to the temple of Thulsa Doom and exact revenge. Along the way, Conan learns the meaning of friendship as well as what it feels like to fall in love.

Conan the Barbarian is the film that put Arnold on the track to movie superstardom. It also made a name for Oliver Stone (who also scripted Scarface before Conan). The film was adapted from a series of short adventure novels by Robert E. Howard, who wrote the adventures of the warrior Conan in the early part of the 1900s. The film was also widely successful at the box office, so a sequel was doomed to follow... and it did. Conan the Barbarian spawned an inferior sequel three years later called Conan the Destroyer. Don't waste your time with the sequel (which starred the late Wilt Chamberland), but check out Conan the Barbarian. It will pump you up (a blatant reference to the famous Hans and Franz <sketch that Schwarzenegger did on Saturday Night Live)!

COURTESY MGM

Take adorable little Conan home this weekend and cuddle up to the VCR with your loved ones.

Santana Meets Grammy Record

By Geoff Boucher
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Carlos Santana, a rock star mystic who says the hand of angels can be heard in his clarion guitar riffs, completed a magical career comeback at the 42nd annual Grammy Awards on Wednesday when his album "Supernatural" won a record-tying eight trophies.

The resounding victory included wins for best album and record and equaled Michael Jackson's eight wins in 1983. It also comes just three years after the 52-year-old Woodstock veteran found himself largely written off by the music industry.

The guitarist has cited the intervention of three individuals for his comeback—his wife, Deborah; Arista Records chief Clive Davis and an angel named Metatron, the last a divine visitor who inspires Santana's music during meditation.

"Music is the vehicle for the magic of healing and the music of 'Supernatural' was a sign in this time to bring unity and harmony," Santana said at Staples Center when he accepted the night's final award for best album. "God bless soul."

Santana, who hails from humble beginnings, also told the backstage media that his success should inspire people grappling with poverty or other challenges.

"This is for all the people who don't have running water or electricity," said Santana, a native of Mexico. "If I could do it, you could do it."

Music from "Supernatural" also won a ninth statue when songwriters Itaal Shur and Rob Thomas took the honors in the category of song of the year for the hit "Smooth," which featured Matchbox 20 singer Thomas on vocals and Santana on guitar. "I want to thank Santana," Shur said. "For taking this song to the moon."

The Santana magic rubbed off on Thomas, who grabbed the second most Grammys on the night with three victories for "Smooth," which finished 1999 as the most played song of the year on the nation's radio stations.

English singer Sting scored the night's biggest upset when his disc "Brand New Day" finished ahead of the Backstreet Boys and Ricky Martin in the best pop album category. Sting also won the award for male pop vocal performance, marking the eighth and ninth Grammys of his solo career.

The wins by elder statesmen such as Santana and the 48-year-old Sting left a wave of youth-pop artists forced to be satisfied with nominations and the major victories they scored at the nation's cash registers. The Backstreet Boys, 'N Sync, Britney Spears and Christina Aguilera—who accounted for four of the top-selling 12 albums in 1999, including the top two—came into Grammy night with a dozen nominations, but only Aguilera took home a trophy.

The 19-year-old Aguilera won best new artist and said in her acceptance speech that she was surprised to get the nod ahead of other nominees such as Spears, and soul singer Macy Gray because she had only one single, the smash "Genie in a Bottle," released during the eligibility period.

Double Grammy winners on the night included Atlanta R&B trio TLC (best R&B album, best R&B group performance), Shania Twain (best country song, best female country vocal) and the Dixie Chicks (country album, country group performance).

Another two-time winner on the night was Eminem. The first solo white rapper to earn both major commercial success and peer credibility within his genre won for best rap album and rap solo performance for his "The Slim Shady LP," a disc that was criticized heavily in some corners for its flippantly violent imagery.

The other major rap Grammy went to material with distinctly different themes as "You Got Me," an emotional dialogue between long-distance lovers performed by the Roots featuring Erykah Badu, took honors in the rap group performance category.

Clearly, though, the night belonged to Santana, who grew up in the remote Mexican town of Autlan de Navarro as the son of a mariachi musician. His family emigrated to San Francisco in the 1960s and the young Santana played guitar on Haight Ashbury sidewalks for coins.

Santana's career, catapulted by his performance at Woodstock in 1969, seemingly reached its zenith in the 1970s with hits such as "Evil Ways," "Black Magic Woman" and "Oye Como Va"— classic rock tracks that would later propel him into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

By the late '90s, though, the guitar hero's best days appeared behind him.

That changed when Clive Davis, founder and president of Arista Records, signed Santana to his label and teamed him with a gallery of younger stars, including Dave Matthews, Wyclef Jean, Everlast and last year's big Grammy winner, Lauryn Hill.

"Supernatural" also sits atop the nation's album charts this week—the eighth time it has hit No. 1 since its June release—and has sold more than 6 million copies. When Davis joined Santana on stage, he echoed the musician's message of hope being gleaned from the album's success.

"You are an inspiration to every young musician throughout the globe. ... They don't know how long a career can last ... how long it can soar," Davis said on stage, where he joined Santana to accept the best album award.

Santana was not the only Woodstock guitar hero to win Wednesday night. Thirty years after his death, Jimi Hendrix won his first Grammy when the film "Bands of Gypsys: Live at Fillmore East" won for best long-form music video. The Grammy trophies in that category went to the director, Bob Smeaton, co-producers Nell Aspinall and Chips Chipperfield, along with the late rock star.

Other notable first-time winners included Barry White, for traditional R&B vocal performance and male R&B vocal performance, and Cher, who took home the prize for best dance recording for her hit "Believe."

The eligibility period for the awards was Oct. 1, 1998, through Sept. 30, 1999. The membership of the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences, guided to a certain extent in some categories by a blue ribbon committee with a veiled membership, determines nominees and winners.

Carlos Santana took home the spoils at this year's Grammy Awards.

Back to Band Camp...
Danielle Duquette and Caryn Katz perform with the Symphony Band. The Wind Ensemble and Smphony will perform Feb. 27 at 3 P.M. in the Concert Hall. Call 545-2511 for more information.

Collegian Arts:
Yeah, they asked if we'd do a duet with Santana, but we refused... we were busy.

FEATURED ITEM THIS WEEK
THIS WEEK
$49.99
COTTON EXCHANGE
UMASS HOODED SWEATSHIRT
COLLEGIATE CASUALS niversity

A NIGHT YOU'LL SOON FORGET
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
THE GREAT GUINNESS TOAST SATURDAY NIGHT!
•$2.00 PINTS OF GUINNESS
•GUINNESS SNOWBOARD GIVE AWAY
•DJ

YAHOO! OUTLOUD presented by DORITOS featuring SMASHMOUTH
plus
LUSCIOUS JACKSON
SHOW UP EARLY - GET FREE STUFF
GO TO
outloud.yahoo.com
Win stuff! Get tour info! Buy tix!
DORITOS and DORITOS Logo are trademarks used by Frito Lay, Inc. © Rocot, Inc. 2000

MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
LIMITED TICKETS $10 with student ID • Box Office Only
FEBRUARY 28
7PM SHOW • ALL AGES
ALL OTHER TICKETS $15*
ON SALE TODAY AT 10AM!
>>freescholarships: TEXTBOOKS.COM
CALL FOR TICKETS ticketmaster (413) 773-2500 • (617) 931-2000
Tickets available at Mullins Center Box Office and at all Ticketmaster locations. Please note: Dates & time subject to change without notice.
www.dlclive.com
FROM SFX ENTERTAINMENT

■ seniors

continued from page 12

then opponent. the Minutewomen needed to play well for themselves.

"Today was about taking care of ourselves," O'Brien said. "We knew what Fordham was going to do. [For us] it was mostly about playing with intensity and executing the offense the way I think we're capable of doing."

As the finality of their last appearance at the Mullins Center set in, all three seniors expressed bittersweet sentiments. While the win was enjoyable, the end was painfully inevitable.

"I have mixed emotions," said a misty-eyed MacFarland. "It feels good to see the hard work that all three of us [the seniors] have done. At the same time, you're thinking 'I'm never going to play here again.' It just hit me after the game. Before that, I didn't think that I was going to cry."

Bradley, like her teammate, said she'd miss the people much more than the basketball.

"This is the closest team I've ever been on," she said. "It was very emotional. Tonight really meant a lot to me. When you create a relationship off the court, things are so much better on the court."

UMass concludes its regular season Sunday when in a visit to Rhode Island for a noon game that will be televised on the Atlantic 10/Fox Sports New England Network.

Tonia Thomas scored eight points in her grand finale at the Mullins Center. The Minutewomen pasted Fordham, 66-42.

Minutewomen shatter school marks en route to third place A-10 finish

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

Setting six new school records, the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team took home third place at the three-day Atlantic 10 Tournament held in Buffalo, NY this past weekend.

The Minutewomen finished behind winner Virginia Tech (940) and St. Bonaventure (649) to tally its highest placing in six years. UMass improved its standings by 71 points after grabbing fourth-place with a total of 590 points last year.

On the first night, three of the records were toppled including the 200-yard freestyle relay, the 200-y IM and the 400-y medley relay. In the 200 free, Andrea Kazanjian (Troy, NY), Lyndsay Crenshaw (Escondido, CA), Anne Dettloff (Barrington, IL) and Andrea Spencer (Wilmington, DE) raced to a time of 1:37.33 and a third-place finish.

Spencer's record in the 200 IM was good enough for fourth place in a time of 2:07.30. The time bettered her old mark of 2:07.20, set at the 1998 A-10's.

Becky Hunnewell along with Newell, Kazanjian and Dettloff set the pace at 3:22.17 in the 400-y medley, which earned them a third-place finish.

Elizabeth Risotto, Newell, Kazanjian and Spencer continued the winning streak for UMass as the foursome shattered another school record in the 200 medley with a time of 1:48.24. Newell added another accomplishment when she took fifth in the 100 breast, recording a time of 1:06.76. It meant another UMass record reset for the junior.

Hunnewell tacked on another school accolade in the final night when she swam the 200 backstroke in 2:04.28 for third place.

The sophomore from Sandwich teamed up with Kazanjian, Spencer and Dettloff in the 400 free relay and a third-place finish and the last of six school records for the meet.

Aside from the records, UMass was well represented across the board. Dettloff finished eighth in the 500-y free in a time of 5:08.43. Dettloff is already the school record holder in the 1000-y free.

In the 50-y free, Spencer, Kazanjian and Julie Dragon (Sturbridge) raked in 10th, 12th and 16th place, respectively.

Freshman Kate Allery (South Hadley) turned in a score of 352.30 in the three-meter diving event.

The Minutewomen are coached by Bob Newcomb, who is in his 16th year at the helm at UMass.

■ lacrosse

continued from page 12

tender Chris Campolettano, who finished the season sixth in the nation in goals-against average, yielding just over eight per game. The Massapequa, NY, native stopped 61 percent of the shots he faced, helping the Minutemen hold the fort while the offense struggled.

"I think it's great to have him back," Cannella said. "The people in front of him have confidence in him so if they make a miscue, they know he can make a play."

The aforementioned loss of midfielder Eric Sopracasa, who died after taking a ball in the chest in practice just before the Minutemen's clash with Brown, has surely taken its toll on the Minutemen. However, along with attempting to rebound, there will be plenty to play for.

"We'll all miss him a tremendous amount," Cannella said. "They've dedicated this season to Eric. We'll keep him close to us throughout. It takes a while to heal but they've done a good job of focusing on the field."

Game time is tomorrow at 1 p.m. at Richard F. Garber Field.

BoarderFest greets UM Snowboarders

By Kristy Link
Collegian Correspondent

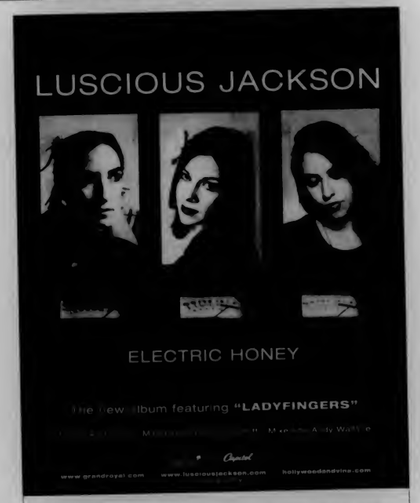
Even though there has not been much snow and the weather is constantly fluctuating, the winter season still brings about a variety of sports in which many participate. Some prefer to slide down the mountain on a couple of sticks, like skiing or snowblading.

But Snowboarding at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst (SUMA) members prefer to ride down in style on a snowboard. They have been taking full advantage of winter by heading up to the mountains every weekend. And when there is enough snow around campus, they will build a jump over by the hills near Central and may even drag a picnic table over to jib on.

The fourth annual Extreme Winter Games, more commonly known as the X-games, were held at Mount Snow Vermont this month. Among the record-breaking crowds was a team of volunteers from SUMA, thanks to the Meghan Oliver, who planned for the group to represent the school. SUMA could not compete due to the fact that the X-Games are a professional, invite-only competition.

But members of SUMA did volunteer to work several of the events including the superpipe, big air, slopestyle and ultracross. Helping out with crowd control and security during the events gave SUMA members the opportunity to interact with some of the pros, while also getting a pretty good view of all the action.

But the next best thing to watching a competition is taking part in one. That is what team SUMA will be doing this weekend. Mt. Snow will be hosting the Bud Light Boarderfest, a nine resort series making its stop in Vermont on Feb. 26-27.



Several members will be taking part in this competition, which is comprised of boardercross, halfpipe and big air. The team competitors include Mike Porter, Tim Ireland, Katelyn Merrill and Kristine Parker. The big air, or the "mega mother hucker," is an invitational event. This year, SUMA member Mike Porter was lucky enough to receive an invite. If he makes it to the finals, he will be jumping over a live band, with his teammates cheering him on from the side.

Last semester the club went on several day trips and presented the video "Technical Difficulties." SUMA also held raffles for shirts, sneakers and a new snowboard. With much snow time left, you will be hearing quite a bit from SUMA in the near future.

For those interested, look for the SUMA table at the concourse in the next couple of weeks. Good luck to this weekend's competitors.

Collegian Sports Meeting Monday 6 p.m.
Be there or be kicked in the head.

MERCYhouse
A church for the next Generation
Sunday nights @ 6pm in the Jones Library just west of the Amherst town center (43 Amity St.)
WWW KNOWMERCY ORG

See Luscious Jackson on tour with Smash Mouth on February 28.
Pick up their latest CD, Electric Honey at Newbury Comics and For The Record.

The University of Massachusetts'
Something Every Friday
presents
An incredibly talented trio brings to the UMass campus their beautiful, soultry sounds. Opening for IMANI will be UMass's very own 'NOSTALGIA'
Campus Center Auditorium
Friday, February 25, 2000,
8pm, FREE
The film "The Best Man" will be shown following the performance. "The Best Man" will also be shown on Sunday February 27th at 8pm in the Campus Center Auditorium
Visit us on the Web
http://www.umass.edu/events/calendar.htm
IMANI
This program is made possible by a grant from the Campus Activities Cluster Auxiliary Services Department, the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs and the Everywoman's Center

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT & MORE!
FEB. 23-26
ANTHONY'S
FAVORITE
65HHH
NIKI
KNOCKERS
ANT
HI-NRG ADULT
FEB. 23-26
ANTHONY'S
Now Recruiting Attractive Entertainers to Join Our Team!! NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY Call Scott Today at 413/533-8888
500 New Ludlow Rd. - South Hadley, MA
CLUBline 413/532-3621
HOTline ..... 413/538-6969 Visit Us At — www.anthonys.net

New England crown up for grabs in women's track regional ruckus

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

The march goes on for the Massachusetts women's indoor track squad, as the Minutewomen head to Gorham, ME this weekend for the New England Championships.

While last weekend's fifth-place finish in the Atlantic 10 Championships is quite humbling after last year's team silver medal, Julie LaFreniere's troops have had substantial success in the regional showdown. Last season, the Maroon and White took home second place thanks to a stellar performance from then-junior Sally Hirsch. The Brookline native has returned and flourished in her leadership role, taking second in the 3,000m in the A-10s with a season-best 10:04.28, ironically almost a carbon copy of the time that earned her second place in last year's New Englands.

Her run for the ages was good for first place, just ahead of Sharon Tillotson in the event, earning the Minutewomen eight of their 82.75 points. UMass as a whole seemed to prosper with time, also medalling in the distance medley. The team of Melissa Henderson, Chrystal Murphy, Monica Elmore and Kristen Cisowski ran a solid 12:20.26, which took the top spot.

UMass was in a logjam behind front-running Rhode Island and Virginia Tech, squaring off against La Salle and Temple for the final spot on the podium. However, the Minutewomen fell short, just 3.25 points behind the third-place Explorers and a point and change shy of Temple.

Abby Rubino

Sophomore Abby Rubino will hope to leap into the record books for UMass after recording a jump of 17'7" in last week's long jump competition, a season-best.

In all likelihood, Rhianna DaCruz will have to figure into UMass' winning formula for a shot. Just a sophomore, DaCruz already has the best pole vault mark in school history, breaking the record by nearly half a foot in the N.E. Cup with an astonishing 10'6".

The ceiling would rise even higher less than a month later, when DaCruz sked a quarter inch above her old mark to rewrite the record books for the second time this season. Her top competition might come from Rhody's Janelle Erskine, who topped 11 feet in the A-10 showcase.

Melissa Ward will have to come with all she's got after showing her versatility last week. The senior placed second in the high jump, fourth in the long jump, seventh in the 55 meter hurdles and 11th in the 200 meter dash. To win the high jump, her strongest event, she will have to find a way to outdo UConn's Tamika Toppin, who won the Big East indoor high jump crown for the third straight year with a leap of 5'10.75".

Only Rhode Island will follow LaFreniere and Co. to Maine, but UMass will certainly be faced with a formidable challenge. The favorites are the Brown Bears, who manhandled the competition in last month's New England Challenge Cup Finals, an event in which the Minutewomen placed sixth. In addition, UConn is likely to contest for the title after taking home first in the more recent Rhode Island Invitational.

Men's tennis squad hopes for Brownout

By Farrah Alexander
Collegian Staff

First let's put things into perspective.

The Massachusetts men's basketball players won't be the only ones fearfully sweating this weekend. The Brown Bears are to the UMass men's tennis team what the Temple Owls are to the men's basketball team – a team that will make you fight tooth and nail right up until the very bitter end for even a faint hint of victory. And even then, right when you think you may have a chance, they'll overwhelm you. Knowing this, the Minutemen will be taking on this most worthy foe today at 2 p.m. in Providence, R.I.

"On our schedule the only team that I feel like is very, very difficult for us to beat right now is Brown," men's head coach Judy Dixon said.

Whether or not the Minutemen will be able to muster up some of the same relentless ferocity that they played with last season when they closed at 9-0 is even more questionable now considering two very important factors. First, is the injury list. Health-wise this team is not at 100 percent. Several of its most dependable players have sidelined, being forced to either sit out their matches or retire early.

The team's freshman prodigy, Will Shaw, has been absent from the last two competitions due to a rotator cuff injury. And there are at least three other players whose play has been seriously hindered due to injury. A bone bruise in the heel that was incurred during play several weeks ago is still bothering senior co-captain Parsa Samii. Senior co-captain Bo Navarro picked up his own injury during action against Army last week, when he hurt his shin forcing him to retire. Sophomore Steve Prisco also retired from a match several weeks ago in a competition against Cornell, but seems to have recovered.

"Team morale was a little down," men's assistant coach Scott Wilkins said. "When you look around and everyone's limping, everyone's confidence goes down."

The second factor that may spell trouble for the Minutemen is their demoralizing loss to Army last weekend, with a score of 7-0. This probably came as a shock to the Minutemen, a solid team that is accustomed to beating its opponents convincingly as evidenced from the 5-0 record from last season. Going into the Army matches the players knew it was going to be a battle, but probably never imagined they'd go nil.

But not all the clues are casting a dark shadow over these fighters. They've also had some developments worth celebrating. For the first time in the team's history it is nationally ranked. The Daily Tennis Top 200 Rankings put the men at number 127.

The Maroon and White's ranking marks the first time in the University's history that its non-scholarship program has been ranked.

"I am extremely proud of the success of this program," Dixon said. "I am particularly proud of the men because this is not a scholarship program. One of my goals is to become one of the first non-scholarship programs to be ranked in the Top 100."

This season, Brown is ranked 106th in the nation and stands at 2-1. Walking away with a win against the Bears would definitely be a major confidence builder for the Minutemen and likely put them back on track.

Morency, Zullo headline track squad headed to New Englands

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

The approach? Business-like, cautious, even methodical.

The result? Irrefutable, undeniable success.

For the past few months, Massachusetts men's indoor track coach Ken O'Brien has implemented a remarkably effective coaching philosophy, one that has guided and nurtured the young squad.

The abbreviated version goes something like this: Don't let the defeats deflate your confidence and don't let the victories inflate your ego. Acknowledge each win or loss for what it is and move on.

Take, for example, the loss of junior Mark Sylvander. When the star mid-distance runner was shelved for the winter season due to an abdominal strain, O'Brien did not panic. Instead, he called upon the other runners, urging them to step up and fill Sylvander's shoes as best as they could. Freshman Mike Howell and junior Hugh Reid accepted the challenge and the team survived the blow, flourishing sans Sylvander.

Accept the loss. Plug the hole. Move on.

Just as the defeats don't discourage O'Brien, the triumphs don't lull him into a false sense of euphoria. Less than one week removed from the squad's runner-up finish at the Atlantic 10 Championship, O'Brien knows better than to allow his players to glide into today's New England Championship with a bloated sense of self-worth.

The two-day meet at Boston University will feature the 43 schools in the New England Association including defending champion UConn, as well as Northeastern, Providence and Rhode Island. The meet is unique in that schools from all three NCAA divisions compete.

Despite the Minutemen's second place finish last year, O'Brien knows that the 23 qualifying players he sends to Boston have a difficult task awaiting them. His primary concern is the performance of the rookies. Although the freshmen performed admirably last week, O'Brien's cautious and rational mindset will not allow him to rest on his laurels.

Vic Morency

Adnan Zullo

"My concern about the younger kids is still there. This meet is a 43 team meet instead of a seven team meet. Other meets just not certain that the kids are going to be able to raise their level of performance against a much larger number of schools and a much higher quality field."

Freshman Stefan Ross, who was named Most Outstanding Rookie at last week's meet, will look to legitimize his growing reputation as one of the squad's most consistent performers. Ross is seeded sixth in the high jump and ninth in the 200 meter.

The Minutemen's best chance to score points will be in the throwing events. Senior Vic Morency, who has enthralled the A-10 with his riveting performances, will look to flaunt his abilities in front of the rest of New England in the shot put and the 35-lb. weight throw. Morency is seeded second in shot and fourth in the weight throw.

Sophomore Adrian Zullo is also expected to score well, since he is the top seed in the 55-meter dash. O'Brien will rely heavily on the Zullo Morency-Ross trio to provide a significant amount of points.

Otherwise, the Maroon and White will have no chance of placing high.

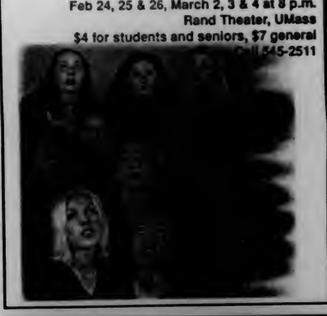
"The challenge of this part of the season is to get a significantly large number of people who are able to score at this level, as the quality of the meet gets higher," the coach stated. O'Brien hopes that roughly half of his players will score.

A handful of other Minutemen are seeded in the top 10 in their respective events. Senior Kevin Somers is ranked seventh in the 5000-meter, while freshman Ben Vik is the ninth seed in the pole vault. Reid is ranked in the top 10 in the 500-meter.

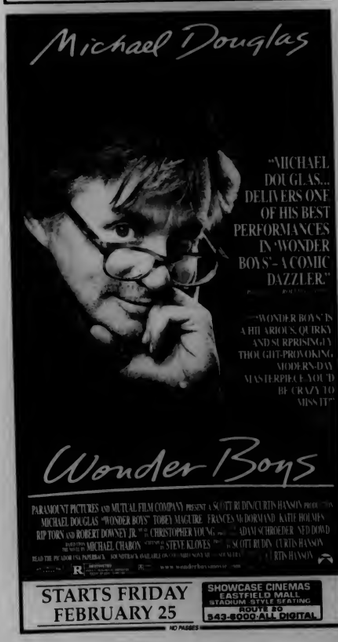
While O'Brien feels that first-place is an unattainable goal due to UConn's depth, a top 10 finish is an achievable aspiration. While the squad's newest test will be a daunting one, it seems as though the players are always able to surprise and exceed the coach's expectations – despite his guarded sense of realism and his prudent predictions.

Or maybe because of them.

amc
There is a Difference!
Showcase 1's Certified
Stadium Seating
Pg-13 or R rated films after 6PM
Mt. Farms 4 • Mt. Farms Mall
584-9183
WHOLE NINE YARDS: R
Today at 1:20(4:40@$3.75) 7:30 10:10
Sat at 1:20 (4:40@3.75) 7:30 10:10
Sun at 1:20 (4:40@$3.75) 7:30
Mon - Thur (5:30@$3.75) 8:10
SCREAM 3: R
Today at 1:10 (4:30@$3.75) 7:20 10:00
Sat at 1:10 (4:30 @ $3.75) 7:20 10:00
Sunday at 1:10(4:30 @ $3.75) 7:20
Mon - Thur at (5:20 @ $3.75) 8:00
THE BEACH: R
Today at 1:00 (4:20@ $3.75) 7:10 9:50
Sat at 1:00 (4:20@ $3.75) 7:10 9:50
Sun at 1:00 (4:20 @ $3.75) 7:10
Mon - Thur (5:10@$3.75) 7:50
THE TIGGER MOVIE: G
Today at 12:20 2:20 (4:50 @$3.75) 7:40
Sat at 12:20 2:20 (4:50 @$3.75) 7:40
Sun at 12:20 2:20 (4:50 @$3.75) 7:40
Mon- Thur (5:00 @$3.75) 7:00
THE SIXTH SENSE: PG
Today at 9:30
Sat at 9:30
$3.75 'Twi-lite' Show Daily!
* Special Engagement
No Passes or Coupons



University of Massachusetts Boston
Ireland & Scotland Today:
Politics and Society
July 10 – August 6, 2000
This travel/study program provides a dynamic learning experience-a lively blend of field activities in Ireland and Scotland as well as course work at Trinity College in Dublin, the University of Edinburgh, and the University of Massachusetts Boston. Through direct observations, field trips and lectures by a variety of local experts, you will gain a critical appreciation of the subtle and complex interactions that are shaping Ireland and Scotland internally and within the European Union. Six undergraduate credits.
To learn more, contact:
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Continuing Education
100 Morrissey Blvd
Boston MA 02125-3393
UMASS BOSTON
617.287.7913
www.conted.umb.edu



GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00
The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 8, Sun 12-5

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS ... $10.
25 n. pleasant st. amherst 256.0733
145 main st. northampton 586.6155

Spring Break...
let's get packing!

ZANNA
downtown Amherst
www.zanna.com

The Bacchae of Euripides
by Wole Soyinka
Feb 24, 25 & 26, March 2, 3 & 4 at 8 p.m.
Rand Theater, UMass
$4 for students and seniors, $7 general
545-2511

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. April showings for June and September Lincoln Real Estate. No fees. 253-7879.

3 bedroom condos. Gas heat, hardwood floors, bright heated basement with study and laundry area. 1/2 mile to campus, on bus route. April showings for June and September $1450.00. Lincoln Real Estate. No fees charged. 253-7879.

Sublet my one bedroom apartment 1 mile from campus. Available 6/00-8/00. $525.00 a month. Call Kate 253-6955.

AUTO FOR SALE

'92 Subaru Loyale wagon 4x4. Clean, runs great, air, power, roofrack. $2500.00 0.b.0. 665-0453.

1965 Buick Electra 225. PS, PB, Auto V8. 4dr. Maroon with black interior. Rebuilt engine, 90,000 miles. Good tires. $1600 OBO. 559-5027.

AUTO FOR SALE

'91 Corsica V6. AT, PS, PB, 52,000 miles. Good rubber, clean, good condition. 549-6755.

'88 VW Fox GL 160k. Lots of new parts. Runs strong. $750.00 584-5927.

EMPLOYMENT

Premiere help wanted. Looking for someone with Premiere expertise to help finish a video. Kirk 256-0080.

Summer on Cape Cod! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews on our property for all our summer employment opportunities on March 9, 10, 11 & March 16, 17, 18. Check out our website at www.wychmere-harbor.com & call Amy at (508)432-1000 x129 for details.

Summer Employment; Outdoors. Weight loss/sports camp looking for energetic people to lead campers in a fun filled summer. Located in West Stockbridge, MA. in the heart of the Berkshires. Call for more information. Toll Free 877-FIT-CAMP. email marc@camp-kingsmont.com

EMPLOYMENT

Spend your summer in Montana! Glacier National Park. Imagine hiking over thousands of miles of almost untouched trails, breathing in fresh, crisp Rocky Mountain air. Imagine conquering the challenge of biking the famous Going-to-the-Sun Highway or the thrill of whitewater rafting, or setting up camp next to a turquoise blue glacier lake. Imagine no more! St. Mary Lodge, Glacier Park's finest, is now hiring for the 2000 summer season. Call (800)368-3689 or e-mail name and mailing address to jobs@glpark.com for an application. Check out our website at www.glcpark.com to learn more about the opportunity of a lifetime.

Nursery/Greenhouse full/time, year/round position to assist manager in multi retail locations. Salary plus benefits. Send resume to Westfield Home and Garden, 81 Springfield Rd, Westfield MA 01085.

-Misprint 2/22 & 2/23-
Wanna make money doing what you always do anyway? E-mail me at quickneasy-money@aol.com

EMPLOYMENT

Outdoor leadership jobs/internships that build resumes! Horizon Camps seek fun-loving instructors and directors, with experience leading OUTDOOR activities. canoeing, backpacking, caving, rock-climbing, ropes course, nature study and mountain biking. Many openings at 4 great CO-ED children's camps in NY, ME and PA. Top camp salaries, plus room and board, laundry and travel. Apply online at www.horizon-camps.com or call (800)544-5448 for more info.

Camp Wayne for girls-sister half of brother/sister camp in Pennsylvania (3 hrs from New York City). If you love children and want a caring, fun environment we are looking to hire staff from 6/20-8/18/00 for: tennis, basketball, softball, soccer, volleyball, golf, gymnastics, aerobics, cheerleading, swimming, sailing, waterskiing, self-defense, ropes, fine arts (ceramics, sculptuer, drawing, painting, silk screening, jewlery), photography, piano, guitar, drama, video, group leaders. On campus interviews March 9th. Call 800-279-3019.

EMPLOYMENT

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132 www.biketrips.com

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ for hire. DJ Fooz and SYB Productions are now booking for Spring Semester. Call 537-8527 or sybproductions.com

FOR SALE

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

INSTRUCTION

Philippino Martial Arts. Instructor with great experience considering starting a class in Amherst. For info call 256-0080.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending. Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.university-bartending.com Space is limited!!!!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Massage winter away. $15.00 for an hour session. Michael 585-8577.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

SERVICES

Rental problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Qestions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

TRAVEL

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009.

Study Spanish. Internships in Guatemala. College Credit. www.casaxelaju.com (512)416-6991.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

SPRING BREAK 2000
Get Lots Limited Needs Free Trips & Free Drinks!
1-800-426-7710

Place your ads in The Collegian Classifieds today!!
Call us at 545-3500

Five College Community Calendar

FRIDAY, FEB. 25

Prayer — The Muslim Student Association presents Jummaa Prayer at noon and 2 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check the elevators in the Campus Center for the room number.

SATURDAY, FEB 26

Comedy — MISSION IMPROVable will perform its improvisational comedy show at 8 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center.
Reading — Author Louise Diamond will read from her new book, "The Courage for Peace", at Food For Thought Books in Amherst at 6 p.m.

MONDAY, FEB 28

Workshop — There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. Men and women are welcome. Call Dan at 577-5188 for more information.

NOTICES

Community — Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking to tenors to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.
Community — Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac.UR@aol.com or Caleb at 587-5740 by March 5.
Help — From Feb. 13 April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School of Management will assist low-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5600 for more information.
Submissions — Short Cuts, UMass' short story journal, is currently accepting prose submissions for its second annual issue. The deadline is March 1. For more information call Matt at 549-1033, or email submissions and questions to shortstory@acad.umass.edu.
Support — A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesdays and Thursday evenings. Telephone pre-screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5316 if interested.
Support — AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.
Voting — A reminder to registered voters: A voter can only vote absentee due to absence from his/her residence community during polling hours, physical disability preventing the voter from going to a polling place, or religious belief. For more information call 256-4035.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER — Just another way that WE GIVE 100%
We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board		32	Gavel to Gavel
4	CBS/3	Hartford	33	NBC/22 Springfield
5	CBS/4	Boston	34	CNN Headline News
6	ABC/5	Boston	35	CNN
7	PBS/57	Springfield	36	CNN Fn
8	HSCN	Movie Ch	37	CNN Si
9	UPN/20	Hartford	38	TBS
10	Weather Channel		39	BET
11	NBC/30 New Britain		40	College TV Network
12	Fox/61	Hartford	41	Univision
13	PBS/24	Hartford	42	Comedy Central
14	WCCH & HSCN		43	Cartoon Network
15	International		44	TV Land
16	UMass Academic TV		45	C-Span
17	WB/New Haven		46	2DTV (Tentative)
18	Sundance		47	Bloomberg Financial Network
19	The Learning Channel		48	History Channel
20	UVC-TV19		49	HSCN Programming
21	ABC/40 Springfield

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 25, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Circus Fire		Circus Fire: A Studio		USS Nautilus	Elfe Grasso
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Kids-Darndest	Kids-Darndest	Now and Again (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Cop Out"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Kids-Darndest	Kids-Darndest	Now and Again (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Cop Out"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Sabrina-Witch	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	Hughleys		20/20		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends (N	Nanny (N	Jamie Foxx (N	Jamie Foxx (N	Steve Harvey	For Your Love	News		Friends (N	Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV	"Max Knight: Ultra Spy" (2000, Science Fiction) Michael Landes.				News		Real TV (R)	Celebrity
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Providence (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	World's Wildest Police Videos		World's Wildest Police Videos		News		Friends (N	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're in	Time Goes By	Chefl	Red Dwarf	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Sabrina-Witch	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	Hughleys		20/20		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	NHL Hockey	Boston Bruins at Washington Capitals. (Live)					Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Mad About You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★½ "Comma, Comma" (1994, Comedy Drama) Whoopi Goldberg.				Ray Liotta.	★★ "Brewster's Millions" (1985) Richard Pryor.
A&E	43	L.A. Law "Fetus Completus"		Law & Order		Biography: Heinz		L.A. Detectives		Poirot: "Incredible Theft"		Law & Order "Blood"
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	38	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	Saturday Night Live		Saturday Night Live		Best of Saturday Night Live			Kids in Hall
DISC	42	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Giant Pandas		On the Inside: Ships		News	Discover Mag.	Storm Warning!		On the Inside: Militia
ESPN	45	Sportscenter		Up Close Special		NHL Hockey Colorado Avalanche at St. Louis Blues. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: "Wynonna"		Chicago Hope (In Stereo)		"When He Didn't Come Home" (1996, Drama) Patty Duke.				Once and Again (In Stereo)
MTV	53	Daria (R)	Daria (R)	Daria (R)	News	"Stiletto" (2000, Comedy) (In Stereo)				Daria	Fanatic	Undressed	Loveline
NICK	46	All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Bredy Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons	Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI	61	Sliders (R) (In Stereo)		Brimstone "Repentance"		Farscape "Nerve" (In Stereo)		Farscape "The Hidden Memory"		Lexx: The Series "Lyekka"		Farscape "Nerve" (In Stereo)
TLC	59	Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours "Spies Among Us" (R)		Hollywood Cops "Street Life"		American Gangster: The		Rogues Gallery "Dutch Schultz"		Hollywood Cops "Street Life"
TNT	44	In the Heat of the Night		ER "Day for Knight" (In Stereo)		NBA Basketball: Phoenix Suns at New York Knicks. (In Stereo Live)				Inand NBA		★½ "Dragnet" (1987)
USA	47	Baywatch "Bash at the Beach"		JAG "To Russia, With Love"		Welker, Texas Ranger "Lucky"		★★ "That Old Feeling" (1997, Comedy) Bette Midler. (In Stereo)				★★ "The Substitute" (1996)
HBO	63	Happily Ever	American Hollow (R) (In Stereo)			★★½ "Wild Things" (1998) Kevin Bacon. (R		★★½ "Cruel Intentions" (1999, Drama) Sarah Michelle Geller. (R				★½ "Dracula 2000" (2000)
MAX	65	★★ "Why Do Fools Fall in Love" (1998, Biography) Halle Berry. (R		★★½ "Love and Action in Chicago" (1999) (NR				★★★★ "Saving Private Ryan" (1998, Drama) Tom Hanks. (In Stereo) (R
SHOW	66	"Reaper" (1996, Suspense) Chris Sarandon. (In Stereo) (NR				★½ "Very Bad Things" (1999) Christian Slater. (R		Movie News		Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits (The Beholder) (R	Red Shoe

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Truth is Stranger By Scott Morrill

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Nona By Anna Faktorovich

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

Truth is Stranger By Scott Morrill

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) A situation that arises today may make it more difficult for you to work on certain private issues. Your buttons are certainly being pushed!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You will have the chance to go to bat for a friend, but you mustn't expect things to be any easier as a result. Some reaction may come your way.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Take care that you're not simply becoming intrusive or overbearing. It's okay to get involved in another's affairs, but assume a supporting role.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may be asked to work with someone who seems at the outset, to be almost incompatible with you. Overcome your differences and much can result.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You can gain a great deal today simply by putting aside your own expectations. Take what comes with an open mind and you can learn a lot.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) A clash of wills must be avoided at all costs today. Let one suffer long-term injuries professionally or potentially. Protect yourself!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) It's never too late to say you're sorry, but this time you may have to swallow a little pride before the words are spoken. Make the effort.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You can expect a few stressful days at this time and you will be buffeted by your own emotions as a result. Try to remain rational.

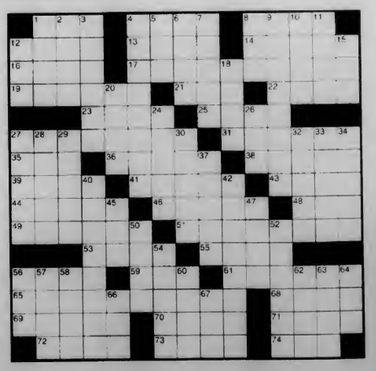
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You mustn't ignore the practical aspects of a newly developing situation today. Some things can be done, and others can't. You must know which are which.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You've waited long enough before addressing that one personal issue which is really holding you back. Today you can make a breakthrough.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Family involvement makes all the difference today. Welcome loved ones into your "inner sanctum" and allow them to assist you in all endeavors.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You can expect to share a great many feelings with someone who is usually only a professional partner. Things are getting more personal.

Quote of the Day



"A Bill of Rights that means only what the majority wants it to mean is no Bill of Rights at all."

–Antonin Scalia, U.S. Supreme Court Justice

MONKEY-BOX BY PB&J

ONLY LATER DID TIMMY REALIZE THAT HIS SMILE WAS NOT "HOLLYWOOD QUALITY."

ACROSS
1 Obtained
4 Imposes a limit
8 Territory
13 Opera singer Giulio
14 Neighbor (on)
15 Sheriff
16 Raise
17 Like beach grass
19 Correspondence friend
21 Lamb's parent
22 Votes for
23 Designer Cassini
25 Rani's garment
27 Trio
31 Pilot's garage
35 401(k) alternative
36 — Ste. Marie
38 Traffic sign
39 Clothier Strauss
41 Picture puzzle
43 Repair a sock
44 Anniversary
46 Kind of boom
48 Drug doc
49 Tyrant
51 Game fish
53 Asian nurse
55 Chunk
56 Hawaiian island
59 Builder's unit
61 Drink
65 Increase in value
66 Egyptian goddess
69 Passenger
70 Hot baths
71 Court dividers
72 Indicates agreement
73 Backpacker's need
74 "Golly!"

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN
1 Mom
2 Muscat's sultanate
3 — Springs, Fla.
4 San Francisco transport
5 Middle Eastern garment
6 Spotless
7 Women
8 Stout
9 Put the weight back on 10 Nervous
11 Tummoe of the diamond
12 A founder of Dada
15 Talk workers' labor
18 Jacob's wife
20 Oh dear!
24 Pastes
26 Burns into
27 Stacked
28 Simple Cara
29 Cathedral parts
30 Jostle
32 Put it on meat
33 Come to terms
34 Charities
37 Food fish
40 Damaged
42 Most foolish
45 — Kapur
47 Quango
50 Nursery item
52 Waning
54 Lift
56 Dent
57 You could hear
58 Kind of coiffure
60 Package sealer
62 Understood
63 Tang
64 Mountain nurve
66 Um's cousins
67 Reuters color

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Breakfast
Whole Wheat Cereal
Omelet
French Toast Sticks
Lyonnaise Potatoes

Lunch
Soup du Jour
BBQ Pork Sandwich
Chicken a la King in Puff Pastry
Caponata in Pocket Bread
Tofu a la King

Dinner
Soup du Jour
Rotisserie Style Chicken
Veal Parmesan
Algerian Stew
Broccoli-Cauliflower Casserole

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Ken McDonald
Photo Technician	Kara Stokes
Copy Editor	Erica Mattson
Production Supervisor	Seth Koenig
Production Staff	Elana Premack, Vlad Zakashansky

UMass has eyes on playoffs

Defense must stop Eagle power play

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

With four games remaining, the Massachusetts hockey team is in desperate need of points. The Minutemen will take them whatever way it can get them, but the road to attaining points is not one that many would choose to travel if there was an alternate option.

Going into the final two weekends of league play, the Minutemen find themselves on the outside looking in. UMass, with its 11 Hockey East points, is tied with Lowell for the eighth and final playoff spot. The River Hawks, however, hold the tiebreaker, having taken a win against the Maroon and White to go along with two ties.

But the Minutemen cannot control what happens to their cross-state rival, so they must take care of their own business to ensure a spot in the eight-team playoff, with the eventual winner receiving an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament.

The first order of business comes this weekend when UMass plays a home-and-home series with Boston College. The No. 6 Eagles come into the series as hot as any team in the country, having won nine of their last 12, a span that stretches back to Jan. 14.

"They were the consensus No. 1 team to start the season," head coach Joe Mallen said. "They dropped some games in the middle [of the season], but they have the tools to win in the league, as well as the National Championship."

UMass dropped a 4-1 decision to BC at the Mullins Center on Oct. 23rd, a game in which the Minutemen had no answer for forwards Jeff Farkas and Brian Gionta. Farkas netted a hat trick, while Gionta sandwiched a goal between Farkas' onslaught. At that juncture, the Eagles were the No. 1 team in the nation, but have since fallen on hard times in subsequent games to drop them off the pedestal.

"They have three forwards that can play with anyone in the country in Farkas, Gionta, and [Blake] Bellefeuille," Mallen said. "We have to work hard to keep them off the board."

If the Minutemen have one thing on their side, it is that they come into the series well-rested after an off weekend. As well-rested as the Maroon and White are, they are suffering from a lack of defenseman.

Freshman Samuli Jalkanen suffered a broken arm in practice this past weekend, which brings the number of blue liners to a paltry six. Jalkanen played in all 30 games this season before the injury and showed remarkable poise for a freshman.

The number has been low all season with Justin Shaw sitting out much of the campaign with mononucleosis. UMass also lost Chris Brannen midway through, as he chose to pursue his junior hockey options.

"Justin will see some time," Mallen said. "If Brannen were here he'd be playing, but he's not. If a defenseman were to go down we'd put Nick Stephens back there."

The Minutemen come into the game with losses in four of their last five games, all of which were against HE opponents. Not an impressive string when the race for playoff position can come down to a single point.

"We have to play with determination. We are not in a position to be over-prepared," Mallen said. "We have to play with a lot of urgency."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

For the Hockey East stretch run, the Minutemen need senior Jeff Blanchard to step up to the table. The team's second-leading goal scorer hasn't found the back of the net since mid-January.

UMass, a team that has been outstanding on the penalty kill for much of the season, has fallen into a slump when playing a man down. The Minutemen can ill-afford lapses in the penalty kill against an Eagle squad that has posted 19 power play goals thus far.

"In the first game we didn't do the job on special teams. We took some penalties and BC capitalized," Mallen said.

The weekend series is as big a pair of games that the Maroon and White have played in all season. The Minutemen have to come with the tenacity that they possessed in from late December through mid-January, capturing two of their four conference wins and big non-conference victories at Notre Dame, against Harvard at the Mariucci Classic and St. Lawrence.

"We have to take it one game at a time. Hopefully we'll come out with jump and speed," Mallen said. "We'll see if we can get a point, hopefully more, against BC before we go to UNH."

The drop-of-the-puck is scheduled for 7 p.m. tonight at the Mullins Center. Game time is again at 7 p.m. the following night at BC's Conte Forum.

Rejuvenated Minutemen visit 12th-ranked Temple

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

Just as the No. 12 Temple men's basketball team shattered them No. 1 Cincinnati streaks last weekend, the Massachusetts men's basketball team looks to do the same against the Owls on Saturday at the Liacouras Center at 2 p.m.

Temple (20-4) has a tight-fist on the Atlantic 10 East race with a near-perfect 11-1 record. Its only in-conference loss was a last-minute 57-56 decision on Jan. 15 against St. Bonaventure. The Minutemen (15-11 overall) are in the midst of an eight-game A-10 schedule and are one game ahead of the Bonnies in the East with a 9-4 outlook.

Last Sunday, John Chaney's Owls toppled the Bearcats' 16-game winning streak, which was tops in Division I, with a 77-69 rally. Also falling was its run of 42 straight wins at home, which boosted Temple's 11-game winning streak, its best since the 1993-1994 season. Last night the Owls hosted St. Bonaventure avenging their only conference loss and giving the Minutemen a momentary cushion in second place.

On Tuesday UMass struggled mightily from the floor but defeated Rhode Island's bubble just in time for a messy 57-37 victory. Freshman Micah Brand had a career night, scoring a game-high 14 points in the effort.

The last time these two teams met, Temple routed the Minutemen 75-48, on Feb. 1 at the William D. Mullins Center. It was the lowest production of points all season for UMass and the worst loss since the Mullins Center opened in 1993.

The Owls simply outmuscled and outhustled the Minutemen on the boards, raking in a total of 48, which equaled UMass' point total. Keaton Sanders and Kevin Lyde contributed with nine rebounds apiece and Mark Karcher netted 17 points en route to their sixth straight win.

For UMass, Monty Mack led with 14 points and Kitwana Rhymer chipped in with 10. Shooting a dismal 4 for 18 from behind the arc, the Minutemen struggled to find the holes in the Owls' treacherous zone defense.

COURTESY OF MEDIA RELATIONS

Monty Mack

Tomorrow they will have to look inside to senior co-captain Chris Kirkland to slash into the bottled up paint. Rhymer's role as UMass' top rebounder is critical in order to keep his team in contention.

A-10 Player of the Week Shannon Crooks will be key for UMass to topple the Owls' nest. The sophomore point guard raised his average to 11.7 points per game after stepping up for a career-high 29 points against Fordham in the wake of Mack's bout with the flu. Crooks should be better prepared for his matchup against the left-handed point guard Juan "Pepe" Sanchez, who was named to last year's NCAA East Regional All-Tournament team.

JEFFREY ARENA/RELATIONS

Juan 'Pepe' Sanchez

Minutewomen hoopsters victorious on senior night

By Aaron Saykin
Collegian Staff

While last night's 66-42 win over visiting Fordham meant little as far as standings were concerned, the Massachusetts women's basketball team left the William D. Mullins Center pleased with its performance.

To begin with, the Minutewomen (12-14, 9-6 Atlantic 10) not only had an out-of-body experience by sinking 19-21 free throws, but they shot 45 percent from the field, and 50 percent from three-point range – also well above their season average. And UMass, a team prone to giving away the ball from time to time, did anything but last night, committing only six turnovers.

Fordham	42
UMass	66

But what was sweeter than any statistic was the strong exit each of the three seniors made on senior night. Although the Rams (4-22, 3-12 A-10) may be the bane of the conference basement, they had little to do with the finale of Alison MacFarland, Tonia Thomas, and Jaywana Bradley – each of whom scored at least eight points.

In perhaps her finest showing of the season, Bradley surprised many with a team-high 10 points, which is one more than her previous season high of nine against Temple on Jan. 27. MacFarland was her steady self, taking few shots but connecting on nine of 10 free throws for her nine, hard-earned points.

But what may have pleased Minutewoman coach Joanie O'Brien the most was the strong start by Thomas, who holds the potential to determine the team's fate as the A-10 Tournament rolls around in just one week. Thomas, who started the contest along with the two other UMass seniors, connected on her first two three-point attempts and ultimately stretched the Fordham defense to the perimeter. The Lone Star State native finished with eight points, and more importantly, begins to show signs of her ability to fit into a disciplined Minutewoman offense – something that has O'Brien optimistic as the post-season approaches.

"In the games when we shoot the ball well, we always come out on top. It opens up the inside for us," O'Brien said, pointing to Thomas, a junior college transfer, as a catalyst for victory. "My biggest disappointment with her is not being able to have her for four years. It's only just now that she's starting to really get used to what we're doing. She'll be the key if we have a chance to pull [the A-10 Tournament] off."

Aware that she can be streaky at times, but nonetheless crucial to her teams' success, Thomas believed it was important for her to shoot well early in the game to burden an opposing defense that must already deal with great inside play from UMass.

"I know that if my first shot goes down, then it's lights out," Thomas said. "The others are going to go down as well."

Perhaps under-coached or perhaps underachieving, Fordham had little chance against the Minutewomen, even if the game mattered little to UMass, which had already clinched second-place in the A-10 East. The Rams couldn't connect on a field goal attempt until the 11:03 mark in the first half. In fact, they only managed 21 points by the end of the half – mostly due in part to a few three-pointers that finally found the mark. With little to prove to

Turn to SENIORS, page 8

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Alison MacFarland

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Tonia Thomas

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Jaywana Bradley

Men's lax back on attack against HU

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

It's a year later.

A nightmarish six-set campaign has mercifully passed the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team by. What was a boatload of frustration for head coach Greg Cannella and his Minutemen closed with a mysterious accident that forced them to forge on without a great player and a great friend.

The slate has now been wiped clean and a season to forget has been forgotten. The newest version of Minutemen lacrosse will try to right the ship beginning this weekend, when the ninth-ranked Hofstra Flying Dutchmen come to town to renew a rivalry that has become fiercer in recent years. UMass comes in at No. 15, according to the Face-Off 2000 Men's College Lacrosse Yearbook preseason poll.

Midway through last season's 4-8 campaign, the Minutemen dropped a heartwrenching 8-7 decision to the Dutchmen. Two years ago, it was UMass that came out on top, when the Minutemen scored late to come away with a 7-6 victory in Amherst. There's no love on either side and tomorrow's showdown should prove that.

"It's always been a close game and it's developed into a great rivalry," Cannella said. "We know each other's team and the was each other plays. We'll play a lot of people and we'll get the ability to shoot the ball. It's going to be a battle."

The newest flavor in the lacrosse program comes with the addition of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) to the Minutemen's resume. After years as an independent, UMass joined the ECAC to not only improve its chances for a playoff berth, but also to build rivalries. Teams that will become shoo-ins for the Minutemen include Georgetown, Maryland-Baltimore County, Navy, Rutgers, Penn State and Stony Brook, all but two of which are ranked in the top 15. "We are the strongest league out there, I fully believe that," Cannella said. "If you look at strength of schedule we don't lose any, we only gain for being in the league."

MEN'S LACROSSE
UMASS VS. HOFSTRA
TOMORROW, 1 P.M.
91.1 FM WMUA
MATT FEATO-PLAY
BRETT MAUSER-COLOR
PREVIEW

Last season, the Minutemen were 4-0 when outshooting their opponents, meaning they came up empty when their adversaries came in offensive-minded. However, this season, Cannella expects a much different story. With a program that has put its money on a stingy defense in years past, the sixth-year head coach hopes the defense won't need to bark nearly as much.

"We've changed a little bit due to the personnel we have right now," Cannella said. "You can't score if you don't shoot, if you don't let the guys play a little bit out there. We have 16 offensive players on our team and they're all going to play on Saturday."

Turn to LACROSSE, page 8

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Sophomore middie Marc Morley is one of many returning starters from last year's squad, as the men's lacrosse team takes on Hofstra this weekend at Garber Field.

Owls fly north for Atlantic 10 clash

By Seth Szilagyi
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics team is home against Temple University this weekend, as it looks to have a hoot at the expense of the Owls.

The season for the Minutewomen has been a virtual roller coaster. The latest meet lay somewhere in between, as the women found themselves coming in third place out four in Rhode Island. Rutgers won the meet scoring a 192.700, while the Rams took second on their home turf with a 192.150. The Minutewomen ended the meet with a 190.575, easily beating out the hapless Bears of Brown, who put up a meager 184.925.

It was an all-around solid performance from the senior Mandy Mosby that kept UMass afloat, as she placed third in the all-around with a 38.525. The super senior also tied for first on the floor exercise with a 9.875 and took second place on the balance beam with a 9.800. The other half of the Minutewomen's two-headed dragon, freshman Katie Teft, won the uneven bars with a 9.925 and finished fifth on the vault with a 9.575. Sophomore Tracy Chew posted her career-best on the uneven bars with a 9.750 to finish fifth in the event.

The one win and two losses drops the Minutewomen to a 5-7 record and searching for the winning formula against Temple. The equation must include the all-important tandem of Mosby and Teft but also a total team effort from UM. Mosby and Teft have been consistent throughout. The dazzling duo is currently ranked nationally for individual events. Mosby is tied for eighth on the floor exercise with a 9.875 average, while Teft ranks third on the uneven bars with a 9.900 average and is 19th in the all-around with an average of 39.075.

One of the "X" factors for the Minutewomen will be the performance of junior Mary Moore. The third-year student had her best output of the season against Penn State, posting a career-best 38.750 in the all-around to place third in the event. The all-around mark was the sixth-best score in UMass history. Moore currently ranks in the top five in four categories for UM this season, including the vault, uneven bars, balance beam and the all-around.

The Owls are coming off a hard meet in which they came in sixth out of six teams at the Towson Invitational in Towson, Maryland. Sophomore Maggie Tolerico placed 10th in the all-around with a mark of 37.200 and tied for ninth on the floor exercise with a 9.475. The performance landed the sophomore A-10 Performer-of-the-Week honors. Freshman Andrea McGary tied for seventh on the vault with a 9.700, which places her in a seventh place tie in the Atlantic 10 Conference.

Amidst Temple's struggling it has been relying heavily on the performances of its young gymnasts. McGary, Tolerico and freshman Brynne Hillman are all ranked in the top 10 in individual events for the A-10. The Minutewomen will have to focus strongly on the all-around event, as it is the Owls' strongest event.

Last season, UMass traveled to Philly, knocking off the Owls by about three points. The Minutewomen hope to have the same luck this time around, facing the Owls on Saturday at 4 p.m. in the Boyden Gymnasium.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 23 Monday, February 28, 2000

Old Chapel forum

Future of historic building discussed

KARA STORES/COLLEGIAN

A forum will be held today at 4 p.m. in Campus Center rooms 165-169 to discuss what purpose the building should hold for future UMass students.

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

Through the years, the University of Massachusetts has seen many changes, but despite general economic hardships and re-construction, the Old Chapel has remained a fixture on campus. Now, as the University looks toward the new millennium, decisions are being made as to what purpose the building should hold for future UMass students.

The original campus library, the Old Chapel, most recently the home of the UMass Marching Band, has been unoccupied for the past two and a half years, since the reconstruction of its clock tower.

The Chapel, opened in 1886, has seen many changes, including a recent reconstruction of the upper portion of its clock tower, recasting of existing bells, and the restoration of the clock faces. The reconstruction project received a 1999 Massachusetts historical Commission preservation award.

Within the next few months additional work will include the expansion of the carillon and the restoration of the original clock mechanism.

In an effort to change its current unoccupied status, the Facilities Planning Division has arranged for a forum, which will take place this afternoon to discuss the building re-use study currently underway and to solicit ideas from the campus community.

One student suggested that the chapel be used for religious education, citing that it would be a great place to hold Sunday school. She went on to suggest other ideas, although she did not have a definite solution.

"I don't know what they should do with the chapel, but we don't have a museum on campus," freshman Shweta Singh said. "Maybe that would be a good use of the building; it is very old looking and historical."

Turn to CHAPEL, page 3

Honor bestowed on UM's Lanza

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Correspondent

Microbiologist and head of the environmental sciences program at the University of Massachusetts, Guy Lanza, has been named a Fellow of the American Academy of Microbiology (AAM), the honorable leadership group within the American Society for Microbiology (ASM).

According to an ASM announcement, Lanza was honored for "scientific excellence, originality and leadership, high ethical standards, and scholarly and creative achievement."

The ASM is the world's oldest and largest life-science organization, founded in 1899. It has more than 43,000 members worldwide, with a total of 1,600 elected to the AAM in the history of the organization.

"This prestigious honor serves, once again, to underscore the quality of the science teaching and research conducted at the University," said Cora B. Marrett, provost and senior vice chancellor for academic affairs.

Lanza was named director of the environmental sciences program here at the University in 1995. He currently is involved in the development of interdisciplinary graduate programs combining expertise in environmental microbiology, toxicology, and policy. He is also working to coordinate a research group within the University to facilitate interdisciplinary bioremediation projects and toxicity assessment.

Commenting on Lanza's appointment, Robert G. Helgeson, Dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources (CFNR), said, "This significant recognition of Guy Lanza's contributions, not only to his field but to the environmental sciences program, is another example of the fine reputation of UMass and CFNR in the academic community."

Lanza's career spans more than 30 years in a variety of research settings, all related to microbiology and the environment. Lanza began his career at the Merck Institute for Therapeutic Research in New Jersey developing screening systems for antimicrobial drugs.

Lanza spent two years in Thailand at the height of the Vietnam War where he conducted benchmark studies on microbial communities within the Mekong River ecosystem for the Smithsonian Institution. The results of his studies were widely used and are frequently cited by scientists researching that watershed today.

In 1973, Lanza entered the aquatic ecology program at the Institute of Environmental Medicine at New York University, where his research team defined the thermal and chemical effects of power plant operations on microbial communities. He then went on to the University of Texas at Dallas where he developed an environmental microbiology academic program. He studied the bioremediation of different soils contaminated by toxic organic pollutants.

KARA STORES/COLLEGIAN

Guy Lanza, head of the Environmental Sciences program

Lanza also developed several novel microbial toxicity assays at UT, which are still used to monitor microbial community activity in contaminated soils and groundwater at so-called "Superfund" sites.

Lanza is the author of numerous refereed journal articles, reports, and book chapters on environmental microbiology and ecotoxicology. He is the editor-in-chief of the International Journal of Phytoremediation, a new, peer-reviewed journal of research related to novel "green" technologies developed to repair and restore contaminated environments. He has been recently appointed as a bioremediation consultant to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's Science Advisory Board.

Lanza is a technical advisor on waterborne diseases and water quality for the International Rivers Network in Berkeley, California, as well as for several hydroelectric dam projects in Southeast Asia and Africa.

Still interested in the environment of Southeast Asia, he is working with the International Programs Office at UMass to establish collaborative research and education programs with universities in the region. Lanza has served as a water quality consultant to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development in Paris, and as an expert witness to the U.S. Department of Justice, Division of National Resources and Environment.

Lanza says that he was "pleasantly surprised and extremely pleased with this honor."

Justice official raises questions

Eric Lichtblau and Ronald J. Ostrow
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON – Four years ago, a senior Justice Department official quietly acknowledged to the department that he had revealed secrets about a New York City anti-terrorism operation to the authors of an upcoming book.

Despite an in-house call that the official should be disciplined, he escaped formal punishment.

But now, amid stepped-up concerns about how the government protects its secrets, the case of Richard Scruggs is drawing new scrutiny because of some troubling questions.

First, did the Justice Department go easy on Scruggs, a friend of Attorney General Janet Reno from her days as a prosecutor in Florida? And perhaps just as worrisome, did Justice Department officials mislead U.S. District Judge Royce Lamberth – head of one of the nation's most powerful and secretive courts – by not disclosing their findings to him?

The material that was leaked in a book and an abridged magazine article detailed how federal authorities in New York City who were suspected of possible terrorist links. The officials acted under authorization of the top-secret court, established by

Turn to JUSTICE, page 2

Students dedicate time to Amherst Fire Department

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

For many students, their time is spent between classes, sleeping and socializing, but in addition to those demands a few chose to dedicate their time to the Amherst Fire Department. Between studying these students can be found driving an ambulance or assisting in ceasing a fire.

Senior journalism major Colleen Stone said her job as a student firefighter is unique because students operate the fire engines and ambulances, and perform a large amount of the work on their own.

"We pretty much run our own company, so in that respect we're like an independent company," Stone said. "You can imagine that with three college towns [in the surrounding area] it gets pretty busy around here."

Stone said it is not unusual for her to be sitting through a UMass class and receiving some kind of emergency call on her beeper. According to her, it gets to be embarrassing for her having to jump up from her seat and run out of a lecture.

"Luckily, it hasn't happened too often that I'll get called out of class," Stone said. "Most professors know what's going on and they realize that I might get called out of class at any given time."

While she will only be called in during the day if there's a fire, Stone stated that she is still like other students and attends all of her classes. However, unlike most students, Stone said she lives with eight other students at the fire station.

Four of these nine students will be on-duty at any given night from midnight to 8 a.m. the next day, Stone said. She went on to say that unless there's an actual fire, the student firefighters will usually have a normal night.

"Unless there's an actual fire, you're probably going to get to sleep through the night," Stone said. "However, when you're on duty you can't go out to drink; you have to be at the station."

She added that during one night

Turn to FIRE, page 3

UM time capsule

By Matt Foster
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts millennium committee is looking for submissions from the campus UMass community for the Year 2000 UMass Time Capsule.

The capsule, to be buried in the crypt of the Old Chapel on May 1 and unearthed in 2100, should contain objects that illustrate the achievements of the UMass campus over the past 100 years.

Chancellor David K. Scott appointed the University of Massachusetts Millennium Committee and gave them the task of deciding on the appropriateness of the articles submitted.

"It's important to remember our past, even as we make plans for the future," Scott said. "I want committee members to consider what we would want people to think about the campus a century from now."

The chairs of the committee, psychology professor Susan Whitbourne and history professor Ron Story, are asking students, faculty and other university staff, and alumni to suggest items that reflect upon the history of the campus as well as its achievements. People who make suggestions are expected to supply the actual items.

The items should "provide a lively cross-section of the physical, social, and cultural aspects of our campus," Whitbourne said. "We're especially interested in showcasing the achievements of the members of the campus community."

Some of the students on campus have already made suggestions for the time capsule committee.

"Twinkies. Nothing says 20th century like Twinkies," suggested Josh O'Coin, a freshman engineering major.

An anonymous student made a similar suggestion, also involving food. "D.C. Country Fried Steak. It'll still be edible in 100 years."

Another student said he felt the best items to put in the capsule were, "a ticket from the 1998 National Championship football game, and the "Go F--k yourself" menu from the paper," said Ryan Platt, a sophomore, majoring in psychology.

Tom Gendron, a junior majoring in business and management, said, "Let's put Chancellor Scott back in. Didn't we take him out of the last one?"

Lynnette Swanton, a junior majoring in education and psychology, suggested something more personal such as photos of "my times at UMass."

Tom Feeley, a sophomore majoring in communications, suggested a purple sticker, so "Parking Services can't screw them [the students] later."

Brendan Stone, an undeclared sophomore, thought the addition of "the tri-valve funnel" would benefit the community of the future.

Paul Clark, a sophomore majoring in engineering, suggested a computer. "They could be different in 100 years," he said.

Other items suggested included an 8x10 photo of Monica Lewinsky, a screech alarm, beer samples, and a Backstreet Boys poster.

Any suggestions should be sent by mail to Becky Dean, Chancellor's Office, Whitmore Administration Building, University of Massachusetts, Amherst MA 01003, or e-mailed to millennium_capsule@admin.umass.edu by April 18. Suggestions may also be submitted on the web at http://www.umass.edu/capsule/.

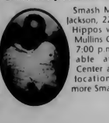
KARA STORES/COLLEGIAN

A close call

A cooking fire broke out on the fifth floor of Washington Residence Hall last night, causing a stir throughout Southwest. Firefighters and police were on the scene and quickly brought the situation under control.

EXTENDED FORECAST

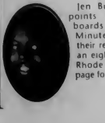
Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 46 LOW: 25	HIGH: 45 LOW: 32	HIGH: 55 LOW: 35



Three Way on a Two Way

Read about Seth Koenig's only way to get a Two Way on the way to Maine.

PAGE 4



All Stars Smash Mullins

Smash Mouth, Luscious Jackson, 22 Jacks, and The Hippos will tear up the Mullins Center tonight at 7:00 p.m. Tickets available at the Mullins Center and Ticketmaster locations. Page 6 for more Smash.

PAGE 6

The butler did it

Jen Butler scored 14 points and added 14 boards as the Minutewomen closed their regular season with an eight-point win over Rhode Island. See back page for more.

PAGE 10

Arts & Living 6
Comics 9
Crossword 9
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 10

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

■ justice

Continued from page 1

the Foreign Intelligence and Surveillance Act of 1978.

"This was more than an ordinary leak," said John L. Martin, who headed the Justice Department espionage investigations unit at the time. "This was a horribly egregious offense, and it goes to the very heart and essence of how you operate in combating terrorism and how you handle secret information."

By allowing such secrets to become public, "you're giving the playbook to the other side," he added.

Such issues have taken on new-found resonance in recent months because of the cases of two other federal employees who allegedly compromised government secrets: Wen Ho Lee, the Los Alamos National Laboratory nuclear scientist charged with downloading massive amounts of classified data onto an unsecured computer, and former CIA Director John M. Deutch, who used several unprotected home computers to write confidential memos to President Clinton and for other highly classified work.

Some officials see key differences in the Lee-Deutch and Scruggs cases. But others believe that all three raise a troubling spotlight not only on how the government protects classified information but also on how it investigates and punishes such cases.

Sometimes that is very differently.

In Lee's case, the Taiwanese-born scientist sits in a jail cell in New Mexico, awaiting trial on a 59-count felony indictment for allegedly mishandling classified information.

In Deutch's case, the Justice Department declined to prosecute the former CIA director, but he was forced to give up his security clearances and has been publicly upbraided by members of Congress.

On Thursday, the Justice Department said that it is re-examining his case.

But the Scruggs case has remained largely under wraps. Scruggs said that he was simply told he had used "bad judgment" in discussing a secret U.S. anti-terrorism operation, and he remains a top federal prosecutor in the U.S. attorney's office in Miami.

"I don't know how you square this with actions taken in the case of Wen Ho Lee and Deutch," said a former Clinton administration official who was close to the investigation of the leak. "This was highly classified information."

At the center of the Scruggs case is a book called "Main Justice" published in 1996. Written by journalists Jim McGee and Brian Duffy, it details the inner workings of the Justice Department

Puttin' up its Lukes

Luke Duplessis netted his third goal of the season as the hockey squad throttled Boston College, 5-1, in Chestnut Hill Saturday night. See the back page for coverage on all the weekend's action.

Amtrak routes

By Don Phillips
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON _ Amtrak this week will announce a surprise 10 percent increase in long-distance passenger service, including new routes that will give the Washington area its first direct train service to Dallas and will restore service to resorts along the East Coast of Florida that was halted during a violent 1963 strike.

The new routes stem from an in-depth "market-based analysis" that was widely expected to result in route abandonments. Amtrak President George Warrington said the analysis shows Amtrak can increase its revenue by $65 million through the addition of routes and trains and using the new service to solicit mail and express freight delivery business. Amtrak hopes to be operationally self-sufficient by 2003.

This summer, Warrington said, Amtrak will announce a similar plan for shorter-distance corridor routes.

The new long-distance routes and trains include New York-Washington-Dallas service via Atlanta, two New York-to-Chicago trains, Chicago-to-Des Moines service, and return of rail service to Las Vegas from Los Angeles.

Many of the new long-distance trains are intended to allow major expansion of mail and freight express, but all overnight trains would have sleeping cars and some kind of food service, although not always full dining cars.

However, a planned second round of additions over the next two to three years includes Amtrak's first luxury train service, a New York-to-Los Angeles train via Pittsburgh and Albuquerque that would make the run in less than 60 hours while making eight stops. Passenger service would be provided in conjunction with a high-end rail tour operator, such as American Orient Express. The train also would haul high-rate express traffic.

Amtrak officials said all the new trains and routes can be accomplished within the current budget without approval from Congress. Warrington said, however, that the company will release a plan this summer to order new passenger cars and locomotives, necessitating more capital funds. Amtrak also plans to buy 2,000 high-speed express cars, refrigerator cars and truck trailers that can be pulled on railroad wheels.

Amtrak's goal is to pay for its operations from revenue, but to continue to get significant capital-improvement funds from Congress. States are already expected to pay a much greater share of the new services they want.

In an interview, Warrington said that in the past, Amtrak had attempted to cut costs by cutting routes and service. "But it doesn't work," he said. "The amount of revenue we lost exceeded the amount we saved."

For instance, he said analysis showed that eliminating the Sunset Limited from Los Angeles to Orlando would save $8 million in costs, but Amtrak would lose $3.5 million in revenue from connecting passengers and $6 million from connecting mail and express revenue for a total loss of $1.5 million.

Warrington gave advance briefings to transportation reporters, embargoed for use when the plan is announced officially Tuesday. However, the Associated Press reported the plan, quoting Amtrak's board chairman, Wisconsin Gov. Tommy Thompson (R), breaking the embargo.

The expansion will result in a squeeze for equipment and in less space in the high travel season for many popular current trains such as the Chicago-to-Oakland California Zephyr and the Chicago-to-Seattle Empire Builder.

Warrington said the plan to buy long-distance passenger cars and locomotives would alleviate this shortage. Meanwhile, Amtrak's Beech Grove shops in Indianapolis will step up repairs and will refurbish some locomotives and cars formerly destined for sale or scrap.

U.S. ends restrictions regarding Libya's political rehabilitation

By Colum Lynch and John Lancaster
Washington Post

UNITED NATIONS – The United States continues to label Libya a sponsor of terrorism but has not attempted to stop Libya's political rehabilitation at the United Nations, the latest sign of Washington's willingness to reward Moammar Gadhafi for surrendering two suspects in the 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland.

For his part, Gadhafi has taken concerted steps to improve his reputation, most recently by contributing three Libyan officers to a U.N. mission in Congo, the first time in a decade that Libya has joined an international peacekeeping effort. Despite some concern in Washington that Libya might play a destabilizing role in Congo, the United States did not try to block Tripoli's participation, according to U.S. and U.N. officials.

Two weeks ago, the State Department authorized a visa for Libya's U.N. ambassador, Abuzed Omar Dorda to travel to Washington for five days to attend a conference hosted by the U.N. International Fund for Agricultural Development. The trip was the first to the nation's capital by a Libyan U.N. envoy since the two countries broke off diplomatic relations nearly two decades ago, according to Dorda.

While U.S. officials declined to meet with the Libyan ambassador, Dorda addressed senior American foreign-policy experts at Georgetown University and the Woodrow Wilson Center on his nation's desire to improve relations with the United States.

"This is the first time I have been permitted to come" to Washington, said Dorda, whose travel usually is restricted to New York City. "Many times I have been invited, but unfortunately I couldn't get permission."

Administration officials said the United States has eased up on Gadhafi's government because he has halted terrorist threats against the United States, expelled the Abu Nidal terrorist organization from Libya and cooperated with an upcoming trial in The Hague of two Libyan intelligence officers charged with planting the bomb that blew up Flight 103, killing all 259 people on board and 11 others on the ground.

"Look, this is not the same Libya it was six years ago," said a senior State Department official. "As far as we can tell, they have walked away from terrorism."

Clinton administration officials say they are not yet prepared to consider lifting unilateral economic sanctions or normalizing diplomatic relations with Libya - a step Britain took in July - until Gadhafi provides full cooperation in the Pan Am 103 trial and adequately compensates relatives of the victims. "The question of compensation looms large and has to be resolved," the senior U.S. official said.

Former U.S. Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., director of the Woodrow Wilson Center, said Dorda's address to the center on Feb. 11 underscored the broad gap between the U.S. and Libyan positions on the issue of compensation.

"There is a real impasse," he said. "The U.S. position is that civil compensation could be made even without acknowledgment of criminal responsibility. The Libyans don't buy that."

Last April, Libya extradited two members of its security service, Abdel Basset Ali Megrahi, 47, and Lamen Khalifa Fhimah, 43, to stand trial before a special court operating with Scottish judges and Scottish rules but located in the Netherlands.

The trial, the result of arduous negotiations and numerous compromises, is scheduled to open May 3.

The United States has since approved the de-facto lifting of U.N. sanctions against Libya and has allowed four U.S. oil companies - Conoco, Occidental, Marathon and Amerada Hess - to send representatives to Libya to survey oil fields they had to abandon when the United States imposed sanctions on Gadhafi's government in the early 1980s. The State Department is considering lifting passport restrictions on American travel to Libya.

Dorda said the United States recently inquired through Belgium, which represents U.S. interests in Libya, whether Libya would guarantee the security of U.S. travelers to the country. "We said they are welcome and they will be secure," Dorda said.

Relatives of some bombing victims, however, reacted angrily to Washington's latest overtures to Libya.

GO HOME! WHASSUP!

ITEM OF THE WEEK

REGULARLY $24.99-$19.99
Take additional $5 OFF Ticket Price

LONG SLEEVED UMASS SPORT GRAPHIC TEES

Lacrosse, Hockey, Crew, Soccer, Basketball & Football

Collegiate Castals
UMass Clothing for Everyone
M-Th 8:30-6 Fri. 8:30-5
Sat. 11 to 4
(413) 545 - 2619

The University Store
Not like a mall... Better.

Collegian
Accounting Clerk
ALL MAJORS WELCOME TO APPLY
Must possess
Deadline for ap
Friday, M
Contact Christine Carroll for more info
pick up applications in Rm. 11
Campus Center Basem

Candidates focus on 'Must Win'

By Craig Gordon
Newsday

SACRAMENTO, Calif. - California Republicans, the once-proud party that produced Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan, haven't had much to celebrate lately, and Arizona Sen. John McCain couldn't resist reminding them of that last week at a "town hall" meeting in the state.

As he strode across the stage before more than 1,200 people at California State University, McCain staked his claim to being the strongest Republican candidate to face the Democrats in the fall _ proven, he said, by his ability to snare Democrat and independent voters in huge numbers in New Hampshire and Michigan.

"We want everybody on board," McCain said. "Don't you think Republicans in California would like to win a campaign for a change?"

Indeed, California Republicans badly would like a victory after a recent losing streak that saw the state go Democratic for president, governor and both U.S. Senate seats. That's why last year they eagerly embraced Texas Gov. George W. Bush, who appealed to them with the same claim that McCain is making now: nominate me, and I'll bring in enough crossover voters to win the state and the White House.

The question of who can do that better, Bush or McCain, promises to take center stage March 7, when big states like California, New York, Ohio and nine others hold Republican primaries and hand out 60 percent of the delegates necessary to capture the nomination.

Voters in upcoming primaries are going to hear a lot about "electability," but California provides an almost unique atmosphere to test that proposition. This is the nation's largest state, with voters spanning the ideological spectrum, a fast-growing minority population and an unusual balloting process that will put all candidates, Democratic and Republican, against each other in a head-to-head "beauty contest" vote.

Vice President Al Gore and former U.S. Sen. Bill Bradley also face off in a Democratic primary here March 7, though Bradley has been lagging far behind Gore in state polls.

Bradley said he must win a few primaries or caucuses to keep his candidacy alive. He's campaigning full-out for Tuesday's Washington state primary in the hopes of parlaying that contest into some momentum. On the Republican side, many analysts had predicted that March 7 would be the make-or-break day. Many believe McCain can stretch the race past March 7, but whoever wins California with the single biggest payout _ 162 delegates _ would be in an almost unassailable position.

"It's going to be very hard for any candidate to explain away a loss in California," said Mark Baldassare, senior fellow at the nonpartisan Public Policy Institute of California. "It's both large, and the pockets of voters present in the state are representative of what a candidate faces in a national election. Both in the size and diversity of the state, as well as its point in the primary process, make a win very critical."

For more than 20 years, the state's primaries, formerly held in June, have been meaningless because the nominations usually were sewn up by then. So the state moved it into the "Super Tuesday" rotation and will see it play a crucial role in the both parties' primaries.

In a sense, California will report the results of three contests March 7 _ a winner-take-all Republican primary and a Democratic primary that will distribute delegates by vote totals. Only registered party members' votes count in those races, meaning McCain won't benefit from non-Republicans who have given him victories in New Hampshire and Michigan.

But that third number _ a four-way race between Democrats and Republicans _ will be closely watched as proxy for November because all voters will count in that race, including independents who make up one-fifth of California voters. A poll by the Public Policy Institute of California earlier this month had Gore edging ahead of Bush in the four-way matchup, followed by McCain and Bradley.

The "what if" scenarios get a little mind-boggling, particularly because analysts are raising the question of what happens if Bush wins the Republican only vote but trails McCain in the all-inclusive popular vote. This would give McCain more grist for his argument that's he's the better November candidate but denies him the delegates needed to get there.

In Republican-only polls released before McCain's wins in Michigan and Arizona, McCain had cut Bush's California lead in half but still was trailing by 20 points _ a gap McCain hopes to close by visiting the state more and spending $2 million to $3 million, more than he will in any other March 7 state, campaign advisers said.

But the poll shows the difficult task ahead for McCain. Bush is beating McCain almost 3-1 among people who identified themselves as "strong conservatives," about one-third of California Republicans, said Mark DiCamillo, director of the Field Poll. The two men are roughly even among moderate conservatives and moderate Republicans, but McCain needs to do much better there to counter Bush.

McCain's challenge could be seen in Riverside, a working-class community about an hour southeast of Los Angeles in an area known as the Inland Empire. Voters here are conservative-minded but have an independent streak that showed up in the county's support for President Clinton in 1992, Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole in 1996 and Democratic Gov. Gray Davis in 1998.

At Lake Alice Trading Co., Riverside Detective Bill Barnes leaned over the bar with his Coors Light and said his kids just asked him that morning who he was voting for. He told them John McCain. "He's what America was all about 25 years ago," said Barnes, 40, a Republican who twice voted for Clinton. "There's something in my mind that says, This is the guy."

Engineers unite

Dave Sturgis, senior engineering major and coordinator of the mini vehicle design and accuracy contest held last week as part of national engineers week was the first participant to try out his design.

Kinda like cannibalism...

The cow mascot who greets visitors to Bart's Ice Cream in the center of town feasts on his own creation.

■ chapel

Continued from page 1

Many students asked were baffled by the question, saying they had never thought about the Chapel or what it was used for. Even the uses did not seem to come to mind as students pondered the idea of taking advantage of the space.

"They could make it a memorial," Mark O'Connor, a senior, said.

In November, Facilities Planning initiated a building re-use study to provide an objective analysis of the potential uses of the Old Chapel.

Presently, the team, led by the Boston office of the S/L/A/M Collaborative, has put together a physical and code evaluation which has allowed them to identify repair, renovation, and preservation needs. This work, Facilities Planning said, would have to be completed regardless of what is planned for the future of the chapel.

The forum being held today is just one step in a series to find the best possible way to utilize the Chapel. Cliff Resnick of Facilities Planning explained in a statement. He continued that once the study is complete and suggestions have been gathered, the design team will evaluate the physical, regulatory, and financial implications for the suggested uses.

The meeting, being held in room 163-169 in the Campus Center at 4 p.m. today is the first in the series of three that will take place during the process of re-opening the building.

■ fire

Continued from page 1

last semester, she had to respond to a drug-related incident at the Washington residence hall at UMass and a motor-vehicle incident within the same half hour. She said she was so busy responding to these incidents that she didn't get to sleep until 4 a.m., but it's not always like that, Stone said.

The student force consists of firefighters and lieutenant officers. Lieutenant Officer Brian Scott, a junior math, finance and biology major, said time management is the key to his success. As an officer, he said he's in charge of overseeing the student firefighters during an emergency call to ensure their safety. These duties include alerting the driver where the burning building is located, and ensuring that the firefighters are prepared to fight the blaze.

"It's a real rush driving through the middle of town in the middle of the day, and sometimes, when you're first learning to drive, that can get to be really overwhelming and people lose track of where they're going," Scott said. "I have to maintain my calm, [keep] an eye on the driver, [make sure] firefighters have their stuff, know where we're going, where the [water] hydrants are before we even get there."

Scott said his position also requires teaching new recruits emergency medicine, truck operations, pump handling, and driving. In the past, this has been accomplished during a week in the summer called "Wonderweek" in which the new firefighting recruits are taught the basic strategies and techniques.

According to him, they learn how to put out fires using a simulated house fire, and they also perform search and rescue classes in which the recruits learn how to maneuver through a pitch black, burning house. Overall, he said it is something not everyone can have the opportunity to experience.

"Driving fire trucks, living at a fire station, going into burning buildings, cutting up cars with the 'jaws-of-life,' and going to fires is the best excuse to procrastinate with doing your school work," Scott said. "Overall, it's a great experience."

The Amherst fire department will be recruiting students interested in becoming firefighters during the week from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the Campus Center concourse.

WHASSUP?

Watchin the game.. drinkin a B..ibc style

TRUE...TRUE
nuthin but b' ..DAILY C!

安城中國餐店
AMHERST CHINESE FOOD
we do not use "MSG"
253-7835 ~ 253-2813
82 Main Street, Amherst

DO YOU NEED YOUR WISDOM TEETH REMOVED?
If so, patients are being enrolled for a wisdom tooth research study. Your wisdom tooth can be extracted by a Board Certified Oral Surgeon. Financial compensation will be provided for your opinion on a research pain medication.
For more information call:
SCIREX Corporation at (860) 285-0569
Outside Windsor call toll free 1-888-285-0569
SCIREX

Munchie Madness 3-6 PM
MONDAY-FRIDAY
Nachos Especial 7.99 4.00
Potato Skins Supreme 7.99 4.00
Shrimp Cocktail 5.99 3.00
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
COMP WELCOME HERE
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

Did You Know... that Birth Control Pills can put women at greater risk of contracting a sexually transmitted infection?
Learn More about how to protect yourself at:
MAKING CHOICES
Contraception & STI Prevention
Held Tuesdays at 7 p.m. and Thursdays at 3 p.m. in room 304 at University Health Services.
Also, in the Campus Center on:
February 28th - 7:00 P.M. IN ROOM 901
March 27th - 7:00 P.M. IN ROOM 905-09
April 24th - 7:00 P.M. IN ROOM 905-09
ALL ARE WELCOME!

Interested in the R.A. Position ?
Last Call for Resident Assistant Info Sessions
2/29 5:30 p.m. New Africa House Room 311
2/29 7:00 p.m. Campus Center
2/29 8:00 p.m. Gorman 2nd Floor Lounge
3/1 5:00 p.m. Cance Main Lounge
3/1 8:00 p.m. Hillel House
3/2 8:00 p.m. Coolidge 19th Floor Lounge
To be eligible for selection, you must:
• Attend an RA information session and turn in a completed application
• Have a 2.4 GPA
• Have lived in the residence halls one full semester
• Be free of judicial sanction
All applications are due to the CDD (Center for Diversity and Development) at 101 Moore House by 5:00 p.m. Tuesday, March 7, 2000

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

Development in Hadley

On the night of February 16, more than 400 people gathered at Hopkins Academy in Hadley to protest the building of 40 to 60 luxury homes on the slopes of the Mount Holyoke Range. The plans in question were those of Ronald Bercume, a Hadley resident and developer.

The only people who spoke in favor of the plans were those who helped to develop them. Most of the people who spoke at the meeting were against the plan. Some of the opponents were from a group called Save the Mountain, a group organized by residents to combat the development. Over a period of several weeks they gathered 2,800 signatures, approximately 400 of which were from Hadley residents.

While the area is zoned for development, opponents of the plan pointed out a number of flaws. The plan calls for a 1.2 mile road and at least 25 houses, but opponents contend that the mountain is not suitable for building because the rocks are too unstable to provide a strong foundation. Also, because of the slope, emergency vehicles would have trouble ascending the heights, and all vehicles would most likely have trouble in the winter when the roads become icy.

In addition, the proposed houses would threaten local wildlife, including timber rattler snakes, spotted salamanders, and birds. Furthermore, other species of animals would be affected by soil runoff – caused by stripping the land of vegetation – that would become contaminated by septic tanks, chemical fertilizers, pesticides, and road salt.

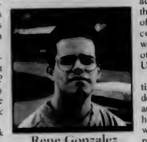
An additional worry expressed at the meeting was that this development would set a precedent for more housing developments in Hadley. After all, this is the largest subdivision plan ever proposed in Hadley, and many who attended the meeting felt that it would set a precedent not only in Hadley, but in neighboring communities as well.

Opponents had hoped to cast enough doubt to keep the plans from going forward, and the meeting did have the desired affect. The Planning Board had intended to vote on the plan that night, but because 400 people came and pointed out flaws with the plan, Board members put off the vote until March 21 in order to study the information further.

It is the opinion of this newspaper that the development should not go forward because Bercume has not proved that his plans will not have a severe environmental impact both now and in the future. In addition, the plan opens up the possibility that development will continue unabated in Hadley and the surrounding communities.

Bercume's plan is an example of what America cannot afford to do in the 21st century. By focusing on the short-term economic gain of building these homes, Bercume is ignoring the big picture, and the big picture is something that America must consider.

In the future, developers must be cognizant of the impact of development on the environment and the community, both the people who live in the area now and those who will live in the area in the future. All future development plans in America should be subject to a rigid analysis of its impact, and short-term profit gains should not be considered. That level of selfishness can have no place in America in the 21st century because the quality of life for future generations will be placed in jeopardy.



The best use of this land was proposed at the meeting by many of those in attendance: the land should be bought and protected from development. After all, the land in question is close to Skinner State Park. Perhaps the park grounds could be extended to encompass this land, which would protect the mountain ecosystem and preserve the area for future residents of Hadley to enjoy.

UMass budget cuts: here we go again...

In another manifestation of interest-driven policy, the University administration yet again commits another injustice. I write about the recent proposed budget cuts that sparked a rally last Tuesday, which culminated in a verbal clash between the students and the Chancellor himself. As a "veteran" of the numerous protests on campus (ranging from privatization to affirmative action), it was tiresome to have to listen to the same blabbermouth promises by the administration again. Yet, I feel it is my duty to report to the rest of the students and give my opinion. Bare with me, folks.

First of all, certain sections of this University will not feel the budget cuts. Rest assured that the Chancellor's (and good ol' President Bulger's) salaries will not be cut, and that Chancellor Scott's pet programs such as PeopleSoft and the Commonwealth College will receive the necessary funding, if not more.

Who's suffering the cuts? You are. Remember that class you couldn't get into because of over-enrollment? It's gonna get worse, much worse. Remember how you discovered the beauty of Don Quijote de la Mancha (one of literature's masterpieces)? You might not read it again with the cuts that will occur in the Spanish department. Hell, this thing hit close to home: my girlfriend is an Apparel Marketing major. The proposed cuts will lessen the chances of her getting the quality education that she deserves, and the major will be gone in three years. Other majors (like Poli Sci) are losing out on much needed Teacher Assistants for classes. One student TA at the protest remarked that a 1½ budget cut (not the proposed 3%) would mean the loss of 5 TA's in his department. That's would mean an average of 8-10 lost TA's across departments if there is a 3% budget cut in each department!

Rene Gonzalez

Where's the economic prosperity that the U.S. is enjoying? Shouldn't the quality of education improve with an economic boom?

This is textbook exploitation of the students. Look at it this way: If the leaders of the University are getting $50,000+ salary raises, the "infrastructure is being upgraded" (whatever that means), and the Commonwealth College fun institution that benefits the elite only) is not feeling the wrath of these budget cuts, what does that mean for UMass and the average student?

That means that UMass is enveloped in an interest struggle. The administration would rather invest its money on elite programs and abstract "infrastructure" upgrades while privatizing the businesses on campus instead of providing the necessary funds to pay for the best education this University can offer. Hence, UMass' mission is no longer education, but business. We've heard this theory before. "Profits over people."

These budget cuts must be seen from a historical context. Affirmative action was (and is) a threat to the power-base of the powerful in this country, so it was whacked at UMass and other places across the United States.

Proponents of privatization were not the students, but the Chancellor and his group of power-hungry administrators who would profit from personal contributions from these corporations once they were established.

The establishment of an elite private institution within the bounds of a public institution does not make sense. I sympathize with the comments of the Commonwealth College students a few days ago in the Daily Collegian, but the ability to "work harder" is not the exclusive property of the Commonwealth College nor should it be promoted as the exclusive property of those that can "make" the Commonwealth College. Because the Commonwealth College is protected from the budget cuts storm, the Commonwealth College is proved to be an elite-only pet project which merits more "protection and attention" than the rest of the University. Whichever way you look at it, the Commonwealth College foments division and competition between students, and in a country still marred by racial and economic gaps, do we really need more "exclusive" clubs? That kind of elite individualism needs to be nipped in the bud if we are really to progress toward removing the gaps of inequality in this country.

Was it W.E.B. DuBois who said it best when he said, "No system of private greed can produce public good"? In essence, Chancellor Scott's vision is to create a similar environment here at UMass. It is similar to how our own U.S. Congress is set up where the powerful have a voice and the average American is way behind the average corporation owner in representation.

When you put all this history together you get the picture that a certain interest group (the administration) has a certain agenda (conservation and perpetuation of power) and are pushing their agenda in different ways. This time, though, their agenda fundamentally conflicts with the official mission of the University (which is to provide a quality and accessible education to all the students of UMass, not the smartest or the richest). As students, we must choose sides and choose wisely. There is no middle ground.

Rene Gonzalez is a UMass student

Editors of all current Ed/Op columnists:

If you are interested in having a photo bended when or if you are interested in having your cu[rrent] photo retaken, come to the Collegian office on Thursday, March 2 at 12:30 p.m. We will be taking pi[ctures]

UMass or bust

On my latest excursion home to the naturally beautiful and far superior state of Maine – a weekend trip that I went on for the purpose of maintaining some level of sanity, albeit fleeting – I paid very close attention to all the aspects of driving during the four hour, mostly-highway ride.

I point this out because most of the time I pay little to no attention when I drive, causing several hundred-car pileups wherever I go. It's kind of like Hansel and Gretel. Bread crumbs... Isuzus... why nitpick? I can find my way home and that's the important thing.

Anyway, I found a couple things quite interesting as I was cruising down the road, what with my traveling companions being of no entertaining use to me; Collegian columnist Bio Downs was immersed in the Def Leppard that was cranking out of his headphones, Collegian webmaster Ben Alamed was drifting in and out of sleep, as he, as a general rule, cannot afford to go to bed during the course of the regular work week, and my friend Torrey Fuller was inexplicably checking his eyelids for leaks (meaning that he was trying to sleep, but couldn't because I changed the radio station roughly every three and a half seconds in a panicked effort to occupy my mind with something other than keeping the car out of an accident).

Seth Koenig

Anyway, it may amaze you to hear about some of the stuff that is on the way from Maine to UMass.

First of all, when Route 202 goes from being two one-way roads to being one two-way road, around exit 20, I believe (but I wouldn't swear to it), a good twenty minutes of driving passes before some Massachusetts Highway Authority genius decided to erect an important flashing sign. The sign is large and seemingly expensive, and says: "Two-way traffic."

Now, correct me if I'm wrong, but if somebody wasn't aware that the traffic was two-way almost a half-hour into the fact, there's a good chance that they're already dead. Quiz question of the moment: How much does that big, expensive, flashing sign cost, and, more importantly, how much is it costing me?

It's probably costing me a bundle, as my out-of-state tuition continues to rise, and although one would think highway maintenance would not end up anywhere close to a college bill, the state of Massachusetts has undoubtedly found a way. After all, the faculty population of this school is diminishing quicker than Skid Row's career did, so something must be driving my costs up.

Another thing that caught my eye as I was approaching the tollbooths on those fun, four-lane highways that encompass much of the first half of the trip, was a set of signs that insisted that I "check brakes".

That's all fine and dandy, but what if the brakes don't work? Does it matter that I checked them? No. If they are fully operational, then the car will stop when I press on them as I approach the tollbooth. If they are not, then no amount of jamming on them 100 feet in advance will prevent me from flying through the booth and ripping the attendant's arm off.

With a large portion of my traveling taking place in the state of Massachusetts, I can honestly say I have a suggestion for native drivers as they constantly try to up the standard for the land speed record.

This might take some comprehensive thought, so bear with me. When there is no vehicle to your left and someone is trying to come off an onramp to your right in an attempt to merge with the highway traffic, it is not your civic duty to indoctrinate that person by continuing to pointlessly drive right next to them until they are forced to either stop completely or drive through the guard rail and into the surrounding trees. Contrary to popular belief, it is legal to briefly change lanes to allow them the enjoyment of a smooth transition that doesn't involve them being impaled with pines.

"After all, the faculty population of this school is diminishing quicker than Skid Row's career did, so something must be driving my costs up."

This is the part of the column where you get all irritated because you think that Massachusetts drivers are wrongly accused of being oblivious on the open road. I agree. Not all Massachusetts drivers are oblivious on the open road. Just all the ones that happen to be driving anywhere near me.

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

Eccentric genius for hire

I have a friend who quit school a year ago and started a couple of Internet companies. He's rolling in the dough, especially considering the only dough I ever seem to get is DP. Anyway, usually I'm not jealous of the guy. I mean working 40 to 50 hours a week seems like thirty more hours than I would like, but I did feel that ever loving twang of jealousy when I went to the Internship/Co-op fair that was held a couple of Thursdays ago.

I walked in there with an open mind. I mean, I'm an English Major so it wasn't like I was expecting to have Microsoft or Intel come up and offer me a position in their research and development division, but I was hoping that at least I might get a good idea of who or what would be hiring folks with knowledge that might be viewed as less technological.

Chris Collins

I was wrong. Easily half of the companies that were recruiting wanted a specific major, namely not anything Chris is interested in doing. But seriously, few companies there were willing to even look at you if you were not an engineer or in one of the hard sciences. It was horribly depressing, to say the least, until I realized that I could easily become a viable candidate for work if I became a language engineering major.

"What do you mean you've never heard of a Language Engineer before?" I said to the brightly smiling person at the IBM booth. Then I proceeded to explain that language engineering is one of the world's newest fields and that in ten years IBM would be looking to hire a hundred I.E.s a year outta college. Of course, I didn't really tell them about the language engineering major, but I really wanted to.

My other idea was to print up a resume that read: Chris Collins – Eccentric Genius for Hire. In fact, I made a copy of one of those resumes but on my way to the copy place to get them put on nice piece of white paper, I realized that I misspelled "eccentric" and wrote "higher" instead of "hire." Of course, I figured that it would be better to not give out the resumes than explain to everyone who I handed them to that the mistakes and misspellings were simply proof that I was truly eccentric, and that part of my genius was the fact that I was willing to break the rules. Besides, I remembered someone once told me that I shouldn't cross things out on my resume, even if I were to use the same red crayon that I used to write it.

So I was left wandering around the Co-op fair with little to do, until I saw a sign that read "All Majors Welcome." Surely, I said to myself, this is the place for me, so I talked to the person. Apparently, I could be a sales manager for the Max Corporation. Of course, I could probably have done that without a degree, but hey, why not work in a department store? (I mean other than the lack of intellectual stimulation, the fact that there would be customers, and the fact that I would rather have an angry penguin spit in my breakfast cereal than work there.)

Of course, I decided to ignore the next couple of "All Majors Welcomed" signs, until I came across the Walt Disney World table. Surely the good old people who brought me The Lion King and Mulan will understand the plight of an English major in the dot.com world. Maybe they might let me work on writing their next blockbuster?

...Or maybe they could offer me minimum wage to walk around in 100 degree weather, in a Mickey Mouse suit that weighs 120 pounds, for 14 hours a day. They also were looking for janitors, but overall the prospects for employment were about as promising as having a mildly perturbed penguin spit in my orange juice.

So I left the job fair, hoping that someday I might find that perfect job. Until then I want all you engineers out there to enjoy your internships, and when whatever company you are working for ends up in a real jam, tell them to call me, after all I am an eccentric, I mean eccentric genius. That and don't upset the penguins.

Chris Collins is a Collegian columnist.

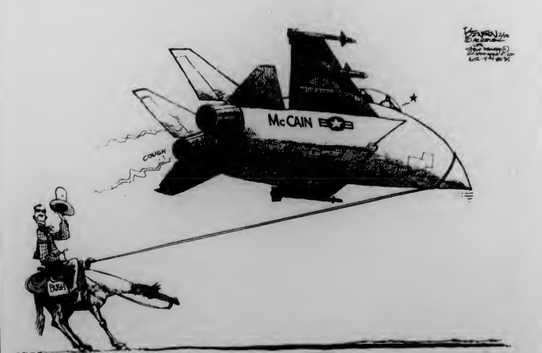
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Ben Alamed Web Developer Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Meyideve Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jennie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor

Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menchel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1984. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Black Affairs

Complex Shades of Blackness: Cliff Blue Sky Ain't No Nigger

By R. Pieter

Turns my stomach
Blows my mind
When I hear these words
Come from my own kind
WHAT'S UP NIGGER?
Everyday that passes
Everywhere I go
Young brothers act
As if they don't know
About the history
WHAT'S UP NIGGER
Ain't no mystery
That the whip was cracked
Across your back
But I still hear brothers say
WHAT'S UP NIGGER?
As if they don't know
about
Hangin' from a tree
Being sh-t on and p-ssed on
For all to see
Like that really struck fear
Well, dig this brothers
We all still here!!
Despite their meetings
In the night at
The slave shack in the field
Propositioning our sisters so that
They could cop a feel
Of The greatness.
And
I just hate this.
This feeling that cringes
Within my gut
When I hear brothers say
As they strut
WHAT'S UP NIGGER?
Damn kid!!
When you gonna learn?
How you were called a nigger
While they tortured you and burned
Their fiery cross of hate
And it ain't too late my brother
To start respecting yourself
And then each other.
But you seem to be comfortable
Calling me this.
This degrading word
That's meant as a diss
Like those old ass descriptions
Sambo? and Boy?
You think calling me a nig-
ger
Brings me joy?
It hurts me
It shames me
It makes me mad
How you don't seem to realize
Just how sad
It is to be referred to
Like I'm not you
Standing in front of you
A Nigger!
Is that all I am?
A Nigger?
Is that what you see me
as?
A Nigger?
Is that who you are?
A Nigger?
Does it make you feel bigger?
When you pull the trigger?
Just another job
For another gravedigger
To bury a brother
Unknown without a name
Another nigger
That they tried to tame
Well, a nigger is
As a nigger does
And a nigger with a bullet in his head
Is a nigger that was.
We've gotta stop the madness
And not be so blind
Dig the tricks
While we still have time
Walk with pride
And remember those
Who were called a nigger
As they took the blows
And Survived
(And if not for them would we be alive?)
So wake up now and
Take a stand
And stop referring to me
As less than a man
Check yourself
On this very thing
Cause ain't no nigger
Can be no king
And in the future
When greeting me or another
Keep it real, like
WHAT'S UP BROTHER?

Diallo verdict causes several demonstrations

John J. Goldman and Lynette Ferdinand
Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK – In the rain outside the Bronx building where four white policemen fired 41 shots at Amadou Diallo, the crowd quickly gathered when the not-guilty verdicts were announced Friday. Some pulled wallets from their pockets and held them up, symbols of their rage. The image was stark. Diallo, a 22-year-old West African immigrant, was slain because the police mistook his wallet for a gun.

"Assassinate! Assassinate!" some protesters shouted in Spanish as police reinforcements in riot gear stood guard behind barricades. Other demonstrators held up signs proclaiming "Professional Killers."

"I believe it's sad they were not convicted on any of the charges," said Kelly Spencer, 23, an administrative assistant in an investment bank who lives in the neighborhood. "I think it sends a poor message to our community that someone can be shot 41 times and hit 19 times not even having a weapon. He was shot for suspicion, not anything concrete," she said, bitterness etched in her voice.

"I am sad. I am mad that I am a citizen and a resident of a city that is governed by Rudy Giuliani. I believe he has cultivated this environment. He has sent a message indirectly and directly to the officers of New York City," she charged.

"Today's message is, 'Don't move or you might get shot,'" added Robert Torres, 33, a truck driver who lives two blocks from the building where Diallo was killed Feb. 4, 1999.

"The first thing you do when you get to your door is thank God." In the vestibule of Diallo's house, candles, flowers, newspaper, and magazine clippings formed a montage of his life and death.

Seeking to calm the crowd that swelled to several hundred people and grew angrier as the evening progressed, New York State Controller Carl McCall, who is black, called for calm. "I understand how outraged people feel here," he said, pressing for restraint. McCall said that the Justice Department would review the case, and he urged the protesters to react "in a dignified manner." Bronx Borough President Fernando Ferrer, who earlier had expressed fears about potential violence, told the crowd that he too understood their "high emotions." The verdict "does not in any was eliminate the shock, anger and tremendous sense of outrage," he said.

Police, who had been preparing for weeks for possible violence after the trial, at first took the low-key approach. But as the crowd grew to several hundred and the rhetoric grew more heated, officers appeared in riot gear and erected barricades on the block where Diallo was slain. "There is no riot here. There is no riot here," the crowd shouted at them.

A separate group of protesters began a candlelight vigil in front of the police barricades. Still another group marched several blocks to the local police precinct, where they were met with additional police reinforcements. "No justice. No peace," the demonstrators shouted. Some of Diallo's neighbors accused the police of racial profiling, stereotyping innocent young men as potential drug dealers. "You gotta walk a straight line," said a demonstrator. "You can't look their way," he said, glancing at the mass police presence. "The younger generation needs to stop and think," he said. "Look at what happened to an adult."

Police respond to verdict

Dan Morrison and Sean Gardiner
Newsday

NEW YORK – John Loud was driving to the police department's Emerald Society's dinner dance in Great Neck when his beeper went off with a taut message about the verdict in the Amadou Diallo murder trial.

"When I read it, not guilty, initially I felt jubilation, elation, just for a second," said Loud, who is first vice president of the 28,000-member Patrolmen's Benevolent Association.

"Then I thought of Diallo's mother and the elation was tinged with sadness. This is not a victory. There is no champagne."

Police officers across the city heaved sighs of relief Friday night as the news spread that an Albany jury had found Officers Sean Carroll, Kenneth Boss, Edward McMellon, and Richard Murphy not guilty in the Feb. 4, 1999, Bronx slaying.

From the top leaders of the police union to Queens precinct houses, several officers interviewed after the verdict echoed the statements of the four accused officers: Diallo's death was a tragedy, they said, not a crime. But not all joined in that belief.

"The form of policing in New York City is like a runaway train and it's out of control," said Lt. Eric Adams, president of the group 100 Blacks in Law Enforcement Who Care.

"It's a tale of two cities. In one part of this city there's celebration in the streets, and in another part of this city there's people who are saying, 'How long before justice will be served?'"

Several officers said it was impossible for the public to understand a police officer's perspective. "The trial was about mindset," said an African-American detective who asked not to be named. "And different people are going to have different opinions about that."

Another veteran Queens black police officer who spoke on condition of anonymity, said: "How are you going to convict these guys of anything? I don't think these guys woke up thinking: 'We're going to kill a black man.'"

Like Adams and several other officers, the veteran Queens cop was more critical of the Street Crime Unit's aggressive tactics than of the actions of the four officers. Despite the blanket acquittals, Loud said, the four officers will never be the same.

"Their lives are ruined forever," he said.

THIS DAY IN BLACK HISTORY

February 28
Michael Jackson, musician, wins eight Grammy awards, 1984

March 1
Ralph Ellison, author of The Invisible Man, born 1915
Harry Bellefonte, singer and actor, born 1927

March 2
Congress declares importation of slaves into U.S. jurisdiction illegal as of the New Year, 1807
Freedman's Bureau for Black Education founded, 1865

March 3
Thomas Jennings becomes the fist Black American to receive a patent, for a dry-cleaning process, 1821
Jefferson Franklin Long, congressman, born 1836
Garrett T Morgan, inventor, born 1877

March 4
I. Ernest Wilkins Is named Undersecretary of Labor by President Eisenhower, 1954

March 5
Crispus Attucks dies at The Boston Massacre, 1770

March 6
Uganda Independence Day
The Dred Scott decision, asserting that Blacks could not be citizens of the United States even if they were citizens of their states, handed down by the Supreme Court, 1857

March 7
Estevanico (Esteban) de Dorantes, native of Azamoor Morocco, sets out to explore what is now the southwestern part of the U.S., 1539

March 8
PBS Pinchback, first Black state governor, is denied his senate seat by the Senate, 1873

March 9
Harriet Tubman, engineer of the Underground Railroad, dies 1913
Clifton Reginald Wharton sworn in as ambassador to Norway, 1961

March 10
Hallie Quinn Brown, women's right activist, born 1854

March 11
Lorraine Hansberry opens "A Raisin in the Sun" at Barrymore Theatre in New York, 1959

MARCH 2000

March 12
Benjamin Banneker, along with Charles L'Enfant, commissioned to lay out Washington in the District of Columbia, 1791

March 13
Eli Whitney patents the cotton gin, based on the ideas and plans of one of his slaves, 1794
Fannie Lou Hamer, activist, dies 1977

March 14
African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church founded, 1821
Quincy Jones, composer and musician, born 1933

March 15
John Lee, first Black commissioned officer in the U.S. Navy, is assigned, 1947

March 16
John Russwurm and Samuel Cornish founded Freedom's Journal, the first Black Newspaper, 1827

March 17
Norbert Rillieux, inventor, born 1806
The Phoenix Society founded, 1833
Clark College granted charter, 1877
CB Scott, inventor, patents the street sweeper, 1896
Nat King Cole, singer and pianist, born 1919

March 19
T.J. Boyd patents an apparatus for detaching horses from carriages, 1872
Ian Matzeliger invents the first machine to manufacture an entire shoe, 1883

March 20
Harriet Beecher Stowe, white abolitionist, publishes Uncle Tom's Cabin, 1852
Allan Roban Crite, painter, born 1910

March 21
Selma Freedom March begins, 1965

March 22
Marcus Garvey, black nationalist, arrives in America from Jamaica, 1916

March 23
National Urban League founded, 1910

March 24
Canada legally recognizes Black suffrage, 1837

March 25
The Scottsboro Boys arrested, 1931
Aretha Franklin, singer, born 1942

March 26
Richard Allen, AME Chruch Bishop, dies 1831
George Alexander McGuire, bishop, born 1836
Thomas J Martin patents the fire extinguisher, 1872
Augusta Savage, sculptor, dies 1962

DESIGN BY TEREZA RODRIGUES

In the spirit of Malcolm X; a tribute to the civil rights fight

As Black History month comes to a close, many organizations at the University are holding cultural events to "remember the black struggle." On March 2, the Malcolm X Cultural Center presents "In the Spirit of Malcolm X." It is a coffeehouse-style tribute to the life and times of Malcolm X. The event begins at 7 p.m. and will be held at the X.

The event was planned by the staff of the center to not only recognize this great black leader, his life and his legacy, but also the impact that the civil rights movement had on America. When asked to comment on the inspiration of the event, staff member Faiza Bodden said "the 1960's was an extremely important decade for African-Americans. Blacks were challenged by segregation, oppressed by the government, and uplifted by the majestic leaders of the times. Why not celebrate all the creative energy that was surrounding our people?" This event hopes to enlighten the campus to the informal and formal forms of struggle.

As a bonus, this event will also unveil the new renovations that have been done to the Malcolm X Cultural Center. Recent funding has allowed the center to obtain new lights, new blinds, a paint job, and a new rug (soon to come). "It looks like an entirely new place. With the lights and the paint, it is brighter in here, giving off a new [vibe] for the X," said sophomore Kristen Moore.

The program for the event includes various poets and dancers from the UMass campus, as well as special readings by the Cultural Centers Staff. There is also a surprise project being revealed at the event. All who wish to be a part of this event are welcomed.

—Victoria Salesman

Reindeer Games loses big

Reindeer Games
directed by John Frankenheimer with Ben Affleck, Charlize Theron, Gary Sinise playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

By David Traupes
Collegian Staff

When I bought my ticket for Reindeer Games, I thought I was going to see a movie about a guy named Rudy who gets out of prison and meets up with his recently dead cellmate's pen-pal girlfriend, Ashley, the two of them get drawn into a plan to rob a casino by Ashley's evil brother, and Rudy has to take part in this last crime if he ever hopes to start a new life with Ashley. More than a little cheesy? Sure. But I figured, hey, it could be sweet, in a cheesy way. And for the first half of the movie, it looked like that's what I might actually be seeing. As the movie progressed, however, it became clear that Reindeer Games is just another convoluted thriller movie that makes the mistake of thinking that if one plot twist is good, then two must be better.

Ben Affleck as an action hero and hardened ex-con car thief takes some getting used to, but he does a good job with the role and it's not too difficult to look beyond his adorable eyes and charming smile; it even helps that Affleck is such a charismatic actor, making it easier for the audience to sympathize with a character that is, after all, a criminal. Charlize Theron looks cute and plays the darling girlfriend well, although I still have trouble seeing her as anything but a less intense Ashley Judd. Gary Sinise plays the villain well, although his character is woefully under explored; he's just another petty criminal looking to make it to the big time through the casino job. In this sort of movie, I suppose, such considerations as character motivation take a back seat to bullets and car chases, but still, some effort to familiarize the audience with the key players would have been nice.

This brings us to the plot twists, because the little effort that did go into establishing the characters as real people is entirely undone by the "shocking revelations" that surface later in the movie, and as shocking revelations go, these are the worst sort; you can see the first one coming a mile away, but you hope and pray that you'll be wrong and it'll never happen. It does. The second one you sort of joke to yourself about, thinking, "Man, wouldn't it be crazy if it turned out this way – naw, that's too stupid, they'll never do that." They do. What began as a corny but promising movie sinks into wretched morass of thriller movie cliches, and the plot twists themselves into a mess of needless complexity and shallow layers of betrayal.

The final few minutes of the movie are a joke, a tacked-on attempt to salvage some of the humanity of, and audience sympathy for, Affleck's character, and one of the lamest attempts of a movie to warm the hearts of its viewers I've ever had the misfortune to witness. Rudy walks around town dressed as Santa Claus, going from mailbox to mailbox, stuffing them with bundles of cash stolen from the casino. Gosh. I feel swell. Reindeer Games began as silly but promising, and ended up as just another shovelfull of action flick nonsense. C+

Percy Hill and Rane rock UM

By David Siegel
Collegian Correspondent

On Friday night February the 25th, the band Percy Hill came to town, playing at the top of the Campus Center. This popular jam band put on a stunning three hour long show which consisted of many of their original songs and two very well placed cover songs.

The Hartford based band Rane opened up the show with a seven-song set. From the sampling that was given this night, I can say that Rane is a band that will be heard from in the future. They mix genres very well, and use a myriad of instruments that are not traditionally used in a groovin' jam setting. This was very evident on their opening song, titled "Mirage". This song opened with a beautiful cello solo by bassist Dan Prindle. The rest of the band joined in, to craft a very Middle Eastern feeling, making me think about what might this band was all about. This answered my question with their next song "Transportation", which is a fast paced song showcasing the miraculous skills of guitarist Alan Venincasky. In my opinion, Alan is the backbone of this group, holding everything together with his amazing guitar riffs, putting the crowd in a grooving trance throughout the set. Rane will continue to make a name for itself as it spreads its music to more and more people. Look for their next album titled "Camelopardalis" due out in June.

After a lengthy break, Percy Hill took the stage at about 10 o'clock. Percy Hill is four-piece ensemble from New Hampshire made up of Aaron Katz (drums), Nate Wilson (keyboards), Joe Farrell (Guitar), and John Lecesse playing bass. They opened with a roaring song that grabbed the crowd's attention right from the beginning. Next came "Fallen", off of their latest album "Color in Bloom". This song has a very jazzy feel with a very funky bass line. Than came "Jasper", a bass-driven song with a nasty beat and tight jamming sequence.

The band made its way back to the stage after their set break and opened up with a roaring jam, putting the spotlight on Nate with his awesome techno-like keyboard effects. Next up, to the surprise and excitement of the near capacity crowd, came a fantastic rendition of Bob Marley's classic "Exodus", with the crowd joining in on much of the vocals. One of the many highlights of the show occurred next with personal favorite "Slave (Self Promoted)". This song displays the sweet voice of drummer Aaron Katz who leads this groovy tune into another lengthy guitar led jam. The second set was closed with a slower paced "Been So Long" with Katz again leading the way with his skillful drums.

The band left the stage and shortly returned after a sea of applause and cheers from the audience. After setting onto the stage, the bassist started playing and suddenly broke out into the classic bass line of Peter Gabriel's mega hit "Sledgehammer". The Gabriel-esque voice of Joe Farrell made this a superb song, finishing off this great show on a very high note.

Arts.... oh so breezy and carefree

COURTESY INTERSCOPE RECORDS

Smash Mouth headlines an all-star line-up, that includes Luscious Jackson when they invade the Mullins Center tonight as part of the Yahoo Out Loud Tour.

All-stars set to smash Mullins

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

If you haven't picked up your tickets for tonight's Yahoo Out Loud Tour at the Mullins Center, what are you waiting for? The tour combines one of the biggest acts in pop-music during the late 1990s, with one of the most under appreciated bands in recent memory.

Tonight at 7:00 p.m. Smash Mouth invades the campus of the University of Massachusetts with a very special guest. Luscious Jackson. This past summer, you would have to be living under a rock to have never heard of Smash Mouth, the four-man band from California. Their hit "All Star," was perhaps the most played song on the radio for the entire year, and it was only one in a string of winners that Smash Mouth has recently produced. Lead vocalist Steve Harwell has become a pop icon for west coast music in the past year, and combined with some heavy publicity from posters and MTV videos, it is clear that Smash Mouth is here to stay.

According to Interscope Records, Smash Mouth formed in 1994 when Harwell and his boyhood friend Kevin Coleman, who plays drums, recruited Greg Camp, a guitarist from a local cover band. Camp then persuaded bassist Paul De Lisle to take a chance on the new band. What has happened since has been nothing short of tremendous for Smash Mouth. Their debut album, Fush Yu, sold over two million copies and included a cover of War's "Why Can't We Be Friends," as well as the tremendously popular, "Walkin' on the Sun." In 1999, Smash Mouth released their second album, Astro Lounge, to immediate success, which became platinum in phenomenal time.

When Smash Mouth hits the Mullins Center tonight, they will not be alone. New York based female band Luscious Jackson returns to the Mullins Center, where they played two years ago. Luscious Jackson is in the midst of promoting their new album, Electric Honey, which was released in 1998. Electric Honey is the third album in the band's history, following 1994's Natural Ingredients, and 1996's Fever In Fever Out. Luscious Jackson, who is based out of Brooklyn, cite such British bands as Delta 5 and The Slits as inspirations for their music, which Rolling Stone has described as "a 'Shaft' style groove of lounge funk."

Also on the bill for the night are openers, 22 Jacks and The Hippos. 22 Jacks formed in 1995 and already have three albums under their wing. The Hippos, like Smash Mouth, are a punk-pop-rock band from Los Angeles that have aspirations of hitting the big time. Both bands have certainly gained a lot of exposure after being linked up with such a reputable and exciting program as the Yahoo Out Loud Tour.

The Yahoo Out Loud Tour, which boasts around 20 different stops, is sponsored by Dorrius, Textbooks.com FreeScholarships.com and TWEC.com, and encourages the public to arrive well in advance. The promoters have been quoted as saying, "Show up early, get free stuff!" There will certainly be an enormous amount of publicity surrounding the show, and because of the popularity of the two bands, a large crowd is certainly anticipated. There are a number of special events that will be taking place at the show including a chance to surf the web, sample new flavors of tortilla chips, and experience different ways to save money on textbooks. The tour certainly appeals to the average college student who is looking for a good time and some quality music.

Tickets are very reasonably priced for the show. They are only $15.00 at the door, and they are going fast, so hurry up and buy them early. Tonight's concert at the Mullins Center, headlined by Smash Mouth and Luscious Jackson, with The Hippos and Jacks 22, begins at 7 p.m.

California's Bloodhound Gang scream "Hooray For Boobies!"

Bloodhound Gang
Hooray For Boobies
Geffen Records

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

"I hope this helps to emphasize. I hope this helps to clarify. I hope you die!" I had to begin my review of Hooray For Boobies with a quote. You have no idea how difficult it was to pick one, but I think that this sums up what the five man band from Los Angeles represents. However, it was a close tie between that quote and "I love the kind you clean up with a mop and bucket."

Hooray for Boobies is the third album from the band that released 1994's Dingleberry Haze and 1995's Use Your Fingers. Bloodhound Gang is back with a vengeance, and there's nothing you can do to prevent it.

Jimmy Pop is an alumni of Temple University. The fact that he is quite intelligent clearly shows in his music. The comedic lyrics are very well thought out and have some meaningful substance. If Bloodhound Gang were not together long before the new trend of so called "hip-hop rock" that has been cashed in on by Eminem and Limp Bizkit, one would immediately assume that the band is trying to jump on the bandwagon. However, the sound that is created by Bloodhound Gang is easily better than all three. It has brains. Of course you don't need a brain to figure out the joke behind, "Put your hands down my pants, and I'll bet you'll feel nuts," but much of the album combines simple huntor, with five people that can play some musical instruments very well.

As you may have figured out already from the title, Hooray for Boobies is not serious music. All of the songs are very creative and extremely funny. It is certainly the goal of the band to gain listeners through good old-fashioned fun, and that is exactly what Hooray for Boobies is. To simply brush off Hooray for Boobies as a stupid farce would be a travesty. It is too funny to pass up. "The Bad Touch," the first single from Hooray for Boobies that has gained quite a bit of airplay on rock radio stations across the nation, is a hilarious and weird song about "Doing it like they do on the Discovery Channel" that you can't help but laugh at. Though the band may not be the most serious bunch of musicians, when taken for what it is, a hysterical demonstration of free speech, Hooray for Boobies proves to be a "must have" album. Hooray for Bloodhound Gang, and hooray for Hooray for Boobies, which certainly deserves my grade of an A.

Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!Arts!

Sigma [fly] Alpha

Just like any fraternity or sorority, Army ROTC offers teamwork, camaraderie and friendship. Plus, you'll get to do challenging stuff like this that'll help prep you for the real world. Stop by the Army ROTC department. We won't rush you.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

When Someone asks you What you did in College,

What will you say?

The Amherst Fire Department is recruiting members for its Student Force.
Stop by the Campus Center, Feb. 28- March 3 for more information.
The North Fire Station will host an Open house on March 3 from 6 p.m.-8 p.m.

The Station is located at 603 East Pleasant St., up the road from Sylvan.
Call for more information 549-5419

■ Owls

continued from page 10

one, 15-14. UMass would not relinquish that lead for the rest of the period.

"We were just out there playing hard," said Mack, who totaled 20 points in the game. "We came up with a lot of big rebounds - long rebounds, at that. We were just trying to go out there and play harder than they did."

Temple's notorious zone defense, the second stingiest in the nation, wasn't keeping the Minutemen (15-12, 9-5) off the scoreboard, and the Owls looked a bit shaken after emotional senior day pre-game festivities.

The hosts bricked all but eight of their 26 first half field goal attempts, and their leading scorer, forward Mark Karcher, who entered the game averaging 16 an outing, registered only a point before the break. Temple battled its own secret to success as UMass was using its archrivals' trademark zone 'D' and saw the benefits, holding the Owls' to just 31 percent shooting.

Massachusetts went into the locker room up by three, 27-24, with the storybook possibility of riding an upset over the eighth-ranked Owls straight through to the NCAA Tournament looming. It's an extravaganza that UMass was absent from – for the first time in eight seasons – last year. Maybe this win would be the catalyst. Just maybe.

Maybe not.

"We proved in the first half that we can play with these guys," Minuteman senior forward Mike Babul said. "We just have to put two halves together and play 40 minutes."

In the subsequent twenty, UMass forward Chris Kirkland started off the scoring with a gliding lay-up. Temple retaliated with a dominating 29-6 run that silenced the upstart Maroon and White and clenched the A 10 Eastern Division regular season title.

"The kids got out and made a couple of easy baskets and got into a rhythm," Owl coach John Chaney said. "Before that, we couldn't get into a rhythm. [Minuteman coach Bruiser Flint] was showing zone once, man the next time – and we were coming out screaming at [our team] trying to get them into some kind of situation that would fit both zone and man... The kids were so busy fighting the defense that they couldn't recognize the changes that are occurring on the floor."

A three-pointer by sixth man Lynn Greer followed by a can from beyond the arc by Pepe Sanchez finally shook Massachusetts off of its defensive moorings and opened the floodgates for the potent Owl offense.

"When we got the lead, and it was a convincing lead, seven or eight points. And we hit a couple threes in a row, you figure they're going to have to come out of the zone and chase you," Chaney said. "And that's exactly what happened."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Monty Mack

"It was frustrating at times, because we were making them work," Babul said. "They were taking 25 or 30 seconds off the shot clock and then you see them get a foul or hit a three. That drains you when you're playing that much defense and they end up making a shot with a few seconds left on the shot clock. You know it's tough to score against them, so once you get down double figures, it's tough to come back."

Sanchez joined Karcher with just three points on the afternoon, but was more than made up for by the breakout performance by the sophomore Greer, who tallied 17 points in the win.

"[Greer] stretches you out because he can shoot," Flint said. "He can score with the ball. That's it, right there."

With the loss, the Minutemen fall to 9-5 in the conference, keeping them deadlocked for second place in the East with St. Bonaventure with two games to play – against George Washington and then the Bonnies in Olean, NY. Bona kept pace with the Minutemen on Saturday night by beating St. Joseph's across town, 85-74.

■ Temple

continued from page 10

Mark Karcher, who scorched the Minutemen for 17 points in the earlier contest was held to just one point in 19 minutes in the first. Senior forward Lamont Barnes, who averages nine points and five rebounds per outing, was scoreless with a single rebound. In fact, only nine of their 24 first half points came from their starters.

Their savior came in the form of sophomore, Lynn Greer, who made three of six field goals for ten points in only ten minutes late in the first half. The 6-foot-1 guard, who averages 13 per game, sparked his team for 17 points and three assists on the day.

For UMass senior sniper Monty Mack displayed his usual array of versatility, hitting five three-pointers for 20 points while playing the entire game. Senior co-captain Chris Kirkland scored eight of his ten points in the second half off of a pair of field goals. Sophomore point guard Shannon Crooks also contributed 10 points. Babul's four and Kitwana Rhymer's six points totals 50 of the Minutemen's 54 points. The only player off the bench who scored was freshman center Micah Brand, who had four.

In comparison, Temple's substitutes tallied 31 points including Greer's 17. Keaton Sanders and Ron Rollerson each netted four points and Alex Wesby and Greg Jefferson added three points apiece while playing just one minute. The Owls' second team punched in over 23 percent of the minutes while Massachusetts' compiled just 17 minutes with Brand, Winston Smith and Jonathan DePina seeing time.

The depth of the Philadelphia team overwhelmed the UMass starters, who hung tough in the first half. Without a capable rotation and a chance to a breather, the Minutemen were unable to keep up with their opponent's fresh legs. Managed by the smooth ball-handling of senior Pepe Sanchez, who dished out eight assists, the Owls controlled the tempo in the second half with the help of its bench and a pair of runs that stretched to 16-4 and 13-1.

"It's frustrating at times because we were making them work and they were taking 25-30 seconds off the shot clock and then it seemed that we'd get a foul and they would hit a three, and that drains you when you're playing that much defense, that long, they end up making a shot with a few seconds left on the shot clock," said Babul. "You know, that it's tough to score against [the zone] and once you get down double digits, it's tough to get back."

Not enough offense for men's lax in loss to No. 9 Hofstra

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

They battled the was rivals are supposed to battle. There were very few smiles, but rather faces of intensity on the rain-soaked turf at Richard F. Garber Field Saturday. With ten men on each side of the flag, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse squad tugged and tugged, but in the end, ninth-ranked Holstra won the war.

Hofstra	10
UMass	7

The game pitted two teams that were evenly matched across the board. With the Minutemen fighting through a moderate case of carelessness, the ninth-ranked Flying Dutchmen continued with their efficient work on offense, taking the game's first three-goal lead late and escaping Amherst with a 10-7 triumph in both teams' 2000 debut.

Rich Kunkel scored a pair of goals for the Minutemen (0-1, 0-0 LCAC) but once again, the offense couldn't come up with enough on its end. With the game knotted at six with under nine minutes remaining in the third quarter, Tom Kessler picked up a Ramar Clash rebound and tucked it into the net from point blank range to put Hofstra in front. The was things had gone. No. 15 UMass should have answered, but instead, the Dutchmen continued marching forward while the Minutemen stood still. Joe Bartle made it 8-6 off a gorgeous feed from Doug Shanahan. Then Joe Kostolansky found himself wide open on the left wing, rifling one past Campobellanto for his second goal of the afternoon.

We didn't go out and get it. We, as a team, are going to have to learn how to do that," UMass head coach Greg Cannella said. "Our attackmen and our middies really got to buckdown and recognize that every possession, every fast break opportunity really counts and you gotta try to put a couple of those in the net."

KARA TITUS / COLLEGIAN
John Hutchen and the Minuteman defense were finicky on Saturday against Holstra, but UMass couldn't find an answer for its offensive woes in its season debut.

The score was tied at four through first half action. UMass seized an early lead after intermission. Just six seconds in, Jeff Seals won the face-off and stormed downfield and finished what was an outstanding individual effort. The Minutemen's elation was short-lived, however, as Holstra came back a minute later to the things up at five apiece when Kevin Dougherty made it 8-6 off a gorgeous feed from Doug Shanahan. Then Joe Kostolansky found himself wide open on the left wing, rifling one past Campobellanto for his second goal of the afternoon.

We didn't go out and get it. We, as a team, are going to have to learn how to do that," UMass head coach Greg Cannella said. "Our attackmen and our middies really got to buckdown and recognize that every possession, every fast break opportunity really counts and you gotta try to put a couple of those in the net."

After over eight minutes without a score, UMass lit the scoreboard first much to the delight of the strong Maroon and White contingent on hand. Alex Racioppi led Keith Gabrielli in front and the fartiungdale native bounced it past Dutchman goaltender Michael Demeo with 6:25 remaining. Hofstra answered when Michael Tierney fired a bullet by Chris Campobellanto from the point to tie the game up at one.

"We're happy with the effort and that's I think, more so than anything, that's a good start for us," Cannella said. "We played a very good team. I think that our guys are ready and it was good start. We just didn't win."

The Minutemen travel to Long Island for a date with Stony Brook on this Saturday. UMass joined the LCAC this past summer and are set to play its first ever conference game

Collegian Sports Meeting Tonight at 6 PM

Do you want to be a part of the biggest student run business on campus?

Are you interested in a career in Human Resources?

Collegian is accepting applications for the position of Human Resource Coordinator.

Applications can be picked up at the Collegian in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Interested applicants should possess excellent communication and computer skills.

Any questions can be directed to christine Carroll at 545-3500 or hrcollegian@yahoo.com.

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!

ALL SOPHOMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT MAJORS:

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF *ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should possess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:
Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

AUTO FOR SALE

'87 Nissan Stanza. 85k. automatic, 4-door EXCELLENT CONDITION! $2000 or best offer. Thomas 546-1775.

'92 Subaru Loyale wagon 4x4. Clean, runs great, air, power, roofrack. $2500.00 o.b.o. 665-0453.

1965 Buick Electra 225. PS, PB, Auto V8. 4dr. Maroon with black interior. Rebuilt engine, 90,000 miles. Good tires. $1600 OBO. 559-5027.

'91 Corsica V6. AT, PS, PB, 52,000 miles. Good rubber, clean, good condition. 549-6755.

'88 VW Fox GL 160k. Lots of new parts. Runs strong. $750.00 584-5927.

EMPLOYMENT

International commpany has paid internships available in accounting, sales/marketing. Call Giovanna (413)536-1813.

EMPLOYMENT

Human Services- Relief support needed to work with adults with developmental disabilities, may lead to permanent hours. Hours include evenings, weekends and/or overnights. Required: HS diploma and drivers license. Starting pay is $7.47/hr(for relief), $8.35(for permanent). Locations in South Hadley and Belchertown. Call Mary @ (413)774-2281 ext. 11. AA/EOE

Coach: Swim team looking for part-time head coach. Competitive Swim experience. Salary commensurate with experience. Belchertown Rec. 323-0419 or Mary 534-9904.

Summer to remember in woods of Maine- Camp Androscoggin for Boys seeks specialists to teach tennis, baseball, soccer, lacrosse, street hockey, swim, canoe, ropes, mountain biking, archery, and photography. 6/18 to 8/18. Visit www.campandro.com or contact 601 West Street, Harrison, NY 10528 (914)835-5800.

EMPLOYMENT

Premiere help wanted. Looking for someone with Premiere expertise to help finish a video. Kirk 256-0080.

Nursery/Greenhouse full/time, year/round position to assist manager in multi retail locations. Salary plus benefits. Send resume to Westfield Home and Garden, 81 Springfield Rd, Westfield MA 01085.

Summer Employment; Outdoors. Weight loss/sports camp looking for energetic people to lead campers in a fun filled summer. Located in West Stockbridge, MA. in the heart of the Berkshires. Call for more information. Toll Free 877-FIT-CAMP. email marc@camp-kingsmont.com

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132 www.biketrips.com

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

FOR SALE

Titleist DCI 981d golf clubs used 5 times. New price $650.00 asking $450.00. 665-6645 ask for Tim.

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

INSTRUCTION

Philippino Martial Arts. Instructor with great experience considering starting a class in Amherst. For info call 256-0080.

MISCELLANEOUS

$200 million is spent on advertising tactics aimed at YOU! Want a piece? Log onto www.teammagma.com for information on how to earn money now.

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

PERSONAL

Attractive party-loving 20-something already dating energetic movie buff. How'd they meet? Turns out she's his cousin's friend. sixdegrees showed them the connections. www.sixdegrees.com

SERVICES

Have you been ripped offby a retailer? Contact the Student Legal services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Massage winter away. $15.00 for an hour session. Michael 585-8577.

SERVICES

Rental problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Qestions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TICKETS

Wanted for April 2 Red Hot Chilipeppers at Mullins Center. Call (413)243-0931.

TRAVEL

Early Bird Discount. Europe $288 (r/t + taxes) TRAVEL ANYTIME IN 2000!! Mexico/Caribbean $159 (r/t + taxes) CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Call: 800-326-2009.

Study Spanish. Internships in Guatemala. College Credit. www.casaxelaju.com (512)416-6991.

TRAVEL

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Nights $279! Includes meals & Free Parties! Awesome Beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun and Jamaica $399! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Panama City $129! Boardwalk Room w/Kitchen next to clubs! 7 Parties-Free Drinks! Daytona $149! South Beach $159! Cocoa Beach $179! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2000

Place your ad in the Collegian classifieds NOW!! Give us a call here at 545-3500

Five College Community Calendar

MONDAY, FEB. 28

Meeting – There will be a S.H.A.R.E. meeting for anyone interested in finding out about volunteer and community service activities in the Amherst area at 6:30 p.m. in room 504 of Goodell. Call 549-1333 for more information.
Reading – Author Louise Diamond will read from her new book, The Courage for Peace, at Food For Thought Books in Amherst at 6 p.m.
Workshop – There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. Men and women are welcome. Call Day at 577-5188 for more information.

TUESDAY, FEB. 29

Meeting – There will be a Ballroom Dance Club meeting at 8:30 p.m. in Totman 101. All are welcome.
Workshop – There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. Men and women are welcome. Call Day at 577-5188 for more information.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Lisa at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.
Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac11@aol.com or Caleb at [illegible] for more information call Matt at 549-1053, or email submissions and questions to shortstory@acad.umass.edu.
Support – A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone prescreening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5316 if interested.
Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.
Voting – A reminder to registered voters: A voter can only vote absentee due to absence from his/her residence community during polling hours, physical disability preventing the voter from going to a polling place, or religious belief. For more information call 256-4035.

PSAs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an PSA, please submit a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS™ From Bookworks
Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,* you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!
*See Store for Terms and Conditions
University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER
Just another way that WE GIVE 100%
We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN 4 Hosting Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3	Hartford
4	CBS/4	Boston
5	ABC/5	Boston
6	PBS/57	Springfield
7	HSCN	Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20	Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61	Hartford
12	PBS/24	Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/ New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVCTV19 –
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Govt to Govt
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

MONDAY EVENING C - Campus FEBRUARY 28, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer	Visions of Italy: Northern Style			Italian Passion for Life (In Stereo)				Gardens
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Becker	Raymond	Grapevine	Family Law	Metamorphosis	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Becker	Raymond	Grapevine	Family Law	Metamorphosis	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		"The Beach Boys" (2000, Biography) Kevin Dunn, Alley Mills.			News	Nightline
WLVI	56		Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Popular "Windstruck" (R)		News	Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	10th Kingdom (In Stereo) (Part 2 of 2)				News	Third Watch (In Stereo)	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV	Moesha (R)	Parkers (R)	Grown Ups	Malcolm-Eddie	News	Real TV (R)	Change-Heart	Caroline
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	10th Kingdom (In Stereo) (Part 2 of 2)				Third Watch (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show	70s Show	Ally McBeal (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	61	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	10th Kingdom (In Stereo) (Part 2 of 2)				Third Watch (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow		American Experience "John Brown's Holy War"			Civil Rights	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	20	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		"The Beach Boys" (2000, Biography) Kevin Dunn, Alley Mills.			News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Moesha (R)	Parkers (R)	Grown Ups	Malcolm-Eddie	Star Trek: Voyager "Caretaker"		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WYBS	29		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball New York Knicks at Miami Heat (Live)				inside NBA		 "First Daughter" (1999)
A&E	43		L.A. Law Bele of the Ball		Law & Order "Mannood"		Biography: Peter Falk		Investigative Reports (R)		City Confidential (R)		Law & Order "Nullification"
CNN	20	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	53	39	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	 "Ghostbusters" (1984, Comedy) Bill Murray, Dan Aykroyd.					Strangers	Upright	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	22		Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Sharks		On the inside "Test Pilots" (R)		Brain Attack		Three Minutes to Impact		On the inside "Test Pilots" (R)
ESPN	33		Sportscenter		College Basketball Connecticut at Rutgers (Live)				College Basketball Kansas at Texas (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	45		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Beyond Chance		"Sins of Silence" (1996, Drama) Lindsay Wagner.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	35		MTV Jams	Beat Suite	Making-Video	News Link	TRL Wanna	TRL (R) (In Stereo)		Road Rules	Road Rules	Making-Video	Undressed	Loveline
NICK	55		All That	Caldog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI	59		Sliders "Disease" (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "Parasite"		Outer Limits "The New Breed"		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "Monster"		Polargeist: The Legacy
TLC	24	24	Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours		Paramedics "Force Five" (R)		Tornado: Touchdown		Tornado: Survival		Paramedics "Force Five" (R)
TNT	30		In the Heat of the Night		ER "Split Second" (In Stereo)		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo Live)				Sports Illustrated Swimsuit		 "Alexa" (1999)
USA	32		Baywatch "Sail Away"		JAG "Embassy" (In Stereo)		Walker, Texas Ranger		WWF Raw		WWF War Zone		Farm Club.com (In Stereo)
HBO	50		(4:30) * "Titanic" (1997, Drama) Leonardo DiCaprio. PG-13				 "Buffalo'66" (1998, Comedy-Drama) Warren Beatty. R		David Brenner: Vengeance				"Mercy" (1999) (In Stereo) R
MAX	51		(5:15)  "Cocktail" (1988)		Crimes of Honor (In Stereo)		 "Perfect Target" (1997) Daniel Bernhardt. R		 "A Low Down Dirty Shame" (1994) R				 "The Siege" (1998) R
SHOW	65		 "Pizza Suite" (1971, Comedy) Walter Matthau. GP				"The Wishing Tree" (2000) Alfre Woodard.		Filmmaker		 "Lawn Dogs" (1997) Sam Rockwell. R		Hoop Life

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Spoot By Mike Banchick

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

Nona By Anna Faktorovich

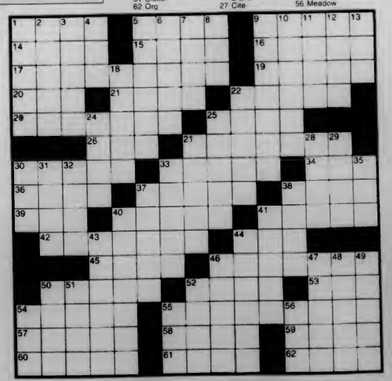
Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Horoscopes



PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – As aggressive as you may be today, you're likely to meet your match, and it's almost certain to be a Cancer or Libra native – surprise!
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Control your tongue today. Anything you say that is out of turn or inappropriate can come back to haunt you very soon.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – How you react to the unexpected will make all the difference today. Someone close to you should be able to keep you in control at all times.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – It will be difficult to establish a necessary balance today, but you must strive to achieve just that despite the challenges involved.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You must consider compatibility today before you begin working with someone else. A long-term project gets a boost at this time.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Consider your options with care today and don't try to beat the odds at every turn. Eventually your luck may well run out!
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – It's all in how you look at it today. There are times, however, in which things are just what they seem, no more and no less. Be ready to adjust and adapt.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Opposites attract. Today you're sure to learn a great deal about how strong that attraction can be, for good or bad. Use caution after dark.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Take advantage of opportunities today to promote your own agenda. Take care, however, that you're not misunderstood or misinterpreted.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – The usual may prove unusual in many respects today, and you must be prepared to make a surprising decision which influences others.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – A financial mixup may have you reeling toward mid-day, but you can recover quickly if you will only keep your wits about you and proceed slowly.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – A look inside affords you a quick glimpse of the "real you" once again, and just when it is most needed. Your confidence will soon be on the rise.

Quote of the Day

"Travel to the cornerstone of America, take a right, and keep on driving."
–Steve
(Directions to California)

Monkey-Box By PB & J

ACROSS
1 Inclined surface
5 Summon
9 Rice dish
14 General Bradley
15 Birthright seller
16 Bose's slate
17 Taking part in a triathlon
19 Fuddi of the comics
20 Singer Yoko
21 Actor Foxx
22 Crosswise, at sea
23 Monk's cut
25 Periods of time
26 "Yo!"
27 Attended a bee
30 By shank's mare
33 Cut into small pieces
34 XX minus VI
36 Extinct bird
37 Grill
38 Volcanic emission
39 Color
40 Hold forth
41 Cupid's co-worker?
42 Acrobat's need
44 "Alice" waitress
45 Impose taxes
46 Freight-train unit
50 English county
52 Platform
53 Kimono tie
54 Subarctic forest
55 Minimizes
57 007, e g
58 "— Il Romantico?"
59 Otherwise
60 Outlaw James
61 Clutter
62 Org

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN
1 Mechanical "person"
2 Problem-building acid
3 Georgia city
4 Jimmy
5 Salad ingredient
6 Certain stage comment
7 Dock
8 Tote
9 Spotted, like equines
10 Lazes!
11 Buddhist monk
12 Polite cough
13 In favor of 18 Vinegar or
22 Spirit in "The Tempest"
24 "Get outta here!"
25 Jazz pianist Blake
27 Cite
28 Quiz
29 Go off the deep end?
30 Sum up
31 Indy winner A J
32 Polish-German river
33 Nuts
35 Large lub
37 Vowel mark
38 Plunder
40 Run
41 Embrace
43 Straightens
44 Fire starters
46 Baby deer
47 Barbecue necessity
48 Ocean depths
49 Ready to bake
50 Kitchen herb
51 Scurries
52 Medicinal portion
54 — Mahal
55 Poorly lit
56 Meadow

© 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
FourCheese Pasta
Sloppy Joe
Vegetable Sloppy Joe-(Berkshire & Worcester only)

Dinner

Roast Beef/Black Pepper Crust
Chicken Breast with Rice Stuffing
Greek Pita with Tahini-(Berkshire & Worcester only)
Thai Seitan

Night Editor: Mary Grein
Photo Technician: Kara Stokes
Copy Editor: Samantha Poulten
Production Supervisor: Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff: Katie Ross, Tereza Rodrigues

UMass caps split with win at No. 6 Boston College

Minutemen take eighth spot as five players score in win

By Bryon Smith
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL, Ma. – The Massachusetts hockey team controlled its own destiny heading into the final three games of the regular season. Having dropped a 2-0 decision on Friday night to No. 6 Boston College at the Mullins Center, the Minutemen traveled to Kelley Rink for the second game of a home-and-home series with the Eagles on Saturday.

UMass	5
BC	1

What a difference a night makes. UMass (11-17-4, 5-14-3 Hockey East) jumped on BC (21-10-1, 13-8-1 HE) early and never looked back as the Minutemen came away with an impressive 5-1 victory, a win that vaults them ahead of Lowell for the final HE playoff spot.

"It's an amazing game when you get out to a couple-goal lead," head coach Joe Mallen said. "Your team believes they can win, and our team believed we could win.

"It's a big win to beat BC at BC. It's a huge feather in our cap."

The Eagles had been 11-1-1 at home this season prior to loss on Saturday night.

"We never appeared to be on the top of our game," said BC head coach Jerry York.

Kris Wallis got the Minuteman march started when he netted the game's first goal on the power play just 1:28 into the first period. Eagle captain Mike Mottau took a cross-checking penalty 27 seconds after the puck was dropped and a minute later Wallis had UMass' first goal of the weekend.

Tim Turner (three assists) set the stage for Wallis, winning a battle in the corner to free the puck, and found Jeff Turner behind the net. The latter then made a great pass to a streaking Wallis, who was pinching in from the blue line to give the Maroon and White a 1-0 lead. The power play goal ended a streak in which BC had killed off 49 consecutive extra-man advantages.

The Minutemen kept the pressure on for the rest of the first period and grabbed a two-goal lead at the 16:59 mark when Jeff Turner scored his 14th goal of the season.

Tim Turner started a rush up ice and fed Jedd Crumb as he streaked along the left wing boards. The sophomore carried the puck into the BC zone and found his namesake in front of the net. The junior redirected the pass past Tim Kelleher for a 2-0 UMass advantage.

Nathan Sell gave UMass a 3-0 lead when he beat Kelleher on a slap shot from the left face-off circle 3:05 into the second period. Sell's shot snuck just inside the far post, and kept the BC faithful out of the game.

The senior captain was led on a partial breakaway by an excellent lead pass from Jay Shaw. Justin Shaw recorded the second assist on the goal for his first collegiate point.

After the goal, BC called a timeout, and York was forced to pull Kelleher in favor of Friday night's hero, Scott Clemmensen. The junior goalie fared no better against the UMass barrage as he too was unable to prevent the Minutemen from scoring.

Sell was not done with his shift after the goal as he made the game's biggest play when Markus Helanen was caught out of position. Eagle forward Marty Hughes was on the doorstep and fired a wrist shot at the cage. With Helanen down and out, Sell blocked the shot to keep the lead at three.

"The best save of the night was made by our captain [Sell]," Mallen said.

"Markus got caught out of position and I just happened to be in front of the net," Sell said. "You can say it a good play, or you can say it was just lucky because the puck went off my arm."

Luke Duplessis added his third goal of the season four minutes later on a blistering slap shot from the left point that beat Clemmensen glove-side.

"It was a good feeling to score here [at BC]," Duplessis said. "I had a lot of family here. It was really good to get the win, too."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Nathan Sell scored and made a key defensive stop in the Minutemen's 5-1 victory over Boston College Saturday night.

The game remained at 4-0 until Blake Bellefeuille got the Eagles on the board with his 14th goal of the season midway through the third period. Just as the crowd had its first chance to cheer, Ray Geever brought it to silence with a quick goal to push the lead back to four.

Geever skated in alone on Clemmensen and made a 90-degree cut towards the net. He made a great move to get around the poke of Clemmensen and slipped a shot to the back of the net. The goal made the score 5-1.

"A big moment in the game is when they get that first goal," Mallen said. "This is a team that has scored five goals in the third period a couple of times in their home arena, and all of a sudden we come back with that Ray Geever goal. It kind of put the icing on the cake"

The game remained at 5-1 until Blake Bellefeuille got the Eagles on the board with his 14th goal of the season midway through the third period. Just as the crowd had its first chance to cheer, Ray Geever brought it to silence with a quick goal to push the lead back to four.

Geever skated in alone on Clemmensen and made a 90-degree cut towards the net. He made a great move to get around the poke of Clemmensen and slipped a shot to the back of the net. The goal made the score 5-1.

"A big moment in the game is when they get that first goal," Mallen said. "This is a team that has scored five goals in the third period a couple of times in their home arena, and all of a sudden we come back with that Ray Geever goal. It kind of put the icing on the cake"

BC scored what looked to be its second goal of the night when Brian Gionta fired a wrist shot from the point, but it was waved off because of Ales Dolinar's hooking penalty.

UMass didn't sit on its early lead as it continued to put pressure on the Eagles throughout the game. The defense played as strong of a game as it has played all season, and when it needed help, Helanen came up big. The junior goalie made 35 saves (68 saves on the weekend) en route to his 11th win of the season.

"We had great goaltending all weekend," Mallen said. "Markus played great last night and he played great in this game tonight."

The Minutemen will look to clinch a spot in the HE playoffs when they play a home-and-home series with New Hampshire beginning on Friday in Durham.

Helanen shines, but BC defense shuts out UMass

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

It's a known fact around college hockey that the picksters from Boston College have one of the most potent offensive attacks in the nation. With players like Brian Gionta, Blake Bellefuille and Jeff Farkas up front, and offensive-minded defensemen such as Mike Mottau and Bobby Allen in the back, BC has the capabilities to score in bunches on any given night.

BC	2
UMass	0

Friday night at the William D. Mullins Center, the Massachusetts hockey team held the high-flying Eagles to a paltry two goals and held them scoreless on nine power play opportunities. On most nights, the combination of those two elements would be enough to push Boston College to defeat.

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, Friday wasn't one of those nights. Thanks to a 23-save performance by Eagles junior goaltender Scott Clemmensen, BC escaped Amherst with a 2-0 win over UMass.

"I think that from our perspective, Scott was the difference in this game tonight. He had to earn the shutout," Boston College hockey coach Jerry York said. "He made a half dozen terrific saves and really frustrated them."

Although both teams had their share of quality scoring chances, it was the two goaltenders who took center stage in the game. Clemmensen did earn the win in the game, but UMass junior netminder Markus Helanen made 33 saves in a losing cause.

"Markus probably played his best game of the year and Scott came up with some big saves for them when he needed to," UMass hockey coach Joe Mallen said. "We were just a hair away on a few of those chances."

Boston College (21-9-1, 13-7-1 Hockey East) gave Clemmensen all the support he would need at the 7:48 mark of the first period, as Gionta redirected Bobby Allen's shot from the left point home for a 1-0 Eagles lead. The goal came just one second after a UMass penalty had expired.

The visitors tacked on another score 2:01 into the middle frame. Farkas broke in on Helanen on a partial breakaway, but was stopped by the UMass goalie. However, Helanen's momentum forced him out of the crease, and BC forward Jeff Giuliano was there to tuck home the rebound into an empty net.

UMass had two golden opportunities to cut the lead in half later in the period. First, Jay Shaw and Ray Geever had back-to-back opportunities midway through the frame, but Clemmensen made the stops. Then, later in the period, Jeff Turner and Shaw had consecutive chances again, but were denied both times by BC's netminder.

However, the best scoring bid of the night for UMass (10-17-4, 4-14-3 in HE) came midway through the third period. Turner found the puck right on his stick off a BC turnover deep in the Eagle zone. Turner walked in and made his move on Clemmensen, but the BC goalie pokechecked the puck away. By the time Turner resettled the disc, his shot was batted away by Eagles' defenseman Bill Cass.

"When the turnover happened, I decided that I was going to try to pokecheck him. He was obviously surprised that he had the puck all alone in front, and I was able to disrupt the play a little," Clemmensen said. "As the play happened, Billy [Cass] did a good job of getting back and making a glove save for me."

The loss held even more significance when the Minutemen found out that UMass-Lowell had lost to Providence College in another game played on Friday night. The Minutemen and Lowell were tied for the eighth and final playoff spot in the conference.

However, UMass would have a chance to take sole possession of eighth place if it could win on Saturday night at BC against the sixth-ranked Eagles. To see how the Minutemen fared, check out the related story.

First half frenzy turns sour as Owls bounce Minutemen, 72-54

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA – After doing everything necessary to win during an advantageous 27-24 first half,

Temple	72
UMass	54

the Massachusetts men's basketball team watched its luck run out as No. 8 Temple used a 29-6 second period run to handily defeat the Minutemen, 72-54, at Philadelphia's Liacouras Center Saturday.

During the first 20 minutes of play, the outrageous seemed plausible. The unranked UMass squad was playing head-to-head basketball with an Owl unit that had been then-No. 1 Cincinnati on the Bearcats' home floor just six days earlier. Temple (22-4, 13-1 Atlantic 10) welcomed the 15-11 Minutemen into the City of Brotherly Love having won 12 straight games, including a 75-48 pasting of the Maroon and White back in Amherst on national television earlier this month.

Still, with 7:27 left before halftime, Massachusetts guard Monty Mack drilled a long-range three-pointer to put the visitors ahead by

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Monty Mack scored a team-high 20 points, but Temple used a 29-6 second half run to pull away from the Minutemen.

Turn to OWLS, page 7

Temple "outbenches" Minutemen as starters forced to carry load in Philly

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA – The plane swooped down to land just ten feet from the ground, but ascended back into the air and finally made contact with the ground on its second attempt.

The Massachusetts men's basketball team experienced quite a scare Friday night before its meeting with Temple, but it was the Owls who were in for the biggest shock in the first half of their Saturday matchup in the Liacouris Center.

They are a team that knocked off the No. 1 team in the country, Cincinnati, less than a week ago, but was down 27-24 at the half to the Minutemen on their senior day. Temple is also a team that handed UMass its most devastating loss since the opening of the in the William D. Mullins Center, a 75-48 defeat earlier this month.

But much like the plane that righted itself in time, Temple corrected its shooting woes for its 13th conference win, a 72-54 decision, that clinched the overall top seed in the Atlantic 10 championship tournament.

"We proved in the first half that we can play with them so we just have to put two halves together," said senior co-captain Mike Babul, who recorded four points and nine rebounds. "You have to play 40 minutes solid to beat a team like that."

UMass' intense defense took an early toll on the Owls.

Turn to TEMPLE, page 7

Minutewomen win – barely

UMass sluggish in regular season wrap-up

By Aaron Saykin
Collegian Staff

At least they didn't lose.

Trying not to blow a meaningless game, the Massachusetts women's basketball team hung on to beat host Rhode Island, the worst team in its conference, 54-46, yesterday in Kingston.

UMass	54
URI	46

This contest should not have been close. The Lady Rams (2-24, 2-14 Atlantic 10) only had six available players, one of whom fouled out, while UMass (13-14, 10-6 A-10) often dips nine deep into its bench.

But Rhode Island, which trailed 25-15 at the half, clawed back in to the contest with the help of some late three-pointers and Minutewomen turnovers. The Lady Rams somehow cut the deficit to five points inside the final minute, 51-46, and had an opportunity to pull within two, but a three-point try fell just short, and UMass stuck three late free throws for the win.

With second place already secured in the A-10 East Division, the Minutewomen had little to play for yesterday, and as far as their coach was concerned, their effort reflected a lack of desire.

"We had a lot of players play very lackadaisical today. [URI] got us out of position. [UMass forward] Nekole Smith got into foul trouble because of it. [UMass guard] Tonia Thomas was nowhere to be found today," Minutewoman coach Joanie O'Brien said on the WMUA post-game show. "Mentally, you have to come prepared to play every game. It's very disappointing. Rhode Island had six kids that played with every ounce of energy that they had."

O'Brien was also displeased with her frontcourt's continuous propensity for foul trouble. Smith and sophomore forward Caroline Nehls each finished the contest with four fouls, mostly due to lack of intensity, O'Brien believed. With her team preparing for the Atlantic 10 Tournament that begins next weekend in Philadelphia, the nine-year coach was hoping for a stronger performance from a squad that can be good enough to beat two ranked teams but somehow lose to sub-par opponents. Instead, she recognized that the only thing her team does consistently is be inconsistent.

"Some people lived up to the expectation of not being able to step up and play every game," O'Brien said. "Part of life is being able to deal with anything that comes your way, and no matter whom you're playing, you better respect them."

On a much brighter note, while UMass lacked fire from some older players, its freshmen phenoms were outstanding again, giving O'Brien some much-needed encouragement. Jen Butler finished with 14 points and 14 rebounds, while Amber Sneed, in one of her most aggressive showings of the season, produced ten points and seven rebounds. Senior Jaywana Bradley followed her season high of ten points last Thursday with eight yesterday.

One thing that the Minutewomen would have liked – yet failed to do – was take some pressure away from junior point guard Kathy Coyner, whom O'Brien admits is tired from the cumulative effect of playing nearly the entire game. O'Brien had hoped reserve guards Thomas and freshman Ebony Pegues could help out, but Coyner wound up playing 38 minutes because her back-ups were ineffective and the game was closer than anticipated.

"For Kathy Coyner to have to play 38 minutes to me was pretty ridiculous, but she hung in there and did what she needed," O'Brien said. "We had some kids play very hard, but you've got to do it top-to-bottom. Hopefully it's a lesson learned."

The Minutewomen will not play again until next Saturday, when they meet the winner of the Virginia Tech-Rhode Island contest in the second round of the A-10 Tournament.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Jennifer Butler closed out her freshman regular season in good fashion, tallying 14 points and 14 rebounds in an eight-point UMass win.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 21 Tuesday, February 29, 2000

Diallo verdict enrages community

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

"Stop white acquittal, bring Diallo justice."

Over 300 students from area campuses were heard chanting this statement, as well as others, at a rally held last night on Seelye Lawn at Smith College.

Students in attendance gathered together to fight racial bias in courts around the United States and to protest the decision to acquit four New York City police officers in the shooting death of West African immigrant-street vendor Amadou Diallo.

The Bronx resident was shot 41 times in the vestibule of his apartment when police mistook him for a rape suspect and his black wallet for a handgun. A jury within the state acquitted the four police officers of the crime last week.

Students gathered at the lawn felt that the issue was strictly a race related injustice and nothing more. Armed with signs displaying messages like "Where is the justice, what was the crime" and reading poems about their feelings on the verdict, students were not willing to see the issue left unspoken.

Alicia Smith, Chairperson of the Black Students Alliance at Smith College, commented that racial injustice in the courts in the United States has not changed over the years.

"I ask myself, as we stand here in the year 2000, have things changed?" she said. "Last year a black man with nothing but a wallet in his pocket died, and I ask you, have things changed?"

Another spokesperson from the Black Students Alliance also spoke out in a similar manner about the incident. She explained that the government was unfair to minorities and that it was betraying everything that the Constitution itself stood for.

"When will a society that is supposed to be a democracy stop being a hypocrite?" she asked.

Another speaker at the event, Anne Ferguson, explained to the audience that too many rallies had already taken place about race issues and that action needed to be taken.

"When you get to my age in America, you have been to too many of these [rallies]," she said.

She explained that these types of incidents had been going on for many years and that they would continue to go on until the justice system changed in order to be fair to minorities.

The nameless, faceless black men that have already been shot by police tell us that this is not an isolated incident," she said. "There is a time for mourning and there is a time for outrage."

Protestors physically demonstrated by taking out their wallets in order to show support to Diallo. Shouting "no justice, no peace," individuals in the crowd left that carrying a wallet was not a crime and that there was no reason for Diallo to be murdered.

Dr. Elliot Fratkin, a professor at Smith College, also spoke out about racial injustices in the country. Fratkin vocalized against the decision and against New York mayor Rudloph Guilliani.

"It is a green light for politicians like Guilliani to ignore the issues and cater to the white and the rich," he said. "This is a profoundly racist country that we live in."

The rally, sponsored by the Feminist Intercultural Revolutionary Encounter [FIRE], Creative ImPULSE Collective and United in Anti-Racist Action groups on the Smith Campus, intended to further spread awareness on the issue in the upcoming weeks.

In addition to the talk that was held, the groups have also sent a letter to the administration of Smith College, demanding that classes be cancelled today in order to hold an all-campus meeting about both the Diallo case and racial issues at the college.

BECKY REDDICK/COLLEGIAN

Hundreds of students from the five colleges gathered last night on the Smith College campus to protest the decision to acquit four New York City police officers of the shooting death of West African immigrant street vendor Amadou Diallo.

Major elimination:

Provost answers questions on issue

By Matt Foster
Collegian Correspondent

Students and faculty came together last night for a round of questions and answers directed at Robert Helgesen, dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources, and Provost Cora Bagley Marrett, concerning the recent decision to eliminate the Apparel Marketing major.

One of the first questions raised centered on the current students' situations within the Apparel Marketing program.

"We're saying that all people in the program certainly will continue through the program," Marrett said. "This is not affecting the people currently in the program."

The first step in the elimination of the major was the "suspension of admissions," according to Provost Marrett.

"That... is the only action that's been taken," Marrett said.

The holes in the staff of the department were blamed on the current deficit the college has. "When a vacancy comes open we're using the salaries from those vacancies to cover the deficit," Dean Helgesen said.

"I wish we didn't have to talk in deficit terms. I wish there was enough money," Marrett said in response to a comment made about the deficit being more important than the education of the students.

"If you want to look at the details of the budget, you'd have to contact the budget officer for the University," Marrett said. "All budget information for a public institution like this is public."

"If you have $100,000 to spend, why are you over, why can't you just spend $100,000?" an unidentified student asked.

Helgesen responded by saying, "You can't talk to a department head on this campus that doesn't say, 'I am not getting enough money to run my department.'"

According to Provost Marrett, the Deans can expect a one-percent cut in their budgets for next year.

"I hope that no one thinks that this is a department singled out," Marrett said.

"Raise your hand if you feel singled out," junior Consumer Science major Crystal Collette said, to which the majority of those in attendance responded by raising their hands.

The discussion to restore the Apparel Marketing department "has been going on since September of 1998," Helgesen said.

"Why is the department not considered a mandated cost?" Collette asked in response to the provost's explanation of why the University puts money towards certain things before the department.

In response to a comment about the lack of classes, Marrett said, "I don't want to give you the impression that everything's just going down the tubes. That's not what we want to try to communicate."

"The fundamental issue is that there's not enough money coming into the university to support all of the programs we're trying to support on campus. And either we're going to have to get the legislature and others to support a larger budget or we're going to have to reduce the number of things we support on campus..." he continued.

"If they can just come and take our whole department away, obviously it's showing that it's not that important," Shandra Richardson, a junior Apparel Marketing major said.

BECKY REDDICK/COLLEGIAN

The crowd came prepared to pepper the Apparel Marketing administrators with questions at last night's assembly.

SGA funding questioned: findings show allocations favor only some RSO's

By Natty Yagudin and Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

This is the first in a series on the SGA's budget allocations for the past three years

As the Student Government Association (SGA) struggles for control of the funds allocated to student activities, it gives itself power over an increasing amount of money, while independent RSOs (Registered Student Organizations) receive less.

The above conclusion is the result of an in-depth investigation by The Massachusetts Daily Collegian into the past three years' budget allocations of the SGA at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst. The investigation examined funding allocations to political advocacy groups, as well as agencies and ethnic groups.

The data had been obtained from the university's Campus Activities Office, the administrative agency that handles the monies accounts for all on-campus organizations. Among political advocacy groups, which received a total amount of $24,785, it was found that conservative organizations, specifically the Republican Club, have done consistently well in receiving the monies they requested, while other organizations didn't do quite as well.

According to records of last years budget for the fiscal year 2000, the SGA has been allocating a good proportion of the Ways and Means budget towards SGA related organizations such as the Republican Club. According to records, approximately $10,815 was allocated to the Republican Club last year, making it one of the largest funded RSOs.

Political Group Requests and Allocations

Political Advocacy Groups	Request 2000 fiscal yr.	Allocation 2000 fiscal yr.
	$11,165	$10,815
Republican Club	$8,465	$6,665
Pride Alliance	$3,500	$3,500
Silent Majority	$4,570	$2,590
Radical Student Union	$3,350	$643
University Democrats	$600	$250
Cannabis Reform Coalition	$2,545	$100
Habitat for Humanity	$600	$250
Animal Rights Coalition	$10,251	$100
Friends of Rail	$1,360	$ -
Feminist Makerers	$8,650	$ -
Students for a Free Tibet

The study shows that other agencies have been denied funding in the past, while findings reveal that the SGA has continuously favored clubs closely associated with the SGA's interest, in attempts to gain reserve funding for professional staff to operate the SGA office, the Republican Club office and other SGA related events.

Ams Pellegrino, chair of the Ways and Means Committee is responsible each semester for dealing with all RSOs in determining the budget each group should be allocated, based on the amount of programming they do across campus. This semester's budget is due tomorrow.

"The $1.8 million mas seem like a lot, but it isn't and it gets used up quickly," Pellegrino said. "When that amount turns into a wish list, it isn't fair. We need to look at what a group really needs and what our budget can afford."

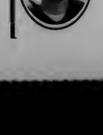
Pellegrino denies that the SGA allocates fund towards its own interest and she stated that in the past, the University Democrats have received much less in funding than other RSOs. However, according to the SGA Constitution, if a group hasn't petitioned for funding in the last two years, then the group can't receive a budget of over $750. The University Democrats are one of these exceptions, having just started last year. They received less than $700 last year.

The same trend is evident for ethnic organizations on campus in which a total of $86,000 was unevenly distributed by the SGA, favoring some ethnic groups over others. Investigation into those ethnic group allocations revealed that some ethnic groups did better than others in getting the monies they requested. A recent Supreme Court case concerning mandatory fees necessitated the investigation. Students paid for 72 percent, or $1.157 million, of a total of $1.6 million in student activity allocation revenues in mandatory activity fees last year.

The money is taken from a special, mandatory activities charge that every student must pay, which amounts to $71 every year and various other sources.

Student Activity Fees are pooled together every semester and allocated by student senators on the Ways and Means Committee of the Student Government Association every spring semester.

Interested Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) submit a preliminary budget request by the beginning of March. Shortly after the details of the preliminary allocations are made public, unsatisfied student groups may sign up for a hearing before the committee to appeal for more money. The budget is then revised and presented to the SGA, which votes to approve it.



See related story on page 2.

EXTENDED FORECAST

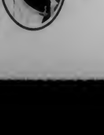
Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 44 LOW: 23	HIGH: 49 LOW: 36	HIGH: 50 LOW: 26

SOURCE: CNN.COM

Tales That Try Men's Souls

Everyone has a story to tell, and that includes our very own beloved Boo Downs. Check out the Ed/Op page for the tale of a lifetime.

EDITORIAL PAGE 4



Go Cet It Out!

Oasis just released their new album, Standing on the Shoulder of Giants, and we have the review. Also, check out what the UMass Theatre Department is up to. Arts: The third-best British pop band in history.

ARTS PAGE 5

The Cast Hurrah

Senior co-captain Chris Kirkland will play his final regular season home game tonight at 7 p.m., when the Minutemen take on George Washington.

SPORTS PAGE 12

Arts & Living 5
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 1
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!

ALL SOPHMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT MAJORS:

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF

ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should posess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:

Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Police Log

Accidents
Feb. 25

A minor two-vehicle accident was reported on Orchard Hill Drive. There were no injuries reported.
Feb 26.

A vehicle reportedly backed into a parked vehicle in lot #65, causing damage, and then left the scene.

A vehicle reportedly struck a parked vehicle at James Dorm, causing damage, and then left the scene.

A vehicle reportedly backed into a parked car in lot #64, causing damage to the vehicle.

Arrests
Feb. 25

David Shnitzer 18 and Paul John Matos, 18, both of Framingham, were arrested after police received a report of a suspicious vehicle in lot #35. Shnitzer was charged with underage possession of alcohol disorderly conduct, and possession or use of a false or stolen RMV document. Matos was charged with underage possession of alcohol.
Feb. 26

Adam D. Gay, 19, of Bradford was arrested on Massachusetts Ave. and charged with disorderly conduct, underage possession of alcohol and receiving stolen property worth under $250.

Theodore C. Ternald, 20, of West Groton was arrested in lot #35 and charged with operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol.

Brian R. Duffy, 20, of Lowell and Corey M. Carvalho of South Attleboro were arrested at Mackimmie dorm after police received a noise complaint. Duffy and Carvalho were both charged with having a noisy and disorderly house, possession or use of a stolen or false RMV document, underage procuring of alcohol and possession of a class D substance.

Golden Stevenson, 21, of Amherst was arrested on Commonwealth Ave. for an outstanding warrant.

Daniel M. Costa, 19, of Arlington was arrested in Southwest circle and charged with underage possession of alcohol.
Feb. 27

Jeremy Hunt, 21, of Davenport, Florida was arrested on Massachusetts Ave. and charged with operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, possession of a class D substance and a crosswalk violation.

Assaults
Feb. 25

A verbal argument and threatened assault were reported on a basketball court in Boyden Gymnasium.
Feb. 26

UMass police assisted Amherst Police and Fire Department with an assault and battery on Sunset Ave. and North Hadley Rd.

A past assault and battery was reported from Mackimmie Dorm. Court action will be sought.

Larceny
Feb. 26

A laptop computer valued at over $1000, was reported stolen from a room in Dwight Dorm.

A credit card was reported stolen from John Adams Dorm.

Misc.
Feb. 25

An individual in Brooks Dorm reported receiving an obscene computer message.

A false message was reportedly conveyed from a help phone in Draper Hall Annex.

An accidental fire was reported in the Mullins Center. Emergency Health and Safety was dispatched.

A large group of individuals was reported in a hallway in Crabtree Dorm, smoking and consuming alcohol.

Individuals were reported in front of Gorman Dorm, screaming.
Feb. 26

Intoxicated individuals were reported at Crabtree Dorm, yelling and throwing objects at the building.

Individuals were extricated from an elevator in Kennedy Dorm.
Feb. 27

Amherst Fire department and UMass Emergency Health and Safety responded to Washington dorm for burnt food in a kitchen on the fifth floor.

Vandalism
Feb. 25

Damage to a vehicle was reported in lot #12.
Feb. 26

A window was reportedly smashed in the French Hall Greenhouse.
Feb. 27

Court action will be sought against two individuals caught trespassing and vandalizing a vehicle in lot #32.

Graffiti was reported on doorways and walls in Field Dorm.

Graffiti was reported on lounge doors in Kennedy Dorm.

Damage to two vehicles was reported in lot ###.

Court case to decide future fees

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

A decision next month on the awaiting Southworth vs. Grebe Supreme Court case could put a freeze on mandatory student activities fees across the nation, and at the same time could significantly impact the Student Government Association's Ways and Means Committee's funding of Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) by not being able to fund them at all.

The case, Southworth v. Grebe, was originally filed against the University of Wisconsin in 1996 by a handful of law students. These students argued against the viewpoints expressed by 18 student organizations that receive student fees, including the Gay, Bisexual, Lesbian (GBL) Organization, the Campus Women's Center and the Madison AIDS Support Network.

Student Scott Southworth stood among the group and claimed that being forced to support organizations he disagreed with was against his First Amendment rights.

Charles J. DiMarti, director of University of Massachusetts Legal Services, said that Southworth's plea was that he opposed being required to pay mandatory fees to specifically support "political and ideological advocacy."

"It [activity fee] was being used to subsidize groups that contradict their views opposing abortion, homosexuality, socialism and extreme environmentalism," Di Mari said. "They [the three students] said that the University's insistence to pay these fees in support of various student groups violates their rights of freedom, speech, association and free exercise of religion."

DiMari stated that Southworth's argument was that if students want to voluntarily support an organization, that's their right; however it is not their right to be forced against their will.

DiMari then added that the existing mandatory student fees are sort of like taxes. Citizens of a country are required to pay their taxes and DiMari said students are like citizens in that are represented by a much larger government (SGA) and therefore shouldn't view the actions of that government as a violation of their rights.

"If you don't like where the money's being spent, then support other candidates that agree with you or run for office yourself," DiMari said.

In addition, DiMari said the UMass activity fee in the year 2000 was $71, whereas the University of Wisconsin activity fee has been $380 per semester since 1996.

In 1996, the U.S. District Court of Wisconsin ruled in favor of Southworth. The case was appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, where it is awaiting decision sometime in March.

Mom and Dad may not appreciate your individuality. We demand it.

When it comes to finding an understanding audience for your unique ideas and perspectives, there's no better forum for your individuality than Stratus. We have worked hard to establish a participatory work environment where employees at all levels of experience have the opportunity to present their ideas and make real contributions to our business. It's a practice that's made us the undisputed leader in fault-tolerant computer systems and the kind of company where you never have to hold anything back.

We currently have positions available in:

Hardware Engineering
Software Engineering

For complete details, please visit our Web site.

Stratus®
THE WORLD'S MOST RELIABLE SERVERS™

For immediate consideration, please send your resume to:
Stratus Computer
Human Resources
via our preferred methods:
- On-line application: http://recruiter1.webhire.com/stratus
- E-mail: stratus@webhire.com

Maynard, MA 01754

http://careers.stratus.com

Old Chapel talks begin future of structure still undecided

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Correspondent

What do you want to see and hear coming from the Old Chapel? That was the main question posed at last night's open forum on what should be done with the campus landmark.

The forum was organized by the Facilities Planning Division with the intent of possibly information about the history of the building, discussing the building re-use study currently underway and collecting input and opinions from the campus community.

Facilities Planning began a building re-use study last November to provide an objective analysis of the potential uses of Old Chapel. The Boston office of the SFI/AVM Collaborative led this study. This team of engineers and architects which has been selected has extensive experience in the analysis, preservation and restoration of historic structures. The group has already completed a detailed physical and code evaluation of the building in order to identify repair, renovation and preservation work that will need to be completed regardless of the functions to be housed in the building.

The Old Chapel holds a lot of meaning not only to the history of the University, but also to past, present and future generations of students. The Chapel is the oldest, and one of the most historic buildings on campus. It was built in 1885 and from then on until 1915 was used as a library, museum, chapel and assembly hall.

In 1915, when religious functions moved to Stockbridge Hall, the Old Chapel building itself became home to the official college library. Then in 1940, the library moved to Goodell and the building became home to classrooms. From then until 1965, the English and History departments used it until the music department moved in.

In 1974 the Fine Arts Center was built, and most of the music department moved into that building except for the Marching Band, which stayed within the Chapel. The band continued to utilize the building for practice and storage until 1997, when it had to be closed down for safety and restoration purposes.

The Old Chapel is still in serious condition needing even more funds and renovations than the University had initially planned, according to Facilities Planning Division. The group claims that the structure is in need of a new roof, new stained glass windows and new heating systems. It was also pointed out that the building is not accessible to people with physical disabilities, and does not meet Life, Safety and Building Code Structural Capacity standards.

The Old Chapel is not a large building; it is 14,000 square feet and only 4,200 sq. ft. of that is usable floor area. Its capacity is only about 120 people, with the auditorium capable of holding 250-300 people at one time.

This one building alone brought out many people from the University to help support what it would be used for. Faculty, students, alumni and friends of the University were there to express their ideas about what the Old Chapel should be used for.

The forum yesterday was a brainstorming session in order to express the feelings of people on campus. The general consensus of the people at this session was that the Chapel should be used as public space for students, faculty, visitors and friends.

Many members of the UMass Marching Band were there and strongly expressed their opinions that they thought the Band should "get back" the use of the building. The band had had the use of the Chapel for 23 years before the University shut it down (Although throughout the time that the Chapel was shut down, the Band lost its "permit" to use the building).

Richard Nathhorst, Project Manager of the Facilities Planning Division, commented on the responses that he has received so far on this subject.

"The Chapel should be open to everyone, the living room of the campus," Nathhorst said. "At UMass, 'there is a there,' and that's the Old Chapel." A decision has yet been made on what do to with the Old Chapel.

BECKY BOOKER/ COLLEGIAN

The fate of the Old Chapel was discussed in a preliminary planning session yesterday.

Lead problems oust families

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Housing Services was forced to move 14 families out of Lincoln Apartments last week and into the North Village Apartment complex after lead paint was discovered at the complex.

Due to both state and federal laws protecting children under the age of six from potential lead poisoning, families with small children were told last December that they must move.

Lead was not detected in the apartments, which were constructed in 1958, when they underwent testing in the spring of 1999 for any types of problems with lead on painted surfaces. It was only when a more advanced test was conducted with more sophisticated equipment that lead was detected on interior surfaces such as both doors frames and bookcases within the complex.

According to Doung Vanthanh, the Graduate Employee Organization's Family Issue Advocate, the move has overall negative effects upon the graduate students who now currently reside in housing. She explained that there is a lack of housing for graduate students who currently attend the University.

Lincoln Apartment Complex itself consists of 16 two-bedroom apartments, 65 one-bedroom apartments and 24 studio apartments, for a total of 105 units, none of which can be used by families with small children due to the findings.

"We need more housing for families," she said. "The issue will be whether or not the University will move the families back to the apartments or not."

She also advocated cleaning up the apartment complex and clearing up the problems with the lead paint so that students could once again live there, and also so that more housing would be available to the students.

"Lincoln Housing is still a good place for the students," Vanthanh commented, as long as the complex was cleaned up.

Another issue that she addressed was the cost issue for the graduate students that were relocated to North Village. Vanthanh explained that although currently they would be paying the same amount for rent as they were previously paying, but that the price would change once their lease for the old complex was up in May. At that point they would be paying more for housing, due to the fact that the apartment spaces at North Village are primarily larger than those at Lincoln Apartments.

"The University needs to find a way to renovate and have more family housing," she said.

According to Robert Campbell, a spokesperson for both Lincoln Apartments and Graduate Housing as a whole, no decisions have been made at this point regarding whether or not the building would be renovated or would simply remain as it stands. Currently the group is seeking legal advice from a legal consultant as to the best course of action to take regarding the process.

"We are still in the exploratory mode," he said. "We have never had to deal with anything like this before."

Cancer and Navy linked

By Rene Gonzalez
Collegian Staff

A recent link between the various cancer-related diseases throughout the island-municipality of Vieques and the U.S. Navy bomb training on the island has been revealed by studies done by a specialist from Puerto Rico.

Twenty-nine studies of hair and excrement samples revealed elevated concentrations of arsenic, mercury and uranium in 50 percent of the cases studied.

The studies surface at a time when the Puerto Rican government is putting the finishing touches on a controversial settlement with President Clinton allowing the U.S. Navy to conduct a referendum on whether or not it will be allowed to stay on the island.

The proposed referendum would give Vieques residents (U.S. citizens by U.S. law) the choice of allowing the Navy to keep its bombing practices without regulations in exchange for $90 million for the local economy or the demand that the Navy leave in three years and the allowance of limited bombing training until that date.

The study also contests the earlier public claims of the U.S. Navy that "no proof exists that bomb training and the cancer in Vieques are linked." As of this moment, Vieques residents suffer a 30 percent increased rate of cancer over the rest of the mainland Puerto Rico, according to the study completed.

"The most surprising development is that in the excrement samples of three children and one adult (which constitute 100 percent of one of the studies) all had uranium in their bodies. Uranium is the principal radioactive element in nuclear weapons, and it does not appear in the blood or the urine because it combines itself with proteins. Uranium causes the softening of calcium in bones and when it is found in excrement it is because the exposure and contamination are very heavy," said Carmen Colon de Jorge, the leading specialist of the study, to one of Puerto Rico's daily newspapers, El Nuevo Dia.

She added that there was no way to account for how much of the contamination was caused by the Navy's bombing, due to the fact that the contaminated individuals excreted important amounts of the uranium needed to calculate the total amount exposed to.

She further said, "one microgram of uranium per one megagram of weight daily is tolerable for a person exposed to uranium, which determines that a one-year old girl who weighs 30 pounds could absorb 15 micrograms of uranium with minimum risk. The one-year old girl in our study excreted 61 micrograms."

According to the girl's doctor, she had experienced previous seizures. The girl also contained dangerous amounts of arsenic and mercury, which are cancer-causing elements. Colon de Jorge stated that these elements were the product of munitions, bullets and other projectiles launched by the U.S. Navy in its regular training practices.

The specialist said that in her second case, a two-year old girl had to be transferred a week ago in an emergency state to the United States due to the cancer detected in her body. Later studies revealed 118 micrograms of mercury and 669 micrograms of arsenic in her body as well.

In another case, a 13-year-old boy had been found with twice that amount of the cancer-causing elements. The boy also had a dermatological condition.

"All the individuals studied had beryllium, aluminum, bismuth, mercury, arsenic and uranium," said Colon de Jorge. The specialist added that she found high levels of metals in scalp samples and conditions of pain in the body, constipation, and depression.

The information for this article was obtained from http://endi.zonai.com, where visitors of the site can read Puerto Rico's leading newspaper, "El Nuevo Dia."

Do you want to be a part of the biggest student run business on campus?

Are you interested in a career in Human Resources?

Collegian is accepting applications for the position of Human Resource Coordinator.

Applications can be picked up at the Collegian in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Interested applicants should possess excellent communication and computer skills.

Any questions can be directed to christine Carroll at 545-3500 or hrcollegian@yahoo.com.

PHILADELPHIA, PA ...

SITE OF THE 2000 ATLANTIC 10 CONFERENCE MENS & WOMENS BASKETBALL TOURNAMENTS

Come and cheer the Minutemen on to Victory in Philadelphia and stay at

EMBASSY SUITES

The Embassy Suites Center City is offering a special rate of

$125.00* per night
March 2-11, 2000
including full buffet breakfast each morning

(215) 561-1776 / reservations
Ask for the Atlantic 10 student rate
(must present student i.d. upon check in)

Located in the heart of the city

 double occupancy, $15 for each additional person, rate does not include 14% tax.*

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

Open mouth, insert votes

Senator John McCain made the definitive move in the campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination yesterday by blasting chief rival, George Bush, for being "a Pat Robertson Republican" and aligning himself too closely with far right wing conservatives.

In the wake of "Super Tuesday," on which 12 states will hold heir primaries, McCain urged voters to avoid candidates who pander to special interest groups like the Christian Coalition. To date, the speech is McCain's most concrete attempt to embody the dual philosophies of McCain's most prominent politics and higher ethics that have propelled his campaign this far.

However, in making the speech, McCain risks abandoning crucial Republican votes before the upcoming primaries. While the Coalition constitutes a small percentage of total Republican votes, it has been a core Republican supporter since its founding in 1989 by the aforementioned Robertson. Its beliefs and "values" have even been the basis for entire campaigns like Pat Buchanan's fiascos. Losing these votes could prove especially significant for McCain who has become renown for attracting both Independents and Democrtas to the polls on primary day. Most of the Super Tuesday primaries however, allow only registered Republicans to vote in their respective primaries – a fact which makes McCain's speech even more timely and open to media scrutiny.

The Daily Collegian feels that McCain's willingness to voice such conviction is the ultimate testament to his character and his courage and that McCain should be commended for doing so. In the age of political rhetoric and empty cliches, John McCain has stepped forth to tell voters that he actually believes in something. While most politicans spend their times trying to please everyone, the Arizona senator has now publicly distanced himself from special interest groups in a widespread appeal to the common voter.

This move will in all likelihood cause McCain to lose the Republican nomination to Bush. What strikes the Collegian as ironic is that the primaries are supposed to single out the best candidate to represent the party for the presidency – the candidate most likely to win. Here, McCain has clearly proven that he is the better choice. Many polls clearly show that a race between he and Al Gore would be almost a dead heat, whereas Gore holds a sizeable lead in the hypothetical race with Bush. McCain's ability to attract non-Republicans is previously unbeknownst to any Republican candidate, yet the party seems too willing to turn their back on him because he will not embrace their totality, if not their narrow-mindedness.

If politics have progressed to the point where the candidate who embraces a single party, yet will lose the presidency (which George Bush will undoubtedly do), rather than the sum of the voters is more likely to receive a nomination, then perhaps it is time to eliminate parties altogether for they seem to have no practical purpose.

John McCain is overwhelming proof of this. Rashness may have provoked him to make the speech, but his integrity is what should be remembered in the end. In the face of a heated political debate and increasing adversity, McCain took an opportunity to be forthright where many politicans would have simply been sheepish. Therefore, the Collegian feels that Republicans should ignore the anguished outcries of the far right and vote for a man who actually stands for something.

A story for this story

Life is grand. I tell you. Last week I went home so I could have my yearly physical with my doctor. The physical went fine as far as I was concerned until I got a phone call from my doctor three days later. My heart began to race as he mentioned that he needed to speak with me on some medical matters. As I listened to what he had to say, I glanced at my calendar. That date, Feb. 28, 2000, will burn in my mind for the rest of my life.

As we all know, a call from a doctor after a physical usually means bad news. Sure enough, he said that he had just got some of my blood samples back from the lab, and something seriously was wrong. I felt the blood pulse in my ears as my heart dropped a few notches deeper into my chest. He told me that I had a rare viral infection in the heart that causes the heart cells to die, leading to a heart attack. The bad news: the infection was almost always fatal. The worse news: There is no cure for this ailment. Apparently this infection is so rare that only one in a million people get sick. Well, this was just peachy. Instead of winning the lottery, I was being handed my death sentence. He told me that it would be unlikely that I would live to see my 21st birthday. Given that my birthday was only two-and-a-half months away, I realized that my days on this green earth were numbered. Isn't life grand? I, with a heavy heart, must let it be known that this will be one of my last columns...

Wait a minute! Stop the music. I am not dying, and I do not intend to do so for quite a while. The above fiction is just a story that I conjured up for a writing assignment. While most of the things we say are not this extreme, we tell stories all the time. We, as a sentient race, construct our existence through stories, be it religion, popular culture, or society at a whole. Every social interaction we partake in is mediated through the stories we tell. I bet you are thinking a story up right now, whether it is a counter-opinion, a memory, or thinking what you are going to do before your next class. As a columnist, it is my duty to give the readers one of my stories, whether it is accurate or not. On that note, here is my story.

Boo Downs

It is written in the Book of Boo that, "Once upon a time there was me. The End." Simply put, we are what we speak. When you see people walking down the street, they tell a story just by their appearance. When you are deciding whether Bush or McCain is the right Republican for the job, you are responding to stories invented by each of the candidates. When your significant other admits love for you for the first time, your reaction could very well be made into a movie. When you die, your close friends and relatives will measure your life's worth by relating stories about your life. Only a handful of people actually get credit for telling stories, whether it be filmmakers, authors, Public Relations personnel, news anchors, music artists, or any other visible or influential person or group. However, the best and most natural storytellers of all are us. Whether or not we care to admit it, we all are master storytellers.

Why do films based on actual people or events seem to be more endearing to us than your run of the mill flick? The reason, among others, is that the story on the screen is compatible with the stories we live in everyday life. I am certain that a film based on my life would be nominated for an Academy Award. While I will not get into my life's details, the past 20 years of my life have been filled with adventure, comedy, and melodrama. Everything you could ever ask for in a movie is all rolled up into me. If you look hard at yourself, you'd be surprised at how many interesting stories you could write.

Do you want to be cool, hip, or just mainstream? If you are, you want that story to describe you as such. Popular culture tells us stories on how to act, look, and think. Has anyone ever told you that you are weird? If they have, then there is something about you that does not conform to the dominant stories. Some people have incorporated so many other stories into their own life stories that they become crippled, and become closed minded to other stories. Other people become so disillusioned with the stories they hear that they reject everything, becoming distrustful and cynical of everything. Without any flow of stories, peoples' lives become meaningless, and some people turn to drugs or alcohol for comfort. These people, like the overly dependent consumers of culture, often feel unhappy and isolated. The balance can be restored, however.

When I watch a movie, say, Titanic, I know that the events are fictional, based on a tragedy almost a century ago. Thus, I can be amused when a computer-generated person falls off the ship, only to hit the propeller on his way to the water. My sister smacked me during this sequence for laughing out loud. However, I can also appreciate the story of two star-crossed lovers traveling on a doomed ship. Titanic is a story, and I know it's a story, but I can be entertained by the story. The music I listen to is cool according to a story. I know that a story is promoting my music, but I still enjoy the music for its qualities or its position in my life. In closing, never listen to stories blindly, but appreciate what those stories can mean for you. And now you know the rest of the story.

Boo Downs is a Collegian Columnist.

Reach for the nirvana of self expression (write for ed-op)

Does music make the man?

Aaron Saykin

I couldn't part with my new Journey CD for anything. Too many memories.

Faithfully. The ball for 1988 is about to drop. There's no t.v. for me to watch in the run-down basement party. I'm not counting the minutes until midnight. I'm counting the seconds until I'm off to Pratter's party at Super 8.

She'll be there.

We had tentative plans to meet. I used her enough for "tentative" to get my hopes more than up. Quick flashback. Super 8 just five days earlier. I pumped my slutty ex-girlfriend. It wasn't even me she cheated on.

Twice. I did it. Pumping I loved someone else.

I know I would ask her on New Years. Ask her what? I'm not quite sure. Not ask her. She still has a wonderful smile – the first one I loved. All I could think about.

So I wore my new Abercrombie shirt on New Years – back when it was actually cool to wear them – Clothes I just upgraded to a black fleece vest, new boots, and a red hat. I was ready... and a bit early to Pratter's. That was fine. I'd need another beer to spit my lines out for the first time ever.

Finally she was the one that came through the door. So happy. So full of life. I could not have asked for a better outing.

After she hugged me, wished me a happy New Year, and said a few hellos, she walked outside. I followed, just far enough away so I could chicken out at the last second if I had to. She was kissing someone else behind a pick-up truck.

I went back to the party, "Faithfully" playing, and I'm about to keep a secret that I won't tell for another two years and two months.

Lights. I hated that goddamned song until I decided not to give a shit about having a bad voice. Brendan and I were becoming close friends over a beer and a smoke...and when you're drunk there's nothing better than 80s songs.

So we sang "Lights," and everyone in the kitchen got a kick out of my voice cracking at age 20. Hell, I sort of like the song now. It's not my problem if everyone else started to hate it that night.

Don't Stop Believin'

Everybody's got that one song. It makes you feel different. Happy, or at least alive. I've read the lyrics 100 times, and I'm still not quite sure what Steve Perry meant by "streetlight people." Doesn't matter. I love the piano at the beginning. It makes me feel like I can score in my intramural, just-for-fun, basketball league, even if I've never come close.

It didn't help last Sunday night.

"What are you doing this summer?" my father asks me over the phone.

"I still haven't heard from a few places, but no luck yet. I'm oh-for-six," I reply about my touchiest subject. "I just wish I knew someone. No one will give me a shot."

"I'm sorry I can't help. I'm not a big shot," he said, apologetically.

You'd feel like an ass, too, for making a 51-year-old man regret the career he chose.

Separate Ways: The millennium is just an hour old and Journey is blaring in the background. I'm at my roommate's father's tuxedo and champagne party, and my friend Red claims that some 30-year-old lawyer just grabbed his package. The cannon is still firing in the back yard.

"That's great Red."

Five minutes later, Eric also shares the news.

"Hey, did you see that? I think Red just might be getting lucky tonight."

"No way."

"I'm telling you, she fricken grabbed him. He's all set."

"No way."

"Look, she's talkin' to him, now."

"Nope."

"Alright, why not?"

"She grabbed mine too. About 20 minutes ago."

Wheel in the Sky. My first time in Philly.

Gotta run up the Rocky steps. Wanted to since I was five.

Maaaer and I jog two miles, watching them draw closer as we dart down the elbow of the main road.

I pathetically wobble up the steps while he's celebrating at the top. We walk back; stop for a bagel, and up to our hotel room.

Dave, who ordered the porn channel which WMLA actually paid for – is still watching Mr. Bristol go to work on two clients. The cheap, synthesized music sounds just like Wheel in the Sky.

I walked over to the window, and tossed out my cigarettes 17 stories below to the road.

"Nasty habit," I said, eyes fixed on the t.v.

Open Arms: first time I hooked up at a high-school prom. Repeat hook-up, too, but no Mr. Bristol moves.

Couldn't if I tried.

Aaron Saykin is a Collegian columnist.

Honors hardly elitist

I am going to start out this by laying all my cards on the table: I am an honors student. I was accepted into the program straight out of high school. I live in Orchard Hill, and my G.P.A. is important to me. Now you can understand all of my prejudices and know exactly where I am coming from.

I think that the Commonwealth College/Honors Program is a darn good thing for UMass. There you have it. I am elitist, snobbish and prejudiced, according to a large number of people on this campus. Popular feeling seems to be that the existence of the Commonwealth College means that honors students get treated better than the rest of the students, therefore discriminating against the majority of the University's population.

Now you are wondering how I could ever possibly defend such a terrible institution that is plaguing our campus with those horrible academically achieving students! It is such a terrible thing, I know, but somehow, the administration lets it continue year after year. For some reason, the leadership of our campus does not see anything especially crazy or unusual about offering a program where students who wish to can take part in smaller classes or work on a program in order for them to graduate with honors.

Honors classes and programs can be found at almost any college or university. By engaging in an honors program, students can graduate with higher Latin honors, something that looks very nice on a diploma hanging on the wall. The Commonwealth College started in 1998, with the goal of starting a smaller college within the University – just like the College of Engineering or College of Social and Behavioral Sciences that we have already. By providing honors classes that are open to any student who cares to sign up, they hoped to create smaller classes and a more challenging environment.

Right about this time, someone must be pretty shocked. That is a terrible thought, isn't it, smaller classes and a more challenging environment? However, as much fun as doing a crossword in a Mahar lecture is (and we have all done it), a lot of people work better in smaller classes when they can actually speak to the professor or teacher and be known by their name and not their student number. As for challenging classes, that is a crazy idea as well, but I guess the administration thinks that by making classes a little tougher, we might actually work harder and possibly learn more.

By opening up acceptance into the Honors Program/Commonwealth College to any current student with at least a 3.2 G.P.A., they thought that people would want to join. A 3.2 seems to be a pretty achievable G.P.A., something that has to be worked towards, but is not so demanding that many people would not be able to achieve that. However, with all of the uproar about how mean the Commonwealth College is, apparently asking for a minimum G.P.A. of 3.2 in an honors program is asking too much.

Is it just me, or is a 3.2 really that elitist? Are honors classes that are open to any student on campus elitist? Is it really taking away a lot from our university when the Communwealth College is not even funded out of the UMass budget, but receives separate funding from the state entirely, funding that would have gone to another public college in Massachusetts that our campus not submitted the winning plan? Is the Commonwealth College really that different than the honors program that existed here for many years with little or no controversy? I don't believe so.

Laura Siciliano

In my opinion, having an honors college at the University benefits all students. The honors college attracts academically gifted students, raising the University's prestige as a whole. Better professors are attracted, and our place in rankings rises.

If having minimum G.P.A. requirements to be in the honors program is elitist, than varsity athletics are pretty darn elitist, as well, because you have to have a great degree of skill and aptitude to play on those teams. However, because skill and aptitude are considered a normal part of college athletics, no one is complaining. I guess I am crazy for suggesting it, but encouraging academic achievement seems to be a pretty big part of college as well, and skill as well as aptitude seem to be a pretty big part of academic achievement.

In my opinion, having an honors college at the University benefits all students. The honors college attracts academically gifted students, raising the University's prestige as a whole. Better professors are attracted, and our place in rankings rises. The University's level of prestige increases again, and when we graduate, our University's enhanced reputation means better and more lucrative job offers for us. I don't see anyone complaining about that! I know that as an honors student, I am biased. However, my logic tells me that the "elitist" honors college is simply another way to better the academics at the University. That is something that should be a priority, above all, because surprising as it may be, academics should come first in a college or university; and that doesn't seem that elitist to me at all.

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Ben Alamed Web Developer Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pushkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jamie Gurlowski Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor
Mary Grein News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauger Co-Sports Editor
Joslyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Comnare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Menichel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Belth Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samantha Poulton Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. It became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Jewish Affairs

A note from the editor

The Jewish Affairs page is back in business again, in the new year and with the new editor. I would like to thank everyone who contributed to this issue, and guided me with a proper advice.

At the beginning, just a few words about this page and its place in the Jewish life on campus.

The Jewish community at UMass is vast and diverse. In a microcosm of the University, regardless of levels of religious observance, cultural values and secular attitudes, the Jewish students represent the multiform beauty of the peoples as a whole. This community is an integral part of every one of its members, as well as the University at large.

As a new editor, I see Jewish Affairs page as a place where many ideas can be duly represented. I believe this page to symbolize the diversity of voices that can be heard within the jewish community. And, I hope that this page will be an outlet for promoting multi-cultural understanding at the larger University community.

Sasha Senderovich is a Collegian Staff Member.

Impressions of Israel

"I felt like I had come home." – Julie Morgenlender

"Being Jewish is not just about what religion your parents are, it's finding your own identity – for me it was found through Israel and through my new Israel friends.'" – Rachel I. Edelman

"I learned a lot about Israel and myself all in one. It was an amazing experience." – Elana Schaffer

"For me Israel is a magical place. I don't think that I would be able to find the feelings that I experienced there anywhere else." – Leah Weiss

"Most of all, I will remember the friendships I developed because of those ten precious days in Israel." – Rachel Feuer-Beck

Compiled by Sasha Senderovich

Jewish Student Union inaugurates new members

They hail from three different states of the union, seven different ethics and four different residential areas of the UMass campus. They are the new Jewish Student Union board.

In a vote that saw the complete replacement of all the former JSU members but twice the wind of change is in the air. For the upcoming year, the board looks forward to focusing their energy on both the planning and organization of a variety of Jewish programs on campus.

"The new administration appears to be quite dynamic...our main goal is to bolster participation in all JSU related events on campus," said Eran Benedek, the board's new treasurer.

Alongside Benedek, Leah Weiss, Hanna Braune, Zack Truboff, Rebecca Russel, Robbie Medwed and Alison Rosen took positions as membership director, JSU president, religious director, VP of administration, VP of social action, and secretary.

- Dan Yagudin

Birthright Israel 2000: One trip, many journeys

Sasha Senderovich

During the winter break, forty UMass students joined six thousand Jewish students from the world over, to participate in the Birthright Israel 2000 trip to the Holy Land. Though the trip was the same, the journey was different and incomparable for every one of us.

My first journey to Israel ended when I claimed my bags full of two-weeks worth of dirty clothes, filled with a mix of scents from the desert, the Mediterranean, the valleys of the Galilee and the Golan heights, the cobbled-stone narrow streets of Jerusalem's old city and the mystical alleys of Tzfat, and the strawberries-and-pastries filled smell of an open-air market in the pre-Sabbath frenzy.

The experiences are so numerous and different that it is hard to digest them and blend them into a whole. Rather, the impressions of Israel are as diverse as the country itself. During ten days of the trip, I have seen a desert on one side of the road, and fertile fields on the other, and changed my attitude towards distances – because a two-hour drive may not be as short as a road from Boston to Amherst, but as long as much of Israel's land.

I rode camels and donkeys, floated in the Dead Sea (very sucky feeling afterwards), slept in an oasis in the desert, and took a jeep tour in the gorgeous Golan Heights. From the shore of the Dead Sea I saw the mountains of Jordan across the water, territory of Syria from the Golan, and border with Lebanon next to the grottos of Rosh Hanikra. I saw the country living at war, soldiers carrying guns on the streets of the cities, and a vast military cemetery with sadly numerous empty, ready for use, spaces.

Chills run down my spine at the Western (Wailing) Wall, yet God did not speak to me there. To me, the aged stones represented the centrality of thoughts that have kept my people alive for the past two millennia. It was there, in Jerusalem, that I realized the importance of enhancing my own Jewish identity – if not through observing religious laws, then through remaining intact with my vastly rich culture.

Looking at the forests of hand-planted trees, I could not help but think of an amazing power of the human effort that the Jewish people exhibited throughout much of their history. Along with other students, I planted my own tree in Jerusalem. It was a symbolic act of replanting my roots back into the land of the historic origin of my peoples. Also, it was a tree of hope that the Jewish people, well accustomed to the experiences of the two-thousand-years-long exile, will find the ways of peaceful coexistence in the young state of Israel.

Sasha Senderovich is a Collegian staff member.

Birthright Israel 2000: Spiritual experiences

Tzfat is a small town with cobble-stone streets and signs that forbid photography during certain hours. There are blue doors to the century-old structures, and the air of mystery is only compounded by the religious kabbalist who lives there. The people in Tzfat (also known as Safed), built the small town so that when the messiah descended down a neighboring mountain, they would be there both to welcome and assist him.

"It was awe-inspiring and spiritual. Yet it was not the spirituality that lingers in my mind from my trip."

Renee Cohn

Our group wove its way through the alleyways to hear the story of a synagogue that was destroyed completely save one wall with the holy text still intact. We heard legends, stories of the centuries of magic that Tzfat held.

Then we were given some free time to explore this city for ourselves. As we left the synagogue, the sun was setting over the neighboring mountain, and it cast orange rays from the clouds above. It was awe-inspiring and spiritual. Yet it was not the spirituality that lingers in my mind from my trip.

On the way home a young rabbi was sharing my cab. He had gone to Israel to find something to bring back to his new congregation, a new hope and insight. Yet the Holy Land did not do that for him. He told us that the Holy Land was beautiful and interesting, but did not give him the spiritual guidance that he had been seeking.

There were three of us in the cab who had been on Birthright. We were all sad to be on the way home, and we reminisced about our times there.

One girl spoke of the man she had fallen in love with, and, never being religious, wanted to convert to Orthodoxy and move to Jerusalem. One boy had never considered his Judaism, and now intended to join his local Hillel.

I told about the sunset over the mountain in Tzfat. When we got out of the car, the rabbi told us that Hashem worked in mysterious ways, for he found the spirituality in the cab on the way home.

Maybe you are the type who sees magic and fascination in the blades of grass around you everyday. Perhaps it takes a bolt of lightning to open your eyes. Yet if neither of these describes your personal spirituality, then don't give up yet – you may be the type that learns your lesson on the cab ride home from the Holy Land.

Renee Cohn is a Collegian correspondent.

UMass Jewish students in Jerusalem, as part of the Birthright Israel 2000 trip.

Swartz to speak

Jeffrey Swartz, the President and Chief Executive Officer of the Timberland company, will be holding a lecture on "Corporate Mogul, Corporate Mensch: A Contemporary Jewish Success Story tonight. The event will be held at 7:30 in Memorial Hall and is being co-sponsored by UMass Hillel and the School of Management.

Swartz oversees the operations of Timberland, a global footwear apparel and accessories brand company bringing in $862 million yearly. He is responsible for the development of the company's most recent long-term strategic plan and has been called the driving force behind the company's successful five-point business platform.

The platform is defined as product, distribution, marketing, business systems and community.

In the past, Swartz has been honored by many organizations for his work. One organization in particular that has awarded Swartz is the National Conference of Christians and Jews. Through his efforts at Timberland, he has also been honored several times, including the Pints of Light Award for Excellence in Community Service.

-Mary Grein

Simcha Month Calendar

It's time to spread some joy around this campus!!!

March is Simcha month ("joy") where you all come out of your dorm rooms and believe us when we tell you that Hillel is NOT a scary place!

Come partake in the events for Simcha Month!

Sunday, March 5th at 3 pm:

"Out for love...be back for Ben and Jerry's" award winning Israeli film and free Ben & Jerry's at Hillel.

Wednesday, March 8th:

UMass for Israel presents Steve Klein of Young Judea. He will lead a discussion on the derailing of the peace process and the connection between Israelis and Americans at Hillel (free snacks).

Monday, March 20th, at Hillel at 7 pm:

Jewish Student Union is hosting a Purim Party and Megillah reading.

Thursday, March 23rd at 7 pm at Hillel:

The Jewish Womens' Collective is sponsoring "Judaic Mosaic" with special guest, Judith Stauber. We will be creating Purim masks and learning about Purim from a woman's perspective.

Friday, March 31st:

Kolot, Hillel's a cappella group, will have a special performance at Shabbat Services.

So get your calendar, put it on your wall, and come on out there and meet some Jews!

-Renee Cohn

British exchange student finds home at the Hillel

By Batia Charpak
Collegian Correspondent

Students sit around long tables eating that night's dinner selection, and informing friends about their days. Here they are enveloped in a warm glowing atmosphere. The walls depict pictures of boys and girls dancing against a yellow background. Hebrew words are scattered among the whirling images proclaiming this is not an ordinary dining common. Welcome to the Kosher Kitchen at the University of Massachusetts in collaboration with Hillel.

Laughter punctuates the air with sound. Hebrew often replaces English in conversations. Accents range from Israel to Russia, New York to Florida, and Boston to Britain.

Natalie Plesner sits among her friends eating and laughing and looking right at home. However, her strong British accent suggests that her home lies across the Atlantic Ocean. She is a sophomore History and Sociology major on exchange from Manchester University.

Out of all the colleges in America, why did she choose UMass?

"I asked for a university with a big Jewish community. I go to Manchester University and there I am very involved in the Jewish society and I didn't want to lose my Jewish identity. My second choice was Melbourne in Australia."

What was wrong with Melbourne, Australia?

"I was told, there, a lot of people live at home and I have more friends and family in America." Plesner said.

This isn't the first time Natalie has studied abroad.

"I studied abroad in my gap year.... A lot of Jewish students do a program in Israel before they start the university. I loved that. My best friend from that program was an American and I wanted to come visit her as well," said Plesner.

So here she is living in the upstairs dorms of Hillel, surrounded by friends. She chose the dorms in Hillel "because I thought that would be the best way to get involved and meet other Jewish people on campus. I chose to be on the Kosher Meal Plan because I wanted to meet more people but it's fine. I met more people from downstairs," Plesner explained.

What is a normal day like for a hard working Londoner such as Plesner?

"My classes start at 9:00. Then I only have two classes before lunch. I meet a friend for lunch at the Blue Wall, go to the gym for an hour. I go do some work at the library," Plesner said. "I might have another class. I come back here for dinner at five. Then either hang out here or go out for the evening."

So does Plesner notice any differences between here and England?

"In England you can't ask questions in lectures. So that's very different for me. In England I'm very hard working, but here not as much. I feel like I'm on a holiday here," Plesner said.

Besides coming to UMass, Plesner has done some traveling on her own.

"I visited my friend in Binghamton." She went on to say, "My parents came to see me in Boston, and I went to Quebec with the ski club last weekend."

So what does Natalie think about campus and Hillel life in America?

"I really like a lot. I think it's lovely. I wasn't expecting it to be so nice." Plesner concluded.

BECKY BEDDICK COLLEGIAN

Natalie Plesner, a Jewish exchange student from Great Britain.

Jews do it in the dorms

By Robbie Medwed
Collegian Correspondent

Spring 2000 marks the fourth semester of UMass Hillel's groundbreaking programming initiative: Jewish Residential Area Programming (J-RAP). Inaugurated last year by the Hillel director Rabbi Saul Perlmutter (now on sabbatical), the innovative program has earned UMass Hillel its fifth Haber Award.

The Haber Award is the highest honor a collegiate Hillel can receive, and UMass has the only Hillel in the world to have won five.

The J-RAP program is designed to get students living in the residence halls involved religiously on campus. Each residential area has a "J-RAPper" who is responsible for events there. This past fall, the J-RAPpers had to undergo a rigorous application and screening process before receiving the position.

The selected members are Leah Weiss, Southwest; Danielle Pocovisi, Orchard Hill; Sharon Grossman and Neil Greenstein, Central; and Emily Ackman, Northeast and Sylvan.

All of the J-RAPpers have been extremely busy planning events for their areas this year. Most of the events have been purely social, and some have had religious aspects. The most popular program of the year thus far was a program planned for each of the residential areas; the individual Chanukah parties. Each area had its own party, and all were extremely popular.

At the Southwest party, one could find a large group of Jews playing twister in one of the towers, and in Orchard Hill many were involved in very spirited games of dreidle (the top game that can involve candy or money). Each residential area had a very large turnout for the parties, and gave students the chance to socialize with new people on campus.

At many of the programs, students won raffles and also made Chanukah Menorot (the candelabra used to celebrate the holiday) out of graham crackers, icing, and licorice.

J-RAP has reached out to those students who otherwise would not have attended any Hillel programs throughout the year. "I think that they are very effective, and that Leah (Southwest) does a great job at letting people know about them. I am glad that there are Jewish programs within the residential areas on campus," said Southwest resident Amanda Weissman. The programs are also very creative, allowing Jewish students to meet other Jewish students in a strictly social setting.

Southwest residents have congregated over "twister and twizzlers," and played the very recent "studs break games" held last week. Those in Orchard Hill have gone sledding and enjoyed a bagel brunch, while those in Central will soon be able to learn about Unity in Diversity from a special guest speaker. J-RAPpers also gather groups to attend the Hillel and Jewish Student Union programs, as well as the weekly services and free dinners offered to all UMass students Friday nights at the Hillel House.

Tarah Guttman, an Orchard Hill resident, enjoys all of the programs offered in her area. "I like J-RAP because it gives Jewish students the opportunity to spend time with each other in the residential areas. Plus, when residents go to a program at the Hillel House, they can go with people they know."

Although Tarah is very satisfied with the quality of programming, there are some residents who believe the programming is not quite up to par. One Orchard Hill resident said they "would like to see more inclusive programming," in reference to programs that many residents were unable to attend because they were observing the Jewish Sabbath. However, the student does believe that the program can be improved and thinks "it is wonderful that they are bringing Judaism to the residential halls."

Although every J-RAPper plans his or her own individual programs, there will be one more program that each will hold in his or her own areas. The Infamous Chocolate Seder. A Seder is the service and meal combination commonly practiced at Passover. The J-RAPpers will be putting their own spin on it, by substituting all of the traditional foods for a chocolate treat. Instead of wine, there will be chocolate milk, and of course, chocolate covered matzah.

The Jewish Affairs page needs writers!
Call 545-1762 and ask for Sasha.

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

Oasis back and rocking
Standing... an instant classic

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

OASIS
Standing on the Shoulder of Giants
Epic

What does Oasis mean to the United States? We accepted Oasis for their swaggy ballads, "Wonderwall" and "Champagne Supernova," both from one of the best albums of the 1990s, What's The Story? Morning Glory. "Wonderwall" is one of my favorite songs of all time, and "Champagne Supernova" is great also, but the U.S. can't seem to accept that Oasis can rock. "Morning Glory" is uncompromising sing-a-long rock, and was the first single off Morning Glory to be released. The criminally underrated 1997 album Be Here Now kicked off with slower but still heavy single, "D'You Know What I Mean?" and guess what? No one cared. Now Oasis is at that "the first single off the new Oasis album Standing on the Shoulder of Giants is here, it rocks, and it's starting to make an impact on American radio, pointing to the fact that teen pop hasn't made Old Glory completely flaccid. A new Oasis album is like a national holiday in the U.K., and it should be here, too, because I bet are that good and I say so. I believe if you are in class right now reading the Collegian, just get up and leave because it's Feb. 29, 2000; there is a new Oasis album out today, and your professor will understand because the album is that good.

Lockin' In the Bushes," which is the best song title of all-time, gets things off to a rousing start. I like to think of this pounding instrumental as equal parts a "we're back" statement from the band which hasn't had an album for three years, as well as a big middle finger to the United States for thinking Oasis doesn't rock and proving for the millionth time that they sure as hell do. The song is comparable to their chaotic instrumental "Fuckin' in the Bushes" as well as some great tracking from Noel. This is also the first Oasis track to heavily incorporate samples, those from a documentary film about the Isle of Wight festival. The two samples contrast beautifully, the first being a serious-type crowing about "kids running around naked, fucking in the bushes," and the second some crazy lady spouting off about how she loves it and is "all for it." The samples really add to the sound, creating an almost festival feel with the music and the quick vocals. An incredible opener.

The first single "Go Let It Out," as I have spoken about before, is classic. "But Mike, what the hell does "go let it out" mean?" Don't make me come over there. It doesn't have to mean anything; it is Oasis! Besides, it's undeniably catchy, the bassline is perfect, and when Liam comes around again after the solo, you can just imagine the energy it will create in a live setting.

"Who Feels Love?" is simply a beautiful song. It's very psychedelic sounding, not unlike those sitar tracks on the Beatles' Revolver. The music creates a feeling of warmth, and Liam's vocals during the chorus just shine down like rays of light (yeah, I'm starting to lose it, don't worry, the similes will get even more ridiculous). "Now you understand that this is not the promised land they spoke of/there's nothing more to be if you can be the remedy who heals love." The lyrics are as beautiful as the music.

"Put Yer Money Where Your Mouth Is" is the timeless Oasis rocker. A bare-bones riff chugs along for the duration, while Liam's vocals sound as powerful as anything off of Definitely Maybe. The vocals are intelligible, but I have no idea what is actually being said, although by the end of the song you are sure that someone better put their money where there mouth is!

The much-heralded first track written by Liam Gallagher, (you should know that brother Noel writes all of the songs) "Little James," has grown on me to the point where I think it deserves to stand be the fine power ballads of Be Here Now, namely "Stand By Me" and "Don't Go Away." The lyrics are an ode to his son James, who Liam's wife, actress Patsy Kensit, has by her first husband. However, it's hard to get over the possibility that this song would have made a much more effective (and standout, on this album) acoustic song, especially when the slightly over-the-top "na na nyaas" work their way in at the end.

"Gas Panic!" is an odd track that is quickly becoming one of my favorites on the album. It starts soft, but gets heavy and stays slow. The paranoid and aggressive lyrics are reminiscent of "My Big Mouth" from Be Here Now. It is definitely a personal track, and the music seems to accentuate the different feelings conveyed in the lyrics.

Noel sings the first of two consecutive songs with "Where Did It All Go Wrong?" His soft and soothing vocals are immediately noticeable and a welcome change of pace. According to Noel, the song is about some old rock stars that used to come by his London home and complain about how crappy their life was, although the lyrics are convenient enough to fit any person in your life that just needs to bitch about every little thing. "I hope the tears don't stain the world that waits outside" is some pretty serious mocking, but we all knew Noel could be plenty venomous if he wanted to be.

"Sunday Morning Call" finds Noel in a depressed state of mind once again, but his voice again adds some hope to the somber and introspective lyrics. "I Can See A Liar" finds the band going to the simple rock riff well once too often, but as always Liam gives it his all despite the seriously silly lyrics.

The album's final track, "Roll It Over," ends the album far too soon, at around the fifty minute mark. But it's a typically grand Oasis exit in the spirit of "Slide Away" and "Champagne Supernova." Liam gives some of his most booming (yes, most booming) and emotional vocals when he cries "roll it over my soul/leave me here." The lyrics suggest his disliking for people who latch on to their fame or fair-weather friends who don't take into account the feelings of others.

So there you have it. Oasis is back with a new album, and to no one's surprise it's classic. It fits in perfectly with their other albums, and marks a whole new chapter in the ongoing saga of one of the best bands in rock today. Grade A.

COURTESY ANDREW MACPHERSON

Hopefully, with the release of Standing on the Shoulder of Giants, Oasis will finally be able to afford to cut their hair more often.

Bacchae not to be missed

By Krish Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

The Bacchae of Euripides
Feb 25
Rand Theater

This weekend, the UMass Theater Department made a fine show of what college productions should aspire to be with The Bacchae of Euripides. Consistently strong performances throughout the cast, a beautiful presentation, ideas for the audience to take home, and Judyie Al-Bilali's direction united the elements necessary for an effectively lovely evening of theatre.

The play can speak to various points, including the danger of cult worship, the frailty of nationalism, generation gaps, and the feebleness of a fleeting state. This is portrayed by the people of Thebes, who are suffering under the newly established, tyrannical government of Pentheus. They seek escape in the god Dionysos, but find themselves releasing their anger and pain through obsessive worship, bringing the entire city to violent ends.

The interpretation of The Bacchae the department chose to use was written by Wole Soyinka, a Nigerian who deliberately translated parallels in Euripides' original script to match the events taking place in his own country, as it made the transition from colony to state. But as noted in the program, UMass' production did not recreate Euripides' Athens of 405 B.C. or Soyinka's Nigeria of the 1960's and 70's. Instead, director Al-Bilali decided to represent the dichotomy of the story with the American Civil Rights movement as a backdrop.

Only in this endeavor did the production blur. The presumption that a show needs a conceptual metaphor to be good can be blamed for this. The attempted parallel was never clearly displayed, as no definitive color lines existed, leaving the actors wholly responsible for illustrating opposing ideas and where each character belonged. For the most part this worked, as the performers, particularly those leading the different causes (Richard James as Dionysos and Michael Walton as Pentheus) were thoughtful and articulate. But the actual text of the show lent itself to a Christ metaphor more than a Civil Rights representation. Except for that "whole city ending in destruction" thing.

Still, the production was an aesthetic tour-de-force. Scenic design by Steve Hayes was gorgeous, creating poignant silhouettes and stage pictures. Benjamin Johnsen's sound design, Medea Maratia's costumes, Marlies Yearby's choreography, Penny Remsen's lighting and indeed the entire technical staff deserve applause. Undoubtedly Al-Bilali's vision fused all of these things to deliver a near-flawless result.

The acting in The Bacchae was some of the finest seen on campus this year. Richard James brought all the charisma and presence necessary for Dionysos to his role. Michael Walton could have performed with more adamant gaps, and the feebleness of a fleeting state. This is portrayed by the people of Thebes, who are suffering under the newly established, tyrannical government of Pentheus. They seek escape in the god Dionysos, but find themselves releasing their anger and pain through obsessive worship, bringing the entire city to violent ends.

The interpretation of The Bacchae the department chose to use was written by Wole Soyinka, a Nigerian who deliberately translated parallels in Euripides' original script to match the events taking place in his own country, as it made the transition from colony to state. But as noted in the program, UMass' production did not recreate Euripides' Athens of 405 B.C. or Soyinka's Nigeria of the 1960's and 70's. Instead, director Al-Bilali decided to represent the dichotomy of the story with the American Civil Rights movement as a backdrop.

Only in this endeavor did the production blur. The presumption that a show needs a conceptual metaphor to be good can be blamed for this. The attempted parallel was never clearly displayed, as no definitive color lines existed, leaving the actors wholly responsible for illustrating opposing ideas and where each character belonged. For the most part this worked, as the performers, particularly those leading the different causes (Richard James as Dionysos and Michael Walton as Pentheus) were thoughtful and articulate. But the actual text of the show lent itself to a Christ metaphor more than a Civil Rights representation. Except for that "whole city ending in destruction" thing.

Still, the production was an aesthetic tour-de-force. Scenic design by Steve Hayes was gorgeous, creating poignant silhouettes and stage pictures. Benjamin Johnsen's sound design, Medea Maratia's costumes, Marlies Yearby's choreography, Penny Remsen's lighting and indeed the entire technical staff deserve applause. Undoubtedly Al-Bilali's vision fused all of these things to deliver a near-flawless result.

The acting in The Bacchae was some of the finest seen on campus this year. Richard James brought all the charisma and presence necessary for Dionysos to his role. Michael Walton could have performed with more adamant gaps, and the feebleness of a fleeting state. This is portrayed by the people of Thebes, who are suffering under the newly established, tyrannical government of Pentheus. They seek escape in the god Dionysos, but find themselves releasing their anger and pain through obsessive worship, bringing the entire city to violent ends.

The interpretation of The Bacchae the department chose to use was written by Wole Soyinka, a Nigerian who deliberately translated parallels in Euripides' original script to match the events taking place in his own country, as it made the transition from colony to state. But as noted in the program, UMass' production did not recreate Euripides' Athens of 405 B.C. or Soyinka's Nigeria of the 1960's and 70's. Instead, director Al-Bilali decided to represent the dichotomy of the story with the American Civil Rights movement as a backdrop.

Only in this endeavor did the production blur. The presumption that a show needs a conceptual metaphor to be good can be blamed for this. The attempted parallel was never clearly displayed, as no definitive color lines existed, leaving the actors wholly responsible for illustrating opposing ideas and where each character belonged. For the most part this worked, as the performers, particularly those

Visit the all new Versity.com lecture notes . tutorials . research center
(we're even giving away a mind-blowing trip to Europe)
-always (1440.365) open-

VERSITY .com
Where to go when you need to know.™

Rap: As the World Turnz

David Katzoff

In case you have been napping on rap's inner soap opera, here are a few tidbits to keep y'all up to speed. In honor of a happy leap day, let me jump right in. (Ouch! No 'Pun' intended, please read on)...

First off, I would like to send my respect and condolences to the family and friends of Christopher Rios, a.k.a. Big Puntisher. The formidable Latino lyricist, who suffered from a massive heart attack on Feb. 7th, was pronounced dead on arrival at White Plains Hospital in Westchester County, New York. Although close affiliates to Pun claimed that he tipped the scales at nearly 600lbs., preventing such a sudden tragedy was enormously ambiguous for such a large man. Aesthetically, his devastating rhyming flow (especially in some of his early assaults) was intermingled by violent gasps that enunciated his breathtaking skills. In the rap world, Punisher will be remembered for his verbally visual lyrics and tongue-tangling cadence but as a community activist and local entrepreneur, his attributes are immeasurable. Redirecting his fortune and notoriety back into his native South Bronx neighborhoods, Pun built recreation centers and barbershops and became an admirable figure and predominantly positive roll model for young Puerto Ricans and ghetto youth.

Just hours after his death, the members of the legendary Tats Crew began working on a giant graf mural on the corner of Westchester Avenue and 163rd Street thematically celebrating his life and sadly shortened legacy. Pun's label, Loud Records, plans to release his sophomore album, Yeah Baby, sometime this spring.

Now for the young and the restless...there seems to be an interesting battle brewing between 50 Cent and a slew of notably perturbed wordsmiths. On his hilariously comedic track "How to Rob," Cent pulled the card of virtually every rap entertainer in the industry, detailing how he planned to pilfer their material possessions (and identities) via stick-up style heist. Although the song's chorus claims "this ain't serious," apparently many of the names he called did not find the sentiments humorous and various recorded retorts have since circulated. For instance, on Jay- Z's "Some Like It Hot," Jiggaman puts forth he's "about a dollar/ what the f is 50 cents?" Ghostface Killah's "G-Deini" features the lyrics, "two rappers got stuck that night/ I ain't sayin' no names/ they know who they are/ thanks for the change." Get it? Fellow Queens native Ja Rule, who has long-standing beef with Cent, is the target of another assault in the track "Your Life is on the Line." Let us hope for 50 Cent's sake that these wars are raged strictly on wax.

Another interesting release, in the form of literature, is The Ego Trip Book of Rap Lists, by Sasha Jenkins and company. This inconquerably complete encyclopedia of everything hip-hop is packed with fascinating facts, original comparisons, pictures and, of course, innumerable lists. Who knows how or where they obtained this veritable economy of knowledge, but when Russell Simmons deems the book "a must have for rap aficionados," you can be sure it is worth checking out. Rawkus records has additional plans of dropping a retro soundtrack to Ego Trip that will include some of the lost songs mentioned in various categories.

Finally, here is my monthly Singles File for the 12" heads to rap around.

5. Craig Mack - "The Wooden Horse"

It is hard to go wrong with a well executed Ol' Blue Eyes sample, Producer Mark the 45 King ("Hard Knock Life", "Anything" I has truth mastered the showtune loop and this time he revamps Frank Sinatra's "Rubber Tree Plant" with the high hopes of giving Craig Mack some accessible credibility. Job well done.

4. Ghostface - "Wu Banga 101"

I cannot say enough about this piece. The way the beat changes key, the perfectly placed sample that pauses before each rhyme exchange... Skip through the intro" and just bump this!

3. Big Pun - "Leatherface"

Pun reiterates his terror/terrific abilities in this guitar-charged adrenaline rush that is certain to bring utter mayhem to the clubs.

2. Cocoa Brovas - "Super Brooklyn"

Hooking the original Super Mario Brothers theme song, Cocoa B's execute a White Label masterpiece full of original in-game sound effects and tumultuous drums. It is pure, beat-driven nostalgia.

1. Common - "Sixth Sense"

Premo + Common = Incredible production and optimal poetry... Nuff said.

That's all for now, but you can catch me as the days of our lives continue to unfold.

David Katzoff is a Collegian columnist.

The smoking gun digs up dirt

By Laura Lippman
The Baltimore Sun

Suddenly, everybody loves "The Smoking Gun". Well, maybe everybody except Rick Rockwell and Rupert Murdoch.

An Internet site devoted to providing primary source documents from high-profile news stories, The Smoking Gun (www.thesmokinggun.com) was the first news organization to reveal the checkered dating history of Rockwell, the would-be groom on "Who Wants to Marry a Multimillionaire?"

The Smoking Gun's founders, William Bastone and Dan Green, not only posted copies of a restraining order obtained by one of Rockwell's former girlfriends, but they also obtained the TV couple's marriage license, proving the marriage was real.

They also highlighted how Rockwell had different but similar birth dates on the documents - which Bastone said first gave them pause, until they were able to ascertain it was the same Rick Rockwell on both documents.

Since it was founded in April 1997, "The Smoking Gun" has had its share of provocative stories, from obtaining the true age of New York Yankee pitcher Orlando "El Duque" Hernandez (he was 4 years older than he claimed) to publishing the confidentiality agreement Tom Cruise and Nicole Kidman require of their hired help (inadvertent leaks to the press are fined at half the rate of deliberate ones).

But the "Millionaire" scoop, as it is billed on the site, has generated new traffic highs on The Smoking Gun, with a million page views last Monday and Tuesday. Typically, the site has 1.7 million page views in an entire month.

Not bad for a paper-centric Web site whose journalist founders never bothered to figure out who their target market is. And not bad for a story that started with a Buddy's brainstorm after a basketball game.

When talk turned to the "Who Wants to Marry" phenomenon, which then appeared to be the next big thing in television, Bastone and Green decided to check out Rockwell's background.

Turn to SMOKING GUN page 8

One Hundred Years... magnificent

By S.A. Vignola
Collegian Correspondent

One Hundred Years of Solitude
by Gabriel Garcia Marquez
Harper & Row Publishers
458 pp.

One Hundred Years of Solitude was one of the most impressive books I ever read. Beginning with the founding of Macondo, it illustrates the Buendia family's trials and triumphs over the span of six generations and how the town of Macondo grew and regressed with the family. Brilliantly related, Marquez's writing style is extraordinarily comprehensive and easy to follow.

Marquez creates a world that has a touch of magic to it and magic never has an explanation. The magic must have been similar to the magic our ancestors experienced when they encountered something new and foreign. Every time I came across something bewildering, I attempted to rationalize it in terms of science and fact. With the introduction of flying carpets, I gave up.

Marquez included these magical episodes as if they were everyday events. Flying carpets and talking ghosts were treated as though they were as normal and real as everything else normal and real. And it was because they were not given any special attention that I was forced to just keep reading and hope that it was explained later. It never was. I surrendered myself to the author and let him guide me through the lives of the Buendias.

It was as if the author was saying to me, "I know it's weird but just go with it for a moment." Maybe it was only real because the inhabitants of Macondo believed it was real. But by the time I hit the 100 page mark, I too believed it was real. That's how it was experiencing this book - and I say

Turn to NOVEL page 8

Awww...
John Cusack and Iben Hjejle take a stroll in High Fidelity, coming soon to theatres.

Collegian
Accounting Clerk
ALL MAJORS WELCOME TO APPLY

...urs per week,
...e scheduling

...ong math and
co...unication skills

Deadline for applications is Friday, March 10th

Contact Christine Carroll for more info pick up applications in Rm. 113 in the Campus Center Basement

ITEM OF THE WEEK

REGULARLY $24.99-$19.99
Take additional $5 OFF Ticket Price

LONG SLEEVED
UMASS SPORT GRAPHIC
TEES
Lacrosse, Hockey, Crew,
Soccer, Basketball & Football

COLLEGIATE Castals
UMass Clothing for Everyone™
M-Th 8:30-6 Fri. 8:30-5
Sat. 11 to 4
(413) 545 - 2619

THE University Ustore™
Not like a mall... Better.™

SIEMENS
Westinghouse

This is your time, your chance to pull ahead. You've never had this much power before. Here's how you can make the most of it.

Upcoming Information Session
• Mechanical Engineering
• Electrical Engineering

It's a great time to be in power with us, as our global strength energizes the world!

Wednesday, March 8, 2000
6pm - 8pm
Southwick Hall
(N. Campus)
Room 200

Interviews are being scheduled on campus on Thursday, March 9. Contact your college Career Center for an appointment.

Siemens Westinghouse Power Corporation is an equal opportunity employer, headquartered in Orlando, Florida.

More information is available @ www.swpc.siemens.com/jobs_n_career

More Power To You

Siemens Westinghouse Power Corporation
A Siemens Company

You are invited

The Performing Arts Division presents the

Spring Faculty Recital

voice, piano, woodwinds, dance, guitar

Thursday, March 2
7:30 p.m.
Bezanson Hall,
Fine Arts Center

Please call the Division of Continuing Education at 545-0519 for more information.

free and open to the public

UMass Ballroom Dance Club
proudly invites you to
Swing & Latin Dance 2000

When? Wednesday, March 1, 2000 from 7pm to Midnight
Where? Student Union Ballroom
What? FREE Instruction Lesson from 7-8:30pm and FREE general Dance with Swing and Latin Music
FREE refreshment
How Much? FREE
Extras? Exhibitions during general dance, performing by the Umass Ballroom Dance Team
Partners? No Partner or experience necessary! Come and meet someone new!
Questions? Call 546-6631

■ novel

continued from page 7

"experience" because it was an experience – the author constantly twisting my idea of reality into something previously unimagined by me. As soon as I would began to say, "All right, I get it now –" he would twist it again and contort my new perception of reality into something else. By the time the end of the book neared, I responded, "well, naturally." to continued distortions and unexpected turns. Up until the final paragraph when I was simply left speechless because it ended and I found myself once again in a new reality: the original one.

The characters were magnificently created and developed, each one distinctly portrayed and described. The character confusion I seldom experienced resulted from the lone fact that the many main male characters basically shared three names amongst them: Jose, Arcadio, and Aurelliano (in different combinations). My copy of the book contained a family so the confusion was mostly alleviated. If your copy does not, I urge you to make one as you read – you'll need it.

One character, Colonel Aureliano Buendia was especially depicted with remarkable magical realism, resulting in him becoming somewhat legendary, a rare and powerful trait. His tale includes many lovers and starting several rebellions against the government; by several, I mean each time he lost he would run off and return even stronger some time later. The government or rumor would report him dead or somewhere on the other side of the globe, only to suddenly appear again with the rebellion begun anew. This went on until his age prevented him from prevailing and at that he returned to Macondo to live out his life in an odd state of nostalgia, as older people usually do. Nevertheless, if ever there lived a glorious life, it was Colonel Aureliano Buendia's.

Each character had their own story and each was uniquely epical. I related to the characters in the novel more in an intellectual sense then in any other way. I did not feel emotionally tied up with the characters except for the occasional touch of nostalgia from the ghosts, the sense of motherhood radiating from Ursula Iguaran, or the brilliant love affair at the climax – the most passionate and loving relationship between two people in the entire novel. The emotional strength infused into the novel with this climatic affair served to only raise the ending, which left me without words or thoughts. Only a blank look as if I had witnessed something but had not realized it until later.

Hailed by Time magazine as one of the greatest books written in the 20th century (Time, December 31, 1999), One Hundred Years of Solitude falls nowhere short of providing a remarkable display of Humanity in a world that seems to be more often cruel then kind. The world is just as full of opportunity and potential today as it was for Jose Arcadio Buendia when he laid the foundation for Macondo and one hundred years of solitude with it.

The Collegian will be printing a book review every week. If you have any requests, for old or new literature, or comments, email me at mescott@mac.com.

■ smoking gun

continued from page 7

sion programming.

Bowles recalls, "I said, 'It's crazy that no one's written a whole lot about this guy Rick Rockwell, and everyone's enamored of this program, and there's no information. You never know what you'll be able to find, he might have a criminal record or a checkered past.'"

That was the last Bowles was to think about Rockwell for several days, but Green took his idea and ran with it. The next day, even as The New York Times was featuring the program on its front page, Green was digging into Rockwell's past.

But unlike other reporters, who checked records in Rockwell's hometown of San Diego, Green decided to look in the Los Angeles area as well, figuring that Rockwell's scam movie resume meant he had logged some time in the area.

Green and Bastone, a reporter at the Village Voice in New York, worked furiously for almost two days, posting the documents on Feb. 19. They then decided to try to drum up a little publicity for their enterprise. Bastone called a friend at the New York Daily News. Green called another friend at the New York Post, and they e-mailed Jim Romenesko, whose MediaNews site is a favorite with the media.

The Post picked up the item, and from then on, news organizations throughout the country – and the world, in some cases – credited "The Smoking Gun" with knocking the wheels off what was shaping up to be Fox Television's runaway hit.

Although the production company behind "Who Wants to Marry a Millionaire" claimed it had done a background check on Rockwell, using a private detective, Bastone is skeptical. "I'm thinking if I'm (Fox owner) Rupert Murdoch, I'm looking into a refund."

After The Smoking Gun's research came to light, Fox decided to back away from the "Who Wants to Marry..." concept. It even canceled a scheduled rebroadcast of the original show.

Which leads "The Smoking Gun" for once, to ask other journalists for a piece of information.

"We've been waiting for someone to write about what the financial impact is," Bastone says. "We want someone to tell us that our site cost Rupert Murdoch X million of dollars."

Who put the bop in the bop shoo wop shoo wop?
The Collegian Arts Staff
They did with the

When someone asks you what you did in college,

The Amherst Fire Department is recruiting members for its Student Force.
Stop by the Campus Center, Feb. 28- March 3 for more information.
The North Fire Station will host an Open House on March 3 from 6 p.m.-8 p.m.

The Station is located at 603 East Pleasant St., up the road from Sylvan.
Call for more information 549-5419

Missed the Co-op Job Fair
Don't Panic!

Attend a Field Experience Welcome session!
We'll get you up to speed!

Offered EVERYDAY

Mondays
1:30 - 2:30 pm 305 Holdsworth
2 - 3 pm 107 SOM Building
3 - 4 pm 103 South College

Tuesdays
3:35 - 4:35 pm 220 Marston
4 - 5 pm 106 SOM Building

Wednesdays
3:30 - 4:30 pm 327 ELAB

Thursdays
3 - 4 pm 103 South College

Fridays
1:30 - 2:30 pm 114 Stockbridge Hall

See the Field Experience Representative in YOUR College:

College of Food and Natural Resources
110A Stockbridge Hall
577-0421

Isenberg School Of Management
208C SOM Building
577-0418

College of Arts and Humanities
264 Bartlett Hall
545-6266

College of Natural Sciences & Math & College of Engineering
126A Marston Hall
577-0419

College of Social and Behavioral Sciences
102A South College
545-6267

College of Education, Nursing and Public Health
416 Arnold House
577-0427

Campus Parking Regulation Reminder
Effective March 1, 2000

Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement which is 7am to 5pm, Monday through Friday.

Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots, except visitor meter lots, which are enforced for payment 9am to 5pm.

Vehicles may park in any space, provided it is not a •low zone
•reserved space
•24 hour permit required lot

Required lot (lots 21,29,47, 49, 50, 54 ,67, North Village and Lincoln Apts.), from 5pm to 7am, Monday through Friday, weekends and holidays, without displaying the proper permit.

Campus Parking Regulation Reminder

Minutemen tennis shut out by Ivy League's Brown Bears

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

When a team suffers a crushing loss, when its players are positively manhandled by the opposition, it is customary for an aura of melancholy to arise. Weak excuses are tossed out as a feeble attempt at justification. The woe-is-us bleating commences. Doom and gloom attitudes abound.

Such is not the case for the Massachusetts men's tennis team.

Despite last Friday's resounding 7-0 defeat at the hands of Brown University, the Minutemen have not succumbed to moping and self-deprecation just yet. On the contrary, the squad's demeanor is upbeat, enthusiastic and exceedingly optimistic.

How, one might ask, is it possible to glean even the faintest hint of encouragement from Friday's massacre? How can a team that failed to capture a single set throughout the entire competition possess even an iota of confidence?

Piece of cake, asserts head coach Judy Dixon.

"This year, Brown is third in the Ivies. They were ranked as high as 65th in the country, and they're the best team we play all season," Dixon explained. "In a match against a nationally ranked opponent, you learn a lot. I was really pleased with how we competed – we were fairly competitive in some of the matches."

Despite his straight-set loss at No. 1 singles, sophomore Steve Prisco provided his squad with the spring season's strongest performance to date. His opponent, freshman phenom Justin Natale, is among the national collegiate elite, a potential professional player. Although Prisco lost, 6-4, 7-5, the mere fact that he was able to challenge Natale in each set was an impressive feat.

Dixon was beaming after Prisco's performance.

"I think this match was the best effort both mentally and physically that I've seen Steve produce since he's been here," Dixon said.

Senior Bo Navarro did not fare as well. In the No. 2 slot, Navarro was able to nab only two games in his entire match, losing to Brown's Nick Malone, 6-1, 6-1. The co-captain, who spent the entire fall season sidelined due to academic reasons, may be feeling the effects of a lack of competitive match play.

"He needs to play himself into better physical condition," Dixon noted.

Meanwhile, senior co-captain Parsa Samii was trounced by Chris Wolfe, 6-1, 6-0, in No. 3 singles. While Samii has a lingering heel injury, Dixon feels that his physical condition was not a factor in the loss.

"It was really due to the fact that he just mentally wasn't prepared for his match," the coach offered.

In No. 4 singles, junior Fabien Rabanal was defeated by Chris Drake, 6-4, 6-1. Sophomore Todd Champeau bowed to J.R. Argo, 6-1, 6-1, in the No. 5 slot, while senior Marco Casesa rounded out singles action with a 6-3, 6-1 loss to Ricardo Eboll.

Prisco and Navarro paired up at No. 1 doubles and staged an impressive dogfight with Brown's Natale and Drake. The UMass duo took the Bears to the wire before bowing out, 9-7.

The No. 2 doubles match signified the return of freshman prodigy Will Shaw, who had been out since October with a rotator cuff injury. Shaw paired with Samii, and the duo lost to Malone and Wolfe, 8-3.

Dixon is optimistic about Shaw's return, despite the fact that his serve is still weak as a result of the injury.

"The doctor says he'll have to play through the pain," she said. "It's a chronic condition."

Shaw is expected to return to the singles lineup next weekend.

Champeau and Casesa paired up at No. 3 doubles, losing to Argo and Eboll, 8-3.

After Friday's loss, Dixon feels it is quite clear that physical fitness is the squad's biggest weakness. She has designed two workouts to help her players develop the proper conditioning to forge through the rest of the season.

Dixon feels that her squad is brimming with confidence and itching to improve upon Friday's promising but somewhat lackluster performance.

"I think they feel like they've produced well," she observed. "They're still pumped up and they still think they're a very good team. Team morale is high."

■ track

continued from page 12

quartet of senior Sean Murphy, freshman Bill Sheridan, sophomore Sal Nastasi and sophomore Sam Ros placed seventh in the meet.

O'Brien was particularly impressed with the performance of the rookies.

"You always hope the young people chip in and don't make many mistakes, and we did that," he commented. "We had a lot of season best performances and most of those were by the rookies. They played a major role in the meet."

Now that the squad has proven itself capable of thriving at even the highest level of competition, O'Brien is savouring his opportunity to reflect upon the progression of the historic season.

"Early in the season, there were a lot of unanswered questions," said the coach. "The dual, tri, and quad meet part of the season, we passed the test there. We went to our first championship meet and I wasn't certain about what to expect, but everyone did well.

"I think they proved themselves as being very solid and dependable performers and they certainly have gained experience in the process. We've got a real solid grasp on what type of character this team has."

■ league

continued from page 12

Orange, Sugar, Fiesta and Rose Bowls). Each year, the National Championship Game, between the top-ranked pair of teams in the nation, is played as one of those four games.

"A lot of people have considered going to I-A in the past few years, but how many people have pulled it off. I don't know. Conference USA has given some people an opportunity to go to I-A, though," Marcum said. "I don't know when the ACC is going to expand, but it seems like in the last year there has been more consistent talks in regards to expansion, but it's hard to say."

Of those aforementioned BCS conferences, the Big East is the only one that appears feasible for UMass. The Big East contains schools that are relatively close by, like BC and Syracuse, and it now houses the hated Huskies of Connecticut. More than just on the gridiron, the Big East would work with basketball as well, which would likely follow the football team. With regular season-ending games against UConn, which is the reigning National Champ in hoops, and Top-10 Syracuse, popularity on the hardwood might soar.

According to a review by Charles M. Neinas, Head of the College Football Association, who spoke with "knowledgeable individuals who are associated with the Big East", UMass is "not a candidate for Big East membership now or in the foreseeable future."

Conversely, the Big East has historically served as the landing pad for A-10 dissidents like Rutgers and West Virginia, both of which left the A-10 for a higher level in 1995. Massachusetts compares favorably with both schools as far as notoriety is concerned. Providence College, another current member of the Big East, does not offer its league a football program.

The Mid-American Conference, on the other hand, has actively pursued Massachusetts, provided the Minutemen decide to make the jump up. Still, the MAC is significantly lower profile, and does not offer the possibility of playing in one of the BCS bowls. The top draw from the MAC is probably Toledo, which trounced UMass 24-3 in last year's early season interdivisional matchup.

The MAC might not necessarily prove to be a lucrative choice though. Neinas found that the average expense to cover running a football program in that conference exceeds the revenue by roughly 1.2 million dollars. The Big East, in the highly visible BCS, however, puts its participants immediately into the national spotlight and in the position to benefit financially from the popularity. Neinas continued to say that the "Mid-American Conference members must rely primarily on student fees and institutional or state support to fund their athletic programs."

After joining the MAC, then, the University might turn to students' tuition to help deal with the 1.2 million dollar deficit, which would possibly cause heated debate between school officials and undergraduates.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The final countdown
Kris Wallis and the Massachusetts hockey team can clinch a spot in the Hockey East playoffs with either a win or a tie over New Hampshire this weekend.

Collegian Sports: Playing the Field

Write for Sports

Alternative Spring Break
5 days in the Ozarks, MO
Meditation, Yoga, Music & Dance. Self discovery. Lots of Fun. Vegetarian Food.
$195 pre registration rideshares
www.nu-students.cx
1-800-870 5348

VOTER EDUCATION ALERT!!
Are you unsure if or where you are registered to vote? If so, call your local elections office before election day to find out where you are listed as a registered voter. Massachusetts Town Clerks can search Mass. Towns' voter records. For more information call the Town Clerk's office at:
256-4035

RENT A CAR FOR SPRING BREAK

Underage drivers wanted.

We know there's more to life than what's happening on campus. So, whether you need a 4x4 for a ski weekend, or a mini-van for that road trip during Spring Break, Merchants Rent-A-Car can get you going, no matter where you're going. And best of all, as part of our Youthful Operator Policy, we'll rent to any driver 18 and over*!

HOWARD JOHNSON'S ON ROUTE 9, HADLEY
413-549-8099

MERCHANTS
RENT-A-CAR

www.mrac.com

Interested in the R.A. Position ?
Last Call for Resident Assistant Info Sessions

2/29	5:30 p.m.	New Africa House Room 311
2/29	7:00 p.m.	Campus Center
2/29	8:00 p.m.	Gorman 2nd Floor Lounge
3/1	5:00 p.m.	Cance Main Lounge
3/1	8:00 p.m.	Hillel House
3/2	8:00 p.m.	Coolidge 19th Floor Lounge

To be eligible for selection, you must:
• Attend an RA information session and turn in a completed application
• Have a 2.4 GPA
• Have lived in the residence halls one full semester
• Be free of judicial sanction

All applications are due to the CDD (Center for Diversity and Development) at 101 Moore House by 5:00 p.m. Tuesday, March 7, 2000

Pursue a World of OPPORTUNITIES in Natural Health Care

What careers can you pursue at Northwestern Health Sciences University?
Chiropractic • Integrative health and wellness • Acupuncture • Oriental medicine • Therapeutic massage
Northwestern Health Sciences University provides the widest range of choices in natural health care in the United States

The foundation of the University is Northwestern College of Chiropractic, which has earned an international reputation in 58 years as a pioneer in chiropractic education, patient care and scientific research. The individual attention and access to educational resources our students receive helps them excel in preparing to practice as outstanding health care practitioners. Combined with our pioneering clinical education programs and our assistance in job placements, Northwestern provides a superb educational experience.

Now featuring master's-level courses in Integrative health and wellness.

NORTHWESTERN HEALTH SCIENCES UNIVERSITY
Minneapolis, Minnesota
For a personal visit or more information, call
1-800-888-4777
Or go virtual at www.nwhealth.edu

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center. 545-1995.

'87 Nissan Stanza. 85k. automatic, 4-door EXCELLENT CONDITION! $2000 or best offer. Thomas 546-1775.

'92 Subaru Loyale wagon 4x4. Clean, runs great, air, power, roofrack. $2500.00 0.b.0. 665-0453.

EMPLOYMENT

$Fundraisers$ Open to student groups and organizations. Earn $5.00 per MC app. We supply all materials at no cost. Call for info or visit our website 1-800-932-0528 ext. 65 www.ocmconcepts.com

Connect to the future. International company seeks PC users. $25-75k potential. 1-888-827-9733 www.roadforsuccess.com

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Canadensis, Pocono Mountains, PA. Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, gymnastics, hockey, tennis, mountain bikes, golf, motorcycles, outdoor adventure, ropes, archery, drama, video, photography, fishing, WSI, waterfront activities, arts and crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/21/00-8/18/00. Call (800)832-8228 or apply on-line: www.canadensis.com

Human Services- Relief support needed to work with adults with developmental disabilities, may lead to permanent hours. Hours include evenings, weekends and/or overnights. Required: HS diploma and drivers license. Starting pay is $7.47/hr(for relief), $8.35(for permanent). Locations in South Hadley and Belchertown. Call Mary @ (413)774-2281 ext. 11. AA/EOE

EMPLOYMENT

Spend your summer in Montana! Glacier National Park. Imagine hiking over thousands of miles of almost untouched trails, breathing in fresh, crisp Rocky Mountain air. Imagine conquering the challenge of biking the famous Going-to-the-Sun Highway or the thrill of whitewater rafting, or setting up camp next to a turquoise blue glacier lake. Imagine no more! St. Mary Lodge, Glacier Park's finest, is now hiring for the 2000 summer season. Call (800)368-3689 or e-mail name and mailing address to jobs@glpark.com for an application. Check out our website at www.glcpark.com to learn more about the opportunity of a lifetime.

Summer to remember in woods of Maine- Camp Androscoggin for Boys seeks specialists to teach tennis, baseball, soccer, lacrosse, street hockey, swim, canoe, ropes, mountain biking, archery, and photography. 6/18 to 8/18. Visit www.campandro.com or contact 601 West Street, Harrison, NY 10528 (914)835-5800.

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Wayne for girls-sister half of brother/sister camp in Pennsylvania (3 hrs from New York City). If you love children and want a caring, fun environment we are looking to hire staff from 6/20-8/18/00 for: tennis, basketball, softball, soccer, volleyball, golf, gymnastics, aerobics, cheerleading, swimming, sailing, waterskiing, self-defense, ropes, fine arts (ceramics, sculptuer, drawing, painting, silk screening, jewlery), photography, piano, guitar, drama, video, group leaders. On campus interviews March 9th. Call 800-279-3019.

Coach: Swim team looking for part-time head coach. Competitive Swim experience. Salary commensurate with experience. Belchertown Rec. 323-0419 or Mary 534-9904.

International commpany has paid internships available in accounting, sales/marketing. Call Giovanna (413)536-1813.

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

EMPLOYMENT

Premiere help wanted. Looking for someone with Premiere expertise to help finish a video. Kirk 256-0080.

Summer Employment; Outdoors. Weight loss/sports camp looking for energetic people to lead campers in a fun filled summer. Located in West Stockbridge, MA. in the heart of the Berkshires. Call for more information. Toll Free 877-FIT-CAMP. email marc@camp-kingsmont.com

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132 www.biketrips.com

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

Free Samples Lose 20lbs Fast! $$$ Back/Guarantee $38.00. 888-625-8399.

FOR SALE

Titleist DCI 981d golf clubs used 5 times. New price $650.00 asking $450.00. 665-6645 ask for Tim.

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

INSTRUCTION

Philippino Martial Arts. Instructor with great experience considering starting a class in Amherst. For info call 256-0080.

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

PERSONAL

Attractive party-loving 20-something already dating energetic movie buff. How'd they meet? Turns out she's his cousin's friend. sixdegrees showed them the connections. www.sixdegrees.com

ROOM WANTED

Need a roommate? Male, fun, responsible 22yrs. senior. No lease please ASAP. 531-3997 ask for Luts.

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Massage winter away. $15.00 for an hour session. Michael 585-8577.

Rental problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Qestions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TICKETS

Wanted for April 2 Red Hot Chilipeppers at Mullins Center. Call (413)243-0931.

TRAVEL

Study Spanish. Internships in Guatemala. College Credit. www.casaxelaju.com (512)416-6991.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK 2000
Last Call! Limited Space Left
Free Trips & Free Drinks
1-800-426-7710

Give us a call here at 545-3500 to place your ad in The Collegian Classifieds!

We're waiting for your calls!!!

Five College Community Calendar

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 29

Meeting – There will be a Ballroom Dance Club meeting at 8:30 p.m. in Totman 101. All are welcome.

Workshop – There will be a workshop on contraception and safer sex at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. Men and women are welcome. Call Day at 577-5188 for more information.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1

Concert – Pioneer Valley Ballet will present an Adjudication Concert with new choreography at 4 p.m. at the Academy of Music in Northampton. Anyone is welcome.

Informational Meeting – Lambda Pi Chi sorority is having an informational meeting at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check the listing in the elevators for the room number. Contact Valerie at 585-4370 or Rabilya at 546-2115 for more details.

Reading – Esther Drill, Rebecca Odes and Heather McDonald, founders of gURL.com, will read from their new book "Deal With It! A Whole New Approach to your Body, Brain, and Life as a gurl" at 7 p.m. at Food For Thought Bookstore in Amherst.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@mailcity.com for more information.

Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac11@aol.com or Caleb at 587-5740 by March 5.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Submissions – Short Cuts, UMass' short story journal, is currently accepting prose submissions for its second annual issue. The deadline is March 1. For more information call Matt at 549-1053, or email submissions and questions to shortstory@acad.umass.edu.

Support – A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone pre-screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5316 if interested.

Support – AL-ANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

Voting – A reminder to registered voters: A voter can only be absentee due to absence from his/her residence community during polling hours, physical disability preventing the voter from going to a polling place, or religious belief. For more information call 256-4055.

PSAs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an ITF, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER

Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 29, 2000

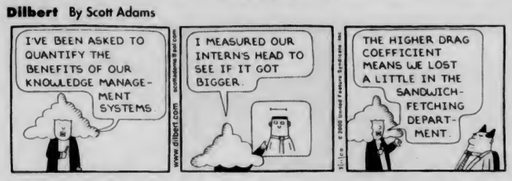
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Woman's College Basketball: Connecticut at Providence (Live)					Bobby Darin: Beyond the Song (In Stereo) (R)			Secrets of Lost Empires (R)
WFSB	3	News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "The Bridge at Kang So Ri"		60 Minutes II (In Stereo) (N)		Judging Amy (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WBZ	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "The Bridge at Kang So Ri"		60 Minutes II (In Stereo) (N)		Judging Amy (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WCVB	5	News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Sports Night	NYPD Blue "Jackass" (N)		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WLVI	6	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends (R)	Nanny (R)	Buffy the Vampire Slayer (N)		Angel "The Ring" (In Stereo) (R)		News (N)		Friends (R)	Nanny (R)
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	Saturday Night Live		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	Dateline (In Stereo) (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV (R)	I Dare You! Ultimate Challeng		Monster Truck 2000: The New		News	Reel TV (R) (R)	Change-Heart	Carolina
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Ent. Tonight	Sat. Night-Game Show		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	Dateline (In Stereo) (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons (R)	Frasier (R)	Seinfeld (R)	Friends (R)	Truth Behind the Sitcoms (R)		Greed: The Sexes (In Stereo)		News		Friends (R)	Fresier (R)
WWLP	22	News (N)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	Sat. Night-Game Show		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	Dateline (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (R)		Secrets of Lost Empires (R)		Nova "Crocodiles" (In Stereo)		Frontline "War in Europe" (R)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (R)
WGGB	22	News (R)	ABC News	Seinfeld (R)	Frasier (R)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Sports Night	NYPD Blue "Jackass" (R)		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WSBK	38	Judge Judy (R)	Judge Judy (R)	Seinfeld (R)	Frasier (R)	I Dare You! Ultimate Challeng		Monster Truz 2000: The New		Star Trek: Voyager "Caretaker"		Mad Abt You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne (R)	Roseanne (R)	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "It Could Happen to You" (1994, Comedy-Drama) Nicolas Cage					★★★ "Honeymoon in Vegas" (1992) James Caan
A&E	51	L.A. Law "Open Heart Fever" (R)		Law & Order "Casus Mortis" (R)		Biography: Telly Savalas		Investigative Reports (R) (R)				Law & Order "Denial" (R)
CNN	29	Worldview (R)	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire (R)	World Today (R)		Larry King Live (R)		Newsstand (R)		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	28	Saturday Night Live (R)		Daily Show (R)	Stain's Money	★★ "Teen Wolf" (1985, Comedy)		Michael J. Fox, James Hampton		Premium	Lizards	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	52	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Piranha		Bridges: Reaching Out (R)		New Dalecitvas: Forensic		FBI Files "A Model Killer" (R)		Bridges: Reaching Out (R)
ESPN	43	Sportscenter (R)		College Basketball: Purdue at Indiana (Live)				College Basketball: Kentucky at Mississippi State (Live)				Sportscenter (R)
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Chicago Hope "Deliverance" (R)		★★ "Double Jeopardy" (1996, Drama) Joe Penny, Tim Gerr				Putting Baby to Bed: Lila
MTV	53	MTV Jams	Beat Suite	Lyricist	News Link	TRL Wenta	TRL (R) (In Stereo)		Tom Green (R)	Tom Green	Lyricist	Undressed	Loveline
NICK	46	Hey Arnold! (R)	Hey Arnold! (R)	Rugrats (R)	Rugrats (R)	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Boy: Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons (R)	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI	61	Sliders "Asylum" (In Stereo) (R)		Xena: Warrior Princess (R)		Xena: Warrior Princess (R)		Xena: Warrior Princess (R)		Xena: Warrior Princess (R)		Poltergeist: The Legacy (R)
TLC	28	Home Again (Home Again		48 Hours "Trauma" (R)		Trauma: Life in the ER (R)		Mysteries of Cold Water		Survivor Sciarca "Jungle" (R)		Trauma: Life in the ER (R)
TNT	54	In the Heat of the Night (R)		ER (In Stereo) (R)		NBA Basketball: Miami Heat at San Antonio Spurs (In Stereo Live) (R)						NBA Basketball: Lakers at Trail Blazers
USA	59	Baywatch "Go for the Gold" (R)		JAG "Innocence" (In Stereo) (R)		Walker, Texas Ranger (R)				"Pay Code of Conduct" (1998, Action) Charlie Sheen, (In Stereo) (R)		Walker, Texas Ranger (R)
HBO	33	(5:30) ★★ "Last Action Hero" (1993) Arnold Schwarzenegger. (R)				★ "Baby Geniuses" (1999) Kathleen Turner. "PG"		★★½ "The Substitute 2: School's Out" (1998) "R"				Sopranos "D-Girl" (In Stereo) (R)
MAX	43	★★★ "The Package" (1989, Drama) Gene Hackman. (R)				★★½ "Wyatt Earp" (1994, Western) Kevin Costner, Dennis Quaid. (In Stereo) PG-13 (R)						I Still Know What You Did
SHOW	63	★★ "Sliding Doors" (1998, Comedy) Gwyneth Paltrow. "R" (R)				★★½ "The Faculty" (1998) Jordana Brewster. "R"		★★ "Phantoms" (1998, Horror) Peter O'Toole. (In Stereo) "R" (R)				"Whatever" "R"

HSCN 4 Housing Services Cable Network

HSCN Bulletin Board — Hartford
CBS/3 — Hartford
CBS/4 — Boston
ABC/5 — Boston
PBS/37 — Springfield
MSG/4 — Albany Ch.
UPN/20 — Hartford
Weather Channel
NBC/30 New Britain
Fox/61 — Hartford
PBS/24 — Hartford
WGCH & HSCN
International
UMass Academic TV
WB/New Haven
Sundance
The Learning Channel
UVC-TV19
ABC/40 Springfield
Gavel to Gavel
NBC/22 Springfield
CNN Headline News
CNN
CNN Fn
CNN SI
TBS
BET
College TV Network
Univision
Comedy Central
Cartoon Network
TV Land
C-Span
ZDTV (Tentative)
Bloomberg Financial Network
History Channel
HSCN Programming

Spoot By Mike Banchick

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis



Mutans Mutatis By Karl Ethan Levy III

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

Nena By Anna Faktorovich

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – There is a strange odor wafting through your life right now, one that won't go away if ignored. It may be time to clean out the refrigerator inside your soul.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You can put your talents to use in an unusual way today in order to increase your chance of success this week. Profits can multiply!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may have to work hard to free yourself from the grip of personal or professional jealousy today. You'll never be as good as those you envy; so you might as well give up.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may want to raise the stakes today if you feel you're in your element. Take care that you aren't misjudging your own abilities. Then again: never fly, never fall.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Your idea of what works for you may differ dramatically from what others close to you have been thinking. A year-end mistake can prove costly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Good information comes you way today, and you should be able to improve your financial situation as a result. Take a look at the big picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Now is no time to ignore your appearance, or to adopt a habit that others might consider negative. In other words, take a shower and ditch that dip can, sailor.

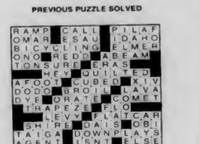
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Take decisive action today and you should be able to slow down a bit and relax some in the days to come. Actions now yield rewards.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may feel that it is taking too long to resolve a tense emotional issue. You can make a few decisions, which can speed things along today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may need to have your memory jogged a bit today before you recognize just how important certain episodes from your past are at this time. Ask a friend to slam your head in a door, or try self-hypnosis.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – A "repeat performance" of some kind is in store, and if you are in the spotlight you must be ready. Preparations should begin today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Even a little overindulgence can be dangerous today, and even minor ill effects may take some time to overcome at this time.



Quote of the Day

> "There's so much comedy on television. Does that cause comedy in the streets?"
>
> –Dick Cavett, author, TV talk show host, 1993

ACROSS

1 MP's concern
5 Hard to come by
9 Phony doctor
14 Man
15 China/Russia divider
16 Excessive
17 Frigg's husband
18 "Disclosure" star Moore
19 Chicago airport
20 Hotshot
22 Chewy treat
24 Have faith in 26 Hold gently
27 Crannies
30 Puppy sounds
35 Collect
36 Fibbed
37 Nah's opposite
38 Writer Fleming
39 Earliest
42 Genetic material
43 Thrilled
45 Like the Gobi
46 Rule
48 Soft leather
50 Olive Oyl's guy
51 Mimic
52 Paces
54 Causing a disturbance
58 Attack
62 "Catch-22" star
63 Harrow
65 Ancient musical instrument
66 Jazzy Lena
67 Produced
68 Pitcher Hershiser
69 Obstacles
70 Winter transport
71 Fresh information

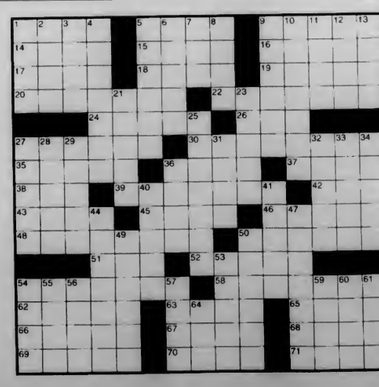
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN

1 In a frenzy
2 Dry riverbed
3 Dutra of golf
4 Dimensions
5 Arm bone
6 Murmurs of agreement
7 Pirate's swig
8 Clapton or Ambler
9 Certain minimum
10 Blue
11 First bone donor?
12 Heal
13 Ship bottom
21 Type of box or release
23 Etching needs
25 Winding around
27 River nymph
28 Picture
29 Kayak's cousin
31 Listen
32 Creepy
33 Long-lambed
34 Alan Ladd movie
36 Actress Petty
40 "The Old — Bucket"
41 Jogs
44 Shredding
47 Greek letter
49 Books' backs
50 — together: joined
53 Tolerate
54 Cheers
55 Household appliance
56 Gumbo ingredient
57 Emeralds or sapphires
59 Bronte's governess
60 Got larger
61 Slippery customers
64 Buddy

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.



Lunch

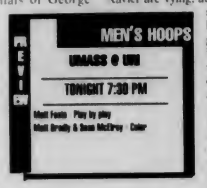
Rigatoni Sausage
Casserole
Chicken Quesadilla
Black Bean Quesadilla
Vegan Black Bean
Quesadilla

Dinner

Szechuan Beef &
Broccoli
Baked Ham
Quinoa Stuffed Tomato
Szechuan Tofu &
Broccoli
Leaping Wings &
Things
(Chicken Wing Special)

Night Editor: Adam White
Photo Technician: Becky Roddick
Copy Editor: Mary Grein
Production Supervisor: Seth Koenig
Production Staff: James Gilbert, Janine Tangney

Sports



Keep up to date with the world of sports.

Colonials settle, seniors scoot

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

Perhaps young and a shade raw, but these guys can flat out score.

Tonight at 7 p.m. at the William D. Mullins Center, the Massachusetts men's basketball team won't have much time to catch its breath as the ever-volatile Colonials of George Washington arrive in Amherst in hopes of locking up a first-round bye in next weekend's Atlantic 10 Tournament, much like the Minutemen are.

Speaking of byes, four seniors will say goodbye to the Amherst faithful, leaving behind a trail of success. Following tonight's contest, Mike Babul, Chris Kirkland, Monty Mack and Anthony Oates will march off the Amherst floor and hang up their home jerseys for the final time. While Babul, Kirkland and Oates are guaranteed not to be back, Mack can still earn back a year of eligibility by graduating in May, a pace he is currently on.

"I look at it as my real senior day. This is the year I get my diploma. I'm going to have my second one but I'm going to look more forward to this one," Mack, the team's leading scorer at 18 points per game, said. "We came in together and just to see them leave, we've been through so much. They'll always be there for me and I know I'll do the same."

Perhaps most remembering when they first stepped foot on campus as freshmen is head coach James "Bruiser" Flint, who must now see his first recruiting class leave the spotlight of the Mullins Center.

"We're his first team that he recruited, and I think he thinks highly of that, to be his first boys on Senior Day," Mack said. "I think it's going to be an emotional scene."

"It goes by so quick. You've seen everyone else go through it and it's my turn [tonight]," Babul said. "[Chris and I] have been through it all together, all four years. All the early morning runs, it culminates a good career for the both of us."

While UMass (15-12) and St. Bonaventure are knotted in second place at 9-5 in the East, GW and Xavier are vying, at 8-6, for the second spot out west. The loser of tonight's game puts itself behind the eight ball with only a full slate of Saturday games ahead.

It may mean very little in the win column outside of improving their NIT chances next month. With the Minutemen's only path to the NCAA Tournament going through the A-10 final, momentum will come in handy heading into the showdown of showdowns, this weekend's duel with the Bonnies in Olean for all the beans. Win or lose, the Minutemen's seed in the A-10 Tournament lies strictly on Saturday's matchup, as a win tonight means nothing if they come up empty at the Reilly Center. A win and the Minutemen have their much sought-after bye. A loss, paired with a UMass triumph over GW, would simply give SBU a better record head to head, this after the Bonnies' 70-60 win early last month.

Much more is on the line for George Washington (14-13) which, following tonight's clash, returns home in an attempt to knock off A-10 East champion Temple. The Owls clinched the division on Saturday with a 72-54 victory over the Minutemen in Philadelphia.

After a slow start, GW has taken eight of its last 10 games and has done it with a lethal scoring punch. Averaging 81 points per game, the Colonials have relied on a trio of talented newcomers to generate production on both ends. Just a freshman, SirValiant Brown is second to only Fresno State swingman Courtney Alexander, averaging 24.5 points per game despite shooting just 33 percent from the field. He is joined by Chris Monroe, who pours in 16 per contest while leading the team in rebounding, and Bernard Barrow, a juco transfer, who leads the offense onto the floor, handing out just under six assists each time out.

The Colonials have used a smothering press to force six more turnovers than they commit. It makes up for their erratic shooting on offense (41 percent from the field) and overall inability to rebound, especially after power forward/center Patrick Ngongba sustained a season-ending injury.

UMass has not seen much of a press this season, but what it's seen has been handled with success. The backcourt will dictate the Minutemen's success tonight, namely its ability to set up its halfcourt offense and beat the Colonials to the boards. Jonathan DePina logged just six minutes in the most recent loss to Temple, forcing Shannon Crooks and Monty Mack to leave the game for a combined six minutes. Mack scored a team-high 20 points, but the Minutemen fell victim to a 29-6 Temple second half run that proved fatal.

But fortunately for the Minutemen, little will be on the line and the focus can be on the departing seniors.

"It's been short, but it's been fun," Kirkland said. "All the fun times seem short and all the hard times seem long, but overall, I had fun."

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

Ronell Blizzard and the Massachusetts men's basketball team will take on George Washington tonight at 7 p.m. at the William D. Mullins Center.

UM men's gym splits with TU, Springfield

By Gary Mendese
Collegian Staff

They wanted to crush their nemesis on Sunday afternoon, but ended up finishing almost three points shy of the long-awaited victory.

With senior Mike Moran leading the team, the Temple Owls defeated the Massachusetts men's gymnastics team with a score of 222.850 to UMass' 220.025. Trailing in the dust of both teams was Springfield College, which finished last with a mark of 195.550.

Temple	222.850
UMass	220.025
Springfield	195.550

Moran won the all-around competition with a score 56.975, just one fall ahead of UMass' Jeff LaVallee, who finished up the meet with a 56.475. But overall, LaVallee had a great meet. He tied teammate junior Bryan McNulty for first on floor exercise (9.65), was second on the vault (9.75) and swung his way to gold on pommel horse (9.825). Ironically, the Olympic hopeful had a great high bar routine that only scored him a low 9.15.

"Jeff was way underscored," UMass men's gymnastics coach Roy Johnson said. "His low score on high bar was a travesty. I thought that took a little wind out of the sails for the guys. The three head judges were Temple alumni, and their scoring wasn't great. It was too bad; it could have been a great meet, but the scoring tainted it."

While some scores were certainly out of line, there were some awesome numbers posted by the Minutemen throughout the meet. In fact, the Maroon and White posted its all-time UMass record for vault (58.70), an event that has been rather inconsistent this season.

For starters, junior Eric Bacon nailed his vault and posted his career-high score of 9.70. Next in the lineup was junior Mike Alexander, who brought in a much-needed big score for the Minutemen and tied his career-high score of 9.50. Finishing up for UMass on the vault were McNulty and LaVallee, who tied for second-place overall with season-high marks of 9.75. The score was also McNulty's career high on the event.

Also among the top scorers for the Minutemen was freshman Justin Huntmar, who brought in a 9.65 for his team on the pommel horse, placing him third overall. The Minnesota native has been a consistent contributor to the pommel horse lineup and big things can be expected of him in the future.

Although they ended the competition with a second place finish, Johnson and his team enjoyed the meet.

"Without a doubt, this was the best competition of the year," Johnson said. "The guys knew it would be an important meet and they really trained for it. We really hit on vault and overall, floor and pommels went pretty well."

The Minutemen will be in action again this Saturday, as they travel to Burlington, Vermont to compete in the New England Championships. UMass needs a high score to move up in the national rankings, and hopes to come out strong and post the 226 or higher the team has been seeking throughout the season thus far.

UMass eyeballs Division I-A: football team looks for league

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

This article is the first installment in a series on the future of University of Massachusetts football and the possible move to Division I-A competition.

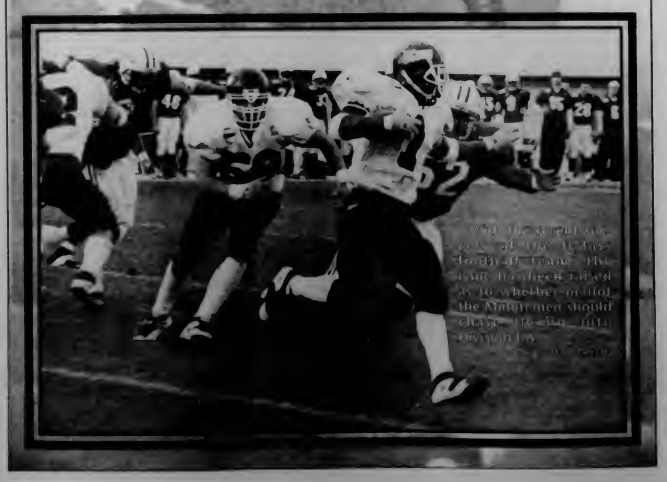
Just a year removed from winning the 1998 NCAA Division I-AA National Championship and after compiling a 9-2 record over the first two years of coach Mark Whipple's regime, the Massachusetts football team faces a crossroads in its storied legacy.

After watching archrival Connecticut make the jump from D I-AA to Division I-A ball, where it will likely take on notable opponents like Miami and Boston College, UMass is exploring the possibility of upgrading the only sports team on campus that doesn't compete at the highest possible level.

"Success certainly makes things go a lot easier. There's a lot more interest to make a move if a team is 11-1 rather than 1-11," UMass Athletic Director Bob Marcum said. "You also have to look around and see what the institutions that you are compared with are doing, and if UConn can move up, then we have to at least explore our options."

Many factors must be considered in deciding whether or not to make the change, including most prominently the financial burdens the University would incur attempting to do so. Athletic costs would skyrocket with the addition of scholarships and stadium expansion, among other things.

However, before the dollar signs can be pounded out, the Minutemen must have a conference to play in. Massachusetts' current league, the Atlantic 10, is not only facing [illegible] sports, losing UConn, Virginia Tech [illegible] sports [illegible] play in the A-10 football is also a Division I-AA conference. If UMass wants to play with the nation's absolute best, it must leave the A-10, probably in all sports, and make an allegiance elsewhere.



Leaving the A-10 to play D I-A football without signing on in a new conference is not a legitimate option for the Maroon and White, as the only school currently able to thrive with an independent top-level squad is Notre Dame. Even powerhouses like Penn State and Florida State left their isolated status to join influential leagues, the Big Ten and the Atlantic Coast Conference, respectively.

"When I was at South Carolina, we were an independent in a time when it was a lot easier to put a schedule together. There were a huge collection of teams like Notre Dame, Florida State and Miami who were independents," Marcum said. "Today, it's more difficult because you can't guarantee yourself X number of home games. As an independent, we would certainly be a road team."

Of all the conferences in the nation, seven belong to the Bowl Championship Series consortium, which, in layman's terms, makes the teams therein the only ones capable of winning the National Title. Again, Notre Dame is the only unit that is in the BCS that does not have a league affiliation.

The BCS consists of the Irish, the Big Ten, the ACC, the Big East, the Big XII, the Pacific 10, the Southeastern Conference and Conference USA. The latter group's champion is the only one without guaranteed access to one of the four BCS bowls (the

Turn to LEAGUE, page 9

Hockey East out of focus

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL, MA– As the nine members of the Hockey East conference prepare to head into the final weekend of the regular season, practically every team is fighting for playoff position in one way or another.

The lone exception to that rule is Boston University, which clinched the No. 1 seed, as well as an automatic bid into the NCAA tournament, with a 4-3 win over crosstown rival Northeastern on Sunday afternoon. Who the Terriers will play in the quarterfinal round of the playoffs is still up in the air.

One of those teams which has a chance of playing the Beantown school in the first round is Massachusetts. The Minutemen currently sit all alone in eighth place thanks to a 5-1 victory over No. 6 Boston College on Saturday night at Kelley Rink.

The win was also a welcome change for UMass, which had lost five one-goal games and two two-goal games this season against Top-10 teams before upending the Eagles on Saturday night.

"These guys have worked so hard all year long and they deserved this," UMass hockey coach Joe Mallen said. "Night in and night out, they just keep working and working, keeping a good attitude, so this is a big win for us. Now the rest of it, we have to play out from here."

The Minutemen currently sit two points ahead of last place UMass-Lowell, which will close out its regular season on Saturday night with a home game against Northeastern. On the other hand, the Maroon and White will wrap up its slate with a weekend home-and-home series against No. 4 New Hampshire.

A win or a tie on Friday night at the Whittemore Center would clinch the eighth and final playoff spot for UMass. However, should the Minutemen sweep the Wildcats and seventh-place Merrimack loses at BU on Friday, UMass would earn the seventh spot due to the fact that it would have more league wins than the Warriors.

Things don't get much clearer at the top of the conference standings. After BU, UNH, BC and Maine are all battling it out for positions two through four in the league. New Hampshire currently has the upper hand, but could drop down to fourth if it falters against the Minutemen this weekend. The Eagles play at Northeastern on Friday night and home against BU on Sunday night.

Regardless of where those three teams finish, each will host a lower seed in the quarterfinals.

Despite the setback to UMass on Saturday, Boston College remains one of the hottest teams in the league. Coach Jerry York's club is 8-3 in its last 11 games and has won the conference tournament the past two seasons. The Eagles, who started the season as the No. 1 team in the country, have also reached the national finals and semifinals in the past two years.

"We're playing a lot better than we were in October. This is a good month to be playing well," York said. "I think that we've got a good chance to make some things happen."

The fifth, sixth and seventh spots are also wide open. As of now, Northeastern is one point ahead of Providence, which is three points ahead of Merrimack. However, both PC and Merrimack can move ahead of the Huskies if they lose games to BC and Lowell this weekend.

Providence, who has rebounded from a major slump that occurred right after Christmas Break, is 6-2 in its last eight games. Winning two games this weekend won't be easy though, as the Friars will host a couplet against Maine.

The final weekend of the regular season is sure to be an action-packed event throughout Hockey East. With every team in the hunt for playoff position, there shouldn't be a shortage of excitement across New England.

UMass men's track team posts solid showing at New Englands

By Jen Cormier
Collegian Staff

They've done it again.

For the Massachusetts men's indoor track team, the 1999-2000 season has been one of challenges, tests and obstacles. At the start of the winter campaign, coach Ken O'Brien's mind was swimming with uncertainties. He was hesitant about whether his young squad could even handle the pressures of everyday collegiate play, much less that of championship-caliber competition.

Even as O'Brien watched his team progress and evolve to take its place among the region's crème de la crème, his biggest fear still haunted him – Would the squad's overall inexperience cause the players to crack under the pressure?

Now, nearly three months later, O'Brien's mind is finally at ease. This past weekend, the Minutemen erased any lingering doubt their coach may have had about their ability. The Maroon and White clinched an impressive fourth place showing at the New England Indoor Championship at Boston University, finishing behind UConn, Northeastern and Rhode Island.

The two-day meet featured 43 New England schools from all three NCAA divisions. Although the Minutemen were not able to match last year's second place showing, O'Brien noted that competition among the top 10 was extremely tight.

"We stayed in the battle," he said. "We had a shot at second pretty much throughout the course of the meet."

Freshman Stefan Russ penned another chapter for his rookie success story, finishing second in the high jump with a career-best leap of 6-feet-9 inches. He also notched a personal best performance in the qualifying heat for the 200-meters with a time of 22.22.

The Maroon and White's sole first-place finish came from sophomore sprinter Adrian Zullo, who won the 55-meter dash with a time of 6.41. Zullo also performed admirably in the 200-meters. In the qualifying heat, his time of 22.03 was the third best time in UMass history. In the finals, Zullo placed fifth with a time of 22.05.

Senior Vic Morency rounded out the triumvirate with solid performances in the shot put and the 35-pound weight throw. He nabbed second in shot with a toss of 54.5 feet and third in weight throw with a distance of just over 59 feet.

"Those guys performed perfectly for us," O'Brien said of his squad's star trio. "They all met or exceeded their pre-meet rankings. Our top guys really came through and upheld their responsibilities and that's what really stabilizes a team."

Other Minutemen that performed notably were junior Hugh Reid, who placed fifth in the 500-meters (1:04.77) and sophomore Mike Howell, who nabbed sixth in the 400-meters (49.85). The 4 x 800 relay team turned in a season-high performance with a time of 7:48.26. The

Turn to TRACK, page 9

MARCH
2000

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian
New England's largest college daily

Volume CVJ Issue 25 Wednesday, March 1, 2000

AC hosts anti-violence forum

UMass alum and founder of Mentors in Violence Prevention, Jackson Katz, talked yesterday in Amherst College

UM alum spurs talk on violence

By Virginia Avedision
Collegian Staff

Some students may recall Jackson Katz, founder of Mentors in Violence Prevention (MVP) and a University of Massachusetts alum speaking to the community last semester after several sexual attacks plagued the campus.

The interest that was generated from the packed auditorium last year resulted in the University asking him to come back last night to speak once again, according to Merle Ryan, Dean of Students. Although, this time, Jackson Katz, a nationally known activist and lecturer, came to conduct training workshops for staff and students.

The University has named this project, the Campus Violence Prevention Initiative. "This project is not just a one time thing, yet instead, is an ongoing project in order to work with male students in order to prevent men's violence against women," said Ryan.

The MVP Model, a part of Katz's company, which now includes a women's component, was designed in 1993. Initially started at Northeastern University's Center for the Study of Sport in Society, the MVP Program was the first large-scale effort of its kind to enlist high school, collegiate and professional athletes as agents to prevent men's

Turn to PROGRAM, page 3

Katz returns with strong ideas

By Matt Foster
Collegian Staff

Jackson Katz, a leader in the anti-sexist movement in the 1980s and 1990s, spoke last night at Amherst College regarding male violence against females.

Katz was an All State football player at UMass, and was the first male to graduate with a degree in Women's Studies.

He founded the Boston based group "Real Men" which Katz called an "anti-sexist men's organization." He went on to co-found the "MVP" (Mentors in Violence Prevention) program, which trained high school, college, and professional sports teams, as well as the Marine Corps on how to deal with sexual harassment and violence towards women.

Katz began his address by describing his work with "Real Men".

"Our purpose was to encourage men to speak up against sexism and all forms of men's violence against women," Katz said.

He continued with an exercise in which he asked the males in the audience to raise their hands if they had a female in their life that they cared about. Every male did. This was to prove that "every issue that affects the women and girls that we [men] care about affects us [men] by definition," Katz said.

He struck out against such phrases as "the gender war," "the battle between the sexes," or "the men against the women," calling them "nonsense."

"We need to... think differently" about those issues commonly referred to as women's issues, he said.

Katz spoke next on the way crimes against women are talked about.

"We say, 'How many women were raped last semester, in Amherst? How many teenage girls got pregnant last year?" Katz said that this way of speaking "shifts our attention off the boys and men, and onto the girls and women."

Another problem with thinking today, according to Katz, is that we are so desensitized to the problems.

In his next exercise with the audience, Katz divided a blackboard in half, marking one side with the male symbol and the other with the female symbol.

Katz mentioned the history of the Roman Gods associated with each symbol. "Mars, the symbol of manhood, is the god of war. Venus, the symbol of womanhood, [is] the goddess of love and physical beauty. We've demonstrated that from antiquity, the symbol of manhood has been violence and the symbol of womanhood is love and physical beauty."

He then asked the men "what steps do you take ... on a daily basis to prevent yourselves from being sexually assaulted?" When no answers came, he addressed the question to the women, who proceeded to fill up their side of the blackboard with the different steps they take for their protection.

Most of the steps listed were mainly for use outside of the women's home.

"A women in the United States is nine times more likely to be assaulted in her own home then she is to be assaulted out in the world somewhere," Katz explained.

"And the person who's going to assault her is not some 'Freddy Kruger' psycho... it's her boyfriend, or her husband, it's another man in her family or friendship circle," he continued.

Katz explained the lack of male protective steps by saying that men are concerned with being assaulted, not by females, Katz said, but by other males.

"When we as men are concerned that other men are going to assault us, most of us are thinking about the possibility of being physically assaulted... We're thinking about being jumped, being mugged, being beaten up, sometimes we're worried about getting stabbed; sometimes we're worried about getting shot. But most of us are not thinking about the possibility of being sexually assaulted," he explained.

Katz then explained the MVP program's training method's, which included scenarios ranging from "gang rapes to the extreme, to a group of guys standing around telling sexist jokes about women with no women present."

Katz went on to attack such personalities as Andrew Dice Clay and Howard Stern for their sexist comments.

Katz closed the evening with a piece of advise to the women and one to the men.

"To the women, I hope you take advantage of this ... historical era of which you're coming of age," he said, citing the women's movement as an ongoing revolution.

"To the men... if you really do care about these women and girls and you haven't stood up and spoken out and supported them in various ways, then start doing it," he concluded.

Open forum on Old Chapel eyes the future

By Virginia Avedision
Collegian Staff

After last night's open forum on what should be done with the Old Chapel, there were many different and colorful responses from students and faculty on what to do with the landmark.

Many students expressed confusion on who should dwell in the building after renovations of the Chapel are completed.

As many students on campus know, the Chapel housed the Marching Band for the last 23 years until just recently when the University decided to shut down the building for renovations. Within that time, the permit for the Marching Band to stay there ran out, leaving the Band with no place to practice and store equipment.

Many band members who were present at last night's forum spoke of their concern about the band "getting it back." Michelle Salek, a member of the UMass Marching Band, emotionally expressed her concern for the use of the building by the band itself by saying, "I don't feel all that comfortable practicing in the Fine Arts Center, and the basement of the Old Chapel would be a great place to practice for band members."

In addition, many members of the band said they were in favor of the Chapel being used for the storage of band uniforms. Evan Adler, manager of the UMass Marching Band, said when he first came to the University, he saw people playing football on the lawn and heard music coming from the upstairs of the Chapel, "that to me was very inviting," he said.

Other students on campus seemed to only know that the band at one time had the building, therefore, many feel that the building should go back to the band. Vinny Dolan, a senior at the University said, "Put the band back in – if the shoe fits wear it. the band was good in there before."

Many others expressed their concerns for the use of the Chapel for different religious ceremonies. One man recalled first coming to UMass and commenting that this was the only campus that did not have a place of worship actually on campus for students to go to.

Still others commented on how they thought the building should be used for the performing arts, public speakers, and galleries. One woman expressed her concern that since Hampden closed down, there are not enough places on campus for small performing arts.

"I think the Old Chapel kind of looks like it would be an art building, used for things such as student created art, in a gallery type setting," said Joel Trinque, a senior.

"I definitely think that the building should be preserved, not only for historic reasons, but also because it's one of the more attractive buildings on campus," Katie Donnelly, a freshman said. "When people think of the University, they think of the Chapel – I mean, it's on our ID cards."

Many professors also have their own opinions on what should be done with the building. Adrian Fielding, a sociology professor and graduate student, said, "Clearly I think that the University should make it available to students here. This is indicative of how the University places importance on the students. It's just ridiculous that there is a chance that it may not be available to them."

Students were also concerned that they had never been in the building. Many students expressed that they were curious as to what the Chapel looked like inside, and that they felt that it was ridiculous that they may not get the chance.

"I feel that the Chapel should be open to the public. I've been here for two and a half years and I've never even seen the inside," said Leslie VanDewark, a senior.

The University has not yet made its decision on what to do with the Chapel. The Facilities Planning Division is planning to hold at least two more open forums on what to do with the building, which will be announced at a later date.

BY THE SLICE...

Antonio's Pizza employee, Steve prepares a delicious pizza for a customer.

Political Group Requests and Allocations

Political Advocacy Groups	Request 2000 fiscal yr.	Allocation 2000 fiscal yr.
Republican Club
Pride Alliance	$11,165	$10,815
Silent Majority	$8,465	$6,665
Radical Student Union	$3,500	$3,500
University Democrats	$4,570	$2,550
Cannabis Reform Coalition	$3,350	$645
Habitat for Humanity	$2,545	$300
Animal Rights Coalition	$600	$250
Friends of Rail	$628	$210
Feminist Majority	$10,251	$100
Students for a Free Tibet	$1,380	$ -
	$8,650	$ -

SGA's allocation of RSO's budgets under scrutiny

By Natty Yagudin and Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

This is the second in a series on the SGA's budget allocations for the past three years.

In the past, the Student Government Association has raised its own funding by 60 percent to hire a new office manager while many agencies have been denied funding for additional staff members this year, a Massachusetts Daily Collegian news analysis of the SGA budget indicates.

SCFRA, an agency of the SGA, was rated in the past, as the agency with the highest satisfaction rate for its budget request – it received 95 percent of its request.

In addition, SCFRA's budget allocations have been steady for the past two years, remaining relatively unchanged for 1999 and declining by $687 for the Fiscal Year (FY) 2000.

The largest recipient among the agencies, the Student Legal Services Office, has been denied about $60,000 in funding for additional full time and part time staff.

The Student Legal Services Office (SLSO) is an agency that provides legal assistance, advocacy and education for UMass students. Its large budget consisting of over $300,000 currently covers the salaries of three attorneys, according to last year's budget proposal.

The SLSO's allocation has been rising steadily over the past two years, increasing by $9,717 in 1999 and $11,554 more in their allocated budget for the FY 2000.

The Center for Student Businesses (CSB), which received only 57 percent of what it requested, was also denied funding for additional staff members.

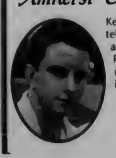
"We for three years went for an [additional staff member's position]," said Katja Haan, the director of the CSB. "They didn't give us the money."

This year, the allocation to the CSB remained about the same, rising only one percent.

The ALANA office, advocating for minority students, has also seen a steady increase in its disbursements with an increase of $11,868 in 1999 and $8,088 for FY 2000. This year, it received 85 percent of its request.

With these increasing trends, the Republican Club is the only political advocacy group on campus that increased its budget allocation continuously for the past two years to more than $10,000 last year.

The Republican Club's allocation

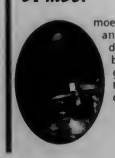


Turn to SGA, page 3

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 50 LOW: 34	HIGH: 45 LOW: 26	HIGH: 45 LOW: 29

SOURCE: CNN.COM



Dueling with Amherst College

Ken McDonald has a secret tell about that little liberal arts college up the road. Find out what it is, and much, much more inside.

LOCAL PAGE 4

A taste of moe.

moe. came to town recently and we've got the low-down, as well as all the best places in the area to grab breakfast and kill that hangover. Arts: we drink... that's it.

ARTS PAGE 6

Captain Kirk

Men's hoop senior captain Chris Kirkland was looking for a win over GW last night at the Mullins. Check out the sports page to see if he got one.

SPORTS PAGE 12

Arts & Living 6
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Du Bois published in Africa

By Heather Palmer
Collegian Correspondent

"The Soul of Blacks Folks," a classic work by W.E.B Du Bois, will be published throughout Africa and the Arabic-speaking World.

Last Wednesday at the 132nd birthday celebration for W.E.B. Du Bois, Linda Seidman, head of special collection and archives, made the announcement public.

"The Soul of Black Folks" is a collection of essays discussing various aspects of racism in America. The book was originally published in 1903 and will be currently published by the Egyptian Ministry of Culture. University of Massachusetts Professor David Du Bois will write an introduction to the book.

Du Bois said, I was very pleased and surprised by the Egyptian government's interest in the book." Du Bois is the stepson of W.E.B Du Bois.

"This is part of a global program that is taking place in Egypt," Du Bois said. "The program is very concerned at getting non-Arabic books of value and importance to be translated, published, and distributed."

"I do believe the interest in Egypt in the translation of African Americans in the United States will be of great interest because it is a very moving account of what it means to be African American in the United States," Du Bois said.

"For most of December and January I spent time in Egypt. When I was there a good friend of mine told me the Egyptian Ministry of Culture had interest in publishing the book," Du Bois said.

"This will be the first time "The Soul of Black Folks" will be published by a government agent. Usually the books are published by private companies on a commercial basis," Du Bois said. "I only considered letting the government take over the book because a close friend of mine in Egypt proposed the idea and he has knowledge of as well as interest in W.E.B. Du Bois's work."

The book has been translated in many languages across the world. Du Bois is working with private companies to get the book published in the German language in Berlin, the Spanish language in Cuba, and the Japanese language. Du Bois said no contracts have been set up as of yet for these additional languages.

Du Bois believes the book will have a good impact on Egyptian society. "The Arabic language publishing "The Soul of Black Folks" in Egypt is a recognition on the part of the government of Egypt on an Egyptian's place in Africa."

"This is extremely important because the idea of Egypt as an African nation is uncommon for the Western hemisphere, mainly North America. And the publication of this book and distribution reflects the awareness of African Americans and African continental unity or tie."

"This is very important for me for this reason," Du Bois said. "I have met Egyptians who have problems identifying themselves as Africans. I believe this book will help them define themselves as Africans."

Du Bois traveled to Egypt in the 1960's. He had a desire to see the African Continent. "When I arrived in Alexandria, I fell in love with it," he said.

Du Bois stayed in Africa for twelve years. He taught American Literature in the English Language Department at Cairo University for a year. The rest of his time in Egypt he spent as a journalist.

Du Bois will return to Egypt in January when "The Soul of Black Folks" will be released.

Journalism professor, David Du Bois will write the introduction of "The Soul of Blacks Folks" a book written by W.E.B Du Bois.

Al Gore remains an enigma to many

By Edwin Chen
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON – To much of America, he may be Mr. Environment. But at home, Al Gore was just another scofflaw. Finally one of his kids urged: "Dad, turn off the water when you're brushing your teeth!"

He denounces violent images in entertainment. Yet one of his favorite movies is "The Matrix," a sci-fi film filled with blood and... gore.

A minor contradiction in each case, to be sure. But they are emblematic of the sort of duality that defines Albert Arnold Gore Jr.

Now, in his relentlessly combative bid to become the next president of the United States, Gore remains – after 23 years in public life – a study in contrasts, an enigma to friends and supporters.

"He's just like everybody else," insists Tipper Gore, the vice president's wife of 29 years. "We all struggle with our idealism and our practical daily realities."

Known for his high-wattage intellect, Gore also is working on becoming a better listener, especially with well-meaning advisers.

Few people have had to grapple with more competing demands – and his own demons – in so public a manner as the vice president.

Now the conflicts of his biography mirror the challenges of his campaign to succeed Bill Clinton.

A decade ago, Gore resolved to no longer "put a finger to the political winds" when facing tough choices. Yet when he embarked on this campaign, Gore assembled an organization top-heavy with pricey pollsters and controversial consultants.

As vice president, he has wielded more clout than any of his 44 predecessors. He is among the nation's most cerebral politicians – an extraordinarily disciplined and competitive man on a never-ending quest for excellence. Yet he has an inexplicable tendency to embellish his resume.

He clings to President Clinton's popular economic policies but distances himself from the White House on issues such as global trade and abortion funding, saying that he would do things differently – even while urging Congress to back Clinton's agenda.

"It's a tightrope that he's had to walk all his life," says a longtime Gore confidant.

But the vice president does not see his life as a high-wire balancing act.

"A tightrope has a lot of tension – you always worry about falling off one side or the other," Gore said.

He has worried about the inconsistencies in his life before.

College survey

By Mary Grein
Collegian Staff

Over the next few weeks, randomly selected freshman and seniors at the University of Massachusetts Amherst and approximately 275 other colleges and universities across the nation will have the chance to share their views by completing The College Student Report.

The report, a part of the National Survey of Student Engagement (NSSE) is an initiative of The Pew Charitable Trusts. The NSSE project is meant to provide colleges and universities with information about students' views of collegiate quality.

The project is also designed to re-focus public discussion on things that "really matter to quality undergraduate education: what students do and what they say about their experience," according to a representative of the project.

The project maintains that the reason for the survey has a large amount to do with properties. The group asked a serious of questions, and felt that the best way to address the issues brought up by those questions was to ask students how they felt.

One of the first questions asked by the group was, "what constitutes quality in the undergraduate experience?"

In response to this question, it was decided that collegiate rankings focus mostly on what students like when they start college, for example their entrance exam scores or high school class rank. Also institutional resources are emphasized in terms of numbers of faculty members, library books and computer terminals.

On the contrary, what the group believed was more important was what mattered most to student learning; how students apply their abilities in using the institution's resources.

The report, one which will continue to circulate over the next month, takes less than 15 minutes to complete according to the group, and students have the option of using either the paper or web version.

The questions focus on how and where students spend their time, the nature and quality of their interactions with faculty members and peers, and what they have gained from their classes and other aspects of their college experience.

Once the report is completed and compiled, accrediting bodies, governmental agencies, and prospective students will use it.

Pew Chairtable Trusts, the trust that supports the report is an organization that in its mission statement says it is interested in college students and collegiate quality.

The Trust is based in Philadelphia, and in 1999, with approximately $4.9 billion in assets, the Trusts granted over $250 million in 260 nonprofit organizations.

Weekend peace marred by drunks, UMPD responds to incidents

By Daniel Ruetenik
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police arrested nine people in six separate alcohol related incidents this weekend. They also received a report of a possible assault and battery in Mackimmie Dorm and another on North Hadley Rd.

Police began the weekend on Friday at around eight in the evening when an officer noticed a suspicious individual urinating on a car. The approached the suspect and came across two other males carrying beer. All of the individuals were under the age of 21 and had been warned previously by officers not to drink.

One of the individuals was caught possessing a false New Jersey license. All three were arrested for underage possession of alcohol, one is being charged with disorderly conduct for urinating, and one is being charged with possession of a false or altered RMV document.

Early Saturday morning, police arrested Adam D. Gray, a 19-year old Bradford resident for possession of a stolen street sign from Gray St. and underage possession of beer.

Later in the early morning hours, police received a report of a noise complaint in Mackimmie Dorm. A resident advisor had been unable to obtain cooperation from some individuals in a room to turn down their music. Police arrived and contacted the resident director to receive permission to gain access to the room.

Police entered the room by using a master key and found 10 individuals consuming alcohol. Allegedly there was keg in the room and a small amount of marijuana. Police arrested Brian R. Duffy and Corey M. Carvalho, the residents of the room, for several alcohol related charges, possession of marijuana and having a noisy and disorderly house.

Police also arrested Theodore C. Fernald for drunk driving, Daniel M. Costa for underage possession of alcohol, and Jeremy Hunt for drunk driving, possession of a class D substance and crosswalk violations.

Also on Saturday, a previous report of assault and battery was reported to police. The victim was allegedly in Mackimmie Dorm, attempting to mediate an argument between two people, when two females ran at him, yelling and screaming.

According to James C. Lyons, Associate Director of Public Safety, the victim started to imitate the females, which angered them and they proceeded to hit him over the head and rip his shirt. The victim left the scene, but returned later to request that the assailants pay for damages to his shirt. They refused, and he has decided to press charges for assault and battery.

ITEM OF THE WEEK

REGULARLY $24.99-$19.99
Take additional $5 OFF Ticket Price

LONG SLEEVED UMASS SPORT GRAPHIC TEES

Lacrosse, Hockey, Crew, Soccer, Basketball & Football

COLLEGIATE Casuals
UMass Clothing for Everyone
M-Th 8:30-6 Fri. 8:30-5
Sat. 11 to 4
(413) 545 - 2619

THE University Store
Not like a mall... Better.

Something Every Friday
PRESENTS:

Barbara Kessler, Jess Kline, & Kris Delmhorst

These individual performers each have their own unique sound that is a blend of rock and folk music. This program is in celebration of "March' Women's History Month." The program is FREE and donations will be appreciated to benefit battered women and children. Refreshments will be served.

Student Union Ballroom Friday, March 3, 2000, 8pm

Visit us on the Web: http://www.umass.edu/events/calendar.htm

■ SGA

continued from page 1

increased by 177 percent in the spring of 1998 and jumped again by 63 percent last spring.

Michael Rossettie, president of the UMass Republican Club, said the club has been in existence for 18 years and their budget has gradually been consistently increasing, Rossettie said.

"Because we've been around for a long time and have a history of putting on successful events, our budget has respectively increased over this period," Rossettie said.

The Republican Club has been the largest single political recipient of money for two consecutive years, followed by Pride Alliance, which received 29 percent of the money distributed to political advocacy groups last spring.

Overall, conservative political student organizations received 57 percent of the total money distributed to political advocacy groups this past spring.

According to Rossettie, the large budget that they receive can be accounted for by the fact that there are currently only two conservative political groups on the campus and they are one of them.

"If you look at all the political groups on campus, there are only two conservative ones," Rossettie said. "If you total the budget of all the liberal RSOs, they get much more [money] than the conservative ones."

The third largest single political recipient is Silent Majority, a conservative organization that distributes the Minuteman newsletter.

According to Ways and Means Chair Amy Pellegrino, most organizations that have not petitioned for funding in the last two years cannot receive a budget of over $750. However, according to spring 1998 statistics, the Silent Majority was the largest recipient of money of all new political advocacy groups that received money after petitioning for the first time. In fact, it received more than double the money of all the new political student groups combined.

Silent Majority has also been the only RSO last year to receive 100 percent of its budget request from the SGA. The Republican Club placed a close second, receiving 97 percent of the money it requested.

The only two other political advocacy student groups that received over 50 percent of their budget request were Pride Alliance, which received 79 percent, and the Radical Student Union, which received 56 percent of the money it requested.

The University Democrats, who requested money from the SGA for the first time last spring, received $645, or 19 percent of the money requested.

"It made us budget our year more conservatively," said Aaron Saunders, president of the University Democrats.

Still, the University Democrats received $800 from finance reserves this fall.

The Cannabis Reform Coalition, which was also a new student group last year, received $300, or 12 percent of its budget request.

The groups that saw the sharpest decline in their budget allocations from last year were Friends of Rail (the Anti-Imperialist League), which saw an 87 percent drop in its budget allocation, and the Animal Rights Coalition, which saw a 63 percent drop in its money allocation.

Friends of Rail hadn't spent any money for its activities at the time of requesting a budget, and the Animal Rights Coalition spent only roughly 25 percent of its budget at the time of request.

While the number of political advocacy groups expanded in the last year, distribution of the money granted to those groups was uneven, according to figures. Over 80 percent of the money was allocated to roughly a third of the groups. The smaller student groups tended to experience volatility in the budgets granted to them, while larger existing groups experience relative stability or a consistent increase in their budgets.

Both the Feminist Majority Leadership Alliance and Students for Free Tibet applied for money but didn't receive any last year. The Feminist Majority applied for $1,380 and Students for a Free Tibet requested $8,650.

All RSO budget requests for spring 2000 are due today, at which time the Ways and Means Committee will receive the requests and place them under review.

■ program

continued from page 1

violence against women.

MVP Strategies was later founded in 1996 to take the MVP Model beyond sports culture into other traditionally male areas such as the military. It provides gender violence prevention training and materials to the U.S. military services, colleges, fraternities, law enforcement agencies, high schools, community organizations, and small and large corporations. Jackson said in one statement, "our primary mission is to empower men who are not abusive toward women to confront men who are."

About 30 men from Amherst and Hampshire College, UMass Faculty, the Athletic Department, the Police Department Greek Affairs, and Residence Life were all trained over the past two days to conduct workshops for men at the University to prevent men's violence against women sometime after spring break.

These workshops are created "to help intervene, not make men into guardian angels." Ryan said. Jackson did a series of examples of ways in which men can help intervene in situations where a woman may be assaulted.

In one exercise, he asked the participants to close their eyes and imagine a woman that they are close to, whether she is their mother, sister or even girlfriend, being raped. This moved many men into thinking about any girl that they see on campus, whether it be at a party, outside, or even in a dorm, this girl could be someone's sister, girlfriend or just close friend.

Another example of preventing men's violence against women that Katz used was to imagine that you are a man at a party. You see one of your close female friends who happens to be drunk, being "hit on," by another male there. You are worried about her, but what can you do? These are the kinds of things that Katz "threw out" to the group, and then expanded upon how these situations can be dealt with and how to even prevent them.

Many men there said they believed the program was positive. Seth Avakian, the student trustee, said, "we are basically here to help train other men from the Five College Area to initially discuss with other men about the actions and attention surrounding violence against women. Most importantly, it conveys the idea that it takes a much stronger man to stand up to injustice rather than to go along with the crowd."

Byron Hurt, Jackson's partner and friend, commented on how MVP has totally changed his life and has made him a better man, "I can't tell you how much it means to me to be working with Jackson, and how this program has changed not only my life, but also how I can see how it changes others as well."

Another man who attended the program, E.J. Mills, Football coach at Amherst College said, "This training program was excellent. It included things that to some degree were common sense, in the aspects of treating one another, yet these points were so articulated that it was much easier to understand them and to learn different ways in which to teach them to others."

Jackson commented finally by saying, "the main goal of this program is to not just teach these strategies on an individual level as such, but to incorporate this into being a regular part of campus life."

UNDERGRADUATE STUDY ABROAD

GREAT BRITAIN
AUSTRALIA
IRELAND
NEW ZEALAND

ARGENTINA
CHILE
COSTA RICA

Fall, Spring or Full Year. Scholarships Available.

Study Abroad Information Session:
Representative: Carolyn Watson
Date: Thursday, March 2
Location: 11:00 am - 1:00 pm
Information Table
Campus Center Concourse

For further information contact the Institute for Study Abroad, Butler University, 4600 Sunset Avenue, Indianapolis, IN 46208, Tel: 800/858-0229 Fax: 317/940-9704

INSTITUTE FOR STUDY ABROAD
BUTLER UNIVERSITY

Do you want to be a part of the biggest student-run business on campus?

Are you interested in a career in Human Resources?

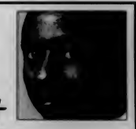
Collegian is accepting applications for the position of Human Resource Coordinator.

Applications can be picked up at the Collegian in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Interested applicants should possess excellent communication and computer skills.

Any questions can be directed to christine Carroll at 545-3500 or hrcollegian@yahoo.com

Collegian
Accounting Clerk
ALL MAJORS WELCOME TO APPLY



Work [illegible] per week, scheduling

Must possess [illegible] math and communication skills

Deadline for application is Friday, March [illegible]th

Contact Christine Carroll for more info
pick up applications in Rm. 113
Campus Center Basement

Different or Alike

How many times have you heard it? Or maybe you've said it yourself: "I don't want to be like everyone else. I want to be different." At CIGNA, we welcome that attitude, because people who have it aren't likely to settle for the same old careers. We are always looking for bright, creative graduates who see things differently, who just may have the insight to help us and our customers find new solutions.

You see, CIGNA is different. Sure we're an employee benefits and financial services company with approximately 43,000 employees worldwide and $93 billion in assets. But beyond those numbers, we truly are committed to improving the lives of the people we serve every day. From health care to investment services, we strive to live up to our reputation as "A Business of Caring."

Working at CIGNA is different. We don't force you into a job that doesn't fit your abilities. What we do is find rewarding and challenging opportunities for tomorrow's business leaders. We also understand that you want to keep growing in your career. Our professional development and job rotation programs let you explore various options and areas of interest throughout the company. Which is probably why we continue to appear in several of America's "best places to work" surveys.

One CIGNA: Many Opportunities.

CIGNA
A Business of Caring.

Visit us on the Web:
www.cigna.com/working/college

We're an equal opportunity employer. M/F/D/V. "CIGNA" refers to CIGNA Corporation and/or one or more of its subsidiaries. Most employees are employed by subsidiaries of CIGNA Corporation, which provide insurance and related products.

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

Supporting rallies

Two nights ago, over 300 people gathered at Smith College to protest the acquittal of the four New York City police officers on trial for the shooting of West African immigrant Amadou Diallo. The rally was sponsored by the Feminist Intercultural Revolutionary Encounter (FIRE), Creative InPULSE Collective and United in Anti-Racist Action groups on the Smith Campus.

The officers shot at Diallo as the man was pulling his wallet (which they allegedly mistook for a firearm) from his pocket. The four policemen fired 41 times and hit the Bronx resident 19 times, fatally wounding him.

One speaker at the protest, Anne Ferguson, reportedly felt that the time for rallying was over and that it was important to take action. She said that she had "been to too many of these [rallies]." Injustices like the killing of Diallo, she said, would continue unless the system was changed in order to account for social inequalities for minorities.

The Collegian believes that protests of this sort definitely have their place. Very basically, rallies collect and mobilize a group for a specific purpose, which is an important organizational step in a process that has the potential of making great political changes.

The change starts with an idea, or the opposition to an idea, and continues with the gathering of a few leaders who share the same feelings. It's important that those leaders have a chance to validate their notion by organizing a rally – it proves that they have support from a large enough group to go about changing the system in place. In theory, democracy exists to bend at the willpower of the people.

The Collegian is certain that Ferguson was by no means intending to discount the protest's importance in that process. Rather, she was inferring that the protest was not the step that this particular movement should stop at.

It would not be a revolutionary thought for the Collegian to come out against the verdict in the case. It goes without saying that a man taking his wallet out of his pocket should not be shot. Especially 41 times. Even if Diallo was drawing a pistol, firing 41 shots in reaction is undeniably excessive. At the very least, the officers should have been slapped with manslaughter for the accidental killing of an innocent man, if not for murder.

Ferguson's comment, however, is important to get behind. To take her statement for granted would be all too easy. It is one thing to express the interest in continuing a movement beyond a rally, and it is another thing to actually do it. Far too often have groups organized to express their outrage about a situation, but have taken no further action.

Huge numbers of people convened to express their opposition of privatization on campus. Relatively few, unfortunately, still actively fight that battle.

Great quantities stormed the Whitmore Administration Building to protest the current budget cuts on campus. A strong handful still carry that torch. While the masses have lost interest – at least the kind of interest that results in action.

Ferguson told the roughly 300 supporters at Smith College that night, basically, to speak loudly and carry a big stick.

The Collegian agrees those who believe that an injustice was served in the trial of the officers who shot Amadou Diallo to carry a big stick and make a difference.

Back when we were only kids

Everything was better when we were kids, right? I'm sorry, but for all the technological advancements that we have made in the past ten years, the most simple aspects of our pop-culture have steadily gone downhill since the 1980s. What exactly do I mean? Just turn on the television right now and try to find a cartoon that actually holds your attention.

Now, you may argue, "well, yeah, of course cartoons were better when we were little kids because they are actually intended for little kids. Grow the hell up, Dana, and start watching 'ER' like the rest of us sophisticated, mature college students." Okay, that may be true, but I still feel no shame in turning on my television, making myself a big bowl of strictly the Lucky Charms marshmallows (it's a painstaking process that takes over an hour, but it provides quite a nice sugar rush and tastes great) and looking for a good cartoon to watch. I did the same thing 10 years ago, before I knew what a G.P.A. or a mid-term was, and I'm proud to do it now. However, that's where things get complicated – there are just no good cartoons on these days. Note: "The Simpsons" is not a cartoon, it is a prime-time sitcom that just happens to be animated, and if you're thinking "King of the Hill," shoot yourself now.

I'm sorry, but those stupid little Pokemon things just aren't cool. You hard-core fans might respond, "yeah, the Pokemons look cute and cuddly but when they power up with the mega-condensed Pokemon crystals and roll into a big ball and engage the Germans in all-out tactical warfare... look out, biatch!" Yeah, whatever, but part of what made cartoons cool when we were kids was the fact that they actually looked tough. Remember the Thundercats? They were so bad-ass with their cool weapons and their high-tech lair. I'm sorry, but even if Pikachu could whoop Liono's ass every day of the week, I couldn't care less, "Thundercats, ho!!!"

Or what about He-Man? I was the only kid on my block who actually had the Castle Grayskull playset, which of course, made me the man back then. There were also the Transformers, G.I. Joe, and MASK, the one with those cool-ass cars. Even the lame, girly cartoons like The Smurfs, Muppet Babies and the Snorkels were pretty damn cool, and remain so to this day. I'm sorry, but computer-generated animation doesn't make it a good cartoon. Even if I wasn't doing keg stands, taking body shots and making a complete ass of myself when it comes to girls on Friday nights, I still wouldn't get up early on Saturday mornings to watch this crap. Sorry, Rugrats.

Even video games back in the day were a lot cooler than they are now. Of course, technology and graphics today completely blows away the days of Pac-Man and Frogger, but if I look at a video game today, and the guy in the game jumps out of my television set and says, "Dana! I need your help to rescue the princess, kill the drug lords, and eradicate world hunger right now!" it wouldn't even surprise me. On the contrary, the fact that Mario could fly in "Super Mario Bros. 3" absolutely blew my friggin' mind. I mean, he could become part raccoon and kill those mushroom thingies with his freakin' tail. The guy was a damn genius... and he still holds down his plumbing job. That's part of the reason why my Playstation, N64 and Dreamcast set-up remains second fiddle to the kid down the hall who has Tecmo Bowl. I get completely drubbed in that game, even if the person I'm playing picks the Patriots. Well, you know what? It doesn't even matter because it instantly takes me back to a time when I was young, naive, and most importantly, when video games were great.

Dana Oppedisano

Also, I have a severe bone to pick with the Franco-American food company that makes all that canned, microwaveable food. What the hell happened to Spaghetti-O's? I would eat cans upon cans of that crap when I was a kid, the imitation spaghetti sauce covering my face and the walls of the kitchen. I'd be yelling, "Hey Mom, uh-oh... Spaghetti-O's!" That big Spaghetti-O guy on the can was an icon to a six-year-old who thought he represented the greatest food on the planet. What happened there? Let's not kid ourselves. We're all in college, and we all know the kind of crap that we eat (witness: DC food), yet my roommate and I give cans of Spaghetti-O's away. They are just plain disgusting now, and I would rather walk to the DC in the middle of a blizzard for another hearty helping of Beef Stroganoff than open that hideous red and white can with the devil's messenger, Mr. Big-Ass Spaghetti-O Man, on the label.

Naturally, when my parents actually decide to help me out a little by sending a little care package in the mail, what do I get? "Hey son, I thought those 43 cans of Spaghetti-O's would help you out a little. Don't mention it, no trouble at all." I once actually sent an e-mail to Campbell's, Franco-American's parent company, asking if any of the main ingredients or the process of making the actual O's has changed significantly in the past ten years or so, and received no response. I have since had all my bank accounts, birth records, and any other form of my identity (except this very column) erased by the Campbell's Food Company for exposing the secret they never want little kids to find out: Spaghetti-O's actually suck!

Of course, this is all just my own opinion, which some people are actually crazy enough to allow me the opportunity to voice on a regular basis. Maybe ten years from now some kid will be writing for the Tri-Daily Collegian about how great the "Men in Black" cartoon was, or how in the year 2004, Kraft altered one of its greatest products to the point where Easy Mac was no longer really macaroni, and it wasn't all that easy, either. Who knows? Maybe my argument is valid, or maybe I'm just that same scared little boy who wishes he didn't have to grow up so fast. I guess I'll never know, but at least that little boy could get a quick, decent meal to go with his quality Saturday morning cartoons. Now it's just, "Uh-Oh, Spaghetti-O's."

Dana Oppedisano is a Collegian columnist.

Attention all current Ed/Op columnists: If you are interested in having a photo bendée taken or if you are interested in having yours retaken, come to the Collegian office tomorrow at 12:30 p.m. We will be taking pictures at that time.

Welcome to Virtual-U

What do the budget cuts to academic departments, dismantling of Affirmative Action, cutting programs for low-income students, privatization, an Honors College, the failure to fund the DuBois Library, Post-Tenure Review and Distance Learning have in common? They all are part of a coordinated transformation of our university to the specifications of corporate elites. Its strategy is to stratify the educational experience for students into three categories. For the poor, the option is community colleges (if they're lucky to get out of their under funded high schools); the "ordinary" student will receive MyEducation; and a select group of elite students will receive more and more of its services – students who are overwhelmingly white, suburban and upper middle class. Their goal is not only to privatize our campus store (they already did that) but to privatize and commercialize even our faculty and classrooms. Read up – they are not even hiding it.

The University's budget has grown by a healthy margin for over six years ($54 million in state revenue alone), exceeding even the university's expectations by 23 million dollars (over the last five years). Yet the services that make up the core of any college are either static or declining. Its library budget has declined by 18% in the past three years. While it received a one- time million dollar reprieve (from the state), the university is planning further shrinkage. The budget for faculty has not grown in years, while the budget for administration continues to grow. Financial aid funding is increasingly given out in loans or "merit" scholarships rather than need based grants (which is how the administrators and faculty got their education). It is replacing its aging faculty with one new person for every three that retire in the humanities and social sciences.

Having cut 20% of its faculty through budget cuts, attrition and early retirements between 1990 and 1998 (down from 1346 to 1092), this school is proposing to do it yet again, seeking 10% cuts in academic budgets over five years. These cuts will also hit grad students, as departments – already decimated by previous efforts – have no place else to cut but graduate Teaching Assistantships. This crisis is a phony one, since the University is enjoying a 4.2% budget increase from the state. The Chancellor is operating in conjunction with President Bulger, the UMass Board of Trustees, the Board of Higher Education and Governor Cellucci.

UMass is cutting these departments and deliberately refusing to replace aging faculty so that it can replace teachers with videos and Internet courses (called "distance learning"). Under this scheme, students will have increasingly less access to faculty because the faculty are slowly replaced wherever possible by computer screens and video tapes. More and more these courses will be mediated by a so-called "public-private" partnership in which companies like eCollege.com will either pipe in classes from the outside, or pipe them out to community colleges facing a similar fate. While teacher-less, computer-driven courses once seemed years away to those planning this future, Purdue just received a grant from the Pew Foundation to test just such a course, and UMass is a finalist in the same Pew Grant program.

Meanwhile, the Honors College continues to gobble up resources and space meant to serve all its students (callers to the Honor's College have been promised that it will be spared any cuts!). The increasing reliance of the State Senate to fund this boondoggle means that it will come at the expense of 80% to 90% of the student body. But then again it is setting to shrink that student body, and leave larger numbers of students stuck in even more underfunded community colleges or simply out of school altogether. Perhaps they can get their courses on video or the Internet, assuming they can afford a computer or DCR.

While Welfare "Reform" drove 88% of the student-parents on assistance from the school in the fall of 1998, the Chancellor blocked efforts to establish any programs to protect them. In the spring of 1999, UMass dismantled Affirmative Action, causing a dramatic decline in ALANA populations. While CeoMass "promised" a new system for ALANA inclusion, that has yet to be produced. And replacing Affirmative Action with a patchwork project to repair the damage will cost millions of dollars. This is unlikely in an atmosphere of budget cuts.

The University will pour good money after bad to develop its distance learning program (which is the acknowledged descendant of mail order colleges), despite the fact that every study done so far shows lower completion rates, lower test scores, general student dissatisfaction with the quality and the lack of student-teacher interaction (never mind what the faculty think). It will continue to cut its faculty, and continue to cripple its library. One day perhaps, UMass administrators will have their "perfect university" (a "virtual university" perhaps?) – no students, no teachers, no books.

But a school is – by its definition – a place for students, teachers and books. And the mission of UMass is to serve all citizens of the Commonwealth. Yet these priorities are always last on "White-more's" list and only referenced when counting consumers to fund corporate greed and aiding the rise of addle-brained, over-paid administrators and politicians who mistake a public university for their playground and the public coffer for their own.

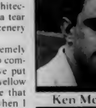
Thomas Taaffe is a UMass graduate student.

Squashing Amherst College

I have a secret.

I love Amherst College. I mean it doesn't compare to UMass, but then again, what can honestly stand up to our fine academic institution? Well, Harvard, yeah, that's one. Princeton, I suppose, I guess those too. What was that, Westfield State? Yeah, I guess we can throw that one in the mix.

Walking through the quad in the mist the other day, I realized that Amherst College is a beautiful place: aged brick buildings, Johnson Chapel towering in front of me, and Lexus SUV's with the bumper stickers saying, "I brake for Abercrombie & Fitch," circling the snow-covered knoll.



In no way could it compare to the walk that I have from Coolidge to the Campus Center every day. The architecture of Tobin Hall, while bringing a tear to my eye, can't compare to the scenery of our next-door neighbors.

Don't get me wrong, I am extremely happy at UMass. We are a school so committed to equal opportunity that we put handicapped parking spots in the school lots around campus. Now, I agree that those spaces are necessary, but when I am trying to find a spot at one in the morning that front row spot looks might tasty. Also, by cutting back on such things as number of professors, funding for research, hell even entire majors, Chancellor Scott has ensured that no one will get a good education.

Can you believe that we are actually considering bumping our football program up to Division 1-A? That way, after spending the tens of millions to improve the stadium, they will be just as bad as our basketball team and we will swim in the blissful sea of mediocrity. Eventually the team will come around, but I will have long departed the comfortable confines Pioneer Valley. Actually, I'll probably be retired and have moved back here before I see such a day.

You don't see Amherst College pushing to have its squash or golf teams embarrass themselves by joining a league that they don't really belong in. My hat goes off to Peter Gooding, the athletic director of Amherst College. He knows his place in the world of college athletics. Will the glory of having the worst football team in Division I-A bring UMass any more money or fame? My guess is no. I think that Bob Marcum, the AD of UMass, and Gooding should face off in a good old-fashioned duel. Squaring off... taking ten paces, turning and having it all interrupted by Dennis Conroy's STPEC protest against violence and the frivolous wasting of lead. Hey, Amherst doesn't have a STPEC major. Score one for the home team, I think.

Additionally, Amherst has the virtue of being what they like to call "a private school." This means that they do not have to be the bureaucratic guinea pigs of a few stuffed shirts at the other end of the Pike who want to see what happens when you put 20,000 students together and give them a combined total of 40 dollars for such superfluous things as financial aid and research grants. The heads of Amherst College are in the privileged of having a great number of alumni that are, for lack of a better term, filthy rich. They do not need state generated money to plaster crumbling walls or put a security light up on campus.

Ken McDonald

However, I'm glad that we are a public school. Being so, we are free of such awful things as Coca-Cola and privatization. Can you imagine if we had trouble getting a Pepsi on campus, or were forced to spend exorbitant amounts of cash on textbooks, only to sell them back as if they were empty beer cans?

There are many similarities between the two schools though. Really, if you don't believe me, look at the vehicles that the Amherst College Police and the UMPD drive around in. It is as if the cold war has been reborn; each foe slugging it out to see who can get the latest and biggest ice-wheel drive troop transporter. Seriously, if the Pioneer Valley were ever invaded, it would take a sizeable force to overtake the two campuses. Have you ever seen those big bomber-like planes flying over campus? Yep, those belong to us too.

I love Amherst College, I really do. It is a place where I can go to appreciate what happens when money is put in the right places. Now if I could only find a Pepsi somewhere.

Ken McDonald is a Collegian Columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Ben Alamed Web Developer Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Alexis Pashkar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor Samantha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Position Vacant Multicultural Affairs Editor Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Mary Grein News Editor Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Kara Stokes Photography Editor Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Adam White Co-Sports Editor Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

GLBT Issues

Civil Sex explores gay Life of Bayard Rustin

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

Who needs fiction when real life provides the same truths, often more effectively, that creative writing aims to unearth? Civil Sex, a play by Brian Freeman brought to Bowker Auditorium last week by the New WORLD Theater in conjunction with the Stonewall Center, recognizes this. Examining historical events through the life of Civil Rights activist Bayard Rustin, the play addresses the social strain on Afro-Americans during the 50's and 60's, and the even greater difficulty a homosexual Afro-American faced.

Civil Sex is the product of playwright Freeman's personal interest in the Civil Rights Movement. With a collection of interviews he conducted himself and news clips, Freeman reconstructed the life of Rustin to fill in the gaps about his life that the courts and media left behind. The result was a consistently engaging script and a seamless production.

Bayard Rustin is best known for his work as secretary to Martin Luther King and the organization of the 1963 March on Washington. His private life was hardly that, as he made little effort to conceal his sexuality and even met criminal charges for it. As portrayed in Civil Sex, he was the type of person that left a far-reaching impact on those who knew him with somewhat flagrant, thoroughly intriguing actions. Duane Boutte, who was both subversive and endearing as necessary, beautifully portrayed Rustin. His presence was compelling and without flaw.

Unexpectedly, the play was accompanied by an outstanding sound design (Matthew Spiro) that featured Boutte's gorgeous singing voice more than once and brought a distinct life to the piece with the music of the era. The staging, also the artistry of Freeman, was fluid with only an occasional slip into the abyss of slapsticky physical comedy.

The cast of five, save Boutte, was responsible for a variety of roles throughout the play. When an actor can maintain a separation for each character, not to mention the endless costume changes, talent is clear. Brian Freeman, who didn't feel the need to stop after writing and directing the production, was particularly impressive as Jonathan Brice. And Mark H. Dold carried a brilliant sensitivity to his role as Davis Platt, Rustin's former lover. June A. Lomena and Michael Stebbins, though without scenes of emotional weight like Dold's and Freeman's, were equally constant in their performances.

The evening, then, was an ideal night of theater, if not for the audience.

Bringing to light the very concept that plays like Civil Sex and causes like the Stonewall Center and the New WORLD Theater oppose, a considerable portion of the audience became uneasy when characters on the stage implied or physically displayed homosexuality. Some audience members were so disarmed that they even took to audibly complaining about the sex scenes – as they were happening. I can make no assumptions about the audience members that painfully groaned at the sight of two men kissing. But I can perceive them as proof enough that the war for gay rights is far from over. Were the same scenes performed as heterosexual encounters, there would be no contention.

So, while Civil Sex celebrated the life, love and impact of a prominent figure in American history who happened to be gay, the event itself reminds us of the need to promote even more awareness and the unfortunate fact that although gay rights have come this far, they haven't come far enough.

COURTESY THOMAS CENTER

Brian Freeman, the author of Civil Sex.

A new voice in the growing war against gay civil rights

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

Pop quiz: which noted public personality has, in the past several months, made all of the following statements?

"Equal rights for gays? For sexual deviants, sexual behavior, there are now rights? That's what I'm worried about with the pedophilia and the bestiality and the sadomasochism and the cross-dressing. Is this all going to be rights too? Why does deviant sexual behavior get rights?"

"I'm making an announcement: Not one penny will I give to AIDS anything as long as [public sex is allowed in gay bathhouses]. Not cent one. It's a preventable disease. If you don't want to prevent it, I don't want to pay for it."

[On the prospect of a lesbian couple adopting a child]: "I don't give a damn about what these two women want! It hurts children!"

[On the proposal to ban antigay discrimination in California's public schools]: "The concern of a lot of these bills is that they take sexual, deviant behavior into schools from kindergarten up and say it's normal and equivalent to heterosexual [behavior], which sort of undermines the basic foundation of civilization."

Time's up. Who was it? Jerry Falwell? Pat Robertson? Gary Bauer? No, the correct answer is Dr. Laura Schlessinger, the increasingly popular radio-talk-show host and self-described "moralist" who has made it her business to spew anti-gay rhetoric on what's supposed to be an advice show.

While Dr. Laura once stated that, "There's nothing wrong with being homosexual," in recent years she's become increasingly antagonistic of the gay community, referring to homosexuality as a "biological error", and insisting that gays can be "converted" to heterosexuality through organizations like Exodus International. She attributes her change in attitude to a "rethinking" of her Jewish beliefs.

Why, you might ask, did I bother to write a column about this? After all, she's not a politician making decisions for the entire country or the leader of a powerful organization, simply a self-righteous radio personality despised by millions of people. After all, you might wonder, what kind of power could a radio-show host possibly wield?

The answer is, a lot. A whole lot. Dr. Laura's show has become the most popular in the country, giving her a bigger audience than Don Imus, Howard Stern, or even Rush Limbaugh. And unlike the aforementioned hosts, Schlessinger has no qualms about blatantly encouraging her listeners to do her political bidding for her. Case in point: after the Vermont Supreme Court ruled (rightfully, in my opinion) that gay couples should be granted all of the legal rights of marriage, she urged her listeners to swamp the Vermont legislature with letters of outrage at the decision. She now appears to be poised to support Proposition 22 in California, which would ban same-sex marriages in that state.

Furthermore, she has a tremendous influence on the mindset of the general public. As a "moralist", she gives her listeners the impression that not only is it acceptable to disown gay relatives and shield their children from any mention of homosexuality, it is also ethically correct.

By the way, you might notice that I have never referred to Schlessinger as a psychologist or a psychiatrist. Why? Because she isn't one! Despite the fact that she constantly dispenses psychiatric advice, her PhD is actually in physiology, making her completely unqualified to tell her millions of listeners that the American Psychological Association, along with every other reputable mental health organization in America, should reconsider its decision not to classify homosexuality as a mental illness. She's referred to gays as "biological errors", and her legions of followers who assume that she has a background in mental health probably believe her.

Fortunately, a backlash has started. A Presidential candidate, in an effort to secure the increasingly important gay vote, said that Schlessinger's show makes him "sick to his stomach", and urged Paramount to drop its plans to give Schlessinger her own television show. The Horizons Foundation has placed ads condemning her comments in the Los Angeles Times and The San Francisco Examiner, and the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD) has urged Paramount to refuse to air the show unless Schlessinger agrees to quote reputable sources and equal time is given to those with opposing viewpoints. Said Jon Barret of The Advocate: "Dr. Laura may have to turn down her volume for television, where hate-mongering tends to turn off audiences."

As a favor to your causes, think before you protest

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

Last year, I had an interesting discussion following a confrontation with the "Crazy Jesus People." For those of you who weren't students last year (or had the fuck not to pass through the main campus that day), let me explain. Last year a rather bizarre family of two parents and about five children gathered in the middle of campus, and began to scream to anyone passing by that all college students were going to hell. The father held an enormous cross, while his unfortunate children passed out literature, which also told us we were damned. At one point, they began to demonize gays and lesbians, and shouted insults at students that they suspected were gay.

Anyway, after witnessing this spectacle, a lesbian friend and I boarded a PVTA bus up Orchard Hill. We were both angry (and more than a little amused) after our encounter, and began to rant about it.

"I really wish we could protest these people," she said. "I've been waiting all semester for something like this. I really want to have a kiss-in, don't you?"

Seeing that I had never heard of a "kiss-in" before, my friend began to explain that a kiss-in is a form of protest in which gay couples begin to express affection in a public place. I explained that I failed to see how a massive homosexual make-out session could possibly counter anti-gay bigotry, and I was met by a sour look.

"We just need to shake things up a little," she said.

This is the exact mind-set that the Christian Coalition hopes we have. Many heterosexuals envision gays as crazed lunatics, hell-bent on glamorizing their "lifestyle", and nothing would reinforce that stereotype better than a room full of gay couples making out for the purpose of shocking their straight companions. Furthermore, nothing could possibly be accomplished by such a display, other than grossing out both straights and gays.

There is no doubt that in our often-homophobic world, the gay community needs to exercise our First Amendment right to protest those who would defame us. But the questions we have to ask ourselves are: "Are we protesting to make a point, or just to have fun?" and "Is it possible that we might gain something by doing this?"

I recall last semester, during National Coming Out Day, when a throng of GLBT students and their allies gathered on the steps of the Student Union, and at one point began to shout, "We're here! We're queer! Get used to it!" This is one of the most common chants heard at gay pride marches, and probably one of the worst. There's no doubt that it's catchy, but what message does it really send? Can anyone picture a straight person walking by and thinking, "Gee, they are here, and they are queer. I guess I should get used to it"? More likely, they'd think that gays, who are constantly preaching tolerance, are intolerant of anyone who isn't "used" to their presence.

It's always a shock to see men dressed as nuns licking popsicles shaped like penises on the six o'clock news whenever there's been a gay pride parade. Naturally, most marchers are well behaved and inoffensive, but the media will always highlight the most outrageous aspects of any event. So, as long as gays and lesbians decide to march in gay pride parades wearing fright wigs and buttless chaps, that's the only image that much of straight America is going to see of us.

I certainly don't mean to imply that everyone should "act straight" in order to gain public acceptance. What I'm saying is that we have to rethink our ways of getting attention. No minority group in the history of the world has gained public acceptance by groping one another in a student room full of gay couples making out for the purpose of shocking their straight companions. Furthermore, nothing could possibly be accomplished by such a display, other than grossing out both straights and gays.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Kate Borstein, perhaps one of the country's best-known transgender activists, not to mention an award-winning playwright, author and performance artist is coming to the University of Massachusetts campus. Borstein is the author of Gender Outlaw and My Gender Workbook. Kate travels the country in hopes of helping people to understand that male and female is an outgrown concept, that gender is a rainbow spectrum that everybody is free to explore at will. Joining up with Kate on Saturday night is Barbara Carellas. Barbara is a sex educator and cofounder of Erotic Awakening, a pioneer series of workshops focusing on the physical, spiritual, and healing powers of sex.

Borstein will arrive in the area on Thursday, March 2 to fulfill a whirlwind weekend of lectures, panels, performances and a keynote speech.

Thursday, March 2 – Kate will present the lecture "Where's the Sex: An Exploration of the Desexualization of GLBT Culture and Resexualization of Queer Culture." This event will take place at 12:30 p.m. in the UMass Campus Center, Room 903.

Later that day, Borstein will appear at Smith College to participate in "Crossing Lines: an interactive discussion about sexuality, feminism and gender" with Karen Bullock Jordan. This panel will take place from 4:30 p.m. – 6:00 p.m. in Wright Hall Auditorium.

Friday, March 3 – Borstein will be the guest at a youth-only [open to high school students aged 19 and under Coffeehouse hosted by Pride Zone, the GLBTQ youth group of the Pioneer Valley. This event will take place at 43 Maple Ave., Maplewood Shops, in Northampton, from 6:00 PM to 8:00 p.m. Call 584-9197 for more information.

Saturday, March 4 – Ms. Bornstein will present the Keynote Address for the Smith College Transgender Conference. This event will take place from 12:30 p.m. – 1:30 p.m. in Wright Hall Auditorium at Smith College.

On Saturday evening Kate Borstein and Barbara Carellas will perform together in "Too Tall Blondes Do Sex, Death and Gender." This performance is a combination of their skills as writers, educators, actors, and performance artists. They turn these talents into a pastiche evening of slam poetry, storytelling, interactive spot qultzes and a mini-play set in cyberspace.

These events are cosponsored by: The Stonewall Center, Pride Zone, The UMass Arts Counell, the GLBT Graduate Student Organization, the Smith College LBTA (T Committee) and the Governor's Commision on Gay and Lesbian Youth, through a contract with the Mass. Department of Public Health.

HBO film presents the lives of lesbians in different eras

By Jamas Endrst
Associated Press

One house. Three decades. Three stories. One through-line. All about women.

That was the simple formula for HBO's personal and provocative "If These Walls Could Talk," a 1996 HBO film starring Demi Moore (a co-executive producer), Sissy Spacek, Anne Heche and Cher (in her directorial debut.)

The topic was abortion. The commonality: three women, each occupying at different times the same home, coming to terms with unexpected pregnancies played out against the backdrop of their eras – from the 1950s to the 1990s.

Now comes the follow-up, "If These Walls Could Talk 2," starring Sharon Stone, Ellen DeGeneres, Vanessa Redgrave, Chloe Sevigny and Michelle Williams, a made-for-TV movie exploring the lesbian experience in America in 1961, 1972 and 2000. (The film will make its debut March 5.)

Based on early critical reaction, "Walls 2" is unlikely to generate the kind of acclaim as its predecessor, but HBO is now promoting "If These Walls Could Talk" as an umbrella forum for female filmmakers with projects that might otherwise be considered too risky to be produced elsewhere.

Whatever reaction the latest "Walls" may bring, for many involved in the making of the movie, this was a deeply personal experience.

In a small suite at the Ritz-Carlton Huntington Hotel in Pasadena, "Walls 2" directors Jane Anderson ("The Baby Dance"), Martha Coolidge ("Introducing Dorothy Dandridge") and Heche ("Wag the Dog") sit down for a far different discussion than takes place later with stars DeGeneres (one of the executive producers) and Stone.

First the directors: Putting the three sections of the film – "1961," "1972" and "2000" – into context, Anderson says: "We go from an era where [being a lesbian] was unmentionable, to an era where it was the chunny, awkward, in-your-face time of the movement, to now, when gay women in urban centers such as ourselves are able to think about forming a family rather than 'Do we come out to the world or not?'"

In writer-director Anderson's segment, which opens the movie, Redgrave ("Cradle Will Rock") and Marian Seldes play lifelong lovers and companions of 50 years who are separated by death and then, nove harshly, by society and the definition of family in the '50s. In a touching, Emmy-worthy performance, Redgrave brings to life a unique, poignant portrait of exclusion.

"I am sure there are still a lot of gay and lesbian people who are stuck in my movie who still have to rearrange the furniture when their families come to visit," says Anderson, who is openly gay.

In "1972," Coolidge, who is not gay, draws on her experience with the feminist movement in the early '70s for a sexually charged timepiece featuring Williams ("Dawson's Creek") and Sevigny ("Boys Don't Cry"). The house in this second story is now occupied by four gay coeds who – in the midst of their political concerns – are confronted with their own brand of stereotyping within the lesbian community.

The movie concludes chronologically, shifting tones again, with "2000," a sometimes-frolicking romantic comedy written by Heche and marking her directorial debut, in which two gay, thirty something women, played by Stone and DeGeneres, try to start their own famih.

Heche and DeGeneres, of course, are among the most public of lesbian couples. DeGeneres came out in real life and on her ABC series "Ellen" and was soon linked romantically to Heche, who says she had previously lived a straight life. "I found myself when I fell in love with Ellen," says Heche. "That was it. It was clear. I was thrilled. I didn't hesitate one moment."

In fact, she says, "I wrote this for Ellen. I wrote a love letter, and it turned into this."

Heche never considered co-starring with DeGeneres in "2000" and, as audiences will undoubtedly notice, took a comedic approach to telling her story.

"Overall, we want it to be entertaining," she says. "What people will take out of it, I don't know... I don't propose at all to have anybody think this is the reality for everybody – in my piece, especially. Because heterosexual couples and gay couples are lacking a lot of joy. Hopefully, this brings out a joy and understanding for life – for human life – for love, for relationship, for struggle, for death, or all of those things."

This Week's Poem:

A Stranger
By Walt Whitman

PASSING stranger! You do not know how longingly I look upon you.
You must be he I was seeking, or she I was seeking, (it comes to me, as of a dream,)
I have somewhere surely lived a life of joy with you,
All is recall'd as we flit by each other, fluid, affectionate, chaste, matured,
You grew up with me, were a boy with me, or a girl with me,
I ate with you, and slept with you – your body has become not yours only, nor I not my body mine only.
You give me the pleasure of your eyes, face, flesh, as we pass – you take of my beard, breast, hands, in return.
I am not to speak to you – I am to think of you when I sit alone, or walk at night alone.
I am to wait – I do not doubt I am to meet you again,
I am sure to it that I do not lose you.

Gay marriage ads begin

By Jenifer Warren
Associated Press

Trailing in opinion polls, foes of a ballot measure to ban recognition of same-sex marriage in California took their campaign onto television this week, hoping to sway voters against an initiative they call mean-spirited and unnecessary.

With 19 days remaining before the March election, opponents are scrambling to pump up the volume on their campaign, which so far has hampered early on by sluggish fund-raising.

In two new ads, foes tell viewers that the initiative – just 14 words long – is not as simple as it looks, concealing an "extremist" subtext that harms gays and lesbians and intrudes on people's private lives.

One spot, which began airing last Tuesday, says the measure's author, Republican State Sen. William "Pete" Knight of Palmdale, Calif., has a gay son of whom he disapproves and is making Californians "vote on his private problem."

The other, which debuted last Wednesday, says the initiative could lead to increased violence against gays and lesbians and spawn new laws discriminating against them.

Proposition 22 would bar California from recognizing any marriage other than that between a man and a woman – including those performed in other states. While no state currently permits same-sex unions, lawmakers are debating it now in Vermont.

Opponents call the measure unnecessary and say it's part of a broader movement to roll back gay rights. Supporters say their only goal is to block out-of-state judges or politicians from redefining marriage in California.

Opponents of the measure trail its about 15 percentage points in recent polls.

As of the last filing deadline, supporters of the initiative had collected $5.1 million. Most of it has been sunk into television ads, including two new spots that began airing statewide this week.

One depicts a teacher – surrounded by children in a classroom – who declares that "parents and teachers like me all across California are voting yes on Proposition 22." The teacher, Terri Mains, works at a Catholic school in Sacramento.

Last Wednesday, the spot was attacked as "misleading" by state Superintendent of Instruction Delaine Eastin and representatives of two teachers unions that oppose Proposition 22. Eastin, noting that she has a nephew who is gay, called the ad "deceptive," saying it suggests that most educators support the initiative.

Rob Stutzman, manager of the yes-on-22 campaign, denied that the ad claims that "most" teachers support the measure. "I don't think anyone knows" the level of support among educators, Stutzman said. "But we know that a majority of Californians support us, and teachers are usually reflective of that."

Stutzman also criticized opponents for the "growing negativity" of their campaign, specifically the ad that suggests passage of Proposition 22 would lead to more violence against gays and lesbians.

Arts & Living

Your Guide to all that's going on in the Pioneer Valley

moe. featured many lengthy and layered guitar riffs that set the night ablaze.

'Sick' moe. jams packed Noho

By Caroline Fullmer
Collegian Correspondent

moe.
The Calvin Theater
Feb. 26

Last Saturday night, a little band named moe. performed at the Calvin Theater in Northampton and absolutely rocked my world. With that said, let me say I went to this show with no knowledge of this band, except what I have heard from various friends about how moe. is "sick" and knows how to jam. Well, I like jam bands. I've been know to go to a few shows in my time and some people even consider me a hippie, so hell, what can I loose, right? With those simple little yellow moe. stickers everywhere, I figure why not spend on evening with moe. Let me say, moe. flipping jams! They are a sick band with sick jams, a sick light show, and a sweet following.

For a band that started playing eight years ago in upstate NY, they know how to put on a show. All five members were happily relaxed on stage, and had no problems talking with the audience, or rocking our worlds. The scene outside was one that could be described as the early Phish years, tour heads meeting up with old buddies, college preppie hippies, the undercover fans, and of course the virgins. The energy level was high, anticipation was mounting, and being that it was a non-sold out show, there was the promise of enough room to boogie down – and boogie down we did.

The first set began, and the mood of the evening was set; the stage was very festive. "See my pants" and "Mexico City" were some unexpected highlights of the first set. All of the songs were well-layered jams and I got a nice little tingly feeling more than once.

A short break was taken in between sets, giving those few who had their fill of the lengthy jams the opportunity to clear out, and those who weren't exactly happy with their placement during first set the opportunity to find dancing room for the second. It was a good thing, too, since the second set blew away the first by far! The improv jamming was tight, while each member of the band worked off each other's riffs, and Vinnie Amico on the drums showed off his absolute talent, delighting us with his rhythms. The songs went form funky reggae, to blue grassy jazz, to hard-core rock, and not one transition was too abrupt, leading each song in smoothly.

In short, moe. deserves their following, they deserve their sold out venues, they deserve their ticket sales, and they deserve to be seen. In a word, they jam. They jam out hard, fast, and funky. I for one will absolutely see these guys again, and have no problem with sticking one of those simple yellow m-o-e- stickers on my already colorful car.

COURTESY NANCY GROSSMAN

Drummer Vinnie Amico was one of the many highlights of moe.'s recent show at the Calvin Theater.

WAREHOUSE SELECTORS NEEDED!

Visit us at the campus center
March 2nd, 10am - 3pm
Bring Your Friends!

★ ★ ★ Just look at all we have to offer: ★ ★ ★

- Paid Training
- $12.25 per hour starting salary
- Part time extended to full time during school breaks
- A fun, dynamic atmosphere in a growing company

To find out more, visit us on campus, call 1-800-621-5054, or apply in person Monday-Friday, 8am-4pm or Saturdays from 9am-1pm, at: Employment Center, C&S Wholesale Grocers, Inc., 142 Elm Street, just off Route 91, Exit 21, Hatfield, MA.

C&S WHOLESALE GROCERS, INC.

MassMutual Financial Group's Career Development Program
www.massmutual.com

Mass advantages for your future

VISIT US AT MASSMUTUAL.COM/COLLEGE

Choosing where to start your career is a big decision. That's why you need to know about MassMutual. A leader in the financial services industry, we offer customers a complete portfolio of life and disability income insurance, asset accumulation products and retirement and investment management services.

And we offer a world of career advantages that work for you today — and for your future in-depth training, flex time, generous compensation/benefits and real opportunities for growth!

Some current openings in our Springfield, MA & Hartford, CT offices:

- Claims Examiners
- Customer Service Analysts
- Human Resources Specialists
- Retirement Plan Services Analysts
- Securities Brokerage Specialists
- Underwriters

If you're a Year 2000 graduate with sound judgment, strong communication/negotiation/customer service skills, and the desire to take charge of your future, you should talk to us!

We'll be on campus for an Info Session on March 6 from 7-9pm and on March 9 for interviews. Please contact your Career/Placement Office to set up an interview or email your resume to: collegerecruiting@massmutual.com An Equal Opportunity Employer.

MassMutual FINANCIAL GROUP THE BLUE CHIP COMPANIES®

RESUME BUILDER

!ATTENTION!
ALL SOPHOMORE SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT MAJORS:

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER

Applicants should possess computer and inter-personal skills.

Deadline for Applications:
Wednesday, March 1st, 2000

Come down and fill out an application in Room 113, Campus Center. Contact Christine Carroll or Chris Brennan @ 545-3500 or e-mail at hrcollegian@yahoo.com

STUDENT EMPLOYEES
W·A·N·T·E·D
Summer Conference Housing is looking for YOU!

How about a summer job that is here on the UMASS campus and lets you meet new people everyday?

JOBS

How about working with a department that will host over 9,000 people on the UMASS campus this summer?

February 22- March 31, 2000 applications for Summer Conference Housing positions will be available in the University Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center.

Completed applications are due by April 7, 2000.

Taste of the town: where to recoup with good breakfast

Justin Wong

There truly is a limit to the options one has for morning-after culinary excursions. After a night of ludicrous debauchery and hard drinking, the only cure for a throbbing headache and a newly-flushed lower intestinal tract is a great All-American greasy breakfast.

Nancy Jane's
Location: Amherst Center
Make: Old-school grubbery that caters to clients ranging from the old world to sorry Amherst college students led astray.
The menu: All the basics at an inflated price. I got an omelet with cheese and kielbasa for $4.99 and a cup of coffee.
Damage: about $6.00
My Take: If I can cook it better, it's not worth it. Everything on the plate was low grade except for the toast. But who can actually mess toast up anyway? The kielbasa was undercooked (fortunately that's not lethal), the cheese was flavorless and the omelet consisted of two eggs and a lot of grease.
Recommendation: Don't waste your time, money or good company on this joint.
Money Shot: Leaving this place and knowing I would not return.

Jake's
Location: Northhampton
Make: Swanky upscale yuppie restaurant with tons of wood finish and a slick sign.
The menu: They have breakfast and more. Some of the breakfast selections meet the criteria to be entered in the tough gut hall of fame.
Damage: upwards of $6.00
My Take: I was too busy kickin' it with a fine lady to sweat that I had just ordered a six-dollar plate of juevo's ranchetos. She ordered an omelet platter and a cup of coffee. The bill was going to spike at just under $20. But this place is the bomb. I couldn't see a thing on my plate when my jueveos came. They where buried by mountains of cheese and salsa. The omelet she ordered was seeping off the plate and her eyes literary bulged out of her head.
Recommendation: Even if you miss breakfast, if you can't peel yourself away from bed before 3 p.m., you can hit Jake's off for lunch.
Money Shot: Adding Jake's to my ever-expanding repertoire of fly spots to take ladies.

The Dove's Nest
Location: Sunderland
Make: Old-fashioned diner located in what appears to be a remodeled house, sporting grease stain walls backed by early 60's booths.
The menu: All the basics and some hanging corn beef hash for under $4.00. Your best shot is what they have on special. Usually it runs something like this: 2 eggs, 2 pancakes, 2 bacon, 2 sausage, toast, homefries for like $2 somethin'.
Damage: Don't order steak and eggs and you will be well under $4.00
Recommendation: I was turned onto this joint last spring by a very special someone. It doesn't take that kind of introduction to hit off this place. If you have a car, a few dollars, and a ball of lint, you're golden.
Money Shot: If the typical dinner Joe doesn't hack it, you can hit Java Hut next door. 7 Eleven is to the right for individually wrapped heartburn aid.

Decision
The choice is yours. I prefer to hook it myself, but there is nothing like having someone else slave over a hot grill for your hung-over self. Next week I will adventure into the perils of fast food delivery, where you never know what you're going to get until after you've paid for it.

Justin Wong is a Collegian correspondent.

'Beach' sounds soothing electronica

By Cyrus Mcnally
Daily Bruin (UCLA)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – Leonardo DiCaprio is a name not only associated with blockbuster films, but apparently with blockbuster soundtracks as well. Soundtracks for Titanic, Romeo + Juliet and even The Basketball Diaries all managed to rack up quite a few sales.

Although it might take more than the DiCaprio name for his latest film – the victim of an onslaught of bad reviews – to attract fans to the theaters, the soundtrack to The Beach is definitely worth a listen. Boasting some of the biggest names on the threshold of pop music of today – Sugar Ray, Moby, Blur and Underworld – the compilation offers almost all new material, and good material at that.

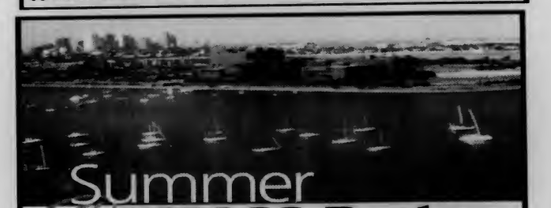
Electronica freaks Orbital team up with classical composer Angelo Badalamenti of "Twin Peaks" fame to produce the dreamily synthetic "Beached." This would be the best track on the album if it weren't constantly interrupted by DiCaprio's drivel dialogue of an extravagant utopia.

A melancholy Moby contributes the strikingly emotional "Porcelain," which mixes R&B beats with bluesy vocal dubs over an electronically filtered string arrangement. This results in one awesome song that can be heard for a few brief seconds during the film's advertisements.

Other dance acts to join the cast include the Asian Dub Foundation, UNKLE and Leftfield – all contributing great or at least good performances. Enya-wannabe's Dario G recruit vocalist Vanessa Quinones in the making of "Voices," an easygoing, ethnic chant-along, and Mory Kante offers the danceable "Yeke Yeke."

Another electro band on the soundtrack not to be forgotten are dance- rock pioneers New Order, who contribute the decently good track "Brutal." It is hard to tell if this means that New Order, who have not released an album for almost five years, is still in existence as a band.

Probably the most unlikely cover to ever be placed on a major motion picture soundtrack is Sugar Ray's take on the Brian Eno/John Cale composition, "Spinning Away" originally from an obscure early '90s album, released by the two artists together.

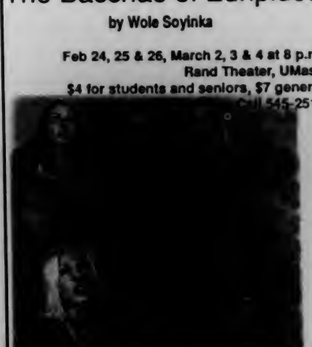


The only pieces which don't add up on the mainly electronic compilation are the sleazy "Pure Shores" by the teeny-bopping All Saints, and an obscurist soundtrack piece by Barry Adamson that interpolates yet more cheesy dialogue from the film.

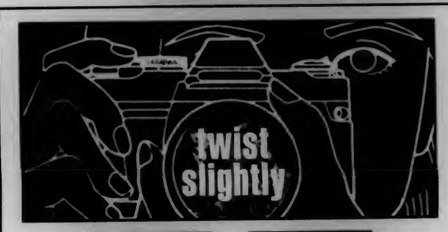
Besides these two pieces, all the rest of the songs on the 14-track album are inspiring, thematic pieces, making for a better-than-average soundtrack, even if the movie itself might be a different story.

There will be a mandatory Arts meeting for all writers on Sunday March 5, at 3:30 p.m. If you have written for Arts in the past or are interested in writing for Arts, you MUST attend this meeting!!!

McMurphy's Uptown Tavern
Guitar Dudes
Tonight @ 10:30
Bud Light
Pitchers $6.00
57 North
Pleasant St.



THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
Wednesday Night is LADIES NIGHT
FEATURING FREE PRIZES AND GIFT CERTIFICATES FROM
Zanna, Ultimate Fitness, Oasis Body Wraps, The Monkey Bar, Styles by Deborah, Aesthetics Skin + Body Care, and Pinocchio's
This week features drink specials from Magic Hat and Bodean's
Make sure you come in and register for a FREE trip for two to the Magic Hat Brewery
ALSO FREE WEEKEND NO COVER PASS TO ALL LADIES AND AS USUAL ALL THE JAMZ SPUN BY DJ FOOZ
63 NORTH PLEASANT STREET 259-1600



Summer @ UMASS Boston
A great university in a great city
Summer at UMass Boston means
- Four- and six-week sessions, beginning May 30, July 5, and July 17
- Morning, afternoon, and evening classes
- Travel-to-learn programs
- Quality education at an affordable cost

UMASS BOSTON
To learn more, visit www.conted.umb.edu or call 617.287.6000

The Bacchae of Euripides
by Wole Soyinka
Feb 24, 25 & 26, March 2, 3 & 4 at 8 p.m.
Rand Theater, UMass
$4 for students and seniors, $7 general
413.545-2511

Visit our Jam Central Department. Guitars, amps, drumsets, sheet music and more.
Product selection and pricing may vary online. Sale ends March 11, 2000.
MEDIA PLAY Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
MediaPlay.com℠
Cassettes available on select titles. 806330 2214

COURTESY ANTHONY LETHAM

Dead prez's latest, Let's Get Free, celebrates black nationalism with their slam poetry style and unique flair

Revolution By Rhyme: Black Nationalism CD dead prez

Let's Get Free
Loud

Within the spectrum of political media, militant Black Nationalism rarely receives the notoriety it deserves. In rap music, a genre concurrently defined and bound by profit-driven capitalism, afrocentricity is ultimately eclipsed by material identity. Echoing the sentiments of slam poets Sarah Jones and Reg E Gaines, Brooklyn-based duo dead prez, view materialism (and the ways of the western world) as an ideological prison that systematically enslaves the mentality of Black America. The title and thematic concept of Let's Get Free, examines how hegemonic society keeps the urban underclass behind "Enemy Lines." After its first rotation, it is evident that the musically encapsulated struggle becomes a war raged on the battlefields of truth. M1 and Stic.man are positioned at the frontlines, dropping inflammatory bombs of knowledge. With deviant spirit, dead prez seeks to disrupt normality by questioning it, and discover solutions through reevaluated meaning.

The album begins with wise revelations. "They Schools," a shocking assault on white imperialistic education, makes several note-worthy points on how the essence of teaching should instill youth with the courage to break the cycles of oppression rather than becoming another impoverished pawn of society. Using the theories of a socialist economy, "Police State," explores how the distribution of domestic wealth discriminates against minorities:

"The average Black male/ spends a third of his life in a jail cell/ because the world is controlled by the white male/ and the people never get justice/ and the women never get respected..." Although many of the tracks are battered by a dim somberness, positivity reigns and resonates. "Happiness" plays like auditory sunshine through dark clouds and "Psychology" is a soulful meditation. "Be Healthy" is another tasty treat with a delicious background, and lyrics that advocate holistic self-care (and barbequed tofu!) Indeed, true wealth comes from self in that, "they

Turn to PREZ, page 9

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

RUTGERS
NEW BRUNSWICK
SUMMER SESSION 2000
Registration begins Feb 28
MAY 30-JULY 6
JUNE 26-AUGUST 3
JULY 10-AUGUST 16
Three six-week sessions
A variety of 3, 4 and 8 week courses
Undergraduate/Graduate courses
Day, Evening and Saturday A.M. classes available
For a 2000 Summer Session Catalog, including registration procedures and form, phone (732)932-7565. Outside the 732 area code call 1-800-HI RUTGERS or 1-888-4RU SUMMER, or e-mail your request to catalog@cri.rutgers.edu
Courses also available at Freehold Colonial Campus Route 9 South and Brookdale Community College Lincroft
RUTGERS
Division of Summer Session
191 College Ave. - New Brunswick, NJ 08901-8546 web site: http://summersession.rutgers.edu

UMass
INTRAMURAL SPORTS
Don't Miss The...
ACTION
For entry forms and info
545-2693
545-0022
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Softball (M,W,C) 2/9
Co-rec Soccer 2/9
Volleyball Special 3/1
OFFICIALS NEEDED:
Softball Clinics 3/6 3/22 3/23 3/24
Co-Rec Soccer Clinics 3/22 3/23 3/28
Volleyball Special 3/21
More Info: 215 Bowden, 5-2693
On the Web: http://www.umass.edu/umass
LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215

1/2 Price Appetizers and Nachos at the BAR
3-5 & 7-9 Every Day
famfood•spirits
THE PUB
amherst
15 E. Pleasant
Downtown Amherst

UMass Ballroom Dance Club
proudly invites you to
Swing & Latin Dance 2000
When? Wednesday, March 1, 2000 from 7pm to Midnight
Where? Student Union Ballroom
What? FREE Instruction Lesson from 7-8:30pm and FREE general Dance with Swing and Latin Music
FREE refreshment
How much? FREE
Extras? Exhibitions during general dance, performing by the Umass Ballroom Dance Team
Partners? No Partner or experience necessary! Come and meet someone new!
Questions? Call 546-6631

You are invited
The Performing Arts Division presents the Spring Faculty Recital
voice, piano, woodwinds, dance, guitar
Thursday, March 2
7:30 p.m.
Bezanson Hall, Fine Arts Center
Please call the Division of Continuing Education at 545-0519 for more information.
free and open to the public

RENT A CAR FOR SPRING BREAK
Underage drivers wanted.
We know there's more to life than what's happening on campus. So, whether you need a 4x4 for a ski weekend, or a mini-van for that road trip during Spring Break, Merchants Rent-A-Car can get you going, no matter where you're going. And best of all, as part of our Youthful Operator Policy, we'll rent to any driver 18 and over*!
HOWARD JOHNSON'S ON ROUTE 9, HADLEY
413-549-8099
MERCHANTS RENT-A-CAR
www.mrac.com

Alternative Spring Break
5 days in the Ozarks, MO
Meditation, Yoga, Music & Dance, Self discovery, Lots of Fun
Vegetarian Food.
$195 pre registration, rideshares
www.ru-students.cx
1-800-870 5348

When someone asks you what you did in college,
what will you say?
The Amherst Fire Department is recruiting members for its Student Force.
Stop by the Campus Center, Feb. 28- March 3 for more information.
The North Fire Station will host an Open House on March 3 from 6 p.m.-8 p.m.
The Station is located at 163 East Pleasant St., up the road from Sylvan.
Call for more information 549-5419

■ prez

continued from page 8

say you are what you eat so I choose to eat healthy/ my goal in this world is not to be rich or wealthy..."

There is a down side to Free. While M1 and Stic can be commended for bringing hip-hop a much-needed, Black Panther mentality, they lack the formidability of lyrical activists such as Public Enemy and Brand Nubian. Thus, several songs ("Mind Sex", "Discipline") fizzle trying to capture an aesthetic mood. Similarly, attempts at verbal aggression ("It's Bigger Than Hip-Hop", "The Animal in Man") are equally awkward. Consequently, the duo is at their best when debunking our social system. "Propaganda" is a fabulously poignant piece that demonizes both the government and media institutions: "I don't believe Bob Marley died of cancer/ thirty-one years ago I would have been a Panther/ they shot Huey cause they knew he had the answer/ the views that you see on the news is propaganda..." Amen.

As a rap masterpiece Let's Get Free misses its mark, but as manifestation of revolutionary political commentary, is a direct shot to the dome.

B (David Katzoff)

■ Owls

continued from page 12

at times have been inconsistent. The upperclassmen have worked with them and really helped them." Kuzara said.

Telft's individual effort earned her more Atlantic 10 accolades. The freshman, who has already earned three A-10 Rookie-of-the-Week honors, reaped A-10 Performer-of-the-Week for the first time in her budding career. With her performance against the Owls, she put herself in first place in the A-10 on the balance beam and the uneven bars. Telft is currently tied for eighth in the nation in the uneven bars.

Not only did the team effort improve the Minutewomen's record to 6-7, but it also has them ranked No. 13 nationwide in a coaches' poll.

"Our record doesn't indicate how truly great we're doing right now. The team unity is stronger than ever and that's what we'll need to carry us through the rest of the season," Kuzara said. "We have a lot of momentum to carry us in to the [Atlantic 10 Conference Championship] tournament."

Where will the momentum carry the Minutewomen next? Into an afternoon match in Cambridge, to face the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on March 4th at 2:00 p.m.

Through their first seven matches, the Engineers have amassed a meager 1-6 record; but if UMass wants to continue its winning ways, it can't take M.I.T. lightly.

If Temple is an indication of things to come, then the Atlantic 10 ought to beware not only because the Minutewomen are ablaze, but also because they have home mat advantage for the championship tournament. The Minutewomen will look to put the lights out on the Engineers this weekend and improve to 500.

■ McGuirk

continued from page 12

NCAA Tournament last year and registered only a 14-16 record.

The Maroon and White also has the option of making money by playing notable opponents on the road, if they are to complete the jump to D1-A. More powerful schools, like Nebraska and Texas, often pay smaller, lower profile schools to come play at their home fields so that they can add easy wins to their record and boost early-season confidence. According to a study by Charles M. Neinas, the head of the College Football Association, Minuteman coach Mark Whipple "believes that by playing two away games for a significant financial guarantee, it would help offset the expense of the program moving to a I-A classification."

Finances aside, the University has yet to employ a group to undertake the renovation of McGuirk.

"We still do not have someone to do the stadium. No one is under contract, and that's certainly a big part of it," Marguni said. "We're still in the process of gathering information for making a decision of what needs to be done. Even if we don't go I-A and we stay at I-AA, there are still some things that need to be done regardless of the classification that we play in."

According to Neinas, the Executive Board of the UMass Alumni Association supported a move to Division I-A in a vote two years ago by a solid 18-7 margin. This was, as Neinas' report said, "With the belief that such a move would enhance the reputation of the institution and gain attention that would provide assistance both short term and long term."

YEAH SPORTS

■ hockey

continued from page 12

NCAA tournament even if it is only the result of an at-large bid. Maine and UNH faced off in the national championship a year ago, while BC has won the Hockey East tournament and reached the Frozen Four in each of the past two seasons.

"We're playing a lot better than we were in October. This is a good month to be playing well," Boston College hockey coach Jerry York said. "I think that we've got a good chance to make some things happen."

Over in the ECAC, it seems likely that both St. Lawrence and Colgate will earn the automatic berth into the tournament; however, if the club that finishes second in the regular season fails to win the tournament, one of those teams may be on the outside looking in come selection Sunday.

While Wisconsin has already claimed the McNaughton Cup as the regular season champ of the WCHA, perennial power North Dakota is right behind them in the league and in the national polls. The Fighting Sioux are a lock for an at-large bid even if they fail to win the conference tournament.

The CCHA presents a problem similar to that of Hockey East – too many teams for what could be too few spots in the NCAA tournament. Michigan, who will likely win the regular season crown this weekend, and Michigan State, have been fixtures in the Top 10 poll all season and will be in the 12-team field when all is said and done.

The problem lies with Northern Michigan, who is second in the league behind the Wolverines with a 16-8-4 mark. NMU has a 21-9-4 overall mark, but plays one of the weakest non-conference schedules in the country. That factor could be the reason why the Wildcats might not make the NCAA dance unless they win the CCHA tournament.

In the minor conferences, Quinnipiac College and Niagara University have clinched the regular season crown in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference and College Hockey America, respectively. Neither of those teams, however, was awarded an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament. The only chance for either of those schools is an at-large berth, which may be hard to come by this season.

Niagara looked to have a better chance than QC heading into last weekend, but the Purple Eagles dropped a 2-1 decision to lowly Canisius. Niagara, however, has defeated Boston University and dropped one-goal decisions to Colgate and St. Lawrence. The upstate New York school also has the benefit of a victory over Quinnipiac in the only meeting between the two teams this season.

The Braves, on the other hand, have no major wins to boast of, and dropped games to Clarkson, Maine and RPI in their only important non-conference tests.

Predictions:

Hockey East – UNH, Maine and BC accompany BU to the post-season. It's pretty much a guarantee that Hockey East will send four teams unless one or more of the aforementioned clubs goes down the tubes in the final week of the regular season and the playoffs. But don't be surprised if teams like Providence, Merrimack, or UMass emerge as legitimate contenders for the tourney title.

ECAC – St. Lawrence and Colgate make the cut into the final 12, but watch out for a streaking Clarkson in the conference tournament.

CCHA – Wisconsin and North Dakota qualify easily.

WCHA – Michigan and Michigan St. can book their plane tickets for the tournament. Northern Michigan could use a strong showing in the WCHA tournament, preferably with a win over the two locks to reach the post-season.

Analysis – It seems like 10 teams are in for sure at the moment, with Northern Michigan on the bubble. Niagara is probably the most deserving of the final bid, but the voters who are partial to the four major conferences may have something to say about that when all is said and done.

Michael Kobylarski is a Collegian columnist

■ hoop

continued from page 12

62-61 lead before Kirkland went 2-for-2 from the line to reclaim the lead. The lead fluctuated five more times as an even exchange of transition baskets prevailed.

"They're relentless, they stay after you," said Flint. "They can be down by 20, next thing you know they can be up by four."

For both teams, foul trouble haunted them throughout the game with Kirkland, Mack and Jonathan DePina all committing three and three GW players weighted with a pair each before the first half was over.

"The thing about foul trouble against them is how you match up, we had some tough matchups," Flint said of the guard-oriented GW lineup.

The explosive Brown drew Mack's fourth foul on a block

■ side

continued from page 12

fouls trying to defend against the much quicker Colonials. In a game in which depth would play an integral role and with much of their offensive punch out, GW exposed the Minutemen's lack of bench scoring. Winston Smith added four points, but that would be all for the regular reserves.

For nearly a full two minutes after the final media timeout, UMass failed to score while Brown pushed the lead to three with a pretty driving layup. Mack answered with a two from the corner, but otherwise, the Minutemen fell into a drought offensively in the waning moments.

Criticized for his erratic play as just a freshman, Brown led all scorers with 35 points, including the Colonials' final seven. While shooting only 10 for 27 from the field, the Springfield, Va. native had just three more attempts than Crooks, who tallied only 14 on the night.

While the loss had no impact on the Minutemen's bid for a first-round bye in next week's Atlantic 10 Tournament, UMass must take a heartbreaking loss into Saturday's confrontation with St. Bonaventure. The Bonnies have a half-game lead on the Minutemen for the second spot in the East division; the weekend will decide both teams' seeding. SBU defeated UMass in Amherst by 10 in early January. The Bonnies are 9-2 at home this season.

"We got to play smarter, that's the bottom line," Flint said. "Play with the same type of energy, play the same type of game. We got to play smarter. We didn't do that today and it cost us."

WRITE FOR SPORTS

Council Travel
America's Student Travel Leader for over 50 years
The journey is the reward...
Give your family & friends the gift of travel
Gift certificates, passport photos, airport transfers, tours, language programs, work exchanges, ISIC backpacks, rolling duffels, & all sorts of gear, guidebooks, railpasses, tickets, accommodations and more.
44 Main Street
Amherst MA
413-256-1261

NOTHING TO DECLARE BUT YOUR INCOMPARABLE SENSE OF STYLE.
Marianne Potter
SIGNATURE OF BEARER / SIGNATURE DU TITULAIRE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
Passport No. / No. de passeport 200004378
Surname / Nom POTTER
Given Names / Prénoms MARIANNE ELIZABETH
Date of birth / Date de naissance 05 JAN/JAN 2010
PASSPORT
Kickoff SPRING BREAK by travelling to T.J. MAXX.
you'll find COOL LABELS AND HOT FASHIONS at sweet SAVINGS.
After all, CUSTOMS ISN'T THE ONLY ONE who cares how much YOU SPEND ON CLOTHES.
GET IT FOR LESS. FASHION. SOME PEOPLE GET IT. SOME DON'T.
T.J.maxx
<<< VISIT WWW.TJMAXX.COM OR CALL 1-800-3TJ-MAXX FOR NEAREST STORE. >>>
<<<< ©2000 T.J.MAXX. >>>>

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

AUTO FOR SALE

'85 Dodge Ram Van. 132k miles, excellent running condition. $1,200 or b.o. 549-9491.

1990 Toyota Corolla. Auto, air, cassette 147,000k. $2000.00 OBO 584-0574.

'87 Nissan Stanza. 85k automatic, 4-door EXCELLENT CONDITION! $2000 or best offer. Thomas 546-1775.

'92 Subaru Loyale wagon 4x4. Clean, runs great, air, power, roofrack. $2500 00 0.b.0. 665-0453.

EMPLOYMENT

$$$Summer Cash$$$. Student bussiness Mngmt/sales position with national firm. Pays $10-12 plus commission. Available to Soph, Jr and Sr only. For info go to http://www.jablon.com

EMPLOYMENT

Earn $1200-2000 this month part-time and a NEW Computer! Will train. For details 888-342-3267.

Get a head start on a hot INTERNET career with a cool, college-focused start up! BOLD-BRAIN.COM is looking for an energetic, entrepreneurial campus leader to market its website to students, campus organizations and local merchants. Must possess superior communication skills and knowledge of on/off campus life. Salary plus bonus. 10 hrs.+/wk. 6 weeks beginning 3/14. Full time opportunities potentially available. All majors welcome. Email resumes to Michele at BOLD-BRAIN.COM or fax (202)332-5195.

$Fundraisers$
Open to student groups and organizations. Earn $5.oo per MC app. We supply all materials at no cost. Call for info or visit our website 1-800-932-0528 ext. 65 www.ocmconcepts.com

EMPLOYMENT

UAHC Crane Lake and Eisner Camps, Reform Jewish co-educational Camps located in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, seek qualified, dedicated counselors and specialists, including Waterfront, Athletics, Arts. Good salary, r&b included, travel assistance. Crane Lake Camp: Contact Brad Gerstle, 800-227-2660 ILUVCAMP@aol.com; www.cranelake-camp.com. Eisner Camp: Contact Louis Bordman, 212-650-4130 EISNERGUY@aol.com; www.eisner-camp.org

Connect to the future. International company seeks PC users. $25-75k potential. 1-888-827-9733 www.roadforsuccess.com

International commpany has paid internships available in accounting, sales/marketing. Call Giovanna (413)536-1813.

EMPLOYMENT

Summer to remember in woods of Maine- Camp Androscoggin for Boys seeks specialists to teach tennis, baseball, soccer, lacrosse, street hockey, swim, canoe, ropes, mountain biking, archery, and photography. 6/18 to 8/18. Visit www.campandro.com or contact 601 West Street, Harrison, NY 10528 (914)835-5800.

Summer Employment; Outdoors. Weight loss/sports camp looking for energetic people to lead campers in a fun filled summer. Located in West Stockbridge, MA. in the heart of the Berkshires. Call for more information. Toll Free 877-FIT-CAMP. email marc@camp-kingsmont.com

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

FOR SALE

Titleist DCI 98id golf clubs used 5 times. New price $650.00 asking $450.00. 665-6645 ask for Tim.

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

PERSONAL

Attractive party-loving 20-something already dating energetic movie buff. How'd they meet? Turns out she's his cousin's friend. sixdegrees showed them the connections. www.sixdegrees.com

ROOM WANTED

Need a roommate? Male, fun, responsible 22yrs. senior. No lease please ASAP. 531-3997 ask for Luts.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Massage winter away. $15.00 for an hour session. Michael 585-8577.

Rental problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Qestions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

TICKETS

Wanted for April 2 Red Hot Chilipeppers at Mullins Center. Call (413)243-0931.

TRAVEL

Study Spanish. Internships in Guatemala. College Credit. www.casaxelaju.com (512)416-6991.

TRAVEL

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK 2000

Place your ads in The Collegian Classifieds today!

Call us here at 545-3500

Five College Community Calendar

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1

Concert - Pioneer Valley Ballet will present an Alumni/Student Concert with new choreography at 4 p.m. at the Academy of Music in Northampton. Anyone is welcome.

Film - The seventh annual multicultural film festival screening of "SLAM!" will be shown in 222 Hasbrouck Auditorium at 8 p.m. The screening will be preceded by a live Mini-SLAM led by UMass Jamie "Sharpe" Bates. A reception will follow, and anyone is welcome.

Information mtg. - Lambda Pi Chi sorority is having an information mtg at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check the listing in the elevators for the room number. Contact Valerie at 585-4370 or Rahiba at 546-2115 for more details.

Reading - Esther Drill, Rebecca Odes and Heather McDonald, founders of zGRL.com, will read from their new book "Deal With It! A Whole New Approach to your Body, Brain, and Life as a girl" at 7 p.m. at Food for Thought Bookstore in Amherst.

Speech - UMass Students Against Sweatshops will present speakers Bob Ross, Gretchen Purser, and Vicky Sosa at 7 p.m. at Earthfoods in the Student Union.

THURSDAY, MARCH 2

Auditions - Auditions for three one-act plays will be held in room 804 of the Campus Center at 6:30 p.m. Contact Scott at 665-3434 for more information.

Lecture - Kate Bornstein, transgender activist and author of Gender Outlaw and My Gender Workbook, will present a lecture entitled "Where's the Sex: An exploration of the Desexualization of LBGT culture and the Resexualization of Queer Culture" at 12:30 p.m. in room 903 of the Campus Center.

Speech - Esther Drill, Rebecca Odes and Heather McDonald, founders of gLRl.com, will speak about their new book "Deal With It! A Whole New Approach to your Body, Brain, and Life as a Girl" at 4 p.m. at the Women's Center in Enfield, and a presentation and discussion will be held at 7 p.m. in the West Lecture Hall, Franklin/Patterson Hall.

Workshop - A workshop on contraception and safer sex will be held at 3 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at massappeal@hfx.com for more information.

Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemac1@aol.com or Caleb at 587-3740 by March 5.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Submissions – Short Cuts, UMass' short story journal, is currently accepting prose submissions for its second annual issue. The deadline is March 1. For more information call Matt at 549-1053, or email submissions and questions to shortcuts@aol.umass.edu.

Support – A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5316 if interested.

Support – ALANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-5261 for meeting times and locations.

Voting – A reminder to registered voters: A voter can only vote absentee due to absence from his/her residence community during polling hours, physical disability preventing the voter from going to a polling place, or religious belief. For more information call 256-4033.

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS™ From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,® you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER

Just another way that

WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 1, 2000

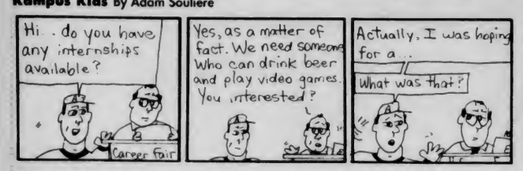
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (In Stereo)				Your Money Matters
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	City of Angels (In Stereo)		"Perfect Murder, Perfect Town" (2000, Drama) Marg Helgenberger		News		Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	City of Angels (In Stereo)		"Perfect Murder, Perfect Town" (2000, Drama) Marg Helgenberger		News		Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Norm	20/20		News	Nightline
WLVI		Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends		Nanny		Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)	Roswell "Sexual Healing"	News		Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	10th Kingdom (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 5)				Law & Order "Indie This"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV	7 Days "Space Station Down"		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		News	Real TV	Change-Heart	Caroline
WWLI	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	10th Kingdom (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 5)				Law & Order "Indie This"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Beverly Hills, 90210 (In Stereo)		Greed: The Series (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	10th Kingdom (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 5)				Law & Order "Indie This"		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (In Stereo)			Colorado Symphony -- Jazz for Orchestra			Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Norm	20/20		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	7 Days "Space Station Down"		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager "Parallax"		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	29	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder		WCW Thunder		Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	25	L.A. Law	Justice	Law & Order		Biography: Angie Dickinson		Investigative Reports		American Justice "Hired Guns"		Law & Order "Purple Heart"
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	World Today	Political Debate			Larry King Live		Sports	Moneyline
COM	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (In Stereo)		"Rems Buellers Day Off" (1986, Comedy) Matthew Broderick, Mia Sara.				South Park	Mart Show	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC		Your New House		On the Inside	Secret Shelters			Swift Water Rescue		Shark Attack Files		On the Inside	Secret Shelters
ESPN		Sportscenter		College Basketball	Duke at Clemson. (Live)				College Basketball	Syracuse at Notre Dame (Live)		Sportscenter
LIFE		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait	"Faith Hill"	Chicago Hope (In Stereo)			"Shining Through" (1992, Drama) Michael Douglas, Melanie Griffith.				Golden Girls
MTV		MTV Jams	Beat Suite	Diary (R)	News Link	TBL Wanna	TBL (R) (In Stereo)			Lyricist	True Life	Undressed	Loveline
NICK		All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI		Sliders (In Stereo)		Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Poltergeist: The Legacy
TLC		Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours "Road Rage" (R)		Extreme Machines (R)		Bone of Contention (R)		Pyramid of Doom		Extreme Machines (R)
TNT		In the Heat of the Night		ER "Vanishing Act" (In Stereo)		"Buffy the Vampire Slayer" (1992, Comedy) Kristy Swanson				Sports Illustrated Swimsuit (R)		"Buffy the Vampire Slayer"
USA		Baywatch "The Contest"		JAG "Act of Terror" (In Stereo)								"Analyze This" (1999, R)
HBO		(5:50) "Practical Magic" (1998)		"A Civil Dry Place" (1998, Drama) Vince Vaughn, PG-13		The Sopranos "D-Girl" (In Stereo) (R)		Oz "Plan B" (R) (In Stereo)		"Love and Action in Chicago" (1999) Courtney B. Vance. (R)		Hot Line (R)
MOVIE		(4:10)		"Down Largo" (1991, Comedy-Drama) (R)						"Can't Hardly Wait" (1998, Comedy) PG-13		"Love and Action in Chicago" (1999) Courtney B. Vance. (R)	Hot Line (R)
SHOW		(4:35)		"Dostoyevsky" (1997) Don Ameche. PG		"Dirty Work" (1998) Norm Macdonald.				"The Naked Gun" (1988) Leslie Nielsen.		Red Shoe	Beggars

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	31	Qtavel to Gavel
3	CBS/3 Hartford	32	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	33	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	34	CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield	35	CNN Fn
8	WSCN Movie Ch.	36	CNN Si
9	UPN/20 Hartford	37	TBS
10	Weather Channel	38	BET
11	NBC/30 New Britain	39	College TV Network
12	Fox/61 Hartford	40	Univision
13	FOX/24 Hartford	41	Comedy Central
14	WOCH & HSCN	42	Cartoon Network
15	International	43	TV Land
16	UMass Academic TV	44	C Span
17	WB/Nine Hoven	45	ZDTV [Tentative]
18	Sundance	46	Bloomberg Financial Network
19	The Learnitly Channel	47	History Channel
20	UVC+TV19	48	HSCN Programming
21	ABC/40 Springfield

Mutans Mutatio By Karl Ethan Levy III

Spoot By Mike Banchick



Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Nena By Anna Faktorovich

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Read all instructions carefully, and take all necessary precautions today. It is imperative that you minimize the risk of error at this time.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Travel may prove difficult today. Unless you simply must take to the highway, you are best to simply enjoy the hospitality of home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may have far more responsibility than expected today, either at home or at the workplace. You may enjoy a timely and important revelation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You'll be consumed with thoughts about yourself today and not without reason. Something you've heard may set you off on a new path.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Correct someone close to you with kindness today. Take care you do not become so officious and businesslike that you lose the personal touch.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Stay in touch today, and don't mind if others put you in a position that requires you to give more than you receive. You've put a lot to offer!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – There's a golden opportunity waiting for you today just around the corner. Take care you're not so self-involved that you actually pass it by!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – This is not a good day to monopolize the attention of others. Share the spotlight, and be willing to let others shine as brightly as possible.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You can rely on a friend or family member to play that pivotal role to perfection today. Never fear – those "best laid plans" will pay off!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may be in line for a promotion, or far greater financial rewards as a result of recent efforts that have exceeded your job description.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Life low today, but not too low. Pay attention to the little things, but not so much that you are unable to appreciate the big picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Now is no time to break with tradition, unless all those in your circle are in agreement. There is much to be gained from the familiar.

Quote of the Day

"Bigamy is having one wife too many. Monogamy is the same."

–Oscar Wilde

ACROSS
1 Bug
5 Standard
9 Rice Krispies sound
13 Diamond Head locale
14 Melville work
15 Animals' homes
17 Kitchen appliance
18 BLT dressing
19 Ms. Winfrey
20 Expressionless face
22 Full
24 Imported car
25 Hoed
26 They're big!
29 Lack of hair
31 Pierre's farewell
32 Tolerate
33 Yak
36 Marsh
37 Baby-grand performer
40 Addison
41 Chubby
42 Cheryl or Alan
43 Krishna follower
45 Simmers
47 Falling star
48 Vast desert
51 Tempo
52 Be a chairperson
54 Pie order
58 Striped stone
59 Mama's partner
61 Goddess statue
62 "Beloved," e.g.
63 Oklahoma town
64 Where to see elephants
65 Hardy heroine
66 Swirl
67 Columnist Bombeck

DOWN
1 Honorable
2 Roof overhang
3 She played Carla
4 Ordinary
5 Wanderers
6 Musical citizen
7 Country singer Acuff
8 Where heather grows
9 Hells
10 Italian seaport
11 Broadcast
12 Chatter
16 Learn to 21 Prearranged secretly
23 Jugs
26 Fishing hook
27 Contend
28 — She Sweet?
29 Looks after 30 Suprise
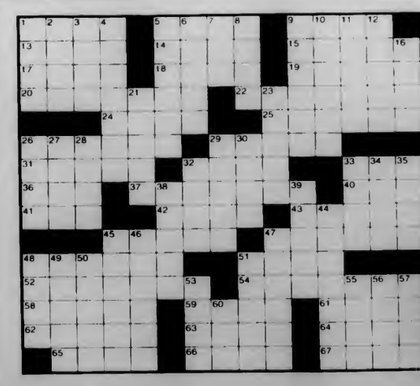
32 Phoenician deity
33 Trait carrier
34 Actor Ray
35 Make less distinct
38 "Trojan War" tale
39 Greek letter
44 List
45 Sews loosely
46 Bay
48 windows
47 Flu or cold
49 Bridge
49 Jargon
50 Hurl
51 Speedy
53 Fencing sword
55 Seoni
56 Fate
57 "Born Free" lioness
60 Plus

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

A	W	O	L		H	A	R	E		Q	U	A	C	K
M	A	L	E		A	M	U	R		U	N	D	U	E
O	D	I	N		D	E	M	I		S	H	A	R	E
K	I	N	G	P	I	N		C	A	R	A	M	E	L
			T	R	U	S	T		C	U	P
N	I	C	H	E	S		W	H	I	M	P	E	R	S
A	M	A	S	S		L	I	E	D		Y	E	A	H
I	A	N		S	O	O	N	E	S	T		R	N	A
A	G	O	G		A	R	I	D		R	E	I	G	N
D	E	E	R	S	K	I	N		P	O	P	E	Y	E
		A	P	E		G	A	I	T	S
R	I	O	T	I	N	G		B	E	S	I	E	G	E
A	R	K	I	N		E	P	I	C		L	Y	R	E
H	O	R	N	E		M	A	D	E		O	R	E	L
S	N	A	G	S		S	L	E	D		N	E	W	S



3 18 00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch
Shepherd's Pie
Fish Munchies
Tofu Pot Pie
Falafel Burger
Falafel Sandwich

Dinner
Chicken Margherita
BBQ Salmon
Penne with Spinach & Tomato

Today's Staff

Night Editor – Ken McDonald
Photo Technician – Teresa Canino-Rivera
Copy Editor – Dave Troupes
Production Supervisor – Joylyn Lombard
Production Staff – Roberto Delado, Melanie Thomas

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

Page 12 | The Massachusetts Daily Collegian | Wednesday, March 1, 2000

Late leads evaporates as Minutemen fall

Charging call tarnishes final comeback effort

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

The trio was joined by another last night.

For just the third time this season, the Massachusetts men's basketball team had four players in Monty Mack, Chris Kirkland, Shannon Crooks and the missing fourth, Kitwana Rhymer, scoring in double-digits though it lost control of last night's match up with George Washington, falling 87-86 in the waning seconds during Senior Night at the William D. Mullins Center.

Colonials	87
Minutemen	86

The Minutemen (15-13, 9-6 Atlantic 10) still have one more shot at securing a first round bye in the conference tournament next week in Philadelphia if they beat St. Bonaventure on Saturday. The Colonials, who are in second place behind Dayton in the A-10 West, advance over the Mendoza line to 14-13 and 9-6 in conference play.

"We played dumb basketball for the last two minutes of the game," said UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "We play smarter basketball, we win the game ... when you get them to the point where you can put them away, you have to put them away."

Prior to the game, co-captains Kirkland and Mike Babul, and Mack and Anthony Oates were honored in a pre-game ceremony for seniors. Mack, who sat out his freshman year due to NCAA academic regulations, will earn back his fourth year if he graduates in May, which he is slated to do.

Last night was also a battle between the league's top two scorers in Mack, (22 points) and GW freshman SirValiant Brown (33), who sits atop all Division I players with an average of 24.7 points per game.

Kirkland tied his career-high 26 points on an 8-for-12 night from the floor. The athletic forward also made the most of his opportunities at the line, shooting 10-for-13.

The Minutemen were a force on the boards, striking up a 52-34 advantage as Rhymer raked in 16 to match his 16 points for a double-double. UMass also earned the nod in the paint for a 59-39 scoring advantage. It was the aggressive play of the GW seniors that kept them in the running.

UMass struggled in the opening minutes with its transition defense as the run-and-gun Colonials capitalized on some easy breakaway buckets. Mack sandwiched a pair of threes around a two from Kirkland for an 8-5 lead in the first 2:15. GW went on a 7-0 run to recover for a 12-8 lead before Crooks broke the scoring drought with a driving layup.

Rhymer tallied 14 of his 16 points in the first half to gain advantage over George Washington's weaker post players, Francisco de Miranda and Antxon Iturbe. With 9:34 left, the 6-10 junior converted a put back off a Kirkland miss to take a 29-25 lead.

Babul held Brown to just two points before the freshman from Springfield, Va. drilled a trey to establish a 32-29 lead with 7:36 to go. Down 52-46 with three seconds left in the half, Crooks pulled up for a jumper to make it 52-48 to close out first half scoring.

Brown opened up the second half with four quick points including a driving baseline bucket past Mack for a 59-51 advantage. The Minutemen offense, led by Mack, exploded for a 10-0 run to tie it up at 59 with 14:28 left.

Brown added two and one for a

Turn to HOOP, page 9

KEN MACDONALD / COLLEGIAN

UMass guard Jonathan drives to the hoop during his team's 87-86 loss to G.W. last night at the Mullins Center. The Minutemen, despite holding a late seven-point lead, fell to 15-13 on the season.

Flint scratches head after loss

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

One can only think of what could have been.

With about three minutes remaining, the lead was by no means comfortable, but the Massachusetts men's basketball team had a cushion. After leading by as much as seven in the second half, UMass' lead was four when Chris Kirkland canned a pair of free throws with 3:05 remaining to put the home team up 82-78.

Then came the "what if?" What if Shannon Crooks decides to lay it in rather than attempt to blow the roof off with an emphatic fast break flush?

Brett Mauser

Monty Mack, nearly falling out of bounds after a nifty steal, left Crooks with a dandy pass on the other end with little paint in front of him. The sophomore rose and came up just short on the dunk, pulling the gun out of the holster and shooting the Minutemen in the foot.

"He missed it, he should have laid it up," head coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "We played dumb basketball. We play smarter basketball, we win the game.

"When you got a chance to put them away, you got to put them away. You got to come up with rebounds and you got to make them take tough shots, and that's what we didn't do in the last 2 1/2 minutes of the game."

On the other end, Mike King's putback cut the lead to four to set up SirValiant Brown, who drilled a three-point from the left wing that put GW in the lead at 83-82, an advantage it would have for good.

The Minutemen didn't play Minuteman basketball all evening, lalling into the trap that GW attempts to set each time it steps on the floor. When playing a half court game, the Colonials had almost no answer for Kirkland (career-high 26 points) and Kitwana Rhymer (16 points, 16 rebounds). In fact, the Maroon and White hammered away on the boards, grabbing a season-high 28 offensive rebounds. But the tempo favored George Washington, as the Minutemen took GW's bait and the Colonials reeled them in.

"The thing that we wanted to do was not get into that up-tempo game with them. We wanted to take our time on offense," Mack said. "When we did that, we got any shot we wanted. I think we just fell into that little black hole with them. When they started to go up and down, we started going up and down, too."

UMass battled massive foul trouble for the duration of the game, as Kirkland and Mack picked up three first half

Turn to SIDE, page 9

Teams on bubble for tourney

Niagara could be snubbed; Hockey East will get four

Michael Kobylanski on College Hockey

The ultimate goal of every Division I college hockey program in the country is to be the last one standing at the Providence Civic Center on April 8.

However, in order to have an opportunity to raise the national championship trophy, you must get into the NCAA tournament first.

With post-season conference tournaments only 10 days away and the NCAA Regionals set to begin in about three weeks, the nation's top squads are battling it out to be a part of the 12-team field.

Two teams have already qualified for the NCAA tournament by virtue of automatic bids. Boston University, the regular season champion of Hockey East, and Wisconsin, which pulled the same feat in the Western Collegiate Hockey Association, already made it to the post-season.

For both teams, qualifying for the NCAA tournament is just the first step in what will hopefully be a magical run through the brackets.

"If we want to be really successful this year, our last game is April 8 [in the NCAA championship game]," said Wisconsin hockey coach Jeff Sauer in an article on U.S. College Hockey Online. "There's a lot of hockey left to play for."

Added BU coach Jack Parker in an article on USCHO: "[We've achieved] a lot of our goals that we had at the beginning of the season. One was to play well at home and we did that. One was to win the Beanpot and we did that. One was to put ourselves in a good position for the Hockey East playoffs. We never dreamed that we'd win the Hockey East regular season.

So things have gone well for us thus far."

In the other two major hockey conferences, the Central Collegiate Hockey Association and the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference, the regular season champion has yet to be determined. Michigan appears to have the upper hand in the CCHA race, while St. Lawrence needs only one more point to stake its claim as the best squad in the ECAC.

Each of the four major conferences will also receive an automatic bid for the winner of its league tournament. As a result, each team that qualifies for the conference affair can also still make the NCAA tournament if it wins it all.

Assuming that each of the four major conferences sends a different regular-season and tournament champion, then eight of the 12 teams will have already been determined before the final at-large bids have been awarded. But that's not likely to happen, especially in Hockey East.

With four teams (BU, New Hampshire, Maine and Boston College) ranked in the Top 10 poll, it appears that the Terriers are lucky to have nailed down the automatic bid already. BU is the only team of the quartet who didn't reach the Frozen Four last year, but has a legitimate chance of ending up in Providence this season.

As far as the other three clubs, they should all make the

Turn to HOCKEY, page 9

COURTESY COLGATE MEDIA RELATIONS

Goaltender Shep Harder and the rest of the Colgate hockey team will likely be one of the 12 teams in the upcoming NCAA Tournament.

UMass eyeballs Division I-A: McGuirk needs renovation

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

This article is the second installment of a series on the future of University of Massachusetts football, and the possible move to Division I-A competition.

With the 1998 Division I-AA National Title under its belt, the Massachusetts football team has been exploring the possibility of making the changes necessary to compete at the next level – with the Florida States and Virginia Techs of the world.

The gridiron is the only playing field on which the Minutemen do not currently take on the highest level of competition available, and the upgrade from D I-AA to D I-A has an exciting upside of fortune and publicity that could put UMass among the elite athletics institutions in the nation.

The battle for that higher designation, however, is a long, hard one. Before the team can play in Division I-A, it needs a conference, and must make a number of fiscally unpleasant adjustments, such as raising the number of scholarships allotted for the squad and spending extra for what could likely amount to a more expensive travel budget.

"[Finances, stadium improvements and conference affiliation] are all major hurdles. We can minimize any of them," Athletic Director Bob Marcum said. "You look at the stadium, and that's a huge outlay of it, and the conference affiliation versus being an independent is also huge. I think that all of it probably gets back to financing, though. There's a lot of hurdles in putting together a program."

While the Mid-American Conference has expressed interest in giving Massachusetts a league to call home, the University hasn't had quite so much luck in finding a stadium to serve as "home" in the less abstract sense.

To play Division I-A football, UMass faces the challenge of paying for and undergoing major renovations in its facilities, including their current playing field, Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

McGuirk, which can house roughly 17,000 fans, is approximately 13,000 seats shy of the D I-A suggestion. The expansion of the stadium would be expensive in its own right, but the costs would likely be even more overwhelming considering the need for extra parking around the venue.

Paying for this adjustment would not be an easy task. According to the UMass athletics media relations office, contributions to the University of Massachusetts Athletic Fund (UMAF) have dropped in each of the past four years, despite the football team's recent success. At the UMAF's high point, in 1996, the fund brought in 1,263,388 dollars. The subsequent year saw 127,514 dollars drop off of that sum, and in 1999 the UMAF tallied only 1,101,237 dollars.

In comparison, the Minutemen's archrival, Connecticut, which has already made the adjustments to move to Division I-A ball, recently raised about 6-million. The Huskies' financial success goes hand-in-hand with their accolades on the hardwood, with UConn's men's basketball team taking home last season's National Championship. UMass hoops, on the other hand, failed to make the

Turn to MCGUIRK, page 9

Women's gym leaves Owls hooting

By James Piehl
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics team sent Temple home this weekend with a 195.275-187.925 loss and nothing on its mind except "who?"

The Owls encountered a Minutewomen gym squad that was nothing but business when it put up its season-high team score for the victory.

"This is the highest score of the season which is, of course, beneficial," coach Dave Kuzara said. "It is important to do well now, to get back on the winning track. This is a big win and a great score."

What should come as no surprise to anyone who has been following women's gymnastics this season is that UMass was paced by freshman phenom Katie Teft. The frosh added to her season highlight reel by tying the Minutewoman all-time mark on the balance beam with a 9.925 to win the event. Teft then went on to capture two more first-place finishes with a 9.850 on the uneven bars and a 39.175 in the all-around, which ties her career-high in that event. Teft finished second in the vault with a 9.700.

It wasn't all Teft for UMass, however, as the Minutewomen also scored a team season-high of 49.075 on the balance beam. Who else? Junior Mary Moore grabbed second place in the event with a 9.850, while freshman Jen Gendron snatched third with a career high of 9.800. Gendron's mark tied her for tenth-best all-time in UMass history. Not to be left out, freshman Megan Donoghue also registered a career-high on the beam with a 9.600.

"The beam team was impressive. It is probably the most difficult exercise to be successful in," Kuzara said. "Rene [Franklin] started us off with a great routine. It was her first time leading off the event. She provided the momentum that carried the team."

But the freshmen weren't finished. Gendron tallied another career-high on the afternoon to win the vault with a 9.725 and then went on to win the final event on the floor with a 9.850. UMass rounded out those events capturing second and third in the vault on the shoulders of Moore's 9.700 and junior Joni Goldberg's 9.450. The Minutewomen followed up with senior Mandy Mosby and Donoghue tying for second on the floor with 9.800.

"This is by far the best job by our freshmen as a whole this season. They're a big part of our program and

Turn to OWLS, page 9

photo by

Sports

Keep up to date with the world of sports.

Page 12 | The Massachusetts Daily Collegian | Wednesday, March 1, 2000

Late leads evaporates as Minutemen fall

Charging call tarnishes final comeback effort

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Staff

The trio was joined by another last night.

For just the third time this season, the Massachusetts men's basketball team had four players in Monty Mack, Chris Kirkland, Shannon Crooks and the missing fourth, Kewana Rhymer, scoring in double-digits, though it lost control of last night's game to still George Washington, falling 87-86 in the waning seconds during Senior Night at the William D. Mullins Center.

Colonials	87
Minutemen	86

The Minutemen (13-13, 9-6 Atlantic 10, 6-0 here) are more shot at securing a first round bye in the conference tournament next week in Philadelphia if they beat St. Bonaventure on Saturday. The Colonials, who are in second place behind Dayton in the A-10 West, advance over the Mendoza line to 14-13 and 9-6 in conference play.

"We played dumb basketball for the last five minutes of the game," said UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "We play smarter basketball, we win the game ... when you get them to the point when you can put them away, you have to put them away."

Prior to the game, co-captains Kirkland and Mike Babul and Mack and Anthony Oates were honored in a pre-game ceremony for seniors. Mack, who has run his freshman year due to NCAA academic regulations, will earn back his fourth year if he graduates in May, which he is slated to do.

Last night was also a battle between the league's top two scorers in Mack (22 points) and GW freshman Sir'Valiant Brown (33), who sits atop all Division I players with an average of 24.7 points per game.

Kirkland tied his career-high 26 points on an 8-for-12 night from the floor. The athletic forward also made the most of his opportunities at the line, shooting 10-for-13.

The Minutemen were a force on the boards, striking up a 52-34 advantage as Rhymer raked in 16 to match his 16 points for a double-double. UMass also earned the nod in the paint for a 59-39 scoring advantage. It was the aggressive play of the GW seniors that kept them in the running.

UMass struggled in the opening minutes with its transition defense as the run-and-gun Colonials capitalized on some easy breakaway buckets. Mack sandwiched a pair of threes around a two from Kirkland for an 8-5 lead in the first 2:15. GW went on a 7-0 run to recover for a 12-8 lead before Crooks broke the scoring drought with a driving layup.

Rhymer tallied 14 of his 16 points in the first half to gain advantage over George Washington's weaker post players, Francisco de Miranda and Antxon Iturbe. With 9:34 left, the 6-10 junior converted a put back off a Kirkland miss to take a 29-25 lead.

Babul held Brown to just two points before the freshman from Springfield, Va., drilled a trey to establish a 32-29 lead with 7:36 to go. Down 52-46 with three seconds left in the half, Crooks pulled up for a jumper to make it 52-48 to close out first half scoring.

Brown opened up the second half with four quick points including a driving baseline bucket past Mack for a 59-51 advantage. The Minutemen offense, led by Mack, exploded for a 10-0 run to tie it up at 59 with 14:28 left.

Brown added two and one for a

Turn to HOOP, page 9

UMass guard Jonathan drives to the hoop during his team's 87-86 loss to G.W. last night at the Mullins Center. The Minutemen, despite holding a late seven-point lead, fell to 15-13 on the season.

Flint scratches head after loss

By Brett Mauser
Collegian Staff

One can only think of what could have been.

With about three minutes remaining, the lead was by no means comfortable, but the Massachusetts men's basketball team had a cushion. After leading by as much as seven in the second half, UMass' lead was four when Chris Kirkland canned a pair of free throws with 3:05 remaining to put the home team up 82-78.

Then came the "what if?" What if Shannon Crooks decides to lay it in rather than attempt to blow the roof off with an emphatic fast break flush?

Brett Mauser

Monty Mack, nearly falling out of bounds after a nifty steal, left Crooks with a dandy pass on the other end with little paint in front of him. The sophomore rose and came up just short on the dunk, pulling the gun out of the holster and shooting the Minutemen in the foot.

"He missed it, he should have laid it up," head coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "We played dumb basketball. We play smarter basketball, we win the game.

"When you got a chance to put them away, you got to put them away. You got to come up with rebounds and you got to make them take tough shots, and that's what we didn't do in the last 2 1/2 minutes of the game."

On the other end, Mike King's putback cut the lead to four to set up Sir'Valiant Brown, who drilled a three-point from the left wing that put GW in the lead at 83-82, an advantage it would have for good.

The Minutemen didn't play Minuteman basketball all evening, falling into the trap that GW attempts to set each time it steps on the floor. When playing a half court game, the Colonials had almost no answer for Kirkland (career-high 26 points) and Kitwana Rhymer (16 points, 16 rebounds). In fact, the Maroon and White hammered away on the boards, grabbing a season-high 28 offensive rebounds. But the tempo favored George Washington, as the Minutemen took GW's bait and the Colonials reeled them in.

"The thing that we wanted to do was not get into that up-tempo game with them. We wanted to take our time on offense," Mack said. "When we did that, we got any shot we wanted. I think we just fell into that little black hole with them. When they started to go up and down, we started going up and down, too."

UMass battled massive foul trouble for the duration of the game, as Kirkland and Mack picked up three first half

Turn to SIDE, page 9

Teams on bubble for tourney

Niagara could be snubbed; Hockey East will get four

The ultimate goal of every Division I college hockey program in the country is to be the last one standing at the Providence Civic Center on April 8.

However, in order to have an opportunity to raise the national championship trophy, you must get into the NCAA tournament first.

With post season conference tournaments only 10 days away and the NCAA Regionals set to begin in about three weeks, the nation's top squads are battling it out to be a part of the 12-team field.

Two teams have already qualified for the NCAA tournament by virtue of automatic bids. Boston University, the regular season champion of Hockey East, and Wisconsin, which pulled the same feat in the Western Collegiate Hockey Association, already made it to the post-season.

Michael Kobylanski
College Hockey

For both teams, qualifying for the NCAA tournament is just the first step in what will hopefully be a magical run through the brackets.

"If we want to be really successful this year, our last game is April 8 [in the NCAA championship game]," said Wisconsin hockey coach Jeff Sauer in an article on U.S. College Hockey Online. "There's a lot of hockey left to play for."

Added BU coach Jack Parker in an article on USCHO, "[We've achieved] a lot of our goals that we had at the beginning of the season. One was to play well at home and we did that. One was to win the Beanpot and we did that. One was to put ourselves in a good position for the Hockey East playoffs. We never dreamed that we'd win the Hockey East regular season.

So things have gone well for us thus far."

In the other two major hockey conferences, the Central Collegiate Hockey Association and the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference, the regular season champion has yet to be determined. Michigan appears to have the upper hand in the CCHA race, while St. Lawrence needs only one more point to stake its claim as the best squad in the ECAC.

Each of the four major conferences will also receive an automatic bid for the winner of its league tournament. As a result, each team that qualifies for the conference affair can also still make the NCAA tournament if it wins it all.

Assuming that each of the four major conferences sends a different regular-season and tournament champion, then eight of the 12 teams will have already been determined before the final at-large bids have been awarded. But that's not likely to happen, especially in Hockey East.

With four teams (BU, New Hampshire, Maine and Boston College) ranked in the Top 10 poll, it appears that the Terriers are lucky to have nailed down the automatic bid already. BU is the only team of the quartet who didn't reach the Frozen Four last year, but has a legitimate chance of ending up in Providence this season.

As far as the other three clubs, they should all make the

Turn to HOCKEY, page 9

COURTESY COLGATE MEDIA RELATIONS

Goaltender Shep Harden and the rest of the Colgate hockey team will likely be one of the 12 teams in the upcoming NCAA Tournament.

UMass eyeballs Division I-A: McGuirk needs renovation

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

This article is the second installment of a series on the future of University of Massachusetts football, and the possible move to Division I-A competition.

With the 1998 Division I-AA National Title under its belt, the Massachusetts football team has been exploring the possibility of making the changes necessary to compete at the next level – with the Florida States and Virginia Techs of the world.

The gridiron is the only playing field on which the Minutemen do not currently take on the highest level of competition available, and the upgrade from D-I-AA to D-I-A has an exciting upside of fortune and publicity that could put UMass among the elite athletics institutions in the nation.

The battle for that higher designation, however, is a long, hard one. Before the team can play in Division I-A, it needs a conference, and must make a number of fiscally unpleasant adjustments, such as raising the number of scholarships allotted for the squad and spending extra for what could likely amount to a more expensive travel budget.

"[Finances, stadium improvements and conference affiliation] are all major hurdles. We can minimize any of them," Athletic Director Bob Marcum said. "You look at the stadium, and that's a huge outlay of it, and the conference affiliation versus being an independent is also huge. I think that all of it probably gets back to financing, though. There's a lot of hurdles in putting together a program."

While the Mid-American Conference has expressed interest in giving Massachusetts a league to call home, the University hasn't had quite so much luck in finding a stadium to serve as "home" in the less abstract sense.

To play Division I-A football, UMass faces the challenge of paying for and undergoing major renovations in its facilities, including their current playing field, Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

McGuirk, which can house roughly 17,000 fans, is approximately 13,000 seats shy of the D-I-A suggestion. The expansion of the stadium would be expensive in its own right, but the costs would likely be even more overwhelming considering the need for extra parking around the venue.

Paying for this adjustment would not be an easy task. According to the UMass athletics media relations office, contributions to the University of Massachusetts Athletic Fund (UMAF) have dropped in each of the past four years, despite the football team's recent success. At the UMAF's high point, in 1996, the fund brought in 1,263,388 dollars. The subsequent year saw 127,514 dollars drop off of that sum, and in 1999 the UMAF tallied only 1,101,237 dollars.

In comparison, the Minutemen's archrival, Connecticut, which has already made the adjustments to move to Division I-A ball, recently raised about 6-million. The Huskies' financial success goes hand-in-hand with their accolades on the hardwood, with UConn's men's basketball team taking home last season's National Championship. UMass hoops, on the other hand, failed to make the

Turn to MCGUIRK, page 9

photo by [illegible]

Women's gym leaves Owls hooting

By James Piehl
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics team sent Temple home this weekend with a 193.275-187.925 loss and nothing on its mind except "who?"

The Owls encountered a Minutewomen gym squad that was nothing but business when it put up its season-high team score for the victory.

"This is the highest score of the season which is, of course, beneficial," coach Dave Kuzara said. "It is important to do well now, to get back on the winning track. This is a big win and a great score."

What should come as no surprise to anyone who has been following women's gymnastics this season is that UMass was paced by freshman phenom Katie Teft. The frosh added to her season highlight reel by tying the Minutewoman all-time mark on the balance beam with a 9.925 to win the event. Teft then went on to capture two more first-place finishes with a 9.850 on the uneven bars and a 39.175 in the all-around, which tied her career-high in that event. Teft finished second in the vault with a 9.700.

It wasn't all Teft for UMass, however, as the Minutewomen also scored a team season-high of 49.075 on the balance beam. Who else? Junior Mary Moore grabbed second place in the event with a 9.850, while freshman Jen Gendron snatched third with a career high of 9.800. Gendron's mark tied her for tenth-best all-time in UMass history. Not to be left out, freshman Megan Donoghue also registered a career-high on the beam with a 9.600.

"The beam team was impressive. It is probably the most difficult exercise to be successful in," Kuzara said. "Rene [Franklin] started us off with a great routine. It was her first time leading off the event. She provided the momentum that carried the team."

But the freshmen weren't finished. Gendron tallied another career-high on the afternoon to win the vault with a 9.725 and then went on to win the final event on the floor with a 9.850. UMass rounded out those events capturing second and third in the vault on the shoulders of Moore's 9.700 and junior Jobi Goldberg's 9.450. The Minutewomen followed up with senior Mandy Mosby and Donoghue tying for second on the floor with 9.800.

"This is by far the best job by our freshmen as a whole this season. They're a big part of our program and

Turn to OWLS, page 9

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 25 | Thursday, March 2, 2000

SGA discusses funding investigation

Senator confirms report

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

This is the third in a series on the SGA's budget allocations for the past three years.

In a Senate meeting last night, the Student Government Association raised complaints against a recently published Collegian article, stating that the allocation of funding to various Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) is a fair, due process. However, last night a member of the Ways and Means Committee stated to the Collegian that, in fact, certain RSOs do receive more funding than others because they have representation on the Ways and Means Committee.

"It can't hurt the Republican Club that they have several members on the [Ways and Means] Committee," Sylvan senator at large Chris Tarnstrom said. "When a question comes up regarding what a certain $200 allocation request is for, if it's the Republican Club's budget, an answer is right there; if it's RAIL's budget, the answer will not (at present) be forthcoming."

An in-depth investigation of the SGA's budget allocations for the past three years reveal that certain groups are receiving more funding than others. The statistics are compiled by the Campus Activities Office and show the amount of funding granted to RSOs by the committee.

During last night's meeting, Amy Pellegrino, chair of the Ways and Means Committee, cited against these statistics from the Campus Activities Office by stating that there is a due-process complete with guidelines and regulations that must be adhered in allocating funds. One rule in particular states not allocating more than $750 to RSOs that haven't petitioned for a budget in the last two years. This holds true for RSOs such as the UMass Democrats who received only $645 for the fiscal year 2000, Pellegrino said.

According to her, every year RSOs are given the opportunity to request a certain budget amount based on the amount of money they believe they need for programming. She said the Ways and Means Committee then reviews each proposal and decides how much of the requested money should be allocated to that RSO.

Pellegrino stated that the Collegian's statistics indicate the amount of funding an RSO was given, but doesn't necessarily indicate how much programming and how long the particular RSO has been receiving a budget.

She stated that the Republican Club has received the most funding in the past and this is based on the fact that they have been around longer than most RSOs and have brought many programs to campus, including speaker Republican Ollie North sometime during this semester.

"Some groups do more programming than other groups and therefore deserve more funding," Pellegrino said.

However, according to Senator Tarnstrom, certain RSO's get represented more on the Ways and Means Committee than others and as a result get funded more.

"The programming of certain RSOs, especially the Republican Club and their spin-offs, get thorough representation on the Ways and Means Committee," Tarnstrom said. "Many RSOs, having no representation on the committee, need to scramble to collect the necessary funds for an event."

Lisa Giddens, student development specialist for Residence Life, said she deals with programming in residence halls and understands the similar process that RSOs must go through in requesting budget allocations. She said there is a direct correlation between the amount of funding and programming. However, she stated there is no accurate method in assuring that such program requirements are being met.

"If in fact they [Ways and Means] check to see how many programs happen and the funding necessary for those programs is realistic, then they are being true to their policy," Giddens said. "The question is whether they are checking to see if that programming is happening."

Giddens added that equating the amount of funding with programming is unfair for new RSOs that don't have the level-funding to start with to hold such programs.

"If you don't have the funding to start with and you don't start on an even playing field, how do you have the opportunity to really develop or even have a fair chance at having a strong RSO or organization?" Giddens asked. "[The] quality of a program in meeting students' needs is more important than the quantity of programming happening."

Coolidge Senator Jim Eltringham said the process isn't always as accurate as students would like it to be.

"Politically active RSOs tend to know the system better and that's a problem. The Ways and Means Committee attempts to familiarize people with the process and some people just don't know about it," Eltringham said.

Tarnstrom agreed with Eltringham and said that the problem is there is not equal representation sitting on the Ways and Means Committee and this is preventing a variety of perspectives on campus programming and activity needs from being heard.

Amy Pellegrino speaks about money allocation during the SGA's meeting last night

SGA makes student fees a priority

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

During a meeting of the Student Government Association (SGA) last night, a motion was passed by Commuter Senator Phil Zetye to keep mandatory student fees a priority at the University of Massachusetts, amidst a Supreme Court case that could no longer make it mandatory for students to support Registered Student Organizations (RSOs).

The Supreme Court case of Southworth vs. Grebe could place a freeze on mandatory student fees across the nation and could significantly impact student organizations and student governments by not funding them at all.

The case was filed against the University of Wisconsin in 1996 by a handful of law students who argued against the viewpoints of 18 student organizations that receive student fees, including the Gay, Bisexual, Lesbian (GBL) Organization, the Campus Women's Center and the Madison AIDS Support Network.

Wisconsin student Scott Southworth argued that being forced by mandatory fees to support organizations he disagreed with was against his First Amendment rights.

On the other hand, Zetye argued against Southworth and said that funding for student organizations should be a priority.

"I'm in favor of students having funded programs no matter what their opinions are," Zetye said. "Student organizations should have support from the university."

According to Zetye, he brought the motion before the Senate because there is concern for the possibility of a ruling in the Southworth case within a month, even though it has been estimated there won't be a decision until May.

"This Supreme Court case has the potential of taking the power away from student organizations by taking away their funding," Zetye said. "It's an issue that could potentially silence basically every student organization across the country."

He stated that the goal of the motion is not to keep the student fees mandatory, but to make it a priority within the university to support student organizations, if in fact the court case rules in favor of Southworth.

"Amy Pellegrino, chair of the Ways and Means Committee is responsible for allocating the mandatory student fees to various RSOs for funding purposes. She said she hopes the decision isn't made against them.

"Every meeting that I hear about the Southworth case, I pray it [the decision] will not come when I'm doing my budget," Pellegrino said. "Then of course, maybe it will come out tomorrow, we don't know."

While protesting death penalty, six locals arrested

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Six students from the University of Massachusetts as well as community members from the Pioneer Valley gathered at Washington D.C. on Feb. 28 to protest both the imprisonment of journalist Mumia Abu-Jamal and the issue of the death penalty.

The protest began on the steps of the Supreme Court, lasting about three hours and ending with the arrests of 185 protestors for non-violent civil disobedience and with 16 of the 20 Western Massachusetts protestors being taken to jail.

According to Kazu Haga, a member of the Western Massachusetts Free Mumia Abu-Jamal Coalition, over 2,000 people from all over the country ranging from the ages of 16 to 94 years old gathered to protest.

"We had people from every age group and from all over the country," he said.

The first part of the protest began across the street from the court in a park and included demonstrators both singing and marching in peaceful protest. Then, those that took place in the event broke into groups and blocked the streets around the Supreme Court in order to stage a mass "die in" to represent all of the prisoners that were executed by death penalty during the year of 1999.

"We wanted to stage a die in because we thought that the action would be very symbolic," he said.

Mumia Abu-Jamal, is a former award winning journalist and member of the Black Panther Party and currently sits on death row with a conviction in the shooting death of a Philadelphia police officer. He was convicted in 1982 of the murder following what many believe to be a grossly unfair racial and politically motivated trial.

Steve Theberge, a member of the Coalition, was at the protest for several different reasons, a major reason being that he felt that Abu-Jamal had not received a fair trial.

"I was there, one, because I believe that Mumia is innocent, two, because I feel that he did not get a fair trial, and three, because I am against the death penalty in any situation," he said.

Judge Albert Sabo, who is well known in the state of Pennsylvania for being a racially biased judge, tried him. Sabo has the unique distinction for presiding over more death sentences than any other sitting judge in the country.

Many also believe that Abu-Jamal received an unfair trial due to the fact that he did not have the money to receive adequate representation. His

Turn to PROTESTS, page 3

Professors' salaries focus of campus rally

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

A rally held yesterday focusing on the recent budget issues on the University of Massachusetts campus debated whether or not money from the current budget was being unfairly allocated.

The event, which was a conjunctive effort between the Young Americans for Freedom and the UMass Republican, featured student speakers addressing both the issue of exorbitant faculty salaries and the effects that budget cuts have on students.

One speaker, graduate student Ed Cutting, commented that some faculty and administration were receiving too much money for the work that they did. The groups posted a list of names outside the Student Union of administrators that received a large salary per year.

Ken Campbell, a member of the Republican Club concurred with statements made about high salaries, explaining to the crowd that the cuts were unnecessary when so much money was going toward wages.

"There is no reason for budget cuts when we have people making over $70,000 a year," he said.

According to statistics, approximately 247 people that work for the University get paid upwards of $90,000 a year. Of this group of people, 79 percent are faculty members currently holding a doctorate, and 21 percent are administrators. Of the group of administrators 58 percent of those paid this type of salary are associate deans or above.

These are fairly typical wages for a university. According to data obtained from the American Association of University Professors, UMass is actually below the countrywide figures for payment of professors with the average professor being paid $78,500 as opposed to the national average of $79,300.

Cutting explained that many of the faculty members receiving large salaries are not deserving of the extra money. Commenting that in previous years professors had taught more classes therefore improving the quality of education and allowing more classes for students.

"There was a time when faculty members were required to teach four classes a semester," he said.

Also cited was the fact that some aspects of the University's productivity were not up to the standards that they should be. Cutting explained that one major problem was that inefficient workers were being paid for jobs that were not getting done correctly.

"The sad part is that people that put in the time to do a good job don't get paid a cent more than those that sit around and watch cable TV," he said.

Zack Spillman, a representative of the Republican Club, made comments regarding the effects that the budget cuts had on students. He mentioned that due to the fact that both teaching assistants and classes had been cut that students were not able to get into the classes that they need.

"I cannot get into the classes that I want, and I cannot get into the classes that I need," he said.

Similar comments were made by sophomore Jen Casavant regarding the fact that the scarcity of classes was preventing students from graduating on time and would diminish the quality of the programs currently in place on campus.

They are ready to cut another 10 percent off of the Spanish and Portuguese department," she said. "I want to know how the University can justify the cut."

JARET BARR COLLEGIAN

Jeffrey Bazydio, 19, of Clinton, Ma., puts up a list of Faculty Salaries on the pillars of the student union.

Spring Break:

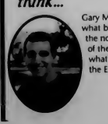
Alternative trips planned

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Correspondent

While many students are packing their skis to head north or their surfboards to head south for the upcoming spring vacation, a group of UMass students are taking a more alternative route, packing their hammers and textbooks and taking their class on the road.

On March 10-11, 104 students involved in the nationwide Alternative Spring Break (ASB) Program will travel to select communities to work beside self-help groups to address pressing community needs. This year students will be working in the cities of Ivanhoe, New Road, Westmoreland County and Caroline County, VA; Birmingham, AL; St. Helena Island, SC; Lumberton and Cherokee, NC.

"I'm not out there to change the world, I'm there to do everything I can for the week I'm there," junior Emily DeSantis said, a first-year participant heading to Ivanhoe. DeSantis and her fellow students will be assisting in a variety of community needs, anything from fixing windows to playing with children.



For several years, UMass has had a unique standing with the ASB Program. While many colleges participate, such as Boston College, UMass requires students to enroll in one of two classes, "Grassroots Community Development" taught by Anthropology professor Art Keene or "Spirituality, Culture and Social Justice in the American South" taught by Kent Higgins of the UMass Inter-religious Project.

Turn to SPRING BREAK, page 2

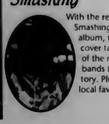
EXTENDED FORECAST

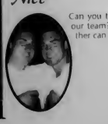
Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 37 LOW: 26	HIGH: 41 LOW: 27	HIGH: 48 LOW: 27



What I really think...

Gary Mendese tells all what bothers him about the not-so-smart people of the world. To read what he thinks check out the Ed-Op page.

PAGE 4



Absolutely Smashing

With the release of the Smashing Pumpkin's latest album, this week's Arts cover takes a look at one of the most influential bands in recent rock history. Plus, Trax serves up local faves.

PAGE 5

Twice as Nice

Can you tell which one's on our team? That's funny, neither can we.

PAGE 16

Arts & Living 5
Comics 15
Crossword 15
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 16

ON THE INTERNET
www.dailycollegian.com

Tuesday may be end for McCain

By David S. Broder
Washington Post

LOS ANGELES – The coast-to-coast victories last night by Texas Gov. George W. Bush restore him to the favorite's role in the Republican presidential race and confront rival John McCain with what could be a final test next week of his ability to resurrect his dramatic but daunting bid to upset the establishment favorite.

Bush's clear-cut wins over the Arizona senator in the Virginia primary and North Dakota caucuses, a week after he lost Michigan and Arizona, continued the pattern of alternating wins and losses that has confounded forecasters and captured the public fancy as the best political soap opera in years. The Virginia verdict spelled – at least temporarily – a failure for McCain's headlined effort to weaken Bush by linking the governor to controversial Christian conservative leaders Pat Robertson and Jerry Falwell.

Bush now has piled up a substantial lead in pledged delegates over McCain, with victories from Puerto Rico to the Pacific Northwest. McCain held a slight lead over Bush as the count of all Washington ballots proceeded, bolstering his demonstrated ability to lure independents and Democrats. But Bush held a 3-2 advantage on Republican ballots, which determine the allocation of 12 delegates.

Next Tuesday, on the biggest voting day of the truncated primary calendar, 13 states will choose 59 percent of the delegates needed for the Republican nomination. Bush is favored in Georgia and perhaps Missouri, while McCain leads in the five New England states that had a close-up view of his message and methods in winning New Hampshire on Feb. 1.

The key battlegrounds next Tuesday are California, New York and Ohio, in all of which polls showed Bush leading as of last weekend. Unless McCain can break through in one or two of those states, both delegate counts and elusive momentum will swing heavily in Bush's favor, as he moves onto more favorable territory in the March 14 voting in Texas, Florida and other southern states.

Before Washington and North Dakota results came in, John Weaver, McCain's campaign manager, sought to discount the significance of the latest turn in the campaign. "George Bush is a strong regional candidate, and he proved that tonight," he said, "but he has not proven that he can reach out to other regions and critical swing voters."

Karl Rove, Bush's political strategist, pointing to the governor's win over Steve Forbes in the Iowa caucuses and his victory last night in North Dakota caucuses, said, "It is fanciful to suggest that Governor Bush is not a national candidate. And I can't remember a Republican nominee in modern times who has not been able to win in the South," as McCain has not.

As the returns came in, Bush and McCain continued their bitter quarrel over the influence and views of religious right leaders. The Bush camp insisted the Arizona senator had overplayed his hand by appealing to "religious fears." But McCain continued to link Bush to the anti-Catholic views of some conservative religious leaders, calling them "the forces of evil."

Republican pollster Linda DiVall, who counseled Elizabeth Dole as a candidate, said yesterday that McCain's challenge to Robertson "frankly leaves him in a very precarious position. He needs to clarify quickly that he is not attacking Christian conservative voters, so he won't be cast as a divider of the party."

John Pitney, a student of GOP politics from California's Claremont-McKenna College, said that he thought the exchange had been harmful to both McCain and Bush. "I don't see how Republicans can win from an argument over who is the bigger bigot."

Pitney added: "Bush has shown he can do a reasonably good job of turning out the Republican base. The bad news is you can't win (in November) with just the Republican base."

The rival candidates will meet Thursday night in a televised debate, a brief pause in a cross-country marathon that has them flying back and forth between the East and West coasts.

McCain insisted yesterday that he had "no concerns" about picking a fight with Falwell and Robertson, saying he had laid out "a clear choice" for his party.

"To stand up and take on the forces of evil – that is my job and I can't steer the Republican Party if those two individuals have the influence that they have on the party today," McCain told reporters on his bus as he traveled through central California.

Spring Break...
let's get packing!

ZANNA
downtown Amherst
www.zanna.com

■ spring break

continued from page 1

Both Keene and Higgins collaborate in class organization, publicity and fundraising, and each head four of the eight groups. Keene's group will be heading to the Virginia communities and Higgins' group farther south. Keene will personally participate in the New Road project and Higgins in Cherokee. Many participants have done the ASB several times and some return as student facilitators.

DeSantis is taking her classroom knowledge with her to Ivanhoe. "We are studying what it means to do charity work versus social change. I see myself falling in between because we're taking our time to learn about their customs, their beliefs and we want to help them out any way we can."

Class work consists mostly of readings, written reflections and group discussion.

Higgins noted that the ASB experience tends to change people's likes, generally in a good direction. He explained, "It is a pretty profound experience to, first, get out of town and next, to push your own personal limits – to understand where other communities are coming from and what oppression has been like."

George Myers, a sophomore history major, is going to Birmingham primarily for this reason. "People have this idea that racism and the civil rights movement were a thing of the sixties, but if you look in your classes, they're predominately white. I thought this was a way I could actually engage in a meaningful relationship within a different environment."

In the classroom, Higgins and his students discuss traditions and beliefs related to the communities they will be visiting. For example, there is an active African spirituality on St. Helena Island and this year as a new addition, they will be working beside Native American communities that have been overrun by Christian influence in North Carolina.

These studies are important, Higgins claims, because it helps students understand what the community is trying to preserve. Many of his groups will be involved in building and repair, however the St. Helena Island group will help establish a credit union.

Beyond academic work, all the students involved in the ASB program gathered several weeks ago at a retreat in a Unitarian Church in Greenfield. Both DeSantis and Myers describe it as a great experience and allowed them to build a bond with the students on their trips.

Higgins offers a bit of advice to people considering ASB for next year, "If you get bored with life in a glorified suburb like Amherst, you should try this."

Higgins' groups have organized a benefit tonight at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Stravaganza will include auctions, an open mic, tables for several registered student organizations and performances by Mission Improvable, local bands Cappacino Jelly Beans, Optimist Prime and Ruby Dune.

COURTESY OF ASB

Students involved in the Alternative Spring Break program who will be spending their spring break helping others.

Everybody Scores!
REGISTER WITH MYBYTES.COM AND SCORE BIG!

GET A FREE SONIC ABYSS MULTIMEDIA CD AND AUTOMATICALLY BE ENTERED INTO OUR SCORE BIG, SCORE OFTEN SWEEPSTAKES.
YOU COULD WIN AN INSTANT PRIZE!
PLUS, YOU'LL HAVE A CHANCE AT $100,000 TOWARDS YOUR COLLEGE EDUCATION.

$core BIG $core OFTEN Sweepstakes

UpCLOSE travel well SPEND LESS
BLOCKBUSTER
CALGON
SESSIONS.com
SKECHERS
OldGlory.com
TripHub.com Your Student Travel Source
UNIVERSAL
UNIVERSAL MUSIC & VIDEO DISTRIBUTION

mybytes.com™

No Purchase Necessary. Void in Florida and where prohibited by law. Must be legal resident of the United States. (except Florida) 18 yrs or older, registered at a college or university during the promotional period. Sweepstakes ends 6:00 PM EST 03/17/00. To Play: visit www.mybytes.com and register for the website using process provided, confirm your contact information on the game page and submit. Instant winners selected at random and notified instantly by site. Grand Prize winner will be selected at random on or about 3/21/00 and notified via email and regular US mail. Odds of winning Prizes depend on the number of entries received. By entering, participants agree to be bound by the complete Official Rules available at www.mybytes.com or send SASE to "ISSO Rules" Common Places, 810 Memorial Dr., Cambridge, MA 02139. BLOCKBUSTER® name, design and related marks are trademarks of Blockbuster Inc. Blockbuster Inc. is not a sponsor of or in any way liable or responsible for the administration of this game. [Coupon redeemable at participating BLOCKBUSTER® store locations.]
© 2000 Youdotcom

Professor published in Nature

By Matt Foster
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts polymer science professor Tom Russell has been featured in the February 24 issue of the science periodical Nature for his recent work with nanoscopic pattern transfer.

Russell, and a UMass research student, Thomas Thurn-Albrecht, teamed up with Ullrich Steiner and Erik Schaffer, a graduate student, of the University of Groningen, in the Netherlands, for this year long project.

The process involved the use of the polymer polystyrene. A polymer is a length of similar molecules that can be manipulated in different ways. Polystyrene is commonly found in Styrofoam cups.

The procedure consists of placing polystyrene over some kind of conductive material; Russell's experiment used gold. This combination is placed between two electrodes.

When an electric current is passed through the electrodes and into the polymer the waves in the liquid are amplified and pulled towards the closest electrode, causing bubble-like circles to appear on the polymer's surface.

"When I balance the electric pressure against... the surface pressure I get a... characteristic wavelength," Russell said.

These circles are an equal distance apart and are all of equal diameter.

This pattern appears because of the electrical force working against the surface of the polymer and how viscous, or fluid, the polymer is.

"It doesn't happen helter-skelter. It happened at very distinct distances that represent a delicate balance between all of these forces," he continued.

His work was funded by the National Science Foundation and the U.S. Department of Energy, and can be used by such companies as IBM in the making of computer circuits.

Currently, the technique can make circuits that are one half the size as those made with the use of chemicals, "and this is without a clean-room," Russell said. A clean-room is a laboratory free of dust and static electricity.

"What a clean-room gives you is the ability to get the separation distance between the electrodes very well defined, precisely defined. I think that... we're just limited by the electric field. I think we're going to be getting down to tens of nanometers," Russell explained.

JANET BAER-COLLETTA

Getting fired up

Alina DeMeo, a Sophomore Spanish major, tries on some fire equipment under the watchful eye of (right) Christian Hinojosa and (left) Cory Dubuque. The three were in the Campus Center recruiting for the Amherst Fire Departments Student Force. They will be recruiting again today and Friday, from 9-3.

■ protests

continued from page 1

only representation during the trial was a court appointed attorney who, by his own admission, was inexperienced in criminal law and was later disbarred. It has also been documented that the pre-trial investigation and the trial itself were riddled with atypical procedures from the police department that many construe as improper.

During the duration of the trial, the police never ran adequate tests to prove that the bullet that killed the officer was from a gun that was carried by Jamal, and then preceded to lose any of the results to tests that they were forced to run. Some also claim that the police falsified reports that include information that would implicate Jamal in the murder.

Haga explained that many felt that the injustices done to Abu-Jamal represented the way that the judicial system was politically and racially biased.

"For a lot of people Mumia stands as a symbol for a racially biased system," he said. "A system that is very racist and very unjust."

In addition, many members of the organization feel that both witnesses and the jury were also tampered with in order to obtain a guilty verdict. They feel that the makeup of the jury was altered to include only one minority in a neighborhood that was over 40 percent black. They also believe that some witnesses were coerced into giving testimony that makes it seem as if Abu-Jamal is guilty of a crime that he did not commit.

Theberge explained that the injustices taking place in this case could be made right and that this was an important time for his cause.

"This could be the most crucial point of Mumia's case," he explained.

The case has recently come under scrutiny during late January when Philadelphia City Council passed a resolution calling for a temporary cessation of the death penalty in the state of Pennsylvania. Due to this action Pennsylvania Federal Judge William H. Jong is reviewing the case and must decide whether or not to fully review all aspects of the state court's findings and the ruling.

According to organizers the rally itself was a success that helped to raise awareness about the situation that was taking place in the legal system.

"It went fantastic. It couldn't have gone any better," Theberge said regarding the rally. "It was one of the most successful protests that I have been to."

In conjunction with the event, which was entitled "Grant a New Trial/Abolish the Death Penalty," was a companion support vigil asking for a new trial for the death row inmate that homelessness and hunger, cultural violence, discrimination and oppression, poverty and unemployment are solvable problems. We believe that social workers are specially suited to advance human rights and social justice. Do you believe that you can make a difference?

Students traveled to Washington DC to protest the imprisonment of journalist Mumia Abu-Jamal.

Wheelock College presents Graduate Social Work for the 21st Century at our Open House on Thursday, March 30. Join us from 4:30 - 6:30 p.m. at the Wheelock College Alumni Room.

Come and meet with others who share your deepest beliefs

For information and reservations, please call Martha Sheehan, Director of Graduate Admissions: 617-879-2212. Graduate admissions information and application are available online @ www.wheelock.edu.

WHEELOCK
WE THINK ■ WE INSPIRE ■ WE LEAD

March '00

ARTS ON CAMPUS...

A monthly calendar brought to you by the UMass Arts Council.

Events

Thursday, March 2
GRANT DEADLINE! UMass Arts Council Mini-Grant Deadline all nogs. 545-0202
■THEATER: "The Bacchae of Euripides: A Communion Rite" adapted/directed by Wole Soyinka. 8pm in the Rand Theatre $ 545-2511
READING: Jorge Ignacio Cortinas reading of new works by Puerto Rican playwright and poet. 7 p.m. in Augusta Savage Gallery. 545-5177
Friday, March 3
■MUSIC: Clarinetist Jon Manasse & the Manhattan String Quartet will perform works by Brahms and Mozart. 8p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511
Saturday, March 4
THEATER: MISSION IMPROVable presents...a high energy improvised burlesque comedy performance. 8p.m. in Campus Center Room 101. 546-2631
CULTURAL NIGHT: Haitian Night. Poetry, music, dancing and more! 6:0 m. in the Student Union Ballroom. $ 545 3600.
Sunday, March 5
THEATER: Adios Barbie! by Yael Pinzaru and Jevis Wenner. Adaptation of collection of essays by young women, writing about it body image. 5p.m. in Curtain Theater through 3/6. 545-3490.
Tuesday, March 7
■THEATER: Oops! The Big Apple Circus Stage Show Thrill to the live music, theatrical sets and fast-paced staging that are the hallmarks of the Big Apple Circus. 7:30 m. in Concert Hall $ 545-2511 through 3/8.
Wednesday, March 8
FILM/DISCUSSION: "House of the World" and "The March" Part of the Multicultural Film Festival. Directors Esther Pavlenski (House of the World) and Abraham Ravett (The March) will be available to discuss their films. 8p.m. in Herter Auditorium 227 545-6348
MUSIC: Faculty Recital by Michael Sussman 8:15 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2227
THEATER: Not Ready For Bedtime Players Sexual education has never been quite done like this before! UMass students took on the subject! 8 p.m. 19th floor lounge in John Quincy Residential Hall 577-5181
Thursday, March 9
GRANT DEADLINE! UMass Arts Council Single Project/Events Grant Deadline at noon. 545-0202. Last SP/E Deadline of the Year!
■MUSIC/DANCE: 19th Annual Jazz Showcase Performances by Jazz Ensemble, Chapel Jazz, Vocal Jazz, vocal & instrumental chamber jazz ensemble and the University Dancers. 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511
Saturday, March 11
POETRY: Poetry Reading and Launch Pioneer Valley Poetry in Motion. 7 p.m. at University Gallery 253-0630
Friday, March 17
MUSIC: Martina McBride in Concert 8p.m. in the Mullins Center $ 545-0505
Thursday, March 23
■THEATER: Guys and Dolls presented by the UMass Theater Guild. 8 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium $ 545-2511 through Mar 25th, with a 2 p.m. matinee on Mar 25.
Friday, March 24
THEATER: Grease on Ice 7p.m. in the Mullins Center. $ 545-0505
MUSIC/DANCE: Tropical Vibes An evening of Cape Verdean music and dance. 9p.m. in 1009 Campus Center $ 545-3600.
Saturday, March 25
■CULTURAL NIGHT: Puerto Rican Cultural Night Jazz, dancing, poetry, singing and more! a 3:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. $ 545-3600
MUSIC: Revelle Gangsta Bitch Barbie plus Seventeen TBA in the Skybox, Campus Center $ 545-3216
MUSIC: High School Jazz Festival Jeffrey Holmes and David Sporny, coordinators. Performers Downbeat magazine student award winners, high school big bands, University ensembles in mini-concerts 10a.m. to 5p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium & Meeting Rooms. 545-2511
MUSIC: Smithsonian Jazz Masterworks Orchestra 17-member orchestra plays music by jazz masters Ellington, Goodman, and Gillespie 8p.m. in Concert Hall $ 545-2511
Sunday, March 26
■MUSIC: San Jose Taiko Japanese Drums Dance & Music Japanese-American taiko troupe combines traditional Japanese taiko drums with American spirit. 7p.m. in Concert Hall $ 545-2511. Drum workshop on 3/27- call 577-2486 for more info
Tuesday, March 28
■MUSIC: Faculty Recital Christopher Krueger, flute, Sally Pinkas, piano. Works by Bach, Schubert and Wyner. 8p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall $ 545-2227
Wednesday, March 29
■FILM/DISCUSSION: "Super Chief" Part of the Multicultural Film Festival. Filmmaker/Producer, Nick Kurzon, will introduce the film. 8p.m. in Herter Auditorium 227 545-6348.
Thursday, March 30
■MUSIC: Jameel Moondoc and the "Jus Grew" Orchestra part of the Magic Triangle Jazz Series. 8p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall $ 545-2511
■THEATER: "Hamletmachine" by Heiner Muller. 8p.m. in Curtain Theater $ 545-2511 through 4/8
Friday, March 31
MUSIC: Richie Havens 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center. Free to UMass students, $5 general public. 545-2511.

Exhibits

■AUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY
101 Fellw Africa House 545-5177
Redemption Songs
Through May 8
Ancestral Memories: Enduring Patterns in Contemporary Native American Art
Mar 22-Apr 25
Reception, Mar 22 5-7p.m

■HAMPDEN GALLERY & SCULPTURE GARDEN
Southwest Residential Area 545-0680
M-TH 12-6, SU 2-5 pm
Minefields of Memory
by Ken Hruby
Mar 6-Apr 14
Reception, Mar 6, 5p.m., preceded by a gallery talk by Hruby at 4 p.m.

■HERTER ART GALLERY
125A Herter Hall 545-0976
M-F 11-4 pm; SA-SU 1-4 pm
Linda Stojak: Recent Paintings
Mar 2-Apr 2
Reception, Mar 2, 4p.m
Recent Work by Roger Boyce
Mar 2-Apr 2
Reception, Mar 2, 4p.m

■STUDENT UNION GALLERY
Student Union Building 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 pm; F 10-3 pm SA-SU 1-4 pm
Lesotho Images of a People's Kingdom
by James W Harris
Mar 6-31

■UNIVERSITY GALLERY
Fine Arts Center 545-3670
TU-F 11-4 30 pm, SA-SU 2-5 pm
Light on the Familiar: Paintings by Scott Prior
Through May 17
Different Strokes: Selections from the Permanent Collection
Through Mar 17

■WHEELER GALLERY
Central Residential Area 545-0680
M-TH 12-6 pm; SU 2-5 pm
Evidence of Feminism: Exhibit 8 by Kathy Jacobs, Susan Montgomery, Jane Bergeron, Pell Hinckley, Sheryl Jaffe, Marcia Rossi Wise
Mar 1-28
Reception, Mar 3, 2-5p.m.

Five College students are offered a discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events.
■sponsored, in part, by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

3/00

UMass Arts Council, 101 Hasbrouck Lab, 545-0202

24 REASONS NOT TO HAVE AN 8:00 CLASS

NEWCASTLE
BLUE MOON
STEEL RAIL
DRAYMAN'S PORTER
BUD
BUD LIGHT
MAGIC HAT #9
MAGIC HAT FAT
ANGEL
LONG TRAIL ALE FOSTER'S
KILLIAN'S
COORS LIGHT
DAM ALE
INDIA'N PALE ALE
WEE HEAVY
IRELAND PARISH
CABOT ST WHEAT
RILEY'S IRISH STOUT
GUINNESS
BASS
HARP
STRAWBERRY
BLONDE
PETE'S PUB LAGER
ABITA TURBODOG

24 TAPS OF THE BEER YOU WANT AT THE PRICES YOU DESERVE

THE HANGAR Pub and Grill

THIS WEEK'S $2 DRAFT: PETE'S WICKED BREWS

Editorial/Opinion

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion
Relative freedom

Freedom is a relative term. Freedoms can overlap conflict, and sometimes it is necessary to choose one freedom over another. This is exactly what the Massachusetts State Senate chose to do when they passed legislation banning anti-abortion protests within twenty-five feet of all abortion clinics within the Commonwealth.

The point of this legislation is to protect women who are seeking abortions and the doctors who are performing them from any violent action which could be taken by protesters. Senate President Thomas Birmingham was quoted in The Boston Globe as saying "The goal of this buffer zone legislation is to protect the safety of women as they seek access to reproductive health services," which is certainly a goal worth striving for.

On the other side, however, lie the anti-abortion protestors who are affected by this legislation. They say that their freedoms of speech and of free assembly are being infringed by this legislation. It is possible, they say, for the legislation to be restricted to only violent protests, and that things like silent prayer, simple standing, and other forms of peaceful protest seems to indicate to them an act of discrimination against their point of view.

Who is right? Which freedom should take precedence in this struggle, that of the protestors or those who could be hurt by the protesting?

The Senate, and its legislation, is correct. It was right in passing the legislation, and it was right in not making exceptions for certain cases.

It is true that the law does infringe upon the right to protest of the abortion protestors. It does not, however, threaten the right to free speech – they can still say whatever they please, just not in a certain area. The right to protest is a very integral freedom, however, and should not be infringed upon without adequate reason. The reason in this case is more than adequate.

The well-being and safety of those who choose to partake of a totally legal medical service is should not be subordinated to anyone's right to protest. The right to be safe, not to be harassed, not to be afraid, is a right which is more to be treasured than that of protest.

As for the concept of prohibiting only selected forms of protest, that is simply a slippery slope, which is impossible to legislate with any form of coherency. What does qualify as a 'violent' protest? Screaming in someone's ear is not a physical assault, sure enough, but is it still safe for the woman or doctor to pass through? The answer is vague and doubtful, and a haze which no one could possibly see through to set clear guidelines without the whole system simply falling apart.

In this case, the Senate made the correct choice as to which freedom takes precedence over the other and how to best implement the protection of that freedom. We at the Collegian agree with the decision to ban protests at abortion clinics.

The plight of redheads

I've never understood the concept of going tanning. Maybe because I never really tan. I go from fright white to crimson in less than a half hour. I'm one of those people who thinks of the sun and the freckles on my nose start to multiply on cue.

The explanation is easy even though you can't tell from this photo: I'm a redhead. Well, strawberry-blonde, actually, but whose counting the strands anyway?

Kathleen Ralls

I'm the only one in my family of five struck with the curse, as my brother and sister like to insist. When we were younger, they called me the ugly redheaded stepchild. I'd like to think I took such criticism with class and have risen above it. My dad thought it was hilarious to say "I'd rather be dead than red in the head," and make me reply, "I'd rather be red in the head." Really, though, it wasn't all that bad.

My friend Lauren swears that I have light brown hair, defying everybody else I have ever met. But she also thinks she is the only female in the world who is color-blind – you decide which one of us to believe.

In any case, with all of the warnings about ozone depletion and skin cancer, I'm getting a little nervous about my spring break in Texas. I'm not going to run out and go tanning this week as a primer. I've never understood the concept of being strapped inside a heat lamp prior to the vacation to avoid burning later. Why not just enjoy the beach and just accept the scalding while having fun for free?

I've had some doozies as far as burns go. After just one application of sunscreen in the morning, I'd spend all day in my pool playing tea party and recording laps across the wide 27-foot distance when I was little. I didn't think about how much the shower spray would hurt that night or about the fact that Solarcain does not work. I thought one layer of Sunseekers 30 was enough.

I suppose spending summers at Lake Winnesquam in New Hampshire didn't help either. I learned that the sun still shines on those who may not be allowed to flounder outside the barricaded shallow waters of the kid area. I couldn't even change myself at night because I was so sore. My dad got me a blue netted hat with my name in yellow letters screened onto the white front just to protect my face. Hey, this was 1983.

Despite all that, I was never one to just cement myself to a chair and soak up the rays because I could never sit still. I don't have the coordination to flip over every half hour. I don't even tan equally. It's not that I miss spots when putting lotion on and wind up with creative designs all over my body, but some areas just always remain white. Does anybody ever tan under their forearms? I had a friend who laid out all day with her underarms facing the sun and nothing happened. The worst is when people ask me if I just ate a powdered donut while the rest of my face is in flames. It's an unfortunate week-long phase to live out. Thankfully, companies have come up with better sunscreens, elongating my life by the day.

Besides the pains of tanning, and some sibling jealousy, being a redhead is definitely a plus. You can easily describe yourself as a redhead when meeting a stranger. It's an excuse not to have to wear pink, ever. I think every little redhead should be taught this simple fashion fact when they are young. I'd have to say my mother certainly took advantage of my nativity when I was in elementary school!

I swear that you cannot replicate red hair with any bottle of dye. One of the secretaries in my high school always seemed to have a rouge halo around her head in an effort to remain a redhead. Fakes either look too pink or too orange to be real. I'd have to say that as I get older, that has to be a main concern. I've considered saving some of my hairs and ask some stylist copy it. Or maybe I could even sell the color to some company for some extra cash. Loreal, hey, it's worth it. I think wannabe redheads would be thankful for a new option.

I'm already counting on getting some color in Texas and have accepted the consequences. I wouldn't want to think about digging out the KATHLEEN hat for our trip.

Kathleen Ralls is a Collegian columnist.

Cultivating humanity

On February 17th, William Bulger, President of the University of Massachusetts, spoke here at the flagship campus in Amherst on the importance of liberal education. Actually, the topic was freedom and education in the classical world, but the point was one that Bulger has repeatedly made; that is, that the "classics" are central to education and that education is central to freedom. Speaking on the topic of education Bulger almost always draws from his own liberal education – which required him to read, among other things, old books – and insists that it made a profound difference in his life.

George Thomas

Now it is not without some irony that Bulger sees liberal education as central to education as such, and yet the university he presides over, the leading and largest state institution in Massachusetts, does not have much in the way of liberal education requirements. True, we have a "diversity" requirement, but that is not the same thing. It calls for a very specific kind of "diversity." We wouldn't, after all, want to bring conservatives or people who take revealed religion seriously (at least Western religion) into the fold in the name of "diversity." Better than mere diversity, let me suggest that we bring liberal education requirements to UMass in the name of real education; in the name, even, of cultivating humanity.

As Bulger himself seems to suggest (following Aristotle) there are two central reasons for liberal education. One is civic. The university ought to prepare students for civic life and engagement beyond the university itself.

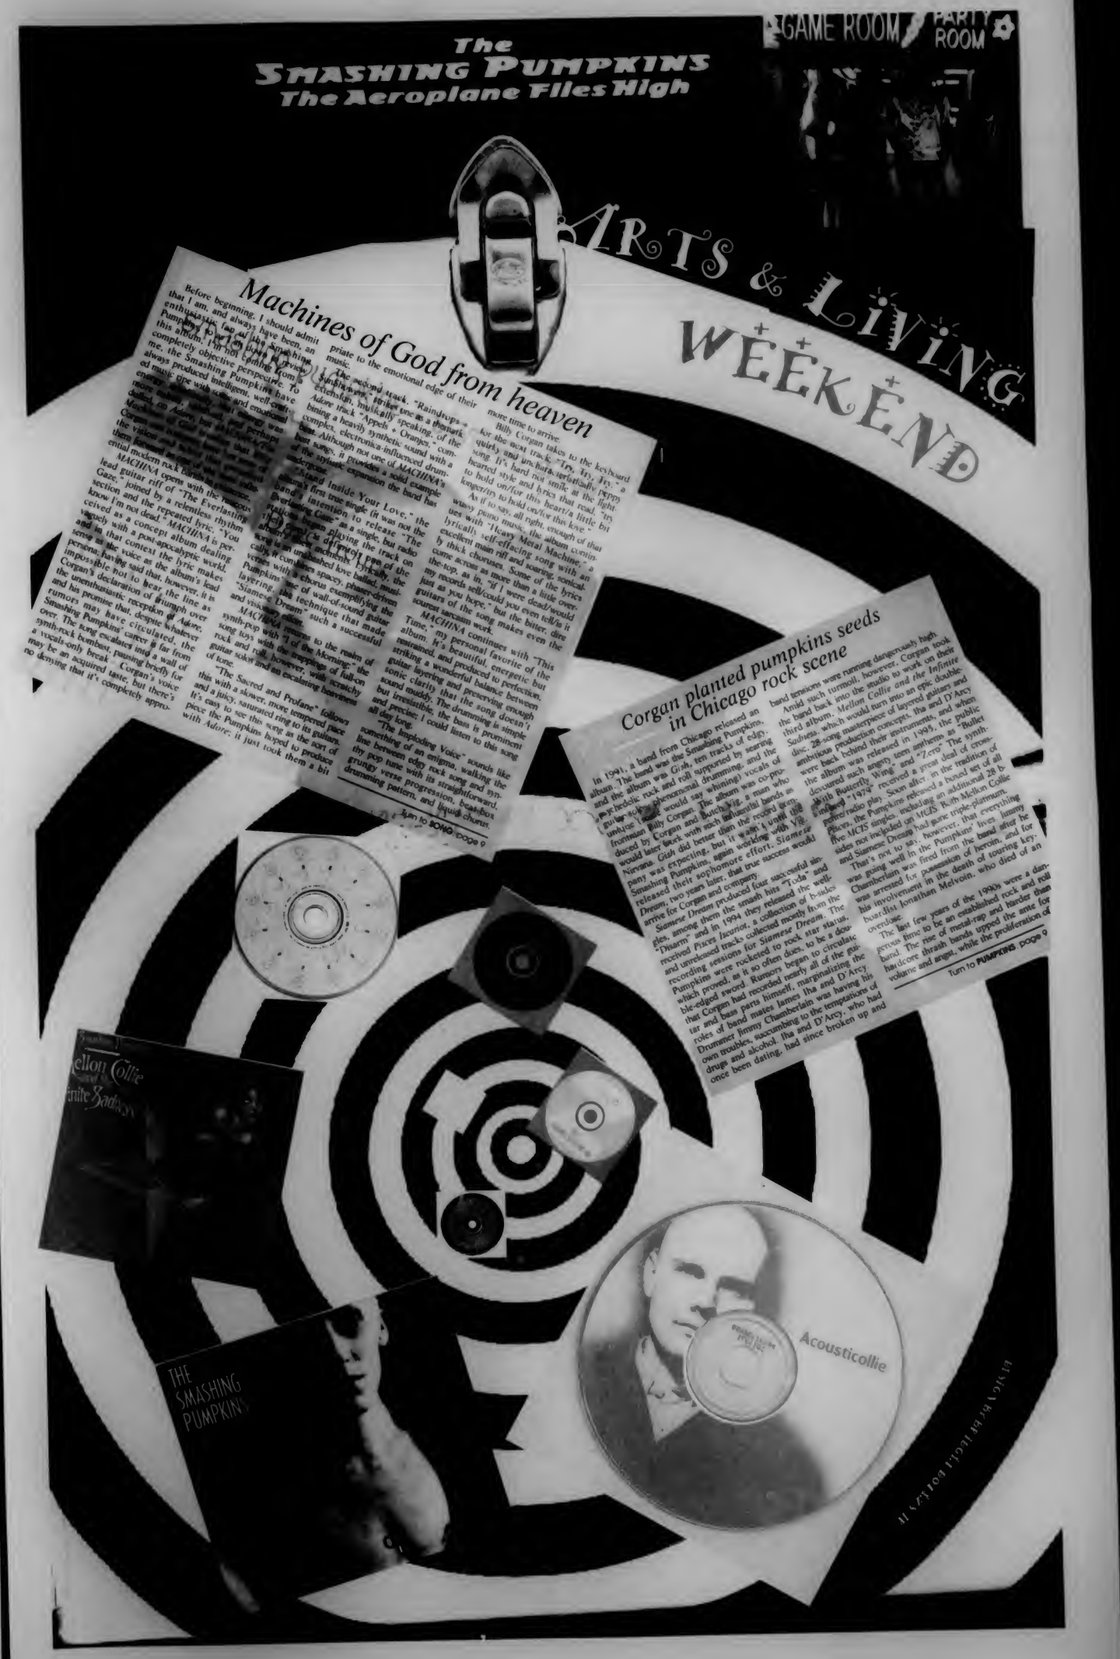
Students who make America their home ought to be educated in American history, politics, and literature. They ought to be required to read – sometime before they get their degree – the likes of William Faulkner and Alexis de Tocqueville, for starters. Teaching students an appreciation for their own society helps prepare them to participate in democratic politics; it may even get them thinking about what it means to be a citizen of a democracy. We might say that an understanding of one's own place and time is the beginning of real education.

Thus, the second reason for liberal education is linked to the first but aims more specifically at the individual. If we are truly in the business of education, we ought to introduce students to the great questions of the past (which are often the great questions of the present and therefore "relevant").

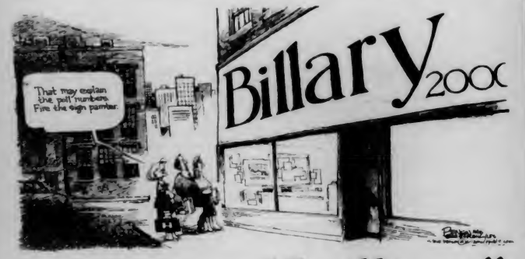
We ought to make our students contemplate the nature of humanity – truth, freedom, justice – questions that do not solicit easy answers. All students, regardless of their major, should be required to take courses in philosophy, literature, history, and the fine arts. In fact, we should create courses that do not revolve around the narrow (and invented) disciplinary boundaries of academic departments but courses that would put all of these things together.

Students should have to read Dostoevsky and Shakespeare, Plato and Rousseau; to view Renaissance masters or listen to Mozart.

There's a great objection to all of this, and one that I am all too familiar with. The argument states that this is conservative and, worse, especially for those aspiring professionals who are only interested in what is immediately "relevant" to their career path. "Irrelevant." However, there is nothing inherently conservative about liberal education. Yes, it might require that you read a dead, white, European male (in some cases), and actually take him seriously, but in this day and age, that's down right radical.



More importantly, as the literary critic Harold Bloom has argued, there is nothing inherently conservative about, say, Shakespeare. On the contrary, reading his plays may open you to the range of humanity – the sublime as well as the horrifying. Similarly, to take Plato seriously today, when democracy is taken for granted as an unqualified good, may lead one to criticize the status quo, not reinforce it. As students in the age of super-democracy, it may even be that we especially should familiarize ourselves with those great critics of democracy and take them seriously. Instead, we allow our students to dismiss Plato without understanding him because he does not confirm our own prejudices.



The smug freshman suggests that Plato's suspicion of equality is due to the fact that, not being a product of the 20th century, he does not "know any better." Taking critics of democracy like Plato seriously may help us understand ourselves and our situation; it will also help us realize that democracy was not always the norm and that, once upon a time, men (and women) made serious arguments on its behalf. Even taking seriously democracy's friendly critics like Tocqueville may help us see that democracy should not simply be taken for granted: that it may need to be helped along.

The other criticism of liberal education is the call for "relevancy." What do old books have to teach the aspiring businessman, computer programmer, or doctor? This, in fact, is the truly conservative position: it is even anti-philosophical. While a liberal education may not technically make you a better businessman, it may well make you a better human being. (If nothing else, it will make you a more enjoyable dinner companion.) If taken seriously, it would at least open one to the range of human possibility against our shallow consumerism; it would give us a glimpse into a world quite different from our own. Isn't it odd that the latest marketing gimmick is granted the status of relevant, whereas Dostoevsky's penetration into the depths of the human soul is (too bad for him) irrelevant?

We should be particularly insistent upon this point. Students want the prestige of a university degree, but they do not always want the education that comes along with it. Oh, they want the status of being educated, and they don't want to be told that they're not. As a respectable university, we should no longer tolerate this. Perhaps these students would be better off at vocational schools. And if they really want an education – not mere job training – we should force them to get it. We owe them, as well as the state (whose good citizens are, after all, footing part of the bill), that much. We do not need to turn out one more B.A. or B.S. (makes you think, doesn't it?) that will never again pick up a great book for edification or for simple enjoyment.

George Thomas is a UMass graduate student.

REMEMBER...
WE'RE TAKING PICTURES TODAY AT 12:30 IN THE COLLEGIAN OFFICE. BE THERE OR... FUHGEDABOUDIT!

Some "brilliant" people

Did you ever take a good look at what goes on around you? I mean a really good look. I've done it a number of times. Sometimes in the middle of the day (or after I've looked at some high-quality beastiality porn on the Internet), I'll just take a step back and take a good look around me for a while. And after that long, enriching glimpse at the wonderful world that surrounds me, I come to the same conclusion each and every time: there are some really stupid people out there.

I'm really sorry and that might not be very PC, but there are a ton of not-so-brilliant human beings on this planet. Now, I'm not exactly saying that I'm Albert Einstein or anything, but at least I have more than 12 active brain cells in my cranium, which is more than I can say for a great number of the wastes of skin I'm referring to.

OK, so maybe calling someone a waste of skin is a bit harsh, but damn... you just wonder about some people. You wonder how some people could be that dumb and you hope they never, under any circumstances, reproduce. Remember what your mother taught you: two wrongs don't make a right.

While I'd be foolish not to realize that we all have different things that bother us, those little pet peeves that drive us crazy, I'm almost positive that we have a great deal in common. I'm sure we have all run into the same types of morons at some point in our lives and I think it's actually therapeutic to vent about them. So I've decided to come up with a little list of people that drive me absolutely bananas: some people I could definitely do without. I hope you enjoy them...

1.) Anyone who watches WWF or WCW. Does anyone else have an issue with these bright people? They watch a show with a bunch of steroid-filled maroons talking with fake-ass tough-guy voices, taking part in what could quite possibly be the dumbest American pastime in all of history. How can you cheer for something that's fake? How can you holler for that Xena woman or any of those other dinks knowing that the outcome of every match is false? It is nauseating that each fight is fixed?

Gary Mendese

Some people pay $30 or more on Pay-Per-View to watch these things, but I'd rather be masturbating. But hey... to each his own.

2.) Reckless Drivers. I bet you think I mean those people that zip down the streets at excessive speeds, right? Wrong. I'm talking about those idiots that see you coming down the street at 40 M.P.H., pull out in front of you at the last minute, forcing you to slam on your brakes. Then to add insult to injury, these tools end up creeping down the street at speeds way below the speed limit, driving you absolutely crazy. These people should not only have their licenses taken away, they should be also be beaten with a crowbar. Yeah, that'll teach 'em.

3.) UMass Students Who Blame Chancellor Scott for Everything. Every time something "bad" happens on this campus, it's all of a sudden the Chancellor's fault. "Why doesn't he do anything about it?!" "He doesn't care about the students!" Shut up... the man can't do everything, so leave him alone. This means you too, GFO, although that lovely picture of Scott with devil's horns outside of your office is quite amusing and mature. Someday, when you grow up, your voice stops cracking, and you grow hair in weird places, you'll know what I mean.

4.) "Socialist Party U.S.A." Socialism... that worked out pretty well for the old U.S.S.R., so why not, right? Whatever.

5.) People Who Write Erroneous Letters to the Editor. I can't tell you how many letters to the editor I've received that supposedly complain about a news story or a column, but end up having little or nothing to do with the article in question at all. People just like to use a headline as an excuse to complain about something. And if you don't know exactly what I mean, read the letters to the editor I'm sure I'll receive for making fun of the Socialists and GFO – then you'll see my point exactly.

6.) People Who Make Fun of the Commonwealth College. This is bizarre to me. This is an entity that brings in some of the brightest and most dedicated students to our school, thus raising the overall prestige of the University. This in turn makes our school look more attractive for grant donations and to incoming freshmen. So essentially, the people that are against Commonwealth College (or the Honors Program) either don't understand this, or are just a bunch of Idiot inbred rednecks that are bitter because they couldn't get into it. Plain and simple.

7.) Half of the Contestants on "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?" "What is two plus two?" Uh, I'd like to use my 50-50, Regis. Smack! While I realize that many of the questions are really difficult, some people miss even the most basic ones, which really pisses me off. If you need to dial a friend in order to answer the question: "What color do yellow and blue make?" then you should be recycled. End of story.

Well, there you have it: just a few things that have been aggravating me these days. Some people are so numb upstairs, it's mind-boggling. Some people just ruin our overall reputation as human beings. But what are we to do? Until genetic screening becomes more effective or until homicide becomes legal, I guess there really isn't much we can do. Well, except write columns about it, that is...

Gary Mendese is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Seth Koenig Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Ben Alamed Web Developer Lisa Metcalf Production Manager
Debra Sheehan Advertising Manager Bridget Dolezsar Co-Advertising Production Manager
Sage Brousseau Co-Advertising Production Manager Jake Lilien Senior Diversity Editor

Adam Martignetti Arts & Living Editor
Hugh Reid Black Affairs Editor
Alexis Pavlikar Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gary Mendese Co-Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jake Lilien Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Co-Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Position Vacant Jewish Affairs Editor
Chrisvine Carroll Human Resources Coordinator
Mary Creim News Editor
Kara Stokes Photography Editor
Adam White Co-Sports Editor
Brett Mauser Co-Sports Editor
Joylyn Lombard Editorial Production Manager
Christine Connare Women's Issues Editor
Marc Mensched Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Catherine Turner International Affairs Editor
Samanitha Poulten Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Reeman Assistant Finance Manager
Eric Faber Assistant Advertising Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

P.O.D. travels to 'Southtown'; Anarchists look for social unity?

P.O.D.
The Fundamental Elements of Southtown
Atlantic

Trax On Trax Off

Flushed with the success of their first single, the admittedly cool "Southtown," and a just-announced spot on the super high-profile Ozzfest main stage, P.O.D. seem to be the next hard rock band on the verge of the big time. But is the album worth it?

Kind of. The musicians in the band, Traa (bass), Wuv (drums), and Marcos (guitars), are undoubtedly the highlight of the band, crafting high-octane rhythms and riffs on every single song on the album. The musical formula of P.O.D works perfectly throughout the album, giving each and every single song the potential to be great.

The rest of the responsibility for P.O.D.'s sound lies squarely on the shoulders of vocalist Sonny, who, unfortunately, only occasionally rises to the challenge. The simple fact is that the man has a merely adequate voice, rather indistinguishable from the other million rapper/rockers out there. He does know how to use it to the full advantage when the time comes, however.

"Southtown" is the ultimate example of this, as the passion in his voice as he raps and screams about "hard times" and "thank God that I made it alive" really infects the song with feeling and legitimacy. If the rest of the album was like this there would be no complaints.

Of course, it isn't always like that. I mean, how passionate can anybody, even Sonny, be about a song called "Rock the Party (Off the Hook)," with lyrics like "You gotta get down, dance around, floss your style"? Not very. (I'm not even sure how one would go about "flossing" one's style, to be perfectly honest.) Songs like that and a couple of useless spoken word segments drag down the band's immaculate performance and reduces the worth of the album as a whole.

However, all is not lost, as such songs as "Outkast" and "Bullet the Blue Sky" fulfill the promise laid down by "Southtown." If the Fundamental Elements of P.O.D's heavy style had been more honed and some of the crap cut, this could have been a truly great album.

C+, with the promise of better things to come.
(Rob Schulze)

DEB PASTERNAK
Eleven
Dane Street Artists

"I learned to love on a Hollywood TV screen / to my Barbie he was more than Ken."

From "One Regret," the opening track on Deb Pasternak's first release, Eleven, Pasternak has clearly mastered the language and evokes the untapped emotions we've all felt, but lack the perspicacity to express. Yeah.

Well, isn't all that bad. Her lyrics are predictable and fall

Turn to TRAX, page 10

A MIKE NICHOLS FILM

WHAT PLANET ARE YOU FROM?

To save his planet, an alien must find a woman on Earth to have his baby.

There's just one problem.

Garry Shandling · Annette Bening · Greg Kinnear · Ben Kingsley · Linda Fiorentino · and John Goodman

COLUMBIA PICTURES PRESENTS
A BRAD GREY/BERNIE BRILLSTEIN PRODUCTION
WHAT PLANET ARE YOU FROM?
MUSIC BY CARTER BURWELL EXECUTIVE PRODUCERS BRAD GREY AND BERNIE BRILLSTEIN
STORY BY GARRY SHANDLING & MICHAEL LEESON
SCREENPLAY BY GARRY SHANDLING & MICHAEL LEESON AND ED SOLOMON AND PETER TOLAN
PRODUCED BY MIKE NICHOLS GARRY SHANDLING AND NEIL MACHLIS
R RESTRICTED 2000 DIRECTED BY MIKE NICHOLS COLUMBIA PICTURES

www.sony.com/whatplanet

COMING SOON

IT'S YOUR BODY

If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.

DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass.
586-7250

Something Every Friday
PRESENTS:

Barbara Kessler, Jess Kline, & Kris Delmhorst

These individual performers each have their own unique sound that is a blend of rock and folk music. This program is in celebration of "March: Women's History Month." The program is FREE and donations will be appreciated to benefit battered women and children. Refreshments will be served.

Student Union Ballroom Friday, March 3, 2000, 8pm

Lard shows they're still phat, Pitchshifter shines

Metal masters, Pitchshifter are set to bring their eclectic fare across the Atlantic, so check out their EP

COURTESY OF THE LABELS

LARD
70's Rock Must Die
Alternative Tentacles

SNFU
The Ping Pong EP
Alternative Tentacles

PITCHSHIFTER
Un-United Kingdom
Alternative Tentacles

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

"Come on! Come on! '70's rock must die!" Man, I can't get that chorus out of my head. Ville Biafra (the greatest lyricist of all time) and LARD are back, and the principal target for attack on their new EP 70's Rock Must Die is, you guessed it, the circus that was 70's rock. This track is not the blistering industrial sound you are used to hearing from LARD, the supergroup that was formed in the late 80's from former Dead Kennedy's frontman Biafra, Ministry's Al Jourgensen and Paul Barker, and the late Jeli Ward. It's reminiscent of the Kennedy's "MTV Get Off The Air," except instead of telling you that 70's rock needs to die, LARD shows you why. That's right, it's a completely dead-on parody of so many 70's rock songs, with all of the ridiculous conventions that were commonplace in each song after indistinguishable song.

AC/DC, KISS, Led Zeppelin, none are left unscathed by this song. Biafra's lyrics attack the empty words and aimless purpose of that era's songs, while the background riff and drums (complete with woodblock!) could easily substitute for any riff currently playing on a classic rock station right now. This song is truly hilarious, and what makes it even funnier are Biafra's little touches that make it eerily accurate: the soft and slow middle section of the song, the Neanderthal "uh!" when the riff comes back, and the priceless moment when he yells "everybody put your hands together!" Biafra hated this stuff twenty years ago, it's probably among the reasons the DK's were formed, and he hates it just as much now. And there's no time like the present for this song to be released, among the current crop of intellectually stunted Kid Rock and Limp Bizkit songs: it's just the time for Biafra to come back and add some substance to everyone's diet.

The other two songs on the EP are "Volcanus 2000 (We Wipe the World)" and "Ballad of Marshall Ledbetter," both of which are classic sounding LARD, but since I can't seem to find the lyrics I can't really say much else about them.

Turn to LARD, page 8

THERE WILL BE MANDATORY ARTS MEETING ON SUNDAY MARCH 5TH AT 3:30 P.M. ANYONE NOT LISTED IN WRITING FOR ARTS OR CURRENTLY WRITING MUST ATTEND THIS MEETING

McMURPHY'S UptownTavern

McMURPHY'S BLARNEY
BLOW-OUT
SATURDAY, MARCH 4 DOORS OPEN @NOON

Live Irish Music 4-7 · Free Cornbeef Sandwiches · T-Shirt Give-Away 12-2
37 North Pleasant St. · Positive ID Required

UNDERGRADUATE STUDY ABROAD

GREAT BRITAIN
AUSTRALIA
IRELAND
NEW ZEALAND

ARGENTINA
CHILE
COSTA RICA

Fall, Spring or Full Year Scholarships Available

Study Abroad Information Session:
Representative: Carolyn Watson
Date: Thursday, March 2
Location: 11:00 am - 1:00 pm
Information Table
Campus Center Concourse

For further information contact the Institute for Study Abroad, Butler University, 4600 Sunset Avenue, Indianapolis, IN 46208, Tel: 800/858-0229 Fax: 317/940-9704

INSTITUTE FOR STUDY ABROAD
BUTLER UNIVERSITY

GET YOUR RESUME INTO THE RIGHT HANDS!!!

View hundreds of employment opportunities online at:
www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Apply for campus interviews and send your resume to employers who are not visiting campus!!! It's easy to get started!!!

Get started with your online resume!!

1) Access our web page
2) At the bottom of the page click on EMPLOYMENT OPTIONS STUDENT REGISTRATION
3) Follow the login instructions
4) Complete and save your registration information
5) Upload your resume - instructions are right on the screen
6) Click on SUBMIT DATA TO CAREER SERVICES

You'll receive a confirmation e-mail within 2 business days with detailed instructions for using our online system.

Questions?? Call (413) 545-2224

Campus Career Network

ITEM OF THE WEEK

REGULARLY $24.99-$19.99
Take additional $5 OFF Ticket Price

LONG SLEEVED UMASS SPORT GRAPHIC TEES

Lacrosse, Hockey, Crew, Soccer, Basketball & Football

Collegiate Casuals
Offbeat Clothing for Everyone
M-Th 8:30-6 Fri. 8:30-5
Sat. 11 to 4
(413) 545 - 2619

The University Store
Not like a mall... Better.

■ lard

continued from page 7

This EP didn't need anything else to be perfect besides the title track, so the two additional songs plus the return of LARD and Blatta make this disc an absolutely required purchase. A+

Canadian punk rockers SNFU have been at this game for a long time, and it shows. Their sound has been refined to a science, with every song sounding so polished it almost loses a little of the edge that makes punk so exciting. But it's easy to tell just from the lyrics and vocals on their most recent release, Ebe Ping Pong EP, that the band hasn't lost any of their conviction or sense of humor. "Quentin Tarantino Can't Act!" is a great title, and an enjoyable song, one just has to wonder why the two minute song has to go on for an additional twelve minutes filled with only ping pong noises. "I'm Your Carpet" is the highlight of the EP, with some classic anti-authority lyrics and the disc's catchiest riffs. Nothing amazing, but a solid effort that should please fans of the band. B-

Nottingham, England's Pitchshifter are probably the most exciting band making heavy music today. They mix samples, drum and bass, industrial, and punk elements with their distinct heavy metal sound to create an amazing end result that simply has to be experienced. The band has been around since the early 90s, and in that time has done everything from hardcore death metal to hardcore industrial, as well as straightforward metal and drum and bass tracks on their releases.

Their most recent CD, www.pitchshifter.com, was an incredible ride that has raised expectations for their follow-up to incredible proportions. Without going into more detail as to why Pitchshifter is such an unbelievable band, I will simply suggest buying their recent EP Un-Limited Kingdom. The four songs are a perfect introduction to the band's style, beliefs, and even their influences since an awesome cover of Big Black's "Kerosene" is included. A+

dailycollegian.com

When someone asks you what you did in college,

what will you say?

The Amherst Fire Department is recruiting members for its Student Force.
Stop by the Campus Center, Feb. 28- March 3 for more information.
The North Fire Station will host an Open House on March 3 from 6 p.m.-8 p.m.

The Station is located at 603 East Pleasant St., up the road from Sylvan.
Call for more information 549-5419

Fiona strikes up enthusiastic crowd on new When the Pawn tour

COURTESY RICHARD BURBRIDGE

Fiona Apple began the early stages of her new tour recently with a recent stop at the intimate Orpheum

By Tim Dolan
Collegian Correspondent

Fiona Apple
Orpheum
Feb. 25

Head low, neck stuck out almost perpendicular to her small frame, and with both hands clenched on a microphone stood Fiona Apple. As she belted out the chorus to her new single, "I imp" she thrusted an arm toward the ground with a tightened fist. The words she sang were angry, threatening retaliation on a deceitful boyfriend, and the lyrics elicited a deafening response from the mostly-female crowd.

Apple is the antithesis to the formulaic bubblegum rock of MTV. Coming from a traumatic past, her songs entail a realism not found in the latest Britney Spears hit. Apple established herself as a talented songwriter with the release of her debut album, Tidal, which went on to sell over 3 million copies. Hits like "Sleep to Dream" and "Criminal" thrusted the 19-year-old into the limelight with the help of constant rotation on MTV. Her sophomore release When the Pawn... is an artistic expansion. It was a lot more me - an uninhibited me, a confident me she says. Despite this, album sales are not exceptional, but the disk has drawn critical acclaim and finally, three months after its release a tour is underway.

This show at Boston's Orpheum Theatre last Friday night was just the second stop on Apple's 19 city jaunt. All 2,800 seats were taken and all eyes focused on Apple. "I don't know what the f*ck to say," she said as she addressed that she talked too much on the last tour. She was bouncy, wearing a pink top with a black dress, she was almost like a 5-year-old filled with energy. Sometimes she danced, spasmodically as a possessed demon, waiving her arms and jerking her body. Other times she stood still in a claustrophobic manner, fully concentrated on the task at hand. That task was to sing her heart out, which was very powerfully accomplished.

The set started out with Apple on the piano. The opening chords to the jazzy "On the Bound" filled the air. Her movement was jerky, as if every time she played a note an electrical current shot through her. Red, green and pink spotlights moved with the music and colored the barren white backdrop behind the band.

All ten songs from When the Pawn... were played and the performance of each strayed very little from the recorded versions. She alternated between performing at the piano and singing before the crowd every few songs. She also had a five-piece band backing her up including a pianist who took the keys during those songs she chose to sing standing.

Her voice crooned from yelling in rage in songs like the fiery "Get Gone" to almost whispering in songs like the hushed Beatles-esque "I Know." The crowd reacted as a mob would to the former and sat as if in prayer to the latter. The crowd pleasing "Criminal" turned into a sing along in a matter of seconds as all 2,800 voices sang the chorus in unison.

The highlight of the set was the emotional ballad, "Sullen Girl" off of Tidal. The atmospheric feel of the song combined with the lighting made for a moving experience. Fifteen other songs were played. Included in this was an encore performance of "Cole Porter Just One of Those Things." Apple chose to sing this to a scratchy vinyl record rather than her band as a confused crowd is unfamiliar with the song watched on. They went nuts just the same. She then ended the night with a Thank you so much, and a wave and walked off the stage.

The opening band, Jurassic 5, is a hip-hop sextet involving four m.c.'s and two d.j.'s. The music is along the same vein as Ten with funky rhythms and poppy vocals intended to make you dance. The band lacked movement; as one member rapped, the others stood around to wait around for their turn to spit out rhymes. As a result, the crowd was somewhat apathetic, and were seemingly just waiting around for the main act.

Collegian
Accounting Clerk
ALL MAJORS WELCOME TO APPLY

Work 8 hours per week, flexible scheduling

Must possess strong math and communication skills

Deadline for applications is Friday, March 10th

Contact Christine Carroll for more info
pick up applications in Rm. 113 in the Campus Center Basement

Do you want to be a part of the biggest student-run business on campus?

Are you interested in a career in Human Resources?

Collegian is accepting applications for the position of Human Resource Coordinator.

Applications can be picked up at the Collegian in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Interested applicants should possess excellent communication and computer skills.

Any questions can be directed to christine Carroll at 545-3500 or hrcollegian@yahoo.com.

■ Pumkins

continued from page 5

watered-down alternative rock bands, Matchbox 20 being the king of kings in this category, further fragmented the population of radio listeners. With so many "flavor of the month" bands pulling at the customer's wallet, it's hard for absent bands to maintain any sort of loyalty.

Amid this fickle environment, the Smashing Pumpkins released 1998's Adore. The album was received with lukewarm interest at best; Jimmy's absence from the band was too apparent and Adore had an overly morose tone, and radio listeners didn't care much about it. It's two most viable singles, "Ava Adore" and "Perfect," received a respectable amount of air time, but the album barely managed to cross the one million units-sold mark, and the band only played a short charity tour, donating all of the proceeds to local youth charities.

The Pumpkins kept busy with other projects as well. Between and MCIS and through Adore, they made contributions to the soundtracks for Batman Forever, Ransom, and Lost Highway. Corgan composed the musical score for Stigmata, and co-wrote several of the songs from Hole's Celebrity Skin. D'Arcy and Iha, along with Fountains of Wayne founder Adam Schlesinger, formed the record label Scratchie Records. Additionally, Iha released a solo album, Let It Come Down.

1999 saw a turning point for the Pumpkins. Word got out that Corgan had met with a cleaned up Chamberlain, the two had reconciled with each other, and Chamerblain was welcomed back into the band. Chamberlain's return energized the band and jump-started Corgan's songwriting efforts, and in spring and summer of 1999, the band hit the road on a tour of clubs and small venues, trying out new material and reinterpreting old favorites.

The reunited band returned to the studio to work on their fifth major release, MACHINA/The Machines of God. All did not stay well for long, however, and soon after the completing the album, bassist D'Arcy left the band to pursue an acting. They didn't have to look far to find her replacement; Melissa Auf Der Maur, bassist and longtime friend of Corgan, had just left Hole, and she enthusiastically accepted the offer.

And so now, a bombastic new album hitting the stores, the Smashing Pumpkins stand poised to reclaim their title as the kings of alternative rock and roll, and to remind music listeners everywhere what it feels like to be kicked in the teeth by a truly amazing band.

David Troupes is a Collegian staff member

Malcolm and Kelly Martin prove to be February winners

Okay, so you've been reading me for three years. Sweeps period is over and you know what's coming. After a time when television has worked incredibly hard to spit out their absolute best material, there is a lot to talk about. I guess the only thing left to figure out is how I'm going to do the wrap up. I've done "Winners and Losers." I've also done top ten lists of the best and worst parts of sweeps week. So I guess the only thing left to do, is to revert back to wacky categories that I usually save for my year-end column. However, as a special treat, like I'm in any position or ability to give you a special treat) is my perception of February sweeps.

If I see it one more time I'm going to kill someone award - Yeah, so you already know how I feel about TV game shows, so I'm going to leave the specific shows like "Greed" and "Who Wants to be a Millionaire" out of it. No, the winner of this award would have to be the damn hosts of the shows like Regis Philbin and Chuck Woolery. The last thing I ever need is to see more of men in their mid-50's acting like used car salesmen. Enough is enough already.

We need to see more of this!: - I can't get enough of "Macolm in the Middle." The FOX hit is by far the best new show of the season, and I would certainly not be surprised for the nationally acclaimed critics to agree with me as well.

"How the hell did that happen" award of the century: - Yeah, you think I'm going to mention something about that whole "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire" scandal, well you're right, but not now. This award goes to "E.R." Somehow the widely popular drama series scored higher ratings than anything else on television during sweeps week. The episode where Kellie Martin's character, Lucy was killed off, was the best rated episode of the entire season. Not only did it beat every single episode of "Who Wants to be Regis' Love Slave," but it beat the Beach Boys movie too! Hey, it's the Beach Boys! Everyone loves the Beach Boys. No, wait. I change the winner of this award. Instead of saying giving it to "E.R." I'm going to present it to society. How did we ever allow a movie about the Beach Boys to be made? Please turn of your

Turn to TUBE page 10

Tube Notes with Ryan Benharris

SAVION GLOVER
Tues., Mar. 21 & Wed., Mar. 22
ONLY AREA APPEARANCE
"College Tickets $10 Day of Show"
• Tony Award® Winner • Emetha Desk Award®
• Outer Critics Circle Award® • Obie Award®
• Fred Astaire Award® • Hilly Dance magazine
Choreographer of the Year Award® • Starred in "Tap Dance Kid" • "Black and Blue" • "Jelly's Last Jam"
• "Bring in da Noise, Bring in da Funk"
FOR TICKETS...413-788-7033
FREE PARKING
Court Street, Springfield, MA • 413-788-7033

■ song

continued from page 5

Toward the end of the song Corgan plays around with strange vocal distortions, and it struck me as unnecessary and distracting, accounting for one of the albums few moments of weakness.

If MACHINA/The Machines of God were a play, then the next track, "Glass and the Ghost Children," would be the dramatic soliloquy delivered by the key character before the final conflict and resolution. It weighs in at an impressive 9:52, and moves through three distinct phases: a bass-driven segment of dire, unnerving, hissy guitar rock and odd effects; a monologue in which changing tape speeds are used to distort Corgan's self-exploration, speaking, perhaps, as the aforementioned apocalyptic persona; and finally, a pleasant acoustic guitar segment bringing emotional closure to the seething tension of the first segments and the troubled introspection of the second segment. The idea of such artistically considerate rock music may sound distasteful to some people, but the music remains excellent, and the thoughtfulness of the piece gives the album an effective thematic focal point.

The next track, "Wound," can easily be seen as MACHINA's equivalent of "1979," off Mellon Collie and the Infinite Sadness. It's irresistibly poppy, surprisingly danceable, and a close second to "This Time" for my favorite track.

In contrast, the next song, "The Crying Tree of Mercury," is just a little too draggy and plodding for my ears, and probably the weakest song on the album.

"With Every Light" continues in the tradition of "Try, Try, Try," although it's at least five times more smile-inducing. Its sincerity is surprising and refreshing, and it's easy to hear the song as Corgan's reinvestment in his life as a musician: "Taking over, we're taking over/throw the weight up off your shoulders, now/now that we can show our love."

The next song, "Blue Skies Bring Tears," comes close to falling into the same category as "The Crying Tree of Mercury," but its dire, foreboding style is decently effective at building tension for the next and final track.

MACHINA closes with "Age of Innocence," an up-beat acoustic and synth song sounding something like "This Time" meets "Raindrops + SunShowers," and closing the album with a softly beautiful and soothing tone, and a lyrical thread of hope and redemption. The drums develop into a great "1979"-ish rhythm as the song progresses, and it's hard to think of a better way to end the record.

In MACHINA/The Machines of God the Pumpkins best album? It's hard to say; what I can say, however, is that it's intelligent, consistent, and an obvious labor of love for the Smashing Pumpkins with only a few minor blemishes across its 15 meticulously crafted tracks. A

MassMutual Financial Group's
Career Development Program
www.massmutual.com
Mass advantages for your future
VISIT US AT MASSMUTUAL.COM/COLLEGE

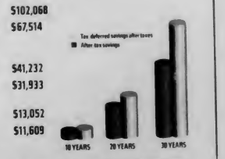
Choosing where to start your career is a big decision. That's why you need to know about MassMutual. A leader in the financial services industry, we offer customers a complete portfolio of life and disability income insurance, asset accumulation products and retirement and independent management services.
And we offer a world of career advantages that work for you today as well as your future, including training, flexible, generous compensation benefits and real opportunity for growth.
Some current openings in our Springfield, MA & Hartford, CT offices:

• Claims Examiners
• Customer Service Analysts
• Human Resources Specialists
• Retirement Plan Services Analysts
• Securities Brokerage Specialists
• Underwriters

If you're a Year 2000 graduate with sound judgment, strong communication skills, computer and customer service skills, and the desire to take charge of your career, you should talk to us.
We'll be on campus for an Info Session on March 6 from 7-9pm and on March 9 for interviews. Please contact your Career/Placement Office to set up an interview or email your resume to: collegerecruiting@massmutual.com
An Equal Opportunity Employer.
MassMutual FINANCIAL GROUP
THE BLUE CHIP COMPANIES®

Naturally, the country's premiere leadership school offers a curriculum taught by a staff of courteous instructors.
If you're looking for luxury, by business school. But if it's experience you want, you'll find it here. We turn college men and women into leaders. Decision makers who command respect. Top graduates who can write their own ticket in life. Like to meet our faculty? Call 1-800-MARINES. Or visit us at WWW.MARINEOFFICER.COM. Because you can't learn what we teach from a blackboard.
Marines
The Few. The Proud.

RETIREMENT | INSURANCE | MUTUAL FUNDS | TRUST SERVICES | TUITION FINANCING



Deferring taxes with TIAA-CREF can be so rewarding, you'll wonder why you didn't do it sooner.

Call us for a free tax-savings calculator

One of the fastest ways to build a retirement nest egg is through tax-deferred Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs) from TIAA-CREF.
With funds automatically deducted from your paycheck, you can easily build income to supplement your pension and Social Security.
And your contributions to SRAs grow undiminished by taxes until you withdraw the funds.[1] Add to that TIAA-CREF's solid investment performance, bolstered by our commitment to keeping expenses low, and you have more money working for you.
So why wait? Let us help you build a comfortable retirement today with tax-deferred SRAs. We think you will find it rewarding in the years to come.

INVEST AS LITTLE AS $25 a month through an automatic payroll plan[2]

IT'S EASY TO SAVE MORE THROUGH THE POWER OF TAX DEFERRAL

In this hypothetical example, setting aside $100 a month in a tax-deferred investment with an 8% return in a 28% tax bracket shows better growth than the same net amount put into a savings account.[3]

TIAA CREF
Ensuring the future for those who shape it.
1 800 842-2776
www.tiaa-cref.org

1. Under federal tax law, withdrawals prior to age 59 1/2 are subject to restrictions, and may also be subject to a 10% additional tax. 2. You may be able to invest up to the IRS maximum of $10,500 per year. To receive a specific dollar amount at retirement, calculate how much of your maximum contribution, call TIAA-CREF at 1 800 842-2776. 3. The chart above is presented for illustrative purposes only and does not represent the performance of any specific investment. Actual results will vary. Investments in securities products, such as variable annuities, mutual funds and certain savings arrangements, are not insured by the FDIC; are not deposits of, or guaranteed by, any bank or bank affiliate; and may lose value. Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. For more complete information on our securities products, including charges and expenses, call 1 800 842-2776, ext. 5509, for the prospectus(es). Read them carefully before you invest or send money. © 2000 TIAA-CREF 5-00

■ trax

continued from page 6

short of inspiring, but the music isn't painful. It, like the rest of its genre, can provide good background noise and pleasant, if not breakthrough, sounds from limited, unplugged instruments.

Of course the world could do without another mediocre female voice against an acoustic guitar with good-natured lyrics about guys named Jack and songs with one-word titles that imply much more than they ever achieve. Paula Cole, Sarah McClaughlin, Jewel, Beth Hart and now Deb Pasternak.

Eleven features, cleverly, eleven songs that don't exemplify a dramatic range in the artist's performance. Fortunately, it's more upbeat than whiny melodrama. Since she has all the makings of celebrity, solo-female musician status (blonde hair, cute smile, otherwise nondescript face, and mild talent) there's a chance you'll hear her on the radio someday. So visit her web site, www.debpasternak.com, buy her CD and be able to tell all of your friends that you were listening to her way before the sold out and moved out of her van. B- (Kristi Ceccarossi)

THE ARTHUR DENT FOUNDATION
We Own Your Mind?
Independent Artist

In the rising world of the jam scene, The Arthur Dent Foundation is just one of the many artists trying to prove that they can outplay the competition. Their new CD... We Own Your Mind? is very reminiscent of Bela Fleck or even the gods of the jam band world, the Dave Matthews Band.

The Arthur Dent Foundation formed in Massachusetts, and have a strong following in the Worcester area. The CD includes shout outs to some Massachusetts icons such as Worcester Polytechnic Institute and Newbury Comics. The band claims that their roots lie in such great musical artists as Bob Dylan, Miles Davis and even rapper, Method Man.

The first ingredient in a good jam album is a wide variety of musical instruments. We Own Your Mind does not disappoint when it comes to the many different sounds. The band includes many different mixes that include alto and tenor saxophones, steel drums, trumpets and various different drum sets. The band is very careful to include the music that jam fans are looking for, which is just hard worked and great sounding jams that seem to go on forever. The shortest track on the disc is just over three and a half minutes long, and most of them average around seven minutes. You don't really hear too much singing, but the instruments are excellent. The guitars are mixed nicely between acoustic and electric, and the album has some of the best drum beats I have heard in a long time.

If you're into jam bands, I highly recommend We Own Your Mind? from The Arthur Dent Foundation. Also be sure to look for them to play some shows in the area in the near future. B+ (Ryan Benharris)

NEW SOCIETY OF ANARCHISTS
Gagged By the Flag
Independent Artist

Hardcore is not my cup of tea. However, Milwaukee's New Society of Anarchists seem to have a sound that may appeal to an average rock fan.

The first thing that stands out on Gagged By the Flag, is the obvious optimism that tends to be lacking in a lot of today's music, especially hardcore rock. Like most hardcore bands, New Society of Anarchist stress unity to overcome hardships. The aspect of the CD which makes me happiest, is that they are looking for unity against things that certainly need attention. The band is quoted as saying the hope to combat "the pettiness, the racism, the gangs, the trends and the injustice that we get our noses rubbed in every day." The fact that there is so much music centered around the complete opposite of this message, that encourages unity through violence, racism and pettiness, makes Gagged By the Flag an exception to the common rule.

The CD has some very heavy sounds, influenced by some strong vocal roots. In fact, the title track to the disc, "Gagged By the Flag," argues that there is too much of a price to pay for our freedom in this country, and because of it, we are being forced to give up our rights, which we have been promised. The line, "Death is the price of freedom," pretty much sums up everything Gagged By the Flag stands for.

New Society of Anarchists is made up of four members, two of which are brothers and one is their cousin. Brothers Zakk and Arlo Zarnowski and their jason Zarnowski all play guitar and sing vocals, while Augie Zuelzke wails on the drums. The band formed in 1990, and released a self titled CD in 1994. Since then, they have released three more CDs including Gagged By the Flag. The highlight of the band's career has been their trip on the 1996 Van's Warp Tour. A traveling concert that stops in this area every year, the Warp Tour has boasted such big name groups as Blink 182 and the awesome live band, Less Than Jake. For more information on New Society of Anarchists, check out their webpage at www.newsociety.nb.net. B (Ryan Benharris)

■ tube

continued from page 9

TV and read a book.

Worst attempt to pretend to have legitimate programming: - I'm not sure what MTV was hoping to gain by making 2ge+her, but for some reason they felt the need to show it over and over and over again. I'm sure that no one really cares about their stupid desire to make fun of boy bands, and can I just point something out? Isn't it ironic that a station that lives off of the success of worthless musicians would get such a kick out of making fun of them. Besides 2Ge+her, I also have this major gripe with MTV, and their new obsession with karauke. I'm sorry, but I really would rather listen to The Red Hot Chili Peppers sing "Scarrisue," than some fourteen year old girl who's never heard the song before. But as Dennis Miller always says, "Of course that's just my opinion, I could be wrong."

Best Criminal on Cops: - Yes, along with health and the pursuit of happiness, we need to mention the important things in life. This one dude on cops decided to get drunk, get in the car, hit a parked police vehicle, make an attempt to get away, get stopped from getting away, pull a gun on three police officers, and while being put away in the cruiser he announced to the cops, "It's not over, when I get out (of jail) I'm gonna get you (the cop). It's all your fault." Yes for all of you drunk drivers out there, this guy has found the key. Blame the cops, it must be the cop's fault that he was drinking.

I administer a beating to you: - Okay, now it's time to talk about "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire." I'm not really sure who's getting the beating, but I'm flying over to FOX studios this afternoon, and I'm not leaving until someone has a black eye. What's wrong with the FOX executives. How did you not know that this man had a criminal past before you pimped him off to some woman, like a cheap Las Vegas sugar daddy? However, I actually think I'd rather join the rest of the country and lay the smackdown on the "multi-millionaire." You may be worth lots and lots of money my friend, but I personally don't see you as anything more than a piece of white trash.

And With this Ring, I Thee Wed - Apparently weddings are the in thing this week. Now, it doesn't have too much to do with television, but I saw this on CNNSI, so that counts I guess. 18 year-old tennis superstar, Anna Kournikova has announced her engagement to 28 year-old NHL phenom, Pavel Bure. Something tells me that, that's wrong! Apparently they've been dating for a few years, which makes the whole matter even worse. Hey Pavel, they say that love is blind, but guess what, the cops aren't. It's a good thing you live in Russia, because fifteen will get you twenty pal!

The absolute best thing that I saw during sweeps period – FOX has made an attempt to redeem themselves after "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire Ex Con," by bringing back episodes of "Family Guy." Yes, sweet sweet "Family Guy." Oh how I've missed you!

My reason for never watching TV again: - Arena Football will not play this year! During the summer, while you are at the beach having a "life," I stay home, eat fatty foods and cry. But to make myself feel better, I watch some Arena Football. This week, the they (I'm not quite sure who "they" is. Maybe the Arena Football gods) announced that the league has gone bankrupt and will no longer play. Hey, at least the WWF is starting a football league. Ugh, on second thought, someone just shoot me instead.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian staff member.

IF THE APPLE IS THE SYMBOL OF TEMPTATION,
THEY MUST BE DRINKING
A TON OF THIS STUFF IN HELL.
CIDER JACK
HARD CIDER

安城中國飯店
AMHERST
CHINESE FOOD
we do not use "MSG"
• MANDARIN & SZECHUAN CUISINE
• HOME STYLE COOKING
• FRESH ORGANIC GROWN VEGETABLES FROM OUR OWN FARM
• NATURAL ORGANIC SHOENMEPPY JUICE
• EAT IN OR TAKE OUT
• FULL LIQUOR LICENSE
• OPEN 7 DAYS
253-7835 or 253-2813
62 Main Street, Amherst

Council Travel
The journey is the reward....
Give your family & friends the gift of travel
Gift certificates, passport photos, airport transfers, tours, language programs, work exchanges, ISIC backpacks, rolling duffels, & all sorts of gear, guidebooks, railpasses, tickets, accommodations and more.
44 Main Street
Amherst MA
413-256-1261

Bure scores big on and off the NHL boxed pond

Pavel Bure has been having a career season on the ice this year, leading the league with 43 goals. And on Tuesday Bure managed to score big off the ice too when he announced his engagement to tennis phenom Anna Kournikova.

Kournikova (18) and Bure (28) are neighbors in a South Beach condo complex in Florida and have been dating for several months. This isn't the first dip into the NHL talent pool for Kournikova, who's last cameo in the NHL came when she was dating Bure's former junior hockey teammate Sergei Fedorov for two years.

Apparently Anna can pick a winner, because the Red Wings won the Stanley Cup with the aid of Fedorov's inspired play while he was with Kournikova. And now that Bure and Kournikova will be settling down together, perhaps we should all be putting our money on the Florida Panthers this year.

Another noteworthy event happened this week, when former Bruin Adam Oates scored his 500th career goal. Appropriately enough the goal was actually a pass that Oates made, which deflected into the net off a defenseman's skate. That was always the knock on him while he was in Boston, never shot enough... Another milestone to look for is hockey's version of the Mark McGwire-Roger Maris homerun record, as Patrick Roy works toward his 447th victory. Roy is rapidly approaching Terry Sanchuk's benchmark for wins, 447, which is more than any other goalie in the history of the game.

A new trend in the NHL is growing, as the game expands its horizons. Teams are not only looking at a player's skills, but also their nationality. Since the success of the Red Army Red Wings in '96-97, with Fedorov, Igor Larionov, Slava Kozlov, Vladimir Konstantinov and Slava Fetisov, NHL clubs have been looking to complement their Euro players with other players of the same nationality. The reasons are quite simple, line combinations are such a trial and error process, that it helps enormously when teammates speak the same language and play the same type of style, which allows them to click all the more easily.

The New York Rangers have seen the Czech line of Jan Hlavac, Petr Nedved, and Radek Dvorak spark them into playoff contention, while the St. Louis Blues have been relying on stands production from the Slovak line of Pavol Demitra, Michal Handzus, and Lubos Bartecko. As Nedved put it, "Things happen so quickly on the ice because we grow up playing the same style, we know what to expect from each other and can make plays a little faster...On the ice, we can speak to each other in Czech. It really helps on face-offs, but we have to peek around to see if there are any other Czechs or Slovaks listening." One other language besides Czech, Slovak, Russian, English, and French that we may soon be hearing on the ice is Spanish, as Calder-candidate Scott Gomez continues to give the New Jersey Devils solid, consistent production. Soon four years of a language may be a requirement for the NHL, who unless you speak the international language of Unga-Bunga that Marty McSorley speaks.

Speaking of the Boston Bruins, if the St. Louis Rams were the Cinderella team of sports last year, then the Bruins have to be the Alice in Wonderland team in sports this year. It seems as if this year's bean team is a twisted, distorted reflection of last year's team through the looking glass. With so many injuries to key players such forwards Jason Allison, Anson Carter, and goalie Byron Dafoe, and a line-up that looks more like an AHL team than an NHL team, perhaps Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum in the upstairs offices, should crawl out from under their mushrooms and drop the pipes. As coach Pat Burns can only do his Cheshire Cat impersonation for so long before someone starts yelling "Off with their heads!"

On the trade front Bruins Defenseman Ray Bourque quashed trade rumors that have him being dealt to a contender so that he can have a legitimate shot at the Cup before he retires. Bourque brushed aside the rumor. When asked if he would entertain the thought of a trade that was to a team in Stanley Cup contention, if the Bruins were eliminated from the playoffs. Bourque paused and said, "If things were to really turn the other way real bad, then you might get thinking a different way, but right now I want to play well and try to get ourselves back into the race and get us into the top eight. hopefully, we can get there."

Another big name mulling about the rumor mill is Vancouver's Mark Messier, who could possibly end up in Anaheim between Paul Kariya and Teemu Selanne. Messier's age (39) and paycheck ($6 million) make him a hard commodity to move out of Vancouver, but it's a possibility, as the Canuck's are focusing on rebuilding and will be bringing in the talented Sedin twins next season, and as they say, "out with the old and in with the new." Meanwhile on the Ducks' side, they have lacked a legitimate, heavy hitting center since their inaugural season. The plus side of Messier is his ability to command a team and take over the locker room. His leadership abilities may be worth the price tag to a team who could afford him, like the Disney Ducks, who are facing attendance problems and are on the edge of the playoff map. Philadelphia officials had great seats to see Bruins' goalie John Grahame stone the Washington Capitals 3-0 last week. To bad they were there to see Dafoe. Phills is in the market for a number one netminder, and apparently are checking out Lord

Turn to NHL, page 12

Alexander Wood on the NHL

"Superman" landing in Amherst next year

By Matt Brady
Collegian Correspondent

Massachusetts basketball fans, look to the rafters. Is it a bird? A plane? No, it's Jameel "Superman" Pugh, who will be soaring through the William D. Mullins Center next year. After Vince Carter's stunning slam-dunk performance at the All-Star game, he admitted that some of his creativity came from dunks performed by Pugh. From dunks performed by Pugh. Considered by most of those who have seen him play to be not only the best high school jammer, but also possibly the best in the world, he has won 15 consecutive slam-dunk contests at various events internationally.

His dunks are of the awe-inspiring variety. "I saw Jameel do the one from the free throw line," said Amateur Athletic Union coach Miles Gonzales. "He went between his legs on that same dunk, and two hand dunked it. I saw Carter do that at the NBA [slam dunk] contest a couple days ago. He was a little bit under a foot [inside] the free throw line, and he didn't go between his legs, and he didn't two-hand dunk it, and what he did was spectacular. What was so amazing about Jameel, he did it twice. And in fact later on he said, 'Miles, I did it twice to let them know it wasn't lucky the first time.'"

The 6-foot-3, 200-pound Pugh signed with UMass during the early period to avoid distractions during his senior season at Grant Union High School in Sacramento, California. Though Pugh was recruited by many of the top schools in the nation, he found that Amherst was the place for him.

"The main reason that I chose UMass is because Bruiser Flint runs the type of program that I want to be a part of. He's just really concerned with players as far as how they do in class and how they do out of class," Pugh said.

But while Pugh is now a highly touted prospect, times were not always so good for him. He was cut from his original high school team as a sophomore because of a disagreement between himself and the coach. And so Jameel went to live with his mother in Sacramento. He worked hard to hone his skills that year, and as a junior he led his team to be runners up in the Division II state championship.

Still, Pugh went relatively unnoticed. Even coach Gonzales was scouting another player for his team, the L.A. Sports Express, when he came upon Jameel.

"I went out there really not looking at Jameel in particular. I went in there looking for more of a forward...but after I saw the young man practice and saw his exceptional talent...it wasn't about a need for my team, a player like Jameel Pugh is so special that I...wanted to bring him with us," Gonzales said.

Pugh's incredible leaping ability may be the most awesome yet seen on the planet. His vertical leap has been estimated at 47-50 inches. For reference, Michael Jordan and Carter each have vertical leaps of just over 40 inches. "If I stand under the hoop and jump straight up, I can get my wrist above the top of the square," Pugh tells. Not bad, considering his height.

Realizing that dunks aren't everything, Pugh keeps working on the other parts of his game. According to coach Pfeiffer, "He's known for his dunking, he's known for his leaping ability, but he's not satisfied with that. He wants to improve all aspects of his game."

As impressive as his feats on the court, Pugh is much more impressive as a person. He is truly dedicated to doing what is needed for his team to win. "What I mainly try to do is stay humble, just know that I have to go out there and do what I can to help the team win. If I stay focused on winning, then I won't get caught up in the hoopla and the fans coming to watch me play."

Coach Gonzales told, "He's going to stay away from any negativisms that come his way. He's going to really be a complete person for you guys. I think you're going to be happy with him in the time he spends at UMASS. This is not a kid that's coming in there saying, 'I'm just going to stay for a year or two.' I think you guys got a kid who's going to be there four years and be a student-athlete, not just an athlete."

Coach Pfeiffer added, "Jameel is just an all-around outstanding person. You can't ask for a nicer kid." It is probably this admiration for good-nature that attracted Pugh to coach Flint, and doubtlessly Pugh's dedication to winning and improving his game made him attractive to coach Flint.

"I can't wait to get there to give the UMass fans just a little taste of what I can do." We'll just have to wait until Midnight Madness next year to see what heights "Superman" can elevate to.

Sean McElroy contributed to this article.

Exploring the Coastal Environment
May 30–July 13, 2000
This inquiry-based, hands-on program provides an introduction to maritime history, nautical science, oceanography, and coastal zone management. Highlights include a four-day research trip to Nantucket Island and a week aboard the schooner Ernestina as it joins Tall Ships 2000 sailing from New York to Boston Nine undergraduate credits
To learn more, contact
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Continuing Education
100 Morrissey Blvd
Boston MA 02125-3393
UMASS BOSTON
617.287.7913
www.conted.umb.edu

WE'RE PACKING UP THE BOOKS!

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
Discount Discount
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441
Featuring "Bud & Bud Light" $16.99 30/PK
Jose Cuervo Especial $14.99 Liter
Sam Adams Lager $9.99 12/pk
BassAle $11.99 12/pk
MURPHY'S IRISH STOUT $4.99 6/PK
HARP LAGER $10.49 12/PK bots
Smirnoff 80° $10.49 liter
Vodka 80° EVERYDAY PRICE! $8.99 1.75 lt
"Milwaukees Best" your choice...$9.99 30/Pk.
"Honey Brown or Michael Shea's" $6.99 12/Pk bots
"Mike's Hard Lemonade" $4.99 6/Pk
"Captain Morgan Spiced" $18.99 1.75 Liter
Check Out RUSSELL'S In Door Specials
Delivery Available • OPEN 9:00AM to 11:00PM • Visa/Mastercard • All Beers Plus Deposit

$1 Sushi
Rock & Roll
10:30-1:00
Fri-Sat
Nights
KARAOKE
Sun-Thu 11:30-1:00
Fri-Sat
11:30-1:30
ICHIBAN いちばん
AUTHENIC JAPANESE AND KOREAN RESTAURANT
1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, off Main St.)
10% Student Discount with valid student ID

NHL

continued from page 11

Boston to see if he's Flyers material. And the recent brilliant front office moves by the Bruins organization of signing anarchist Joe Murphy and Canada's Most Wanted, McSorley, may have the Flyers brass thinking that they could come away with a steal if that's the kind of talent Harry Sinden is looking for.

You read it here first a few weeks ago that the Colorado Avalanche would be lucky to get past the Sharks in the first round of the playoffs. Well after a key divisional match-up Tuesday night against the Edmonton Oilers, the Avs could be eliminated even sooner than that. Colorado continued their slide, losing 5-1 to Tommy Salo and the Oilers. And now, the Avalanche sit six points behind the Oilers in the Northwest Division and are tied with the San Jose Sharks for the last playoff berth. The Avalanche may be knocked out of the playoffs by the Sharks, before they even start. Since the way the playoff seeding is set up, Colorado must beat Edmonton and win their division (not likely) to clinch the third playoff spot, otherwise, the Avalanche will be in a dog fight with the Sharks and the Calgary Flames for the eighth spot in the Western Conference. Look out for that next Red Wings-Panthers game, let's see if Tedoro should have plenty of trash to talk when Bure steps onto the ice.

Alexander Wood is a Collegian columnist

foot

continued from page 16

They drop them off and come in here to Applebee's and then they go to all the other Applebee's throughout Massachusetts, through New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine. If we can keep up the reputation of that, then it just enhances (business). (They'll say), 'Geez, there's an Applebee's in my neighborhood, let's go there because I remember I had a good visit to the one in Hadley.'"

The students, however, seem to have mixed feelings on the situation.

"Football games do not effect my life and I don't care for them," Isaac Maxmin, a sophomore animal science major, said. "There are other things I have to worry about."

Some of those enrolled in the university believe that the jump would make football games more attractive events on campus. With a hypothetical upgrade in notoriety of opponents, from schools like Northeastern to powerhouses like Boston College, UMass had interdivisional road games against BC and Kansas State scheduled in the next couple of years to prepare for a change. Unfortunately, the Wildcats, who were set to play the Minutemen next fall, broke off their verbal agreement.

"I would probably enjoy going to a really big game," said Elizabeth Hebert, a freshman political science major. "I went to a few football games in high school, and it was fun. Not a lot of people I know are interested. I think people might be more interested if it was a bigger deal – if they were playing better-ranked teams."

Added Dariusz Nastal, an undeclared sophomore; "I would definitely go to more games, that's for sure. It would be more exciting. I know there'd more people coming to games, and we'd definitely get more respect. Especially if we won some games."

Still, the time when big-name opponents come to Amherst might be far enough away to discourage the overall support of the current student body.

Neinas' study claims; "Many who have indicated support for Division I-A status have assumed that UMass would have the opportunity to schedule attractive name opponents, but usually an emerging Division I-A program has to schedule the recognizable teams on the road to obtain a meaningful financial guarantee without the promise of a return game."

For the time being, however, more research has to be done by the University before the campus undergrads and grads are addressed.

"This is just the first step," UMass Athletic Director Bob Marcum said. "There's not any conclusion. We still have a business plan to develop."

Babul

continued from page 16

Babul has found other ways to gain minutes on the court. His career highs include 15 points in a 73-69 win over St. John's last season, and 12 boards against Kansas. He was named the Pizza Hut Academic All-Star of the Game for the CBS broadcast of the UMass/Temple game last season.

However, the 6-foot-6-inch leaper is better known for his man-to-man play against the opponent's top scorer. Last season he cooled off Connecticut's Richard Hamilton to 11 points, nine shy of the Husky's game average. On Nov. 22, Babul allowed Kevin Freeman (13.3 ppg) just two points on one field goal. Temple's big man Mark Karcher (16.0 ppg) managed only three points on a 1-for-10 shooting performance under the watchful eye of Babul. The eldest Babul will finish averaging about 3.6 ppg with 86-plus career steals and over 425 points in his career at UMass.

And what kind of results do you expect from Jon?

How about 3.7 ppg and 4.3 rebounds per game so far in his collegiate days? Mostly playing at, you guessed it, the small forward position, Jon has established himself as a player who "provides excelling defense and rebounding," according to the Ga. Tech media guide. His game-high point total is eerily similar to Mike's at 16 points in a victory over New Orleans at the Big Island Invitational last season.

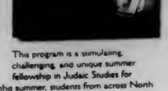
It's now four years later, and Mike is armed with his parents, Mike and Joan, one on each arm, joining him in celebration and remembrance of his last game at the William D. Mullins Center. A co-captain, along with Chris Kirkland, Babul is one of three players to have competed under all of Coach James "Bruiser" Flint's four years of rutelage. Just four years ago Mike was first introduced to the UMass faithful and then went out and captured the first of his four Midnight Madness Slam Dunk contests.

Younger brother Jeff, a senior in high school, is nursing his head after taking a fall in his game the week before. Jon wasn't there to share in the memory; he was over a thousand miles away, involved with his own team.

"It's crazy, it just goes by so quick, you see everyone else go through it (senior night)" said Mike. As of now, Mike's future is undecided, but hopes to catch a lot of Jon's games next year. He hasn't ruled out the possibility of playing ball overseas either.

"If there's a chance to play ball anywhere overseas, I'd give it a shot," said Mike.

One thing is for sure, wherever he ends up, Jon will surely not be far behind.



COURTESY MIKE BABUL

The Babul twins have thrived on competing against one another over the years while still remaining best friends.

Alexander Wood is a Collegian columnist

The Jonas M. and Sadie Rennert
Ivy League Torah Study Program
Lets you earn...
...while you learn!

This program is a stimulating, challenging, and unique summer fellowship in Judaic Studies for university students. Once again this summer, students from across North America and around the world will have the opportunity to live and learn Torah Judaism in a scenic Catskill mountain setting.

Summer 2000
Located in the Heart of the Catskills!
Women's program "Stern Center"
Men's Program "Stern Center"
Call for program dates.

The Ivy league Torah Study Program is all-encompassing, giving participants the opportunity to learn in a totally Jewish environment. Students will explore the relevance of Judaism in every aspect of their day - from why it's important to eat kosher to studying the foundation of Judaism (the Torah).

Students receive room, board and a fellowship of $1,800 while attending an intense program of studies. Biblical studies, Hebrew language, Jewish ethics, Jewish law & customs, Jewish history, Talmud, Chassidic philosophy, tutorials and independent study projects are just part of the curriculum of study. Admission is based on a sincere interest in exploring authentic Jewish heritage, and on academic excellence. The program is open to students who have minimal or absolutely no background in Jewish studies and observance.

For more information, contact
Rabbi Mendel Rabbi
Program Coordinator
824 Eastern Parkway
Brooklyn, New York 11213
1-800-33-OCTJS or 718-735-0210
Fax: 718-735-0480
www.ILTSP.org

JONAS M. AND SADIE RENNERT
ITSP
Ivy League Torah Study Program

Sponsored by The National Commitee for the Furtherance of Jewish Education
Made possible by a grant from Ira Leon and Ingeborg Rennert

STUDENT EMPLOYEES
W·A·N·T·E·D
Summer Conference Housing is looking for YOU!

How about a summer job that is here on the UMASS campus and lets you meet new people everyday?

JOBS

How about working with a department that will host over 9,000 people on the UMASS campus this summer?

February 22- March 31, 2000 applications for Summer Conference Housing positions will be available in the University Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center.

Completed applications are due by April 7, 2000.

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
Now Featuring Drink Specials
Bodean's Twisted Tea $2.25
Rum and Coke $2.00
THE MONKEY BAR'S UNIQUE MENU FEATURES MEDITERRANEAN AND CAJUN CUISINE
AFTER 10 IT'S TIME TO DANCE
WEDNESDAY - Ladies Night f/ tons of free giveaways
THURSDAY - DJ FOOZ spins house music all night long
FRIDAY - House Hip-hop and Top 40 music spun by SATURDAY - S4B Productions DJ's Fooz, Creme, and Usook
63 N. Pleasant Street 259-1600

DELIVERY HOTLINE
549-0077
PANDA EAST
CHINESE &JAPANESE RESTAURANT
103 N. Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
(413)256-8923
256-8924
Lunch Specials Served Daily
NOW ACCEPTING OCMP!

Contemporary Jewish Creativity
March 3-5
At the Yiddish Book Center, Hampshire College
Events are free and open to the public

Friday, March 3
A talk by Daphne Merkin
New Yorker staff writer
and author of Dreaming of Hitler
Franklin Patterson Hall, 8 p.m.

Saturday, March 4
Film screenings and discussions with filmmakers including
Sam Ball, Pleasures of Urban Decay
Pearl Gluck, Divan
Michal Goldman, Umm Kulthum, A Voice Like Egypt and A Jumpin' Night in the Garden Of Eden
Chana Pollack, Pot'm Selected Chapters
Franklin Patterson Hall, 7:30 p.m.

Sunday, March 5
Readings and discussions with visiting writers including
Pearl Abraham, The Romance reader and Giving Up America
Lilian Nattel, The River Midnight
Thane Rosenbaum, Literary editor of Tikkun magazine, Second Hand Smoke
Steve Stern, The Wedding Jester and A Plague of Dreamers

Yiddish Book Center, 10 a.m. - noon
Film Screening and discussion with filmmaker Mike Dellitt, Delta Jews
Yiddish Book center, 2 p.m.

Sponsored by the Five College Jewish Studies Programs and the Yiddish Book Center
Supported by a grant from the Nathan Cummings Foundation and the Jeremiah Kaplan Family Foundation
Contact Hampshire College at 559-5719 or the Yiddish Book Center at 256-4900 for more information

FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY
STUDY ABROAD SUMMER PROGRAMS
Earn college credit, choose from one of two exciting learning experiences

MULTICULTURAL LONDON & IRELAND IN PERSPECTIVE
June 10, - July 1, 2000
(6 credits)
A two-week "hands-on" exploration of London and its multi-ethnic culture and history, followed by one week in Northern Ireland examining its continuing conflict
INCLUSIVE COST $4,190
A non-refundable deposit of $600 due on April 1, 2000
Full payment due May 1
limited to 20 students

ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES & SPANISH IN COSTA RICA
June 8, - July 3, 2000
(3 credits Environmental Studies 3 credits Spanish)
An introduction to the environmental issues of Costa Rica, through field trips, seminars and readings, and Spanish language immersion experience including home stays
INCLUSIVE COST $3,800
A non-refundable deposit of $600 due on April 1, 2000
Full payment due May 1
limited to 20 students

FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY
CALL: 631-287-8474 for more information

UM to open spring season

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

After four months away from the field, the Massachusetts women's soccer team will take to the field for the first time this spring on Saturday afternoon in a five-team tournament.

Collegiate clubs from Colgate, Syracuse and Rhode Island, and the nearby Springfield Sirens pro team will join the Minutewomen at All-Sport Arena in Northampton beginning at 1 p.m. There will be games every half hour until 6 p.m., when the championship will be played.

UMass finished 11-5-1 a year ago and has been practicing for the past month in preparation for this weekend's affair.

"We're going in with our eyes open. We've been doing a lot of running and the kids are dying to get out on the field and play," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. The last week was the first time that the team was able to touch the ball, so they've been like crazy people out there going 100 miles per hour."

The Minutewomen are slated to play Colgate [2 p.m.], Syracuse [3 p.m.], the Sirens [4 p.m.] and URI [5 p.m.] with the hope of advancing to the finals at 6 p.m.

Colgate, who made the NCAA tournament last season as the winners of the Patriot League, finished 10-8-2 in 1999. The last time these two squads met was in 1998 in Amherst, with the Minutewomen coming out on top 3-2.

Offensively, the Red Raiders are led by senior Kellie Gale and sjuniurs Angela Pulitafico and Mandy Palladino.

Syracuse, who is coached by former UMass standout April Kater, posted a 12-6-2 mark in 1999. The Orangewomen and the Minutewomen played last season in Agawam, with the two teams dueling to a 2-2 tie.

Top scoring threats for SU include seniors Erin O'Grady, Cindy Wolf and Trisha Burch, along with junior Candy Reich.

Rhode Island, the final collegiate team in the tournament, went 12-8 last season and continues to emerge as one of the up-and-coming teams in the A-10. UMass downed the Ocean State school 3-2 last season in the only meeting between the two clubs.

All-Conference selection Shannon Kittleson is one of the most explosive players in the league and will pace the Rams offensive attack.

On the UMass side of things, senior forward Kara Green is a three-time All A-10 pick and will be the primary offensive threat for the Minutewomen. Complementing Green up front will be seniors Kara Ciocca and Brooke Bartlett, along with juniors Sarah Cook and Katelyn Jones.

However, Rudy plans on utilizing his whole roster in this weekend's tournament.

"We're looking at this tournament as an educational tool. The kids who didn't play a lot in the fall are going to get an opportunity this weekend," he said. "Every team who is in it can either win it or can finish last."

www.dailycollegian.com

Apartment Rentals
1, 2 Bedrooms in Amherst
Check them out:
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
or call
Lincoln Real Estate
253 - 7879

DO YOU NEED YOUR WISDOM TEETH REMOVED?
If so, patients are being enrolled for a wisdom teeth research study. Your wisdom teeth can be extracted by a Board Certified Oral Surgeon. Financial compensation will be provided for your opinion on a research pain medication.
For more information call:
SCIREX Corporation at (860) 285-0569
Outside Windsor call toll free 1-888-285-0569
SCIREX

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS (across the street from Rafters)

Milwaukee's Best 30 Packs All Varieties $9.99+dep	BBC Growlers (64oz) All Varieties $4.49+dep
Miller Lite 30 Packs $16.99+dep	Luna Di Luna All Varieties $9.99
Saranac 12 Packs All Varieties $9.99+dep	Rubinoff Vodka 1.75L $9.99
Sam Adams & Pete's 6pk All Varieties $5.99+dep	Jack Daniels 750ml $16.99

More Specials at www.universityliquors.com

Sunday brunch Only $4.95
11am-2pm
THE PUB
The Traditional Country Breakfast
Three eggs, hash brown potatoes, four strips of bacon, toast or English muffins and fresh melon
Omelettes
Create your own three egg omelette from a selection of fillings, with hash brown potatoes, toast or English muffins and fresh melon
Eggs Benedict
Two poached eggs on English muffins with Canadian bacon and topped with hollandaise sauce, served with hash brown potatoes and fresh melon
French Toast
Thick slices of Texas toast grilled and served with butter, maple syrup, four strips of bacon and fresh melon
Brunch Skins
Three extra large potato skins fried crisp, filled with three poached eggs with four strips of bacon and topped with hollandaise sauce, served with hash brown potatoes and fresh melon.
For Kids (12 & under) 1.49
French toast, bacon and fresh melon
Try one of these specials or order from our regular menu!
The Pub • 15 E. Pleasant • Downtown Amherst

HAPPY HOUR
1/2 PRICE
appetizers • nachos • chicken wings
MON-FRI 4-6PM
Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive • Amherst

Classes got you down? Get some action at Breakaway Sports
Indoor Soccer Arena
The Valley's Finest Sports and Fitness Facility
Thursday night co-rec soccer league forming now!! Accepting full teams (8-10 players) or individuals.
Preseason co-rec games March 2 and March 9, 7:00-10:00.
All players welcome, $10 court fee.
8 game season with playoffs, March 23-May 11.
Individual players: $60.
Full Teams: $595.
Call Starker at 397-9716 (starker@javanet.com) or Breakaway Sports at 549-3638 to sign up.
Conveniently located on Route 116 (3 miles north of campus) on the Sunderland bus route.

You are invited
The Performing Arts Division presents the Spring Faculty Recital
voice, piano, woodwinds, dance, guitar
Thursday, March 2
7:30 p.m.
Bezanson Hall, Fine Arts Center
Please call the Division of Continuing Education at 545-0519 for more information.
free and open to the public

next

continued from page 16

club soccer], and playing with a lot of other talented players lets you know where you fit and can feel comfortable," said Khouri, who plans on majoring in Fine Arts. "It helps you know what to expect [at the collegiate level]."

Keeping the pipeline alive

The addition of Lilly to the UMass roster will bring the number of Shenendehowa High alums to three. The newcomer will join Brooke Bartlett and Katelyn Jones next season in Amherst.

The versatile Lilly played in both the midfield and up front while at Shen, netting 85 goals and 36 assists during her career. She also scored an astounding six goals in a single game on two different occasions.

Needless to say, the Ballston Lake, NY product will be looked upon to add some scoring punch next season along with current Minutewomen Kara Green, Bartlett and Jones.

"Erin was sort of like Emma [Kurowski] in the sense that we knew for several years that we wanted her to come here. She came to our advanced camps here during the summer," Rudy said. "She's a cross between Emma and Kara who has a proven track record for a goal scorer. What can you say – the kid can score goals."

UMass won the recruiting battle for Lilly over a host of other Division I schools. Boston College, Cornell and West Virginia were just a few of the suitors among a laundry list of programs.

"A lot of [choosing] UMass was the location to my home. It's only two hours away, so it fits perfectly," Lilly said. "I love Coach Rudy and the program, plus the school has so many majors. All of those things put together led me to choose UMass."

Even though Bartlett and Jones were already on the club, Lilly said that bond did not factor into her initial decision.

"It's nice to know that I already know a few kids on the team who I had got along with in high school," Lilly said. "At first it didn't really figure in. Now that I know that I'm going there, though, it's nice to know some people."

Added Rudy: "We like those kids from that area. They are well-prepared and are both tactically and technically smart."

The most likely scenario for the fall places Lilly as an attacking forward, in a role that would be similar to that of the departing Kurowski.

"I hope that I get to play up top like I did in high school. I want to score some goals," Lilly said. "That's why coach brought me in here."

Local products stays close to home

The final player of the quartet to commit to UMass was Luttati. A product of Westford, she was the two-time Lowell Sun Player of the Year.

In the end, the MVP of this past summer's U-Mass advanced camp chose her home state school over Providence College and Wheaton College.

"I really liked the school when I had gone to camp there. I loved the campus, loved coach and loved the girls," Luttati said.

For Rudy, the addition of the Westford native continues the trend of keeping the best Bay State products close to home.

"We've known Michelle for about six or seven years now. She had been here at our advanced camps for the past six years and was the MVP of our camp this past summer," Rudy said. "Her club team Juventus was coached by Mari Curtis, so in that respect we were doubly pleased."

"First, since she was a graduate of our advanced camp, and also because she comes to us after being under the tutelage of Mary," added Rudy. "We like her personality and work ethic. She's a soccer junkie who wants to excel and succeed. She has a lot of qualities that will enable her to do quite well."

A midfielder at Westford Academy, the versatile Luttati could see time either there or in the back. The incoming freshman was also an Eastern Massachusetts All-Star, as well as an All-State selection last season.

"She could end up there [in the midfield] or in the back. She has great jumping ability and also can serve the ball well," Rudy said. "But she also isn't afraid to make slide tackles and is the kind of kid who, if the minus [a tackle], then she will pop right back up and make a second effort."

Added Luttati, "I'm hoping that I can bring my jumping ability and play in the air to the team. I just want to be able to help the team."

The pipeline continues – Part 2

While Bartlett, Jones and Lilly have started a trend from upstate New York, Sarah Cook and Holly Wildenhaus have done the same in Southwestern Ohio. The latter pair can now can one more member to their club, as West Chester, OH native Amy Mink is the latest Buckeye State resident to sign with the Minutewomen.

"Amy was directed to us from Greg Deutsch, who was a goalkeeper of mine at Central Florida. He has kept his eye on kids coming out of the Cincinnati area for quite some time and he recommended Amy highly," Rudy said. "She was also recommended by Louie Hollmeier, who played here at UMass for the men's team in the 1980's, so that's another connection."

"There's a nice grapevine coming out of Ohio and we want kids to keep coming," added Rudy. "That's an area that we want to visit often."

Mink, who chose UMass over Georgia, Kentucky and Cincinnati, was a four-year varsity starter at Lakota West High School. As a senior, the Cincinnati Enquirer tabbed her as the top player in Cincinnati.

"I liked the setting of the school and yes [I wanted to get away from home]," Mink said. "I liked the coaches and the school, and the players are very good."

A midfielder by trade, Mink will likely see time at the same position for the Minutewomen this season.

"She is a very talented attacking midfielder, but she's not going to blow you away with her visuality. Rather, she will impress you with her ability to run from behind at the right time and that's a great trait to have," Rudy said. "We lost quite a few goals from last year, and we needed to bring in people who can score goals."

Added Mink: "When I go in as a freshman, I'm going to work my hardest to get a starting position and keep it."

The light at the end of the tunnel

UMass will once again be in the hunt for the Atlantic 10 title this fall, but the key to winning it all may lie in how well the incoming class adjusts to collegiate soccer. However, Rudy feels confident that this new crop of freshmen will have an impact next season.

"I think that they will mesh well with the players who are returning," he said.

According to the UMass coach, the recruiting class is not complete yet. However, due to NCAA regulations, he can't give any names of the players who the Minutewomen are in the hunt for.

"All I can say is that we are in the mix for a few goalkeepers. I think that we are looking at some very good ones," Rudy said.

For now, UMass will open their spring season on Saturday with an indoor tournament at All-Sport Arena in Northampton. For more information on the first test of the season for the Minutewomen, check out the related story.

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
Starts FRI. THIS WEEKEND ONLY
Look again at the year's most nominated film.
8 ACADEMY AWARD NOMINATIONS

KEVIN SPACEY ANNETTE BENING
AMERICAN BEAUTY
ACADEMY OF MUSIC Cinemark NORTHAMPTON 584-8435

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
Brings the Arts

TICKETS ONLY $10 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
Oops! The Big Apple Circus
Come one, come all—Oops! The Big Apple Circus Stage Show is coming to town. Lovers, villains, and clowns become a part of the magical mayhem that erupts when classical circus meets classical theater on the stage. You won't believe the sensational skills, amazing artistry, outrageous comedy, and endless excitement that is the hallmark of the Big Apple Circus. It's fun for the entire family.
MARCH 7 & 8 AT 7:30PM
FINE ARTS CENTER CONCERT HALL
SPONSORED BY FLEET BANK, WRNX 100.9FM AND FAMILYFUN MAGAZINE
The Fine Arts Center
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for tickets

NHL

continued from page 11

Brown to see if he's Flyers material. And the recent brilliant trim office moves by the Bruins organization of signing anarchist Joe Murphy and Canada's Most Wanted, McSorley, may have the Flyers brass thinking that they could come away with a steal if that's the kind of talent Harry Sinden is looking for.

You read it here first a few weeks ago that the Colorado Avalanche would be lucky to get past the Sharks in the first round of the playoffs. Well after a key divisional match-up Tuesday night against the Edmonton Oilers, the Avs could be eliminated even sooner than that. Colorado continued their slide, losing 3-1 to Tommy Salo and the Oilers. And now the Avalanche sit six points behind the Oilers in the Northwest Division and are tied with the San Jose Sharks for the last playoff berth. The Avalanche may be knocked out of the playoffs by the Sharks, before they even start. Since the way the playoff seeding is set up, Colorado must beat Edmonton and win their division (not likely) to clinch the third playoff spot; otherwise, the Avalanche will be in a dog fight with the Sharks and the Calgary Flames for the eighth spot in the Western Conference. Look out for that next Red Wings-Panthers game, let's see if Fedorov should have plenty of mush to talk when Bure steps onto the ice.

Maxander Wood is a Collegian columnist.

foot

continued from page 16

They drop them off and come in here to Applebee's and then they go to all the other Applebee's throughout Massachusetts, through New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine. If we can keep up the reputation of that, then it just enhances (business). (They'll say), 'Geez, there's an Applebee's in my neighborhood, let's go there because I remember I had a good visit to the one in Hadley."

The students, however, seem to have mixed feelings on the situation.

"Football games do not effect my life and I don't care for them," Isaac Maxmen, a sophomore animal science major, said. "There are other things I have to worry about."

Some of those enrolled in the university believe that the jump would make football games more attractive events on campus. With a hypothetical upgrade in notoriety of opponents, from schools like Northeastern to powerhouses like Boston College, UMass had interdivisional road games against BC and Kansas State scheduled in the next couple of years to prepare for a change. Unfortunately, the Wildcats, who were set to play the Minutemen next fall, broke off their verbal agreement.

"I would probably enjoy going to a really big game," said Elizabeth Hebert, a freshman political science major. "I went to a few football games in high school, and it was fun. Not a lot of people I know are interested. I think people might be more interested if it was a bigger deal – if they were playing better-ranked teams."

Added Dariusz Nastal, an undeclared sophomore; "I would definitely go to more games, that's for sure. It would be more exciting. I know there'd more people coming to games, and we'd definitely get more respect. Especially if we won some games."

Still, the time when big-name opponents come to Amherst might be far enough away to discourage the overall support of the current student body.

Neinas' study claims; "Many who have indicated support for Division I-A status have assumed that UMass would have the opportunity to schedule attractive name opponents, but usually an emerging Division I-A program has to schedule the recognizable teams on the road to obtain a meaningful financial guarantee without the promise of a return game."

For the time being, however, more research has to be done by the University before the campus undergrads and grads are addressed.

"This is just the first step," UMass Athletic Director Bob Marcum said. "There's not any conclusion. We still have a business plan to develop."

Babul

continued from page 16

Babul has found other ways to gain minutes on the court. His career highs include 15 points in a 73-69 win over St. John's last season, and 12 boards against Kansas. He was named the Pizza Hut Academic All-Star of the Game for the CBS broadcast of the UMass/Temple game last season.

However, the 6-foot-6-inch leaper is better known for his man-to-man play against the opponent's top scorer. Last season he cooled off Connecticut's Richard Hamilton to 11 points, nine shy of the Husky's game average. On Nov. 22, Babul allowed Kevin Freeman (13.3 ppg) just two points on one field goal. Temple's big man Mark Karcher (16.0 ppg) managed only three points on a 1-for-10 shooting performance under the watchful eye of Babul. The eldest Babul will finish averaging about 3.6 ppg with 80-plus career steals and over 425 points in his career at UMass.

And what kind of results do you expect from Jon?

How about 3.7 ppg and 4.3 rebounds per game so far in his collegiate days? Mostly playing at, you guessed it, the small forward position. Jon has established himself as a player who "provides excelling defense and rebounding," according to the Ga. Tech media guide. His game-high point total is eerily similar to Mike's at 16 points in a victory over New Orleans at the Big Island Invitational last season.

It's now four years later, and Mike is armed with his parents, Mike and Joan, one on each arm, joining him in celebration and remembrance of his last game at the William D. Mullins Center. A co-captain, along with Chris Kirkland, Babul is one of three players to have competed under all of Coach James "Bruiser" Flint's four years of tutelage. Just four years ago Mike was first introduced to the UMass faithful and then went out and captured the first of his four Midnight Madness Slam Dunk contests.

Younger brother Jeff, a senior in high school, is nursing his head after taking a fall in his game the week before. Jon wasn't there to share in the memory; he was over a thousand miles away, involved with his own team.

"It's crazy, it just goes by so quick, you see everyone else go through it (senior night)" said Mike. As of now, Mike's future is undecided, but hopes to catch a lot of Jon's games next year. He hasn't ruled out the possibility of playing ball overseas either.

"If there's a chance to play ball anywhere overseas, I'd give it a shot," said Mike.

One thing is for sure, wherever he ends up, Jon will surely not be far behind.

COURTESY MIKE BABUL

The Babul twins have thrived on competing against one another over the years while still remaining best friends.

The Jonas M. and Sadie Rennert
Ivy League Torah Study Program

Lets you earn...

...while you learn!

Summer 2000

Located in the Heart of the Catskills!
Women's program
"Shaich Center I"
Men's Program
"Shaich Center II"
Call for program dates.

The program is a stimulating, challenging, and unique summer fellowship in Judaic Studies for university students. Once again this summer, students from across North America and around the world will have the opportunity to live and learn Torah Judaism in a scenic Catskill mountain setting.

The Ivy league Torah Study Program is all-encompassing, giving participants the opportunity to learn in a totally Jewish environment. Students will explore the relevance of Judaism in every aspect of their day - from why it's important to eat kosher to studying the foundation of Judaism (the Torah).

Students receive room, board and a fellowship of $1,800 while attending an intense program of studies. Biblical studies. Hebrew language. Jewish ethics. Jewish law & customs. Jewish history. Talmud. Chassidic philosophy. tutorials and independent study projects are just part of the curriculum of study. Admission is based on a sincere interest in exploring authentic Jewish heritage, and on academic excellence. The program is open to students who have minimal or absolutely no background in Jewish studies and observance.

For more information, contact:
Rabbi Mendel Heldt
Program Coordinator
626 Eastern Parkway
Brooklyn, New York 11213
1-800-33-IVCSY or 718-738-0210
Fax: 718-738-0469
www.IVCSY.org

Sponsored by The National Committee for the Furtherance of Jewish Education
Made possible by a grant from the Leon and Ingeborg Rennert

IVCSY
Ivy League Torah Study Program

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE

Now Featuring Drink Specials
Bodean's Twisted Tea $2.25
Rum and Coke $2.00

THE MONKEY BAR'S UNIQUE MENU FEATURES
MEDITERRANEAN AND CAJUN CUISINE
AFTER 10 IT'S TIME TO DANCE

WEDNESDAY - Ladies Night w/ tons of free giveaways
THURSDAY - DJ FOOZ spins house music all night long
FRIDAY - House Hip-hop and Top 40 music spun by SATURDAY - S4B Productions DJ's Fooz, Creme, and Uncal

63 N. Pleasant Street 259-1600

STUDENT EMPLOYEES

W·A·N·T·E·D

Summer Conference Housing is looking for YOU!

How about a summer job that is here on the UMASS campus and lets you meet new people everyday?

JOBS

How about working with a department that will host over 9,000 people on the UMASS campus this summer?

February 22- March 31, 2000 applications for Summer Conference Housing positions will be available in the University Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center.

Completed applications are due by April 7, 2000.

DELIVERY HOTLINE
549-0077

PANDA EAST
CHINESE &JAPANESE RESTAURANT

103 N. Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
(413)256-8923
256-8924

Lunch Specials Served Daily

NOW ACCEPTING OCMP!

Contemporary Jewish Creativity

March 3-5
At the Yiddish Book Center, Hampshire College
Events are free and open to the public

Friday, March 3
A talk by Daphne Merkin
New Yorker staff writer
and author of Dreaming of Hitler
Franklin Patterson Hall, 8 p.m.

Saturday, March 4
Film screenings and discussions with filmmakers
Including
Sam Ball, Pleasures of Urban Decay
Pearl Gluck, Divan
Michal Goldman, Umm Kulthum, A Voice Like Egypt and A Jumpin' Night in the Garden Of Eden
Chana Poliack, Pelo 'Selected Chapters'
Franklin Patterson Hall, 7:30 p.m.

Sunday, March 5
Readings and discussions with visiting writers
Including
Pearl Abraham, The Romance reader and Giving Up America
Lilian Kattel, The River Midnight
Thane Rosenbaum, literary editor of Tikkun magazine, Second Hand Smoke
Steve Stern, The Wedding Jester and A Plague of Dreamers

Yiddish Book Center, 10 a.m. - noon
Film Screening and discussion with filmmaker Mike Dellitt, Delta Jews
Yiddish Book center, 2 p.m.

Sponsored by the Five College Jewish Studies Programs and the Yiddish Book Center
Supported by a grant from the Nathan Cummings Foundation and the Jeremiah Kaplan Family Foundation
Contact Hampshire College at 559-5719 or the Yiddish Book Center at 256-4900 for more information

FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY

STUDY ABROAD SUMMER PROGRAMS
Earn college credit, choose from one of two exciting learning experiences

MULTICULTURAL LONDON & IRELAND IN PERSPECTIVE
June 10, - July 1, 2000
(6 credits)
A two-week "hands-on" exploration of London and its multi-ethnic culture and history, followed by one week in Nothern Ireland examining its continuing conflict
INCLUSIVE COST $4,100
A non-refundable deposit of $600 due on April 1, 2000
Full payment due May 1
limited to 20 students

ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES & SPANISH IN COSTA RICA
June 8, - July 3, 2000
(3 credits Environmental Studies 3 credits Spanish)
An introduction to the environmental issues of Costa Rica, through field trips, seminars and readings, and Spanish language immersion experience including home stays
INCLUSIVE COST $3,800
A non-refundable deposit of $600 due on April 1, 2000
Full payment due May 1
limited to 20 students

FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY

CALL: 631-287-8474 for more information

UM to open spring season

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

After four months away from the field, the Massachusetts women's soccer team will take to the field for the first time this spring on Saturday afternoon in a five-team tournament.

Collegiate clubs from Colgate, Syracuse and Rhode Island, and the nearby Springfield Sirens pro team will join the Minutewomen at All-Sport Arena in Northampton beginning at 1 p.m. There will be games every half hour until 6 p.m., when the championship will be played.

UMass finished 11-5-1 a year ago and has been practicing for the past month in preparation for this weekend's affair.

"We're going in with our eyes open. We've been doing a lot of running and the kids are dying to get out on the field and play," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "The last week was the first time that the team was able to touch the ball, so they've been like crazy people out there going 100 miles per hour."

The Minutewomen are slated to play Colgate (2 p.m.), Syracuse (3 p.m.), the Sirens (4 p.m.) and URI (5 p.m.) with the hope of advancing to the finals at 6 p.m.

Colgate, who made the NCAA tournament last season as the winners of the Patriot League, finished 10-8-2 in 1999. The last time these two squads met was in 1998 in Amherst, with the Minutewomen coming out on top 3-2.

Offensively, the Red Raiders are led by senior Kellie Gale and sjuniurs Angela Pullafico and Mandy Palladino.

Syracuse, who is coached by former UMass standout April Kater, posted a 12-6-2 mark in 1999. The Orangewomen and the Minutewomen played last season in Agawam, with the two teams dueling to a 2-2 tie.

Top scoring threats for SU include seniors Erin O'Grady, Cindy Wolf and Trisha Burch, along with junior Candy Reich.

Rhode Island, the final collegiate team in the tournament, went 12-8 last season and continues to emerge as one of the up-and-coming teams in the A-10. UMass downed the Ocean State school 3-2 last season in the only meeting between the two clubs.

All-Conference selection Shannon Kittleson is one of the most explosive players in the league and will pace the Rams offensive attack.

On the UMass side of things, senior forward Kara Green is a three-time All A-10 pick and will be the primary offensive threat for the Minutewomen. Complementing Green up front will be seniors Kara Ciocca and Brooke Bartlett, along with juniors Sarah Cook and Katelyn Jones.

However, Rudy plans on utilizing his whole roster in this weekend's tournament.

"We're looking at this tournament as an educational tool. The kids who didn't play a lot in the fall are going to get an opportunity this weekend," he said. "Every team who is in it can either win it, or can finish last."

next

continued from page 16

club soccer), and playing with a lot of other talented players lets you know where you fit and can feel comfortable," said Khouri, who plans on majoring in Fine Arts. "It helps you know what to expect [at the collegiate level]."

Keeping the pipeline alive

The addition of Lilly to the UMass roster will bring the number of Shenendehowa High alumni to three. The newcomer will join Brooke Bartlett and Katelyn Jones next season in Amherst.

The versatile Lilly played in both the midfield and up front while at Shen, netting 85 goals and 36 assists during her career. She also scored an astounding six goals in a single game on two different occasions.

Needless to say, the Ballston Lake, NY product will be looked upon to add some scoring punch next season along with current Minutewomen Kara Green, Bartlett and Jones.

"Erin was sort of like Emma [Kurowski] in the sense that we knew for several years that we wanted her to come here. She came to our advanced camps here during the summer," Rudy said. "She's a cross between Emma and Kara who has a proven track record for a goal scorer. What can you say – the kid can score goals."

UMass won the recruiting battle for Lilly over a host of other Division I schools. Boston College, Cornell and West Virginia were just a few of the suitors among a laundry list of programs.

"A lot of [choosing] UMass was the location to my home. It's only two hours away, so it fits perfectly," Lilly said. "I love Coach Rudy and the program, plus the school has so many majors. All of those things put together led me to choose UMass."

Even though Bartlett and Jones were already on the club, Lilly said that bond did not factor into her initial decision.

"It's nice to know that I already know a few kids on the team who I had got along with in high school," Lilly said. "At first it didn't really figure in. Now that I know that I'm going there, though, it's nice to know some people."

Added Rudy: "We like those kids from that area. They are well prepared and are both tactically and technically smart."

The most likely scenario for the fall places Lilly as an attacking forward, in a role that would be similar to that of the departing Kurowski.

"I hope that I get to play up top like I did in high school. I want to score some goals," Lilly said. "That's why coach brought me in here."

Local product stays close to home

The final player of the quartet to commit to UMass was Luttati. A product of Westford, she was the two-time Lowell Sun Player of the Year.

In the end, the MVP of this past summer's UMass advanced camp chose her home state school over Providence College and Wheaton College.

"I really liked the school when I had gone to camp there. I loved the campus, loved coach and loved the girls," Luttati said.

For Rudy, the addition of the Westford native continues the trend of keeping the best Bay State products close to home.

"We've known Michelle for about six or seven years now. She had been here at our advanced camps for the past six years and was the MVP of our camp this past summer," Rudy said. "Her club team Juventus was coached by Mary Curtis, so in that respect we were doubly pleased."

"First, since she was a graduate of our advanced camp, and also because she comes to us after being under the tutelage of Mary," added Rudy. "We like her personality and work ethic. She's a soccer junkie who wants to excel and succeed. She has a lot of qualities that will enable her to do quite well."

A midfielder at Westford Academy, the versatile Luttati could see time either there or in the back. The incoming freshman was also an Eastern Massachusetts All-Star as well as an All-State selection last season.

"She could end up there [in the midfield] or in the back. She has great jumping ability and also can serve the ball well," Rudy said. "But she also isn't afraid to make slide tackles and is the kind of kid who if she misses [a tackle], then she will pop right back up and make a second effort."

Added Luttati: "I'm hoping that I can bring my jumping ability and play in the air to the team. I just want to be able to help the team."

The pipeline continues – Part 2

While Bartlett, Jones and Lilly have started a trend from upstate New York, Sarah Cook and Holly Wildenhaus have done the same in Southwestern Ohio. The latter pair can now can one more member to their club, as West Chester, OH native Amy Mink is the latest Buckeye State resident to sign with the Minutewomen.

"Amy was directed to us from Greg Deutsch, who was a goalkeeper ol mine at Central Florida. He has kept his eye on kids coming out of the Cincinnati area for quite some time and he recommended Amy highly," Rudy said. "She was also recommended by Louie Hollmeyer, who played here at UMass for the men's team in the 1980's, so that's another connection."

"There's a nice grapevine coming out of Ohio and we want kids to keep coming," added Rudy. "That's an area that we want to visit often."

Mink, who chose UMass over Georgia, Kentucky and Cincinnati, was a four-year varsity starter at Lakota West High School. As a senior, the Cincinnati Enquirer tabhed her as the top player in Cincinnati.

"I liked the setting of the school and yes [I wanted to get away from home]," Mink said. "I liked the coaches and the school, and the players are very good."

A midfielder by trade, Mink will likely see time at the same position for the Minutewomen this season.

"She is a very talented attacking midfielder, but she's not going to blow you away with her visuality. Rather, she will impress you with her ability to run from behind at the right time and that's a great trait to have," Rudy said. "We lost quite a few seniors from last year, and we needed to bring in people who can score goals."

Added Mink: "When I go in as a freshman, I'm going to work my hardest to get a starting position and keep it."

The light at the end of the tunnel

UMass will once again be in the hunt for the Atlantic 10 title this fall, but the key to winning it all may lie in how well the incoming class adjusts to collegiate soccer. However, Rudy feels confident that this new crop of freshmen will have an impact next season.

"I think that they will mesh well with the players who are returning," he said.

According to the UMass coach, the recruiting class is not complete yet. However, due to NCAA regulations, he can't give any names of the players who the Minutewomen are in the hunt for.

"All I can say is that we are in the mix for a few goalkeepers. I think that we are looking at some very good ones," Rudy said.

For now, UMass will open their spring season on Saturday with an indoor tournament at All-Sport Arena in Northampton. For more information on the first test of the season for the Minutewomen, check out the related story.

www.dailycollegian.com

Apartment Rentals

1, 2, 3 Bedrooms in Amherst

Check them out:
www.amherstlincolnreality.com
or call
Lincoln Real Estate
253 - 7879

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS	(across the street from Rafters)
Milwaukee's Best 30 Packs	BBC Growlers (64oz)
All Varieties $9.99+dep	All Varieties $4.49+dep
Miller Lite 30 Packs	Luna Di Luna
$16.99+dep	All Varieties $9.99
Saranac 12 Packs	Rubinoff Vodka 1.75L
All Varieties $9.99+dep	$9.99
Sam Adams & Pete's 6pk	Jack Daniels 750ml
All Varieties $5.99+dep	$16.99

More Specials at www.universityliquors.com

DO YOU NEED YOUR WISDOM TEETH REMOVED?

If so, patients are being enrolled for a wisdom tooth research study. Your wisdom tooth can be extracted by a Board Certified Oral Surgeon. Financial compensation will be provided for your opinion on a research pain medication.

For more information call:
SCIREX Corporation at (860) 285-0569
Outside Windsor call toll free 1-888-285-0569

SCIREX

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE

Starts FRI. THIS WEEKEND ONLY

...look again at the year's most nominated film.

8 ACADEMY AWARD NOMINATIONS

KEVIN SPACEY ANNETTE BENING
AMERICAN BEAUTY

ACADEMY...MUSIC Cinemafolk NORTHAMPTON 584-8435

Sunday brunch Only $4.95

Seafood Saloon
THE PUB at Boltwood

11am-2pm

The Traditional Country Breakfast
Three eggs, hash brown potatoes, four strips of bacon, toast or 1 english muffins and fresh melon

Omelettes
Create your own three egg omelette from a selection of fillings, with hash brown potatoes, toast or English muffins and fresh melon

Eggs Benedict
Two poas bed eggs on 1 english muffins with Canadian bacon and topped with hollandaise sauce, served with hash brown potatoes and fresh melon

French Toast
Thick sliced of Texas toast grilled and served with butter, maple syrup, four strips of bacon and fresh melon

Brunch Skins
Three extra large potato skins fried crisp, filled with three poached eggs with four strips of bacon and topped with Hollandaise sauce, served with hash brown potatoes and fresh melon

For Kids (12 & under) $4.49
French toast, bacon and fresh melon

Try one of these specials or order from our regular menu!

The Pub • 15 E. Pleasant • Downtown Amherst

HAPPY HOUR
1/2 PRICE
appetizers • nachos • chicken wings
MON-FRI 4-6PM

Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive • Amherst

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
Brings the Arts

TICKETS ON SALE NOW! 545-2511

Oops! The Big Apple Circus

Come one, come all—Oops! The Big Apple Circus Stage Show is coming to town. Lovers, villains, and clowns become a part of the magical mayhem that erupts when classical circus meets classical theater on the stage. You won't believe the sensational skills, amazing artistry, outrageous comedy, and endless excitement that is the hallmark of the Big Apple Circus. It's fun for the entire family.

MARCH 7 & 8 AT 7:30PM
FINE ARTS CENTER CONCERT HALL
SPONSORED BY FLEET BANK, WRNX 100FM AND FAMILYFUN MAGAZINE

Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMASS for tickets

Classes got you down? Get some action at

Breakaway Sports Indoor Soccer Arena
The Valley's Finest Sports and Fitness Facility

Thursday night co-rec soccer league forming now!! Accepting full teams (8-10 players) or individuals.

Preseason co-rec games March 2 and March 9, 7:00-10:00.
All players welcome, $10 court fee.

8 game season with playoffs, March 23-May 11.
Individual players: $60.
Full Teams: $595.

Call Starker at 397-9716 (starker@javanet.com) or Breakaway Sports at 549-3638 to sign up.

Conveniently located on Route 116 (3 miles north of campus) on the Sunderland bus route.

You are invited

The Performing Arts Division presents the

Spring Faculty Recital

voice, piano, woodwinds, dance, guitar

Thursday, March 2
7:30 p.m.
Bezanson Hall, Fine Arts Center

Please call the Division of Continuing Education at 545-0519 for more information.

free and open to the public

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENT

CANTONES' PIZZA- for fast delivery to UMass see our menu and coupons at www.cantones.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floor 6/1. 256-3237 September Lincoln Real Estate. No fees. 253-7879.

3 bedroom condos. Gas heat, hardwood floors, bright heated basement with study and laundry area. 1/2 mile to campus, on bus route. April showings for June and September $1450.00. Lincoln Real Estate. No fees charged. 253-7879.

1 Bedroom Apt. Colonial Village on busline. $465.00 month. Available 6/1 256-3237.

AUTO FOR SALE

'85 Dodge Ram Van. 132k miles, excellent running condition. $1,200 or b.o. 549-9491.

1990 Toyota Corolla. Auto, air, cassette 147,000k. $2000.00 OBO 584-0574.

'92 Subaru Loyale wagon 4x4. Clean, runs great, air, power, roofrack. $2500.00 b.b.o. 665-0453.

EMPLOYMENT

Leaders needed: Summer teenage bycycling trips. US, Canada, Europe. Minimum 4-week time commitment. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, Ashfield Rd., Conway, MA 01341. (800)343-6132 www.biketrips.com

Camp Wayne for girls-sister half of brother/sister camp in Pennsylvania (3 hrs from New York City). If you love children and want a caring, fun environment we are looking to hire staff from 6/20-8/18/00 for: tennis, basketball, softball, soccer, volleyball, golf, gymnastics, aerobics, cheerleading, swimming, sailing, waterskiing, self-defense, ropes, fine arts (ceramics, sculptuer, drawing, painting, silk screening, jewlery), photography, piano, guitar, drama, video, group leaders. On campus interviews March 9th. Call 800-279-3019.

Movers: Local moving company is hiring individuals for moving positions. Flexibility and good attitudes are a must. Start at $8.00 per hour. Raise commensurate with performance. Call 584-4746.

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Canadensis, Pocono Mountains, PA. Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, gymnastics, hockey, tennis, mountain bikes, golrmance. Call 584-4746.e, ropes, archery, drama, video, photography, fishing, WSI, waterfront activities, arts and crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/21/00-8/18/00. Call (800)832-8228 or apply on-line: www.canadensis.com

Full and Part-time summer job opportunities available. Crabapple whitewater raft guides. No experience necessary. We will train. Must be athletic and hard working and have previous costomer service experience. Afternoon trip co-ordinator. Requires previous customer service experience. Job involves greeting guests, managing retail store and co-ordinating afternoon river trips. Call 413-339-0188 for application and/or more information.

EMPLOYMENT

Earn $1200-2000 this month part-time and a NEW Computer! Will train. For details 888-342-3267.

Get a head start on a hot INTERNET career with a cool, college-focused start up! BOLD-BRAIN.COM is looking for an energetic, entrepreneurial campus leader to market its website to students, campus organizations and local merchants. Must possess superior communication skills and knowledge of on/off campus life. Salary plus bonus. 10 hrs.+/wk. 6 weeks beginning 3/14. Full time opportunities potentially available. All majors welcome. Email resumes to Michele at BOLD-BRAIN.COM or fax (202)332-5195.

Summer to remember in woods of Maine- Camp Androscoggin for Boys seeks specialists to teach tennis, baseball, soccer, lacrosse, street hockey, swim, canoe, ropes, mountain biking, archery, and photography. 6/18 to 8/18. Visit www.campandro.com or contact 601 West Street, Harrison, NY 10528 (914)835-5800.

EMPLOYMENT

UAHC Crane Lake and Eisner Camps, Reform Jewish co-educational Camps located in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, seek qualified, dedicated counselors and specialists, including Waterfront, Athletics, Arts. Good salary, r&b included, travel assistance. Crane Lake Camp: Contact Brad Gerstle, 800-227-2660 ILUVCAMP@aol.com; www.cranelake-camp.com. Eisner Camp: Contact Louis Bordman, 212-650-4130 EISNERGUY@aol.com; www.eisner-camp.org

Connect to the future. International company seeks PC users. $25-75k potential. 1-888-827-9733 www.roadforsuccess.com

International commpany has paid internships available in accounting, sales/marketing. Call Giovanna (413)536-1813.

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Apply D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Exotic dancers Wanted. Earn $500-1000 weekly. Call Exotica 532-8888.

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Employment; Outdoors. Weight loss/sports camp looking for energetic people to lead campers in a fun filled summer. Located in West Stockbridge, MA. in the heart of the Berkshires. Call for more information. Toll Free 877-FIT-CAMP. email marc@camp-kingsmont.com

FOR SALE

Titleist DCI 98id golf clubs used 5 times. New price $650.00 asking $450.00. 665-6645 ask for Tim.

Textbooks 2 u.com. The best way to buy all your textbooks!!! 3 Day Guarantee!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Get paid to lose weight and inches. All natural, doctor reccommended. 1-800-397-7715.

Score big, score often with mybytes.com. Register today and get a free CD of cool music and much more.

PERSONAL

Attractive party-loving 20-something already dating energetic movie buff. How'd they meet? Turns out she's his cousin's friend. sixdegrees showed them the connections. www.sixdegrees.com

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TICKETS

Wanted for April 2 Red Hot Chilipeppers at Mullins Center. Call (413)243-0931.

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $229 rt. Europe $169 ow. Other worldwide destinations cheap. ONLY TERRORISTS GET YOU THERE CHEAPER! Book tickets on-line www.airtech.com or 212-219-7000.

TRAVEL

Be flexible...Save $$$. Europe $159(o/w + taxes). CHEAP FARES WORLDWIDE!! Mexico/Caribbean $199 (r/t + taxes) Call; 800-326-2009 www.4cheapair.com

Study Spanish. Internships in Guatemala. College Credit. www.casaxelaju.com (512)416-6991.

#1 Panama City Vacations! Party Beachfront @ The Boardwalk, Summit Condo's, and Mark II. 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

#1 Spring break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida! Book it now! All major credit cards accepted! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK 2000
Last Call! Limited Space Left!
Free Trips & Free Drinks!
1-800-426-7710

Call us at the Collegian Classifieds to put your ad on the paper
545-3500

Five College Community Calendar

THURSDAY, MARCH 2

...Auditions for three one-act plays ... 8054 of the Campus ... Contact Scott at 665-... information.

... Kris Bultmann, transgender activist ... Gender Outlaw and My Gender ... will present a lecture entitled ... Speak Out. An exploration of the ... of LBGT culture and the ... Queer Culture" at 12:30 ... Center.

... Dyll, Rebecca Odes and ... Mahwah founders of gURL.com, ... about their new book Deal With It! ... Sex, Your-ness to your Body, Brain, ... and ... girl at Hampshire College ... at noon in the Adele Simmons Hall lobby and auditorium. A dinner and informal discussion will be held at 5 p.m. at the Women's Center in Hillel, and a presentation and discussion will be held at 7 p.m. in the West Lecture Hall, Franklin/Patterson Hall.

Workshop – A workshop on contraception and safer sex will be held at 3 p.m. in room 302 of University Health Services.

FRIDAY, MARCH 3

Auditions – Auditions for three one-act plays will be held in room 917 of the Campus Center at 6:30 p.m. Contact Scott at 665-3454 for more information.

Community - The Malcolm X Cultural Center will present a show entitled "In the Spirit of Malcolm X" at 7 p.m. at the Center. Poets and dancers are needed. Call Abbas at 548-1848 or Vicki at 546-3366 if interested.

Prayer – The Muslim Student Association will present Jumma'a Prayer from noon to 2 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check the listing in the elevators for the room number.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4

Comedy— MISSION IMPROVable will perform its improvisational comedy show at 8 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center.

Talk – His Eminence Hazrat Syed Mumtaz Ali Shah, shaykh (spiritual guide) of the Golden Sufis Branch of the Chishti Order of Sufis in Toronto, will give a talk entitled "CONVERSATIONS WITH A SUFI SHAYKH," followed by a question and answer session at 1 p.m. in the Red Room, Converse Hall, AMHERST COLLEGE. Converse Hall is next to the PVTA bus stop at Amherst College). A free reception will follow.

NOTICES

Community – Mass Appeal, the newest co-ed a cappella group at UMass, is looking for students to arrange music. Email Erica at mass-appeal@umail.umass.edu for more information.

Community – Small Batch Records is looking for pictures of bands, people, venues and anything that captures the essence of the local music scene to display at a non-profit showcase this spring. For submissions, contact Mike at Mikemad1@aol.com or Caleb at 587-3740 by March 5.

Help – From Feb. 15-April 13 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5-8 p.m. student volunteers from the School of Management will assist non-resident aliens with the preparation of their Federal and State income tax returns. Call 545-5660 for more information.

Scholarships - The STEM/ECONS Teaching Scholars program is offering scholarships to students who are interested in exploring a career in K-12 math or science teaching. Students do not need to be enrolled in a certificate program to apply. Applications are due by April 1. Contact Rohanna at 545-0639 for more information.

Support – A grief support group is available to all students who have experienced the death of someone they love. The groups are free, small and confidential, and meet on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Telephone pre-screening is required for enrollment. Call 577-5181 if interested.

Support – ALANON and ALATEEN are offering local meetings for those affected by someone else's drinking problem. Call 253-9761 for meeting times and locations.

Voting – A reminder to registered voters: A voter can only vote absentee due to absence from his/her residence community during polling hours, physical disability preventing the voter from going to the polling place, or religious belief. For more information call 256-8355.

BOOKBUCKS™ From Bookworks
Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!
*See Store for Terms and Conditions
University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER
Just another way that WE GIVE 100%
We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	81	Gavel to Gavel
3	CBS/3 Hartford	82	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	83	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	84	CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield	85	CNN Fn
7	WSCN Home Ch	86	CNN Si
8	UPN/20 Hartford	87	TBS
9	Weather Channel	88	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain	89	College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford	90	Univision
12	PBS/24 Hartford	91	Comedy Central
13	WCCH 8 HSCN	92	Cartoon Network
14	International	93	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV	94	C-Span
16	WB/New Haven	95	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance	96	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel	97	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19	98	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 2, 2000

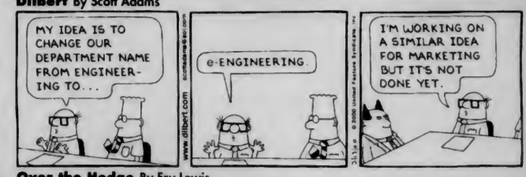
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lahrer ⓒ		Great Performances 'Les Miserables in Concert' (In Stereo) ⓒ				48 Hours 'Invisible Killers' ⓒ		Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News ⓒ	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder 'Gangland' (R) (In Stereo) ⓒ				48 Hours 'Invisible Killers' ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WBZ	4	News ⓒ	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder 'Gangland' (R) (In Stereo) ⓒ				48 Hours 'Invisible Killers' ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WCVB	5	News ⓒ	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⓒ	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 Downtown ⓒ		News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Frash Prince	Friends ⓒ	Nanny ⓒ	Popular 'Queen B' (In Stereo)		Charmed 'P3 ROF' (In Stereo)		News		Friends ⓒ	Nanny ⓒ
WHDH	7	News		NBC News	Inside Edition	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Wheel Fortune	Friends (R) ⓒ	Jesse ⓒ	Fraser (R) ⓒ	Stark Raving	ER 'Sins of the Fathers' (R) ⓒ		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	4	Judge Lane	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Real TV ⓒ	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ⓒ						Real TV (R) ⓒ	Change Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra ⓒ	Ent. Tonight	Friends (R) ⓒ	Jesse ⓒ	Fraser (R) ⓒ	Stark Raving	ER 'Sins of the Fathers' (R) ⓒ		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	11 Simpsons ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Friends (R) ⓒ	Jesse ⓒ	Fraser (R) ⓒ	Stark Raving	ER 'Sins of the Fathers' (R) ⓒ		News ⓒ	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News 10	NBC News	Wheel Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Friends (R) ⓒ	Jesse ⓒ	Fraser (R) ⓒ	Stark Raving	ER 'Sins of the Fathers' (R) ⓒ		News ⓒ	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lahrer ⓒ		This Old Hse.	Dis. on Call	Mystery! 'Heat of the Sun' ⓒ				Charlie Rose ⓒ	Stereo) ⓒ
WGGB	40	20 News ⓒ	ABC News	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 Downtown ⓒ		News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ⓒ	Judge Judy ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ⓒ						Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)	Mad Abt You
WTBS	72	Roseanne ⓒ	Roseanne ⓒ	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "Pale Rider" (1985, Western)		Clint Eastwood. Michael Moriarty				★★★ "The Outlaw Josey Wales" (1976, Western)
A&E	60	L.A. Law 'Chances of Meyer'		Law & Order 'Doubles' ⓒ		Biography: Raymond Burr		Investigative Reports 'The Farm: Life Inside Angola Prison' ⓒ				Law & Order ⓒ
CNN	29	Worldview ⓒ	Moneyline Newshour ⓒ		Crossfire ⓒ	World Today	Political Debate			Larry King Live ⓒ		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	59	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	Sat. Night Live-Commercial		Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Dana Carvey: Critic's Choice		Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	62	Your New House (R)		Wild Discovery: Devil's Play		On the Inside 'U.S. Mint' (R)		On Jupiter (R)		Divine Magic: Supernatural		On the Inside 'U.S. Mint' (R)
ESPN	31	Sportscenter ⓒ		College Basketball: Minnesota at Michigan State. (Live)				College Basketball: Cincinnati at DePaul. (Live)				Sportscenter ⓒ
LIFE	63	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait (In Stereo) ⓒ		Chicago Hope 'Risky Business'		★★½ "Frances" (1982, Biography) Jessica Lange, Sam Shepard					Golden Girls
MTV	33	MTV Jams	Beat Suite	Making Video	News Link	Say What Kiss	Road Rules	Road Rules	Diary (R)	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons ⓒ	Celebrity	Sensaless	Undressed	Loveline
NICK	53	All That	Catdog	Hey Arnold! (R)	Rugrats ⓒ	Thornberrys	Swester	Brady Bunch	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons ⓒ	I Love Lucy	Bewitched
SCIFI	65	Sliders (In Stereo) ⓒ		★★½ "Dark Angel: The Ascent" (1994) Angela Featherstone.				★★ "The Craft" (1996, Horror) Robin Tunney, Fairuza Balk.				★★ "The Craft" (1996)
TLC	28	Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours (R)		Untamed Earth: Wild Winds		Untamed Earth: Ferocious		Untamed Earth: Avalanche (R)		Untamed Earth: Wild Winds
TNT	54	In the Heat of the Night ⓒ		ER 'Masquerade' (In Stereo) ⓒ		"Freedom Song" (2000, Drama)		Danny Glover, Vonde Curtis-Hall (In Stereo) ⓒ		★★★ Tucker: The Man and His Dream" (1988)
USA	45	Baywatch 'Liquid Assets' ⓒ		JAG 'Angels 30" (In Stereo) ⓒ		Walker, Texas Ranger ⓒ		★★★ "Beverly Hills Cop" (1984, Drama) Eddie Murphy. ⓒ				Walker, Texas Ranger ⓒ
HBO	35	(5:00) ★★½ "King Kong" (1976)		★★★ "Little Shop of Horrors" (1986, Musical) Rick Moranis. 'PG-13'		★★½ "The Distinguished Gentleman" (1992) Eddie Murphy. ⓒ						Real Sex 24 (R) (In Stereo) ⓒ
MAX	36	★★ "How Stella Got Her Groove Back" (1998) Angela Bassett. ⓒ		★★ "The Confession" (1999, Suspense) Alec Baldwin. ⓒ								"Caligula" (1979, Adult) Malcolm McDowell. ⓒ	Erotic
SHOW	37	★★★ "Restless Spirits" (1999, Fantasy) Lothaire Bluteau, Nell ⓒ		★★½ "Return to Paradise" (1998, Drama) Vince Vaughn. ⓒ								★½ "200 Cigarettes" (1999, Comedy) Ben Affleck. ⓒ

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau



Robotman By Jim Meddick

Adam & Eric By Ross Burach

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

Welcome to the World By Ryan O'Donnell

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Don't underestimate your own ability to come through in a crisis situation. You are, despite any doubts, a take-charge kind of person.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – It's time to get past your own sense of inadequacy for today you may be required to offer nothing less than sure, confident leadership.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Listen to the messages you receive from strangers you encounter along the way today. You may be able to form a better picture of yourself!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Now is no time to skip from or otherwise try to hide in any way. You must be willing to face the music today – and tomorrow, too.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Progress may not be as quick and constant today as you had expected, but through diversity you can better your chances by day's end.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – What you do voluntarily today you must be willing to do with good spirits. Any negativity will only reflect badly upon you at this time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can come close to realizing an important dream today. Work toward improving communication and establishing closer ties with others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A little patience goes a long way today and enables you to enjoy more of what goes on around you. Take care you don't lose sight of a major goal.

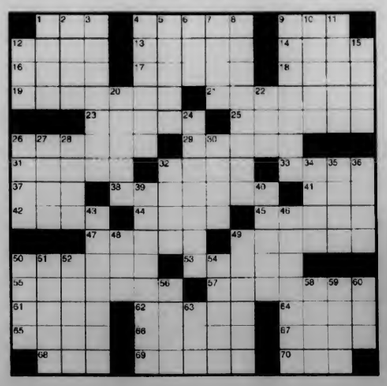
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – A new accomplishment of sorts can be yours today, provided you remain dear to those who will continue to say that you can't do it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Keep close tabs on all those coming and going today. It'll be up to you to report to others on the true state of your current affairs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – That which is inevitable cannot be avoided, and you must spend more time and energy on preparation that you do on preventative measures.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You're going to have to be more tolerant of those around you today or you will have no end of annoyance and frustration. Let things be, sometimes!

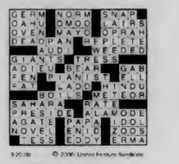
Quote of the Day



"If the gods could build me a ladder to the heavens, I'd climb up the ladder and drop a big elbow on the world."

–Mick Foley

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ



"MAN, LAST NIGHT I DREAMT I WAS A MUFFLER... AND I WOKE UP EXHAUSTED!"

ACROSS
1 Mutter
4 Alps Mont.
9 Dave's rival
12 Presidential prerogative
13 Juliet's beloved
14 Cheese import
16 Feast
17 Flower oil
18 King's address
19 Rapid — conveyance system
21 Subatomic particles
23 Fable writer
25 Black Sea port
26 Bend
29 Character in "M*A*S*H"
31 Hot dish
32 A few
33 Stitched together
37 Cereal grain
38 Astraddle
41 Kind of jacket
42 — the night before
44 Campus area
45 Smiles
47 Jeer
49 Attractive
50 Hunting trip
53 Ms. Merman
55 Blackboard accessories
57 Took turns
61 Night insect
62 Tiff
64 Seacoast event
65 Understood!
66 Overact
67 Writer Wiesel
68 Wynn and Begley
69 Held dear
70 Sault — Marie

DOWN
1 Fish trap
2 Sicily's volcano
3 Pedicure subject
4 Cook slowly
5 Sweepstakes
6 Qty.
7 Type of 64 Across
8 Rusted
9 Court favorites
10 Mexican fatherwell
11 Tall tales
12 Computer device: abbr.
15 Plateau
20 Brown shade
22 Harem room
24 Adroit correspondingly
26 Glaswegian e.g.
27 Met
28 Beatles' meter maid
30 Among
32 Astonish
34 Discharge (heat)
35 Crave
36 Insensitive
39 Arboreal room
40 Warbling bird
43 "Hides in a secret spot
46 Drudges
48 — you for real?
49 Called
50 18-wheeler
51 Popped up
52 Destined
54 Banal
56 Japanese wrestling
58 Pre-act no-no
59 Adams or Beckett
60 Poor grade
63 Autumn mo

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Steak & Cheese Sub

Hungarian Noodle Bake

Garden Chili (Berkshire, Hapshire & Worcester only)

Dinner

Hot Wrap Bar

Vegetable Lasagna

Tofu Hot Wrap Bar

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician — Janet Barr
Copy Editor — Ryan Smith
Production Supervisor — Lisa Metcalf
Production Staff — Loves Garg, Dan McGuinness-Rossi

Babul matches up perfectly with twin

Senior co-captain shares more than basketball talent with brother

By Kathleen Rolls
Collegian Staff

It could have been just another trip to Dunkin' Donuts. Maybe it should have been. But that's not the way it worked out.

The Babul twins had always been a perfect match. One was more outgoing and daring, while the other took a backseat but never failed to surge to the front when the rocks glanced off the windshield a little too hard for just one to handle.

That's the way it always has been for the Babul twins of North Attleboro. Mike is the elder of the pair by six minutes and is one inch shorter than Jon, the younger replica. They had been each other's best friend and teammate literally, since birth. For 18 years the identical twins had been inseparable, then they left for college.

"I'll never forget it, it was me, my dad and my brother a week before signing period," said Mike. "We went to Dunkin' Donuts just to get a coffee and talk about it, we didn't plan on making our decisions that night, but we were kind of like 'I'm going here, I'm going there.'"

They had been schoolboy basketball superstars in their upper-middle-class town in southeastern Massachusetts, already signing autographs by their sophomore year of high school for the locals. Jon utilized his extra inch to muscle his way on the blacks while Mike took advantage of his agility and quickness to become the school's all-time leading scorer with 1,450 points. Jon was not far behind after sitting out over 15 games with an injured wrist.

They would finish 22-2 their senior year, falling short to Brookline in the southeast state final by just one point. Had they won, they would have faced Mike's current teammates Monty Mack and Jonathan DePina and their South Boston squad. As juniors, the tandem went 20-3 and clinched the first of two Hockomock League championships.

But everything came to a very definite end that night.

"He's like, 'I'm going to Georgia Tech' and I'm like 'Fine, I'm going to UMass,'" Mike explained it. "My dad was asking us if we were sure that we didn't want to go to the University of North Carolina, but we were sure."

As Mike remembers it, the next day he informed fabled UNC coach Dean Smith that he had chosen to remain in his home state in and play in Amherst.

"He (Jon) didn't want to come here because they wanted him to play the four – he wanted to play three," said Mike. "For me to play here, I saw the opportunity to play at a Top 20 program, stay in my home state where my family can see me play and where I knew I'd get a chance to play early.

"At UNC they had Vince Carter; I figured I wouldn't play until he was out of there," Mike continued. "I was so comfortable with the school and Coach Calipari, Bruiser and Coach Robis."

The two have remained as close as ever, and as far apart as they have ever been. Mike is a senior Sport Management major at UMass. Jon, having redshirted his sophomore year due to a broken bone in his foot, still has one more year left as a Yellow Jacket.

It had always been the shared dream to play one another during their collegiate careers. It could have been just like old times in the backyard, throwing elbows and knowing just what the other was going to do next. There could not be a more perfect matchup. But it is a prophecy that is not likely to happen because neither Georgia Tech nor the Minutemen are a shoe-in for the NCAA tournament.

"They always said they would schedule a game between my brother and I but it never happened," said Mike. "It would be weird playing against him."

Mike and Jon wish they might have decided on the same school that night at Dunkin' Donuts because they miss each other so much both on and off the court.

KENARCDONALD / COLLEGIAN

Mike Babul is flanked by his parents during Tuesday night's Senior Night ceremony at the Mullins Center.

"After the first year of college, we wished we had gone to school together," said Mike. "We were only together a month whereas before we were together 24/7.

"I would have been a lot more comfortable because I know what he's thinking, he knows what I'm thinking, and that's the stuff that counts so much because when you get to this level and when you lose confidence, it's tough to get it back."

There have been some advantages of not being together. Jon sees his older brother coming out of his shell more. Mike thinks he just comes off shy when meeting people who aren't close to him.

"Mike's one of those quiet guys, he's not a vocal person, but as you can see he shows his leadership by hustling all the time and giving 110 percent every time he steps on the court," said teammate and housemate Winston Smith. "He's not that vocal type of leader, he just shows it on the court."

Dispelling the image of the typical, stuck-on-himself athlete has been a goal of Mike's since he came to UMass. Spanning his social circle beyond his team, he cites athletes from other UMass teams and friends from home as his closest companions.

"I think I'm just like any other college student who just happens to play basketball," said Mike. "Sometimes it's awkward when you go out and people think you have a big head or when people wonder why you're out when you have a big game in a couple of days."

And sometimes it isn't even Mike.

"One night I was up at UMass and he stayed in and I went out and pretended I was him," said Jon. "I got away with it but I didn't know some of his friends and they probably thought he was a jerk."

The Babuls were fortunate that their dad was the varsity boys' basketball coach at the local high school after playing out his college days at Rhode Island College. By the time the twin towers, as Jon remembers being referred to, were in seventh and eighth grade, they were no longer practicing alongside but with the varsity.

"We started playing in the YMCA league together and we'd always go to my dad's high school practices," said Mike. "We'd spend three hours a day at the gym."

After just one year of having Dad direct from the sidelines, he decided not to coach his sons because of the conflicts that came with coaching their friends. Mike thinks his father, who is an elementary schoolteacher, regrets not keeping up with coaching but understands his reasoning.

"It was just tough, my best friends came to the house and he had to cut these guys, so he decided to step down," said Mike. "I think he regrets doing that because he wanted to coach us and he loves coaching."

Still, their careers catapulted from all-out backyard battles to national AAU tournaments while they both finished among the top 25 students in their class. Mike, who averaged 20.1 points and 8.4 rebounds per game, was chosen as a Fourth Team Parade All-American and one of the top 60 seniors in the country. He competed on the same team as Mack, DePina and Shannon Crooks in the prestigious Boston Shootout. Jon was an Honorable Mention All-American by Street & Smith's while averaging 14 points and 13 rebounds per game.

"We were always pretty close (in talent)," said Mike. "During eighth grade and freshman year I was probably a little better than him but now we're dead even."

Mike tended to shoot the ball more, getting close to 20 looks a night because he handled the ball more. Jon excelled in rebounding while still accounting for himself on the scoreboard.

"I always played outside, that just happened because he was always an inch taller growing up and it just worked out that way," said Mike.

It doesn't seem they remained rigid in their roles. One time in an AAU game the two switched jerseys at halftime because one was in foul trouble. They have also been known to help shoulder the blame for each other.

"Sometimes the ref would call a foul on one of us and then point to the other," said Jon. "If he had four then I would just take it."

Those kinds of opportunities wouldn't be offered again in college where their careers might not be exactly how they imagined them, but they run remarkably parallel considering the distance circumstances. Both are best known for their defensive abilities and have slipped comfortably into role positions. And both wear No. 23.

"It's weird how it changed so much from high school," said Mike. "When we got to college, we both played real similar positions where he was always inside and I was always outside."

In the four years Mike has been at UMass, he has reached two NCAA tournaments and is vying for a third. He is up for his third Academic All-Conference selection with a GPA over 3.1 and could possibly earn a spot on the Atlantic 10 All-Defensive Team for a third straight year. His offensive numbers have not been his strong suit, but

Turn to BABUL, page 12

UMass looks to reload with four stellar recruits

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Due to the graduation of six players from its 1999 contingent, Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy and assistant Dan Magner had somewhat of a tall order to fill in this year's recruiting class.

Gone from last year's team is the top scorer in the history of the UMass soccer program, three steady midfielders, the veteran of the defensive unit and one of the team's starting goalkeepers.

Stepping into their place – the Class of 2004.

Although Rudy and Magner have not yet completed their recruiting, four players have already inked national letters of intent to play for the Minutewomen next year. The newest members of the squad are Janelle Khouri, Erin Lilly, Michelle Lunatti and Amy Mink.

UMass finished the 1999 season with an 11-5-1 mark and closed out its season with a loss in the semifinals of the Atlantic 10 tournament.

"I think that this class as a whole can be a good one. If we can complete it with a couple of goalkeepers, then I think that it can be very good," Rudy said. "We're sort of replacing the people that are graduating."

"We're losing two keepers, three center midfielders who were our jumpers, and the greatest goal scorer in the history of UMass," added Rudy. "The key [for the freshmen] is going to be how quickly they integrate into our system and if they can absorb the culture shock of Division I soccer. College soccer is a lot different from playing on high school and club teams."

Dipping into uncharted territory

The road that brought Khouri and UMass together was formed mainly in part to a former colleague of Magner. Once the groundwork was in place, it seemed like the two were a perfect fit.

"Janelle may be the find of the year. We found her through one of Dan's connections, so I've got to give him credit for this one," Rudy said. "One of Dan's former assistant coaches, Lisa Unzworth, coaches out in Calgary. She came here to visit UMass and found that this would be a good place to recommend to Janelle."

Although somewhat isolated in Western Canada, Khouri of Khouri's talent made it back to the United States. A member of U-20 Canadian women's national team pool, the midfielder has also won the Canadian National Club Championship for the past four years as a member of Calgary Celtic.

In addition to UMass, Dayton and Maryland were also in the hunt for Khouri's services. A handful of Canadian colleges were also actively seeking the talent.

"I really liked the girls, I thought they were nice. Coach [Rudy] seemed like a good guy, and I already knew Dan," Khouri said. "I had a good feeling when I went there to visit and I enjoyed my recruiting trip."

The freshman will likely see time in the midfield this fall in a role that was vacated by the likes of graduates Robin Smith, Cindy Garceau and Tarah Tokarchik. Standing 5-feet-9 inches, the Canadians will be one of tallest players on the squad and boasts an impressive vertical leap to go along with her height.

"She gives us size in the midfield, which we need with the loss of our three primary jumpers," Rudy said. "We felt that we needed to get some people who can jump and play in the air, and she can do that."

Khouri should battle for playing time this season, and is hoping that her extensive club experience will help ease the transition to the collegiate level.

"I think that you become more experienced [playing

Turn to NEXT, page 13

UMass eyeballs Division I-A: community has mixed feelings

By Seth Koenig
Collegian Staff

This article is the third and final installment of a series on the future of University of Massachusetts football, and the possible move to Division I-A competition.

The University of Massachusetts has done extensive research on the possibility of upgrading its football program from Division I-AA to I-A competition after taking home the 1998 D I-AA National Title and seeing its archrival, Connecticut, make the jump with an arguably poorer squad.

The financial sacrifices that UMass would have to make in order to make the move, to pay for the extra scholarships allotted to a higher level program, to afford the renovation of the school's home field to accommodate roughly 13,000 more fans in accordance with NCAA Division I-A regulations, and to cover a more expensive travel budget that comes from a more distant conference affiliation: would have to be shouldered by someone, and that someone could possibly be students and area businesses and taxpayers.

According to a study by Charles M. Neinas, the head of the College Football Association, "A UMass commitment to Division I-A status could result in doubling the budget for football operations to 3.5 to 4 million dollars, require 6-million to 8-million dollars for facility improvements, in addition to a commitment to enlarge the stadium to meet the NCAA Division I-A minimum capacity of 30,000."

With that in mind, a move to I-A football would theoretically hinge on the support of the UMass educational and economical community.

Unsurprisingly, Pioneer Valley businesses, in particular restaurants and eateries, have shown support for the move.

"It would be a boost of sales and revenue," John Crafts, the manager of Applebee's of Hadley, said. "It's hard to tell (how much). I would definitely say it's on the plus side, though. Especially if it's an afternoon game, it would definitely increase our day part business."

"It would be great for everybody in town, without a doubt – even if they construct a new stadium," said Yvette Rowan-Stern, manager of Rafters Sports Bar and Grill in Amherst. "When they were building the Mullins Center, quite a few people worked over there, and that added to the economy around here. Some of the people that worked here, stayed here."

With an assumed boost in attendance, the businesses would benefit from the influx of customers in the area, and would not likely have to make any major changes in their expenses to accommodate them.

"There's only so many people that are going to fit here, be it before games, after games, during the game – with people watching it on TV – we wouldn't up our staff any," Rowan-Stern said. "There's only so many people that are going to sit in here. If anything, we might have another doorman on, maybe one other person on the floor more than what we usually do."

Crafts agreed, and noted the opportunity to better the entire corporation through the local franchise.

"It's a good namesake," Crafts said. "Due to our location, families come in and bring their students.

Turn to FOOT, page 12

photo by Jason Stoll

UMass women's hockey stumped by MIT Engineers

By Melissa Hammel and Julie Robenhymer
Collegian Staff

This time, they didn't build a bridge or construct a skyscraper. This time, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Engineers simply drew up a game plan that left the Massachusetts women's hockey team perplexed.

The Maroon and White just couldn't get its act together when it faced top rival MIT at home last Saturday, finishing off the game with a 3-1 loss.

"We have had some trouble getting ourselves together and playing as a team," forward Josy Raycroft said. "We could have beaten them."

The match started off slowly, with the Minutewomen spending little time either skating or passing. The Engineers took advantage of the Minutewomen's lethargy on the ice and slapped one home early in the game.

At only 9:25 into the first period, MIT forward Michelle Bonugli streaked through the slot past the fallen goalie to slap in a wrist shot during an odd man rush.

MIT	3
UMass	1

Repeating her fancy footwork, Bonugli went on to score her second of three goals during her attack on the goal, a mere 3:34 later. Working on a rebound at the 6:31 mark, she once again flung the puck past collapsed UMass goalie Erin Murphy with a classic wrist shot. This left the score at 2-0 at the end of the first period, with the defensemen for the Minutewomen scrambling to get back into the game.

"We've played four games against this team in two years, and these guys are our top rivals," Mike Hammon, the MIT assistant coach commented.

"We were really happy about the game."

The next period did not go well for the Minutewomen, who faced an overall domination by the Engineers throughout most of the second period. Despite valiant attempts by the UMass defense to block shots directed at the goal, the MIT offense was still able to slide one past. At 8:47, Bonugli fought her way through numerous Minutewomen to score in close. This finished the second period with a score of 3-0 in favor of MIT.

"All three of their goals were scored by the same person," Raycroft said. "It was very frustrating."

The Minutewomen were finally able to exact revenge upon the Engineers in the third period, but the attempt came too late in the game to make a difference.

The women saw their only goal of the game scored by Raycroft at 15:24 into the period, a backhand to the crease that capped the scoring at 3-1.

"I forced myself through and rather than passing to anyone, I just went for it," Raycroft said about her goal.

The Minutewomen will be back in action and looking for revenge on Friday at 8 pm, when they once again face off with MIT, this time in Boston.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

New England's largest college daily

Volume CVI Issue 25 Friday, March 3, 2000

Marijuana battle ignites in Amherst

"We want it to send ripples, we want to get more people thinking about the issue, we want people to start questioning all the arguments and propaganda that they've heard and start looking at the facts" - Vern Coffey, President of CRC

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Correspondent

When the Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC) of the University of Massachusetts in conjunction with the Citizens for a Sensible Marijuana Policy of Amherst succeeded in getting the question of marijuana legalization on the town ballot, it sparked controversy among anti-drug organizations.

President Lea Palleria Cox of the Concerned Citizens for Drug Prevention, Inc. is an active member in the anti-drug movement. Cox has assisted in the closing of drug paraphernalia shops and the organizations have also worked with passing anti-drug laws. But today, sitting in her office in Hanover, her fight is in Amherst, knowing that the college voters in a liberal town may be enough to pass this non-binding proposal, which will be voted on March 28.

The question that the pro-marijuana groups have placed on the ballot for the March vote is actually 24-years-old. On May 12, 1976, an Amherst town meeting denied Article 52, Part 1 requesting the non-enforcement on the part of local police of marijuana possession laws. However, by a vote of 99-84 in Part 2, the town of Amherst voted that "our representatives in General Court be instructed to support legislation removing from the books laws regulating or proscribing the possession of marijuana for personal use, co-habitation and private sexual conduct between consenting adults."

Although the ballot question is posed as resurrection of Article 52, Part 2, the question of cohabitation and private sexual conduct is no longer a part of the question. The success of the CRC and those who assisted in the petition drive has posed the controversy over the facts of marijuana.

"We want it to send ripples, we want to get more people thinking about the issue, we want people to start questioning all the arguments and propaganda that they've heard and start looking at the facts," said President Vernon Coffey.

Cox and the CRC stand at opposite ends of the same fight: Cox is armed with the federal government citing the federal register and a wealth of anti-drug literature. On the other side are the CRC and its supporters, which are on the side of a well-funded movement, citing information from large organizations like National Organization for Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML). Organizations like NORML and CRC believe that marijuana should not be a Schedule One drug, but this is a fact Cox stands firmly by.

"Marijuana is a Schedule One drug, just like heroin," said Cox. "Would the people of Amherst be willing to overlook heroin?"

Cox claims the pro-marijuana parties are convincing the south that marijuana is not harmful and likens this effort to the tobacco industry in the fifties. In a pamphlet, "The Medical Marijuana Scam" by Dr. Janet Lapey, she explains, "It is of the interest of the tobacco industry to similarly advertised tobacco cigarettes as medicinal until the Federal Trade Commission put a stop to it... 'Camels' were said to prevent fatigue and aid digestion, whereas 'Kools' were said to prevent the common cold."

The link between tobacco and marijuana continues. Marijuana smoke has been proven to have more cancer-causing agents then tobacco. Coffey defended, "The average marijuana smoker doesn't smoke a pack of 20 joints a day, that would be ridiculous."

The disagreement mainly lies in scientific validity. There is much literature available from the pro-marijuana parties that offer evidence considered valid Cox, however, believes the scientific research is not sound. "They want to give someone a marijuana cigarette, send them home, call them later and ask them how they feel."

Whether or not the kinks are worked out on the scientific level, Cox is also largely concerned with increased use because of the more positive image the drug has been receiving in recent years. "When the perception of harm is decreased, [drug] use increases and that's where we are right now," said Cox. "I fear the impact it will have on young children."

Coffey also believes that marijuana is not for young children but said, "Children already use marijuana, if they're gonna use it, they're gonna use it no matter if it's illegal." He thinks marijuana should have age limits as alcohol and tobacco.

"They just want to be able to smoke pot and not get arrested," Cox said.

Coffey agrees with this statement. "We're just saying people who do use it shouldn't be locked up because of it," he said. However he added that the organization does not promote social smoking and does not claim that marijuana is a "wonder drug."

UMass Libertarian Society formed

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

As an alternative to the typical political choices on the University of Massachusetts campus, a group of students joined together in order to form the UMass Libertarian Society.

The Society as a whole is based upon the principal that the government should be based far more on the ideas of individual liberties and on smaller government. They would like to reduce the size and scope of the government to its most basic functions.

According to the Statement of Principles for the political party it explains that individuals, "have the right to live in whatever manner they choose, so long as they do not forcibly interfere with the equal right of others to live in whatever manner they choose."

Club president Michael Frumowitz, explained that the primary mission of the group was to spread the word to students about the party itself.

"A lot of people are not really aware of the Libertarian view on issues," he said. "It is our mission to educate people on what Libertarian views are in the first place."

The party itself is well established as a force in United States politics today. The Libertarian party is

Turn to LIBERTARIAN page 3

People who play Sim City for real

CAITLIN MCMURTRY / COLLEGIAN

Presenters eagerly answered questions from the future city planners of America at a conference held last night

By Matt Foster
Collegian Staff

UMass hosted a seminar on the important role a city planner plays in local government last night in the Procopio Room of Hills Central building.

The conference, entitled "The Role of the Planner in the City" included a discussion type forum with featured guests. The panel consisted of Paul Dell'Aquila Worcester city planner, Tom Deller, former Providence planning director Katie Gallozzo, UMass alum and Springfield city planner, and Jack Hunter, Holyoke planning director.

The event was organized by the Massachusetts chapter of the American Planning Association (MAPA), the UMass department of landscape architecture and regional planning, and the UMass Student Planning Organization. It was the most recent part of MAPA's "Planner's Forum" where planning concerns have been discussed at Massachusetts universities.

A city planner, according to event organizer Justin Hollander graduate student in the department on landscape architecture and regional planning, "looks at the long term and will make the necessary regulatory, local, legal changes to ensure that you can reach that long term goal."

"The planner is all about... making sure it happens," Hollander continued.

The panelists were asked first to say a little about themselves and then elaborate on what each thought the role of the planner in their particular city is, as dictated by a diagram that marked off different roles a city planner might take. Those roles included "Facilitators", "Top Down" type planners, "Technicians", "Political" type planners, "Brokers", "Bottom Up" type planners, "Advocates", and "Mobilizers."

Dell'Aquila spoke about his history as a planner Worcester and what his department's major functions were.

"We sort of set the overall policy," he said. "We're very much in the facilitation business."

Dell'Aquila went on to speak about his education background.

"I actually don't have any sort of planning degree. I was a History major at Tufts University," he explained. He delved into journalism and through his journalism work was introduced to politics and then planning.

Next Deller spoke on what one view of the role of the planner was.

"If it goes right, it was the Mayor's idea, and he gets the credit. If it goes wrong it was the planner's."

Deller said the planners role is decided by three factors, the city's charter, which describes the planner's job, the "political realm of the city," and "being the advocate, the person who gets out in the neighborhood."

The planner's department has been described, Deller said, as "the down in the dirt people."

"I think that to be an effective planner, you have to use all of those skills in different locations at different times," Deller concluded.

Galluzzo spoke next about his work in Springfield.

"In Springfield, any chance I get to work with the neighborhoods, work with the people... I love," she said. Hunter spoke last about his 13 years in Holyoke as planner and described how he made a "circle of wagon mentality" city government into a representative of the people.

Land mines prevent Mozambique rescues

By Dean E. Murphy
Los Angeles Times

MAPUTO, Mozambique — Hundreds of U.S. soldiers expected to join rescue efforts here as early as this weekend will have deadly obstacles other than the weather to overcome, according to land mine experts in this devastated southern African country.

Mozambique is one of the most heavily mined places on Earth, the legacy of a lengthy civil war in the 1980s and early 1990s. The rain and floods of the past month have submerged thousands of the deadly devices in the worst-hit Gaza province, where the Limpopo and Save rivers have spilled across vast stretches of land.

Although there have been no reported explosions, mine clearance officials say it is highly likely that mines have been inadvertently detonated by the hundreds of thousands of fleeing refugees and by the sheer force of the driving flood waters.

Moreover, hundreds of the buried weapons are believed to have been swept from positions that humanitarian groups had painstakingly plotted on maps over the last few years. Portions of the flood plain considered safe only a month ago are once again potential death traps.

"It is really dangerous right now because our maps are not accurate anymore," said Nicolas Blais, mine coordinator for Handicap International, one of half a dozen organizations that clear mines in Mozambique. "People don't have a chance to see what is under their feet because of the water."

Rescue teams from South Africa, Malawi and Mozambique, working from helicopters and boats to save thousands of stranded residents, have been just plain lucky not to have tripped a mine, according to officials with the U.N. Accelerated Demining Project. Varying estimates put the number of land mines in the country, which is slightly bigger than Texas, between 400,000 and 2 million.

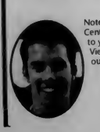
With an army of additional rescuers on its way, President Clinton has promised up to 900 U.S. troops and Britain and other European countries are also sending teams - the risks of a deadly accident are mounting, the officials said. Those working from boats face the greatest peril because the craft can run aground and the temptation is great for rescuers to wade into shallow water to assist the wears.

"The Limpopo is considered a high-risk area," said Florencio Chongo, who works for the U.N. agency. "These rescue teams need to be warned that this situation is dangerous for everyone."

Blais spent much of yesterday updating land mine maps of Inhambane province, a coastal region neighboring Gaza where Handicap International does most of its work. The Mozambican government agency that coordinates mine clearance has requested the latest known whereabouts of mines so that the information can be distributed to rescue teams and humanitarian workers, who are also pouring into the country by droves.

The maps won't help people who stumble upon mines that have been uprooted by the floods, but officials said they hope to prevent accidents in unaffected dry areas that are attracting thousands of the newly homeless. Because much of the Mozambican civil war was fought in rural areas, there are land mines in the most unlikely of remote places.

MATT BARR / COLLEGIAN

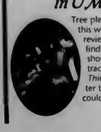


A touch of spring

Jamie Hopkins, a freshman Physics major, took advantage of the warmer weather yesterday by studying outdoors.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 43 LOW: 22	HIGH: 46 LOW: 30	HIGH: 54 LOW: 33



'Walkin' on the sun

Notes from the Campus Center Basement brought to you today by Dan Viens. Page 4. Check it out.

PAGE 4

A Tree Grows in UMass

Tree pleased Amherst crowds this week. Check out the review in Arts today. Also, find out why you shouldn't buy the soundtrack to The Next Best Thing. Read Arts: it's better than a lot of things you could be doing.

ARTS PAGE 7

For whom the Sell tolls

After a date with the Wildcats tonight, Nathan Sell and the hockey squad return home to the Mullins Center for their regular season finale. Check out the back page for all UMass action on tap for this weekend.

SPORTS PAGE 12

Arts & Living 7
Comics 11
Crossword 11
Editorial 4
News 2
Sports 12

ON THE INTERNET

www.dailycollegian.com

Campus Perspectives

Compiled by Andrea Peers • Photos by Caitlin Winkworth

What do you think about the way the SGA allocates RSO budgets?

"I think it kind of sucks because every group on campus is just as important as the other."

Stephen Roussel
Anthropology
Freshman

"I think they are handling it pretty well, but I believe a lot of students don't know how serious this really is. Things are just going to get worse."

Shauree Allotey
Psychology
Junior

"I don't really know. I guess if they are going to give more groups more money than others, it is unfair."

Brady Woodward
Anthropology/Sociology
Senior

"I honestly don't know a lot about it. I guess I just don't think it's right."

Ruth Perry
Undeclared
Sophomore

"Honestly, I don't know a whole lot about it, but there definitely seems to be a lot of issues surrounding it though."

Amity Dunn
Comparative Literature
Junior

"I really haven't looked into it, but if they are cutting money, it takes away from the purpose of student organizations."

Luke Lemelin
Landscape Architecture
Senior

Gore associate convicted for illegal fundraising

By Bill Miller
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – Political fund-raiser Maria Hsia, a longtime associate of Vice President Al Gore, was convicted Thursday of channeling more than $100,000 in illegal contributions to Democratic candidates in 1996, including $85,000 in tainted money she brought in the door of Gore's controversial appearance at a Buddhist temple.

The verdict marked one of the biggest victories yet for the Justice Department's oft-criticized campaign finance task force. It also rekindles an issue that could cause Gore problems in his quest for the presidency. Within an hour of the jury's finding, the Republican National Committee – which had a staff worker follow the trial – issued a statement depicting Hsia as a "small fry" target and calling on prosecutors to go after Gore and other Democratic Party leaders.

Gore, who has never been charged with criminal wrongdoing, has known Hsia since the late 1980s, and she reportedly had hopes of working on his presidential campaign. Prosecutors contended that he was unaware of and uninvolved with Hsia's activities.

"The jury has rendered a verdict. It's a hard day for her," Gore told reporters while visiting a kindergarten in Manhattan. "She's been a friend and a political supporter. But since this is a matter still in the courts I won't comment on it."

The verdict followed 10 hours of deliberations and a three-week trial in U.S. District Court in which the jury got an exhaustive education in campaign fund-raising tactics and federal election laws. Prosecutors argued that Hsia deliberately broke the law to enhance her influence in the Democratic Party, collecting money from "straw donors" who were then illegally reimbursed for their contributions.

Hsia, 48, a Los Angeles-based immigration consultant, showed no emotion during the reading of the verdicts finding her guilty on five charges of causing false statements to be made to the Federal Election Commission.

"This thing is still alive," said defense lawyer Nancy Luque, noting that she has asked the judge to throw out the verdict. "We're not done yet."

Judge Paul L. Friedman did not set a sentencing date and permitted Hsia to remain free on personal recognizance until legal issues are decided. Hsia faces up to 25 years in prison.

Recent shootings renew push for gun control

By Nick Anderson
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON – Shootings this week at a grammar school in Michigan and fast-food restaurants in Pennsylvania have prompted lawmakers to renew efforts to break a congressional deadlock on gun legislation.

Challenged by President Clinton on NBC-TV's "Today" show yesterday to try again, four senior Republican and Democratic lawmakers agreed to meet at the White House on Tuesday. But odds of a breakthrough remain long.

The congressional delegation will include Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, and Rep. Henry J. Hyde, R-Ill., chairmen of the Senate and House judiciary committees who have struggled in vain since last summer to craft a compromise juvenile justice bill that includes some modest new controls on the sale and possession of firearms.

"There's been a House version and a Senate version of this bill for eight months and they have done nothing," Clinton said on the television show. "Meanwhile, 13 kids every day – every single day there are 13 children who die from guns in this country."

While Clinton turned up the heat on an issue that Democrats believe will help them in upcoming elections, Hyde said yesterday that he would welcome the president's help in nudging Democrats to accept a compromise on one of the most contentious issues: regulation of gun shows, which are a source of many unchecked firearms sales.

Hyde, a moderate within his party on that issue, has been promoting a compromise on background checks at gun shows. His proposal would extend a deadline to review potential gun sales from 24 hours to three business days, if initial checks turn up red flags.

Most Democrats have been holding out for a background check proposal that is simply three business days – a provision included in a bill that barely passed the Senate last year after the fatal shootings at Columbine High School in Colorado. Hyde said that the Senate bill stands no chance in the House.

White House spokesman Joe Lockhart suggested that a compromise that leaves out the issue of background checks at gun shows would not be acceptable to Clinton. "Common-sense gun legislation, at a minimum, includes closing the gun-show loophole," he said.

Hyde reiterated that he and Hatch are also pushing for child-safety locks on guns, a ban on the importation of high-capacity ammunition clips used with automatic and semi-automatic weapons and new curbs on juvenile weapons possession – all concepts the president supports.

Do you want to be a part of the biggest student-run business on campus?

Are you interested in a career in Human Resources?

Collegian is accepting applications for the position of Human Resource Coordinator.

Applications can be picked up at the Collegian in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Interested applicants should possess excellent communication and computer skills.

Any questions can be directed to christine Carroll at 545-3500 or hrcollegian@yahoo.com.

UMass VS. UNH

COME SEE THEM !!!

Blancard
Poulin
Vasiliev

LAST HOME GAME !!!

MULLINS CENTER
MARCH 4th ,7 P.M.
PREGAME CEREMONY

"SENIOR NIGHT"

■ libertarian

continued from page 1

Massachusetts' third major party following the 1998 election, and registered voters continue to take a renewed interest in the political views of the party.

"Libertarians tend to believe in both social and political freedom for everyone as long as they are not harming anyone," Froimowitz said.

Currently, according to figures supplied by club secretary Benjamin Rivard-Rapoza, the party has roughly 50 UMass students enrolled as Libertarians in Amherst. Also, there are over 11,000 registered Libertarians in Massachusetts – 13 in public office throughout the state. Representation throughout the country for the political party has also grown in recent years. Around the nation, there are 280 Libertarians in public office and 34 candidates from the party running for office in the state of Massachusetts.

The group itself, which is not funded as a Registered Student Organization, plans upon spreading awareness about the political party while concurrently adding interest and enthusiasm about Libertarian issues and political figures.

"We would like to bring some political speakers to campus," Froimowitz said. "We would also like to work on some Libertarian campaigns, and basically just get the message out."

We need web staff...

...come down the Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement to apply.

Georgetown students snuffed out by SEC

By Sandra Sugawara
Washington Post

WASHINGTON – To Georgetown University Law Center student Douglas W. Colt, it was a way to use the broad reach of the Internet to make money on the stock market. To federal authorities, it was a scam of the times.

Colt, 24, created a stock picking Web site called FastTrades.com, and convinced many of its 9,000 visitors to buy certain stocks. In just two months, he made $345,000 for himself, his friends and his mom after his recommendations caused the stock prices to surge.

Federal regulators, however, say Colt made that money by illegally manipulating stock prices. The Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday charged that Colt, his friends and his 55-year-old mother, Joanne Colt, a city council member from Colorado Springs, Colo., violated securities laws. The five settled the civil charges without denying or admitting any wrongdoing.

Stock regulators alleged that Colt targeted cheap, lightly-traded stocks, whose prices are more likely to swing widely during buying and selling sprees. Colt and the others would buy shares of a company they had selected, and then place orders to sell those shares when stock prices hit a target level, the SEC said.

Colt would then send out his recommendation to non-paying subscribers, who would promptly begin buying up shares. That would quickly cause the stock's price to surge, sometimes as much as 700 percent, according to the SEC. Within a few hours, Colt and his associates would dump their shares, and soon the price would plummet back down.

Because it was important to Colt's plan to get lots of people to buy the stocks he designated on his Web site, Colt talked three other law students to help him by using aliases and posting "false and misleading" messages on Internet boards. They visited message boards such as those on the Yahoo and Raging Bull Web sites, where they touted FastTrades.com's stock picking prowess, according to the SEC.

Those friends, said the SEC, included two third-year Georgetown University Law Center students who shared an Arlington, Va., apartment with Colt last year – Kenneth Terrell, 25, from Newton, Mass., and Jason Wyckoff, 25, from Lawrenceville, N.J. – as well as Adam Altman, 25, who graduated from the law school last spring.

